The word for "cleansed" is from טהר which signifies, to purge from filthiness, and so to purge as to make shining and beautiful. Judea, the land here meant, had been oft cleansing, but was never thoroughly cleansed. Hezekiah and Josiah made the greatest cleansings, but all the sin was not purged out in their days: they took away the objects and mediums of sin, viz. the idols, images, groves, and high places, but the people continued wicked; they did not cleanse their hands, nor hearts, and turn to the Lord, but returned to their former and worse abominations, when those good kings were gone. The Lord had sent them many prophets, who dealt with them several ways to draw them to repentance; sometimes they allured them by sweet promises and invitations, sometimes they threatened them with sharp judgments, sometimes they pressed them with strong arguments, Jer. iv. 1, 3, 4; Ezek. xviii. 31, 32; sometimes they spake plainly to them, sometimes parabolically; sometimes they wept and sighed to the breaking of their loins, doing strange things to affect them, Ezek. xvii. 2; Jer. iv. 19; ix. 1; Ezek. xxi. 6; xii. 5, 6; iv. 1—3, &c. Besides these things, God oft sent sweeping and fierce judgments amongst them, Isa. xxiv. 1 and iv. famine, sword, pestilence; and notwithstanding all these, they returned not to the Lord, but the land, that is, the people of it, did remain uncleansed, they were like a land wherein was nothing but weeds, nettles, briars, and thorns.

Object. Isa. xxvi. 10, it is called a "land of uprightness;" and if so, how is it here said it is a "land not cleansed?"

Answer. The Hebrew is, in the land where men are taught right things: right worshipping of God, right dealing with men, right walking in their several relations: or, "the land of uprightness," for that they ought to have done uprightly: but in that land they dealt unjustly, and filled that land with sin, Jer. li. 5; or, "the land of uprightness," for that it had been so, Isa. i. 21.

"Nor rained upon in the day of indignation." God had oft withheld the former and latter rain from them, and afflicted the land with great drought, Isa. xxiv. 6, 7; Psal. lxxviii. 9; 1 Kings xviii. 5; 2 Kings viii. 1; Jer. xiv. 4; Amos iv. 7; and he threatened, Isa. v. 6, to command the clouds to rain no rain upon it: and it was so in Joel's days, chap. i. 9—11, who lived in Manasseh's time, as the rabbies said, and that was a time of indignation, and sorely distressed them, so that man and beast suffered much. In Jeremiah's days also, who lived in the times of Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah, were the rains denied unto the land, so that by reason of drought, Judah mourned, the gates thereof languished, Jerusalem cried, the nobles and their little ones were ashamed, confounded, and covered their heads, Jer. xiv. 1—3.

Or thus we may understand these words; Judea, thou art a polluted, filthy land, nothing hath prevailed with thee to cleanse thee, and thou shalt not be rained upon in the day of mine indignation; that is, thou shalt have no mercy when the fire of my wrath is kindled, thou shalt have no rain to quench it, in my wrath I will not remember mercy.

Obs. 1. The Lord takes notice of places, what they are, whether cleansed or not cleansed. "Thou art the land not cleansed:" thou art full of briars and thorns, full of vermin and wild beasts, Ezek. ii. 6; Isa. ix. 18; it was full of wicked and vile men which did defile the land; Ezek. vii. 23, "The land is full of bloody crimes, the city is full of violence." There is not a land, city, town, or family in the whole earth, but the eye of the Lord is upon it, and he sees what it is, whether it be defiled, and how greatly defiled. He knew what Sodom and Gomorrah were, before he sent fire from heaven upon them. He knew how polluted Canaan was by the nations, before he brought the Jews into it, Deut. ix. 4, 5. He took notice of Ammon, Moab, Scir, Edom, Philistia, Tyre, Sidon, and Babylon, he saw what eages of unclean birds they were. Hos. vi. 10, "I have seen an horrible thing in the house of Israel." He saw what the ancients of Israel did, Ezek. viii. 11. He saw folly in the prophets of Samaria, and an horrible thing in the prophets of Jerusalem; they strengthened the hands of evil-doers, Jer. xxiii. 13, 14.

Obs. 2. When lands have had means of cleansing, and are not cleansed, they are matter of indignation and exprobration unto God. Judea had the prophets, sometimes good magistrates, it had great mercies, great judgments, solemn fasts, Isa. lviii. 3; Joel i. 14; but was still uncleansed; therefore saith the Lord, "Thou art the land that is not cleansed." The word "thou" notes God's indignation at them, and his exprobration of them. When a ground is full of thorns, briars, nettles, vermin, and wild beasts, and the husbandman's servants cannot with all their art and pains rid the ground of them, that ground exasperates the husbandman, and makes him say, This is the ground that will not be cleansed, that brings forth nothing which is good: so was it here with Judea; Isa. v. 4, "What could have been done more to my vineyard, that I have not done in it? wherefore, when I looked for grapes, brought it forth wild grapes?" it retained its sourness, notwithstanding all done. Ezek. xxiv. 13, "Because I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged, thou shalt not be purged from thy filthiness any more;" seeing I have used means to purge thee, and thou wilt not be purged, seeing thou art obstinate, and there is lewdness in thy filthiness, there shall no more purgative means be afforded thee, but I will bring my fury, and cause it to rest upon thee. And when it is thus, it is dreadful; Jer. xiii. 27, "Woe unto thee, O Jerusalem! wilt thou not be made clean?"

Obs. 3. The Lord hath his day and time to judge and punish lands uncleansed, people unreformed. "In the day of indignation." Though the Lord bear long with a sinful nation, yet he will not bear always, the time comes at last that his hot anger breaks out and dammifies. This "day of indignation" was when the Lord called the Babylonish army to the walls of Jerusalem, Jer. iv. 6, 7, 9, 13; lii. 4; Zeph. i. 14, 15. The ten tribes not hearkening to the prophets and seers, but proceeding in their wicked ways, 2 Kings xvii. 12—14, found the Lord had a day to send Shalmaneser, who spoiled the land, besieged Samaria three years, and carried them away captive into Assyria; which was the verifying of Isaiah's prophecy against them, chap. xlvii. 4, "In that day it shall come to pass, that the glory of Jacob shall be made thin, and the fatness of his flesh shall wax lean." The glory and fat of Jacob, were their princes, counsellors, soldiers, wealth, and strong holds, which the Assyrian deprived them of, and made Jacob thin and lean. God had his day to visit Egypt, by shaking his hand over it, Isa. xix. 16. The Lord had his day to make Tyre "forgotten seventy years, according to the days of one king," Isa. xxiii. 15. About that time which Nebuchadnezzar took Jerusalem, he also took Tyre, and the great merchandizing of it was interrupted seventy years, so long as the Jews were in Babylon, which Isaiah calls "the days of one king." The days of kings, and so other men who lived at ease, were usually counted seventy years. Or thus, according to the days of one kingdom, that is, the days of the Babylonian kingdom; from the time of taking Tyre, for seventy years after, that kingdom ceased, and Darius the Median took it, Dan. v. 31.

Obs. 4. When a land and people retain their filthiness, and rest uncleansed after mercies, judgments, and means used to do them good, God doth not only withhold mercy, but deny hope of mercy. Judea was the land uncleansed, and she should have no rain "in the day of indignation." Her sins kept back the rain in a literal sense, Jer. iii. 2, 3, and cut off the hope of rain in a metaphorical sense. Zeph. i. 17, 18, "I will bring distress upon men, that they shall walk like blind men, because they have sinned against the Lord;" they shall see nothing tending to their comfort, but all working against them; for it follows, "Their blood shall be poured out as dust, and their flesh as the dung. Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath; but the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy." Gold and silver will do much, but nothing "in the day of wrath," Prov. xi. 4. That place in Isa. viii. 21, 22, is observable; "They shall pass through it, hardly bestead and hungry; and it shall come to pass, when they shall be hungry, they shall fret themselves, and curse their king and their God, and look upward. And they shall look unto the earth; and behold trouble and darkness," &c. When Sennacherib or Nebuchadnezzar should invade the land, the famine should be so great, and the men of Judea so hungry, that they should fret, and curse their king, their God; the one, because he prevented not their misery; the other, because he delivered them not out of it: and they should look up to heaven, down to the church, and find help from neither, nor hope of mercy any where; trouble, darkness, anguish were before them, and they should be driven to them. They disgrace the true prophets, ver. 18; they listened to false prophets and liars, ver. 19; they tried not them and their doctrine by the law and testimonies, ver. 20; therefore God brought evil upon them, yea, such evil as they were helpless and hopeless.

Ver. 25. There is a conspiracy of her prophets in the midst thereof, like a roaring lion ravening the prey; they have devoured souls; they have taken the treasure and precious things; they have made her many widows in the midst thereof.

In this verse and the 28th you have the sins of the prophets expressed which defiled the land, and made it to be called, the land uncleansed; and they are,

I. Conspiracy.

II. Cruelty; "like roaring lions," &c.

III. Murder, and that of souls; "they have devoured," &c.

IV. Covetousness; "they have taken the treasure and precious things."

V. Inhumanity or impiety; "they have made her many widows."

VI. Flattery and lying, ver. 28.

"A conspiracy of her prophets." The Hebrew for "conspiracy" is, קשר, which is from a root or word, which signifies to bind, to tie together, as Jer. li. 63; Isa. xlix. 16; and metaphorically is referred to the minds of men combining together, as 1 Sam. xviii. 2, "The soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David," was united, bound to, inleagued with the soul of David; and 2 Sam. xv. 31, "Abithophel is among the conspirators with Absalom," his mind with others were united in a conspiracy against David; so 2 Kings xii. 20, Joash "his servants arose, and made a conspiracy;" the Hebrew is, they conspired a conspiracy, they were all of one heart and mind, and it was to kill their master. Here the prophets had a conspiracy, it is spoken of the evil prophets; they met in Jerusalem, they consulted and consented to prophesy the same thing, that none should prophesy otherwise; if they did, they would cry them down, and those who should follow them: thus they "made a conspiracy" against the true prophets, and those who were truly religious, opposing God and godliness. You may read how they set themselves against Jeremiah, chap. xxvi. 8, and stirred up the princes and people against him, ver. 11; how they prophesied the same things, chap. xxiii. 17; vi. 14.

"Like a roaring lion ravening the prey." Lions are fierce and cruel, especially when hungry; and it is observed of them, that they first roar, whereby they scare men and beasts, and then hunt after the prey: so these prophets did roar against the true prophets and their followers; Jer. xxvi. 11, "This man is worthy to die," not to be silenced, imprisoned, or banished, but "to die;" nothing but death will suffice them; they were greedy of the prey, and said, he should "surely die," ver. 8.

"They have devoured souls." "Souls," that is, men, by a synecdoche of the part for the whole. They preached dreams and visions of their own heads, whereby they seduced and undid multitudes, Ezek. xiii. 10; Jer. xiv. 13; xxiii. 13. When prophets do not tell people of their sins, they destroy them, Ezek. iii. 18; and so when they present their own fancies instead of God's word; Jer. xxiii. 22, with 32, had they delivered the word of God, they should have turned men from their evil ways, but by their lies and dreams they made them to err.

"They have taken the treasure and precious things." The Hebrew word for "treasure" is, אוצן, which Montanus renders robur, strength; and so it is used, Isa. xxxiii. 6; and riches, treasure, are called cosen, because men put their confidence in them, and make them their strength, Prov. x. 15. Psal. lii. 7, the word is used for treasure and riches. Prov. xv. 6, "In the house of the righteous is" אוצן רב "much treasure," much riches, or much strength: here it is "treasure."

"Precious things." "Precious things," יקר notes things "much set by," as a good name, 1 Sam. xviii. 30; things beloved, Jer. xxxi. 20, "Ephraim my dear son," יקר בני יוג αγαπητος, my dearly beloved son, saith the Septuagint; things of great worth, Prov. xx. 15; Isa. xxviii. 16; Jer. xx. 5. Here it notes things of worth, and dear unto them. These prophets were false, and would not prophesy, unless the people gave them, and gave them choice things. Hence Micah saith, the prophets divined for money, chap. iii. 11, and prepared war for them who would not put into their mouths, ver. 5. They did not take by force, or steal away their treasures, but they carried it so, that the people must give, and they had their "treasure and precious things." They were not content with what was their stipends; but, as Lavater speaks, they had ways, arts, devices, to get such things.

The word jakar signifies also glory, and honour, Dan. ii. 37; Esth. i. 20; and so it is rendered here by Montanus, Lavater, Œcolampadius, and the French translation. The sense then is this, that these false prophets were ambitious, minding high places and popular glory.

“They have made her many widows.” Those men who would not be of their minds, hearken to their prophecies, countenance and maintain them with their treasures and precious things, they prepared war for them, they stirred up the powers and people who were of their own way, to hate them, and deal unkindly with them. Isa. lxvi. 5, “Hear the word of the Lord, ye that tremble at his word; Your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name’s sake,” &c. There were some who trembled at the word of the Lord, the word of the true prophets, and durst not side with the false prophets, their doctrines or practices: these therefore were hated of their brethren, that were their disciples, and cast out. So Ezek. xi. 15, they said, “Get you far from the Lord; unto us is this land given in possession.” You have nothing to do here in Judea or Jerusalem, here is no liberty for you; begone, or die for it! Now because many did venture to stay, they prevailed so, that they were put to death, and by this means they made many widows. They also used to encourage the princes to war; as, 1 Kings xxii. the false prophets put on Ahab to go up to Ramoth-gilead, and promised him success in that war, but he fell, and many others with him, and hereby they made many widows.

Obs. 1. In Jerusalem were wicked and false prophets. Jerusalem was the holy city, the city of God, the place where God’s name was recorded, a type of the church of God in all ages; yet there, even there, were such prophets: and it holds out clearly to us, that there will be false prophets in the church of God always. In Christ’s time there were such; Matt. vii. 15, “Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep’s clothing.” In Paul’s time there were such; Acts xiii. 6, there was one Bar-jesus, a Jew, and a false prophet. In John’s time there were such; 1 John iv. 1, “Many false prophets are gone out into the world:” so many went out then, that there is a generation of them to this day, and that generation will not cease so long as the Lord hath a church in this world; there will be found false prophets even at doomsday.

Obs. 2. Jerusalem’s prophets may be, yea, sometimes are, against Jerusalem. “There is a conspiracy of her prophets in the midst thereof.” Those who thought themselves the chief prophets in Jerusalem, met, consulted, and agreed together to preach the same things, to set themselves against the prophets and professors who differed from them, as being unsafe and unsound, and to stir up authority against them. The meetings of prophets are not always for the welfare of Zion: here was a council of them, but it was for mischief: that they thought was very lawful, the Spirit of God calls a “conspiracy.” Such was that meeting of the chief priests, scribes, and elders in the palace of the high priest, where they consulted against Christ, Matt. xxvi. 3, 4; and that wherein they agreed, “that if any did confess that he was Christ, he should be put out of the synagogue,” John ix. 22. Was not the council of Trent a conspiracy of prophets, who pretended they were for Jerusalem, but were in truth against Jerusalem? Did they not agree together, that whoever preached any thing contrary to their canons and articles, should be anathematized? Did they not stir up princes and powers of the world, to punish those they judged sectaries, schismatics, and heretical? Mr. Fox’s “Acts and Monuments” do testify the truth thereof. Have not the prophets of our Jerusalem gone too far this way?

Obs. 3. God takes special notice of the sins of prophets. They are first mentioned in the general corruption that was of all sorts. There were priests’, princes’, people’s sins, but the prophets’ are set in the front; they provoked God greatly, they did most hurt. Jer. xxiii. 15, “From the prophets of Jerusalem is profaneness gone forth into all the land.” They were corrupt springs, that corrupted the whole Jewish earth with the streams of their false doctrines, and example of their sinful practices. Their sins are very much spoken of in the word, and set upon record: they dealt falsely, Jer. vi. 13; they “belied the Lord,” Jer. v. 12; they “taught rebellion against the Lord,” Jer. xxviii. 16; xxix. 32: they strengthened “the hands of evil-doers,” so that none returned from his wickedness, Jer. xxiii. 14; they were “light and treacherous,” Zeph. iii. 4; they deluded the people, and murdered their souls, Jer. viii. 11; Ezek. xiii. 10; they were exceeding covetous, and greedy of gain from every quarter, Isa. lvi. 11; Micah iii. 5; they made the people forget the name of the Lord, Jer. xxiii. 27; they were foxes, and dealt very subtly, Ezek. xiii. 4. They being defiled with such sins, defiled the land thereby, kindled the indignation of the Lord, and made him to say concerning them, “Behold, I will feed them with wormwood, and make them drink the water of gall,” Jer. xxiii. 15; and would consume them by sword and famine, chap. xiv. 15.

Obs. 4. That the men who should openly declare against sin, do openly commit sin. “There is a conspiracy of her prophets in the midst thereof.” They roared like lions, not caring who heard or saw them; they made many widows in the midst of Jerusalem. They sinned notorious sins, and were not ashamed of them; Jer. xxiii. 11, “Both prophet and priest are profane; in my house have I found their wickedness, saith the Lord;” in the temple, the most public place of worship, there they set up their idols and detestable things, Ezek. vii. 20. When prophets and men in near relations to God are naught, they proceed from sin to sin, from degree to degree of the same sin, till they become impudent. These prophets conspired against those who were good in Jerusalem; they were cruel, murderous, covetous, inhuman, and that in the midst of Jerusalem; they blushed not at any or all these sins; they proceeded so in their covetousness, that they got the treasure and precious things the people had. Thus was it with the popish clergy; they got the best lands, woods, waters, habitations, they got the treasure and precious things; yea, so covetous were they, that they occasioned that proverb, a mortuis tributum exigere, to scrape from the dead; and so openly wicked they were, that in their temples and cathedrals they strove so for place, as they shed blood.

Ver. 26. Her priests have violated my law, and have profaned mine holy things: they have put no difference between the holy and profane, neither have they shewed difference between the unclean and the clean, and have hid their eyes from my sabbaths, and I am profaned among them.

In the former verse you had the prophets’ sins, here you have the priests’; and they are three:

I. Violation of the law.

II. Profanation of holy things.

III. Neglect of duty; which is twofold:

1. They did not make difference between the holy and profane, the clean, &c.

2. They minded not the Lord's sabbaths, but hid their eyes from them.

"Her priests have violated my law." The priests were to be men of knowledge, Mal. ii. 7, and to teach the people the true sense of the law, 2 Chron. xv. 3; Deut. xvii. 9—11; (for the priests taught, and not only the Levites, Micah iii. 11;) but now the priests were so blind and ignorant, that they knew not God, Jer. ii. 8, so intemperate, that they erred in the things of God, Isa. xxviii. 7; and rejecting true knowledge, are said to forget the law, Hos. iv. 6, and here, to violate it.

The Septuagint reads it, they have contemned my law, they set light by it. Lavater hath it thus, they have stolen or taken away my law; to which sense Vatablus agrees; for because they were bound to teach the law, and did it not, they are said to have stolen away the law. The Hebrew word בָּרַח signifies, to take away, to offer violence, to handle a thing unjustly. The priests did handle the law, Jer. ii. 8; but they handled it unjustly, they wrested and forced it to speak their sense, to countenance their practices; they cared not for the true sense, nor sought after that, but such senses as would please and suit with the times and men's humours.

The law or word of God is violated,

1. When men do wrong point it, and so mar the sense, and alter it; as those that, to make way for the opinion of the soul's sleeping, do put the point after the word "day," "I say unto thee to-day;" whereas the right pointing is at "thee," not at "day," "I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Luke xxiii. 43: that is, thy soul shall not lie dormant in or with thy body till the day of resurrection, but shall this very day pass into paradise. So, Rev. xiii. 8, the mispointing causes an error in the sense; it is said there, that all shall worship the beast, "whose names are not written in the book of life of the lamb;" there is the comma, and then follows, "slain from the foundation of the world;" whereas the comma, or pointing, should be after "slain," which refers to "lamb," and not to the following words, for those words relate to the names written in the book; and the sense stands thus, "whose names are not written in the book of life, from the foundation of the world."

2. When something of man is added to it, or deducted from it. The scribes and Pharisees joined their traditions with the commandments of God, and thereby offered such wrong unto them, that Christ tells them, they made them of none effect, Matt. xv. 6; they put so much chaff to God's wheat, that it rather choked than nourished the people; they put so much water of their own to his wine, that there were no spirits at all in it. The Jews had joined the statutes of the heathen with the statutes of the Lord, 2 Kings xvii. 8; and the statutes of Omri were observed, Micah vi. 16. The Septuagint, in the 5th of Genesis, have added one hundred years more to the age of the fathers, before they begat children, than is in the original; they have also added much to the end of Job, which the Hebrew hath not. The postscripts after Paul's epistles are not canonical, but additions of those who wrote the epistles, or of some others, and they have little truth in them: see Mr. Perkins upon the 6th chapter of the epistle to the Galatians, on the conclusion.

3. When the translation is erroneous. The Septuagint hath failed in many places; and the Vulgate in most. Lindanus, a Polish prelate, saith, it hath monstrous corruptions of all sorts, scarce one copy can be found that hath one book of Scripture unde-fled and whole. Many points are translated too intricately and darkly, some improperly and abusively, some not so fully, nor so well and truly; sundry places are thrust out from their plain and natural sense. The translator possibly was no Latinist, but a snattering Grecian. In our Old Translation there were σφάλματα πολλά, many errors, as in Mal. ii. 16, "If thou hatest her, put her away, saith the Lord God of Israel;"

whereas he hated putting away; so in 1 Cor. xii. 28, it is "helpers, governors;" whereas it is in the Greek, "helps, governments;" and our last translation, which is the best extant, is faulty in this place, reading those words thus, "helps in government," which was done to countenance all the assistants prelates had in their government. And not only there, but in other places also; as Jer. xxxiii. 16, it is thus translated, "This is the name wherewith she shall be called, The Lord our righteousness;" whereas the Hebrew is, he who shall call her, is the Lord our righteousness; and the contents before the 149th Psalm, insinuate that the church hath power to rule the consciences of men.

4. When the word is constrained to speak that which was never intended of God, when a sense is drawn from it that was never included in it. Tyrabosco, patriarch of Venice, preaching on the miracle of loaves and fishes, made the sense of Philip's words, "Two hundred pennyworth of bread will not suffice," to be this, That all the mysteries of the Old and New Testament are not enough to enlighten the people's blind and ignorant minds, without the seven sacraments; which he made to be the meaning of Andrew's words, "There is a boy here which hath five loaves and two fishes." What forced senses have men put upon those scriptures, "Tell the church," and "This is my body!" That is the sense of Scripture which the Spirit intended; if any other sense be imposed on or extracted from the word, it is a violation of it, and so it speaks not the mind of God, but the pleasure and fancies of men.

White, in his Way to the Church, p. 45.

"And have profaned mine holy things." By "holy things," the Lord means the sacrifices and oblations which they were to order according to the institution and rules given them from God, by Moses; but what was holy upon a legal account, they esteemed common, and slighted, which was a profaning of them. In the 8th verse God told Jerusalem she had despised his holy things; and here he tells the priests they had profaned them, that is, they had ordinary thoughts and esteem of them, and handled them so, as became not "holy things." When the "holy things" were eaten of out of season, or by persons unfit, under legal uncleanness, they were profaned, Lev. xix. 8; xxii. 1—16.

"They have put no difference between the holy and profane." The law tells us what things and persons are said to be holy or profane, clean or unclean, as you may see, Lev. xi. throughout; Num. vi. xviii. 11—13; Deut. xiv. 3—21; Lev. xix. 7, 8; xxi. and xxii. The priests should have instructed the people, what meats were lawful for them, what not; what sacrifices were fit to be brought to the Lord, and what not; who were worthy, and who not, to eat of the holy things, and to approach unto the holy God. This is acknowledged to have been the duty of the priests, from Lev. x. 10, 11; Ezek. xlv. 23, where mention is made of teaching; and from Haggai ii. 11—13, where they practised it, and told them what was unholy and unclean. But this is not all contained in this text, for the Hebrew word בָּרַח rendered here, to put difference, imports power and authority to separate persons and things one from another, as Gen. i. 4, "God divided" or separated "the light from the darkness;" Deut. iv. 41, "Moses severed three cities on this side Jordan;" 2 Chron. xxv. 10, "Then Amaziah separated them;" and Ainsworth reads those words, Lev. x. 10, That ye may separate between the holy and profane: by that power God had put into their hands, they were to keep the wicked and profane from the holy things, to separate them from the congregation; and so the word is used, Ezra x. 8. The priests sinned in that they did not teach the people what was legally holy, and legally profane, and also in that they did not put forth that power they had, to preserve the holy things of God pure. Those priests therefore that withstood Uzziah the king, attempting to offer incense upon the altar, and thrust him out of the sanctuary, when the leprosy appeared in his forehead, they did their duty, and kept the things of God unpolluted, 2 Chron. xxvi. 20: it was unlawful for him to offer incense, unlawful for him, being leprous, to be in that place where the incense was to be offered; and had not the priests had power, it had been unlawful in them to have thrust him out.

"Neither had they showed difference between the unclean and the clean." The Hebrew word for "showed difference" is, הרעיק they did not make to know, they neglected to teach and instruct them, which was a sin inexcusable; but more than so may be gathered out of this word; they did not make them to know experimentally, by inflicting censures, what the difference was between the clean and the unclean. They had three sorts of excommunication; the lesser, called niddai, the middle sort, called cherem, and the greatest, called sammatha. He who was defiled with leprosy was to be removed out of the camp of Israel, the camp of the priests, and the camp of God. He who was defiled with an issue, was to be removed out of the camp of God, and the camp of the priests, but not out of the camp of Israel. He that was defiled by the touch of a dead body, was only to be removed out of the camp of God. Now it is likely the priests failed in doing their part in some of these, they suffered those who were legally unclean, to come amongst those who were legally clean, and did not, by removal of them, make them to know what a mercy it was to be clean, and what an evil to be unclean. It is said, Judg. viii. 16, that Gideon took bribes and thorns, "and with them he taught the men of Succoth," יירע he made them to know, by what they felt and suffered, he made them to know; so the priests should have made them to know, by their removal from the camp and holy things of God, what the great difference was between the clean and unclean. I have met with one author, who reads the words thus, Neither have they broken or divided between the clean and the unclean.

"And have hid their eyes from my sabbaths." The Hebrew word for "hid" is, סָתַם alam, which properly is spoken of them that have watery, bleak, and bloodshot eyes; so that they cannot see well, as Avenarius saith; such eyes had those priests, that they could not see. The ordinary acceptation of the word is, to hide or cover. The Septuagint is, παρεκάλυπτον, they have covered their eyes from my sabbaths. This expression, of hiding their eyes, hath these things in it.

1. They did not mind the holiness and honour of the sabbath. That was a day to be sanctified in a special manner, Exod. xx. 8; Lev. xxiii. 3; Ezek. xx. 20; they should have called the sabbath a delight, holy and honourable, Isa. lviii. 13; for it was a day as for honouring of God, so for God's honouring them with his presence and blessings; but they minded not the holiness or honourableness of the day, and this was hiding their eyes from it.

2. When men by their sinful practices profaned the sabbaths of the Lord, they took no notice thereof, they did not tell them of their sins, convince them of the wickedness of their doings, but connive and wink at their doings. Jer. xvii. 27, there were those who carried in burdens at the gates of Jerusalem on the sabbath day, which God by Jeremiah complained of, and threatened the destruction of Jerusalem for; but the priests, though they knew and saw these things, yet they were silent; and this was hiding their eyes from the sabbaths of the Lord.

3. Themselves did those things on the sabbaths which the law of God did not justify, and they having their pretences and excuses for the same, they did not the duties of the sabbath; they did their own pleasure, walked in their own ways, and spake their own words, contrary to that in Isa. lviii. 13; they did wicked things on that holy day, and profaned the sabbaths of the Lord, ver. 8, of this chapter; Jer. xxiii. 11, "Both prophet and priest are profane," they did profane, and so they hid their eyes from the sabbath.

"And I am profaned amongst them." The profaning of holy things, the holy day, and holy name of the Lord, are oft mentioned, Lev. xxii. 15; Neh. xiii. 17; Amos ii. 7; Ezek. xx. 9, 14, 22; but here it goes higher, and comes to God himself, who saith, "I am profaned." God in his own nature cannot be profaned, that is incapable of all profanation; but he is said to be profaned, when his commands are despised, his worship corrupted, and evil is spoken of him and his ways. God is sanctified when we fear him in our hearts, Isa. viii. 13, and tremble at his words, Isa. lxvi. 2, worship him according to his own appointments, preserving his worship pure, and so live as to cause others to glorify his name, 1 Pet. ii. 12; Matt. v. 16; when the contrary is done, he is profaned; when men contemn the commands of God, break his laws, defile his sabbaths, they profane the Lord, and by such doings cause his name to be blasphemed by others, and, in that, himself is profaned.

Obs. 1. That holy things are to be kept holy. "They have violated my law, profaned mine holy things, put no difference between the holy and profane," &c. This was the evil, that holy things were profaned. The holy oil, spoken of Exod. xxx. must be kept holy, and none must make or compound any like it, ver. 31, 32; so for the holy perfume, ver. 37. The passover was a holy thing, and the Lord ordered it so, that it might be kept holy; Exod. xii. 43, 44, 48, strangers and uncircumcised might not eat thereof, because that was a defiling of it; those who were legally unclean, were not to keep the passover till they were cleansed, Numb. v. 2, 3; chap. ix. 6, 7, &c. they were put off from the fourteenth day of the first month, unto the fourteenth day of the second month. And so for other of the holy things, see what rules God gives, and how strict he was to prevent the profaning of them; Lev. xxii. 3—7, God threatened to cut off such a soul, that should meddle with the holy things, being unclean. Cut off from children, say some, he should be without posterity; cut off by an untimely death, say others; or cut off from God, and having inheritance with his people in heaven. Hence was it that God committed the holy things to the charge of the priests, Numb. iii. 28, 31, 32, and Levites, chap. xviii. 2—5; and they kept the door of the Lord's house, 2 Kings xii. 9; and when they were defiled, they were not to meddle with the holy things, Ezra ii. 63; Ezek. xlv. 13.

Obs. 2. When those who are near to God are unfaithful, and do not improve their power and interest to preserve the things of God and ordinances holy, it is matter of provocation and complaint. The priests here, who were officers in his house, they dealt unfaithfully, and did not to their interest and power lay out themselves to preserve the things of God from profaning and polluting; and that offended the Lord, and made him to complain of them. Ezek. xlv. 7, 8, God complains of them there, that they brought into his sanctuary unclean things in heart and flesh, and polluted it thereby; that they did eat fat and blood, which were prohibited most severely, Lev. vii. 25—27; and so broke his covenant, and kept not the charge of his holy things. When Nadab and Abihu brought strange fire, that is, unholy fire, such as God commanded not, how greatly did it provoke God, even so far as to kindle a fire in his wrath, and to consume them! they were not faithful, they defiled themselves, their censers, and the worship of God, with their unholy fire, Lev. x. 1, 2. You may find the Lord angry with and complaining of some of the angels of the seven churches, for their unfaithfulness and faultiness this way: Rev. ii. 14—16, there God complains of the angel of Pergamos, and tells him that he did not keep out corrupt doctrines, that the doctrine of Balaam and the Nicolaitans were suffered amongst them: so for the angel of Thyatira, that Jezebel was suffered to teach and seduce the church, and to draw the members thereof to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to idols. Here the Lord was offended with the churches, and complains of them.

Obs. 3. That there is a difference to be made between person and person, when it comes to communion in and participation of holy things. It was the priests' sin here, that they did not put a difference between the holy and profane, the clean and the unclean. This is to be done both doctrinally and practically.

(1.) Doctrinally. The prophets and priests were by their teachings to make a difference. Jer. xv. 19, "If thou take forth the precious from the vile, then thou shalt be as my mouth." The Vulgate reads it, If thou shalt separate the precious from the vile: that is, saith Maldonate, If thou shalt by thy word sever the elect from the reprobate. Piscator likewise interprets the words doctrinally, If thou shalt hold out my gracious promises only for the comfort of the godly, and not of the wicked, then thou shalt be as my mouth; I will own thee for my faithful servant, as having spoken and done what I myself would have spoken and done. Ezek. xiii. 22, God is wroth with the false prophets and prophetesses for saddening the hearts of the righteous, and strengthening the hands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wicked ways, by promising him life: they did not distinguish between the precious and the vile.

(2.) Practically. When any of the people were ceremonially unclean, they were to be kept from the clean, and from communion with them in the holy things. No stranger, no uncircumcised, none that had any running issue, that was leprous, were to eat the passover, or join with the congregation in their holy things, Exod. xii. 48; Lev. xxii. 3. And if ceremonial uncleanness did exclude Israelites from the holy things under the law, moral uncleanness may justly exclude christians under the gospel. 2 Cor. vi. 17, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing." Idols and idolaters are unclean things, scandalous and ignorant persons are unclean things, and we must come out from them, if we will have God to receive us; yea, those who are unbelievers, how evil and fair soever their lives be, are unclean things, Tit. i. 15; those that have a form of godliness, and deny the power, are also such, and we must turn from them, 2 Tim. iii. 5, from such, as well as the others before mentioned, you must turn away, and not have communion with. There is a prophecy in the 52nd of Isaiah, ver. 1, that the unclean and unclean should not come into Zion, or the new Jerusalem; and it suits with what you have, Rev. xxi. 27, "There shall in no wise enter into it," viz. the new Jerusalem, "any thing that defileth;" such must be kept out as will defile. There were porters at every gate of Jerusalem when the passover in Josiah's days was kept, and they suffered not unclean or uncircumcised ones to enter; and the Annotations upon this place in the Revelation say, In the last church on earth discipline in likelihood shall be so strictly executed, that no profane persons shall be found there, only elect persons, so far as men can judge; there shall be spiritual porters to keep out defilers. Dead stones must not be laid in a living temple.

Obs. 4. That the profaning of holy things is a profaning of God himself. "They have violated my law, profaned my holy things, &c. and I am profaned amongst them." When holy things are not ordered and regarded as they ought, as becomes them, and him who hath made them holy, it is a profanation of both. There is so near a relation between God and his ordinances, his holy things, that the wrong done to them he accounts done to himself, and the profaning of them, the profaning of himself. When the priests offered polluted bread upon the altar, they polluted God, Mal. i. 7; they brought that which was defective, and not according to the law, and that polluted the altar, which God accounted polluting of himself. And this dealing with God so offends him, that sometimes he breaks out, and smites, yea, destroys persons for the same. When the Bethshemites irreverently meddled with the ark, the Lord did smite fifty thousand and seventy men, 1 Sam. vi. 19; it was a profaning of the Lord, so rudely to touch and peep into the ark. The Corinthians abused, profaned the holy things of God, 1 Cor. xi. 1; and for that very cause many were made weak and sickly, and others were cut off by death. Look to it then that you be holy, if you will meddle with holy things, and that you handle them holy, lest you profane the Lord: Eccles. v. 1, "Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear, than to give the sacrifice of fools."

Ver. 27. Her princes in the midst thereof are like wolves ravening the prey, to shed blood, and to destroy souls, to get dishonest gain.

You had the prophets' and the priests' sins in the two precedent verses; in this you have the princes'; which are, violence, cruelty, covetousness.

"Her princes." The Hebrew for "princes" is מְשִׁימָה, to act the part of a prince, to bear rule. The Septuagint hath it, οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς, her chief men. Her rulers, her princes, that should have been "such as feared God, men of truth, hating covetousness." Exod. xviii. 21, they were now so degenerated, that they were become like wolves.

"Like wolves." Wolves for their outward shape are like unto dogs, a creature that is strong, swift, fierce, cruel, and crafty, ^{Histor. Antiquit. Arabum.} as Franzius observes. In them are seen notable resemblances of the devil, heretics, thieves, and tyrants. When princes and rulers oppress the people, they are tyrants, and in Scripture language, "wolves." Now two things in wolves especially they resemble:

1. Their subtlety, or craftiness in getting the prey, for the wolf comes behind horned beasts, sets upon them unawares, that they may not be able to defend themselves: so tyrants deal craftily with the people, take them suddenly in their stratagems, and spoil them of the benefit of law, and other helps: Exod. i. 10; Acts vii. 19, Pharaoh, that tyrant, dealt subtly with the Jews; so did Haman, Esth. iii. 8, 9; so did Ishmael, Jer. xli. 5—7.

2. Their cruelty. Wolves are very cruel and bloody, they will kill many lambs, many sheep, and only suck their bloods; nothing do they desire more, than blood, and man's flesh, and when they go out to prey, they do sharpen their teeth with a certain herb they chew. So tyrants are wolfish in this respect. Adoni-bezek, was not he such, when he cut off the thumbs and toes of seventy kings? Judg. i. 7. Was not Herod a ravenous wolf, who sucked the blood of all the children in Bethlehem, and the coats thereof, under two years old? Matt. ii. 16. What a she-wolf was Athaliah, who murdered all the seed royal! 2 Kings xi. 1. What a cruel, bloody wolf was Manahem, who ripped up all the women with child in Tiphshah! 2 Kings xv. 16. And was not Manasseh a mighty blood-sucking and ravenous wolf, who filled Jerusalem with innocent blood from one end to the other? 2 Kings xxi. 16. Jehoiakim and Jehoiachin were lions and wolves, that caught the prey, and devoured men, Ezek. xix. 3, 6; and in Zedekiah's days the princes and rulers were such, as filled the land with "bloody crimes," Ezek. vii. 23. Not unjustly therefore are they said to be like wolves, yea, to be wolves, Zeph. iii. 3.

"Ravensing the prey." These words we had in the 25th verse; the prophets were like lions ravensing the prey, and the princes were like wolves ravensing the prey: wolves are more ignoble than lions, and the princes were worse than the false prophets, they ravensed sorer than they.

"To shed blood." Of this sin mention is made in ver. 4, 6, 9, 12, of this chapter. It is a sin in any, but especially in princes, who should protect their subjects from violence and blood, and rather venture the shedding of their own blood, than suffer the people's to be wrongfully shed; but now the princes were so wicked, that, like wolves, they destroyed and devoured their own sheep, by breaking covenants made with other princes, and so drawing upon them barbarous nations. By receiving bribes, and hearkening to tales, they gave way to the execution of innocent ones, by which sin they destroyed the lives of men, their persons, and the image of God; for which thing no recompence can be made, nor ought to be taken if it could be made. Numb. xxxv. 31, he that shed blood unjustly, was to have his blood shed, whatsoever he were.

"And to destroy souls." Souls are not in the power of princes or other men to destroy or hurt, Matt. x. 28; they are the Lord's, Ezek. xviii. 4, and he only hath power over them. Princes here are said to "destroy souls," because they do what lies in their power to destroy them: or we may take "souls" here synecdochically for the whole man, they shed blood to destroy men; when the blood of men is spilled, they are destroyed.

"To get dishonest gain." The Hebrew is rendered by Montanus, to desire a lust, or to satisfy a lust; and in the margin he hath it thus, that they might covetously or greedily follow covetousness. These princes did covet the wealth of the people, and found out ways to cut them off, that so they might enjoy their estates. These words "dishonest gain," we had in the 13th verse, and therefore shall forbear to add any thing more about them.

Obs. 1. That when prophets and priests are corrupt, the magistrates are not sound. In the 25th verse, the prophets were like lions, they devoured souls; in the 26th, the priests violated the law, and profaned the holy things; and here the princes were like wolves, shedding blood. When the heads in the ecclesiastic estate are evil, those in the civil estate are seldom good; when prophets and priests do wickedly, princes will quickly learn to follow them; they have great influence into the courts and hearts of princes.

Obs. 2. When magistrates and rulers are covetous, they are insatiably covetous, and will be cruel to satisfy their covetous lusts. The princes were greedy of gain; and to get it, they, like wolves, did raven the prey, shed blood, destroy souls. They being princes, had great revenues; but they were not content with what was their own, they cast their eyes and thoughts upon what the people had, and let out their desires after the same; and covetous desires brought forth oppression in taxes, and cruelty, in making away and cutting off many rich ones, under pretence of delinquency, that they might enjoy their lands and livings. When men are "greedy of gain," they will "take away the life of the owners thereof," Prov. i. 19. Ahab and Jezebel took away the life of Naboth for his vineyard, which they greedily coveted, 1 Kings xxi. 19. Solomon tells you that a "wicked ruler is like a roaring lion, and a ranging bear," he is a great oppressor, Prov. xxviii. 15, 16; he threatens them, fills them with fears, and daily is plucking away their estates from them; he rangeth here for a prey one day, and there for a prey another day, and is never satisfied, till he hath devoured them and theirs. Zeph. iii. 3, "Her princes within her are roaring lions; her judges are evening wolves; they gnaw not the bones till the morrow;" they devour the men one day, and their estates the next day; the flesh will not suffice them, but they must eat up bones and all. Covetousness is an insatiable horse-leech, that cries Give, give, and will break all laws, bonds, relations, to enjoy what it desires. There was much in it, when the Lord forbade kings to multiply gold and silver greatly to themselves, Deut. xvii. 17; he foresaw that if their hearts were carried out strongly after such things, that they, having power in their hands, would oppress, shed blood, destroy souls, and all for to get dishonest gain. Isaiah therefore calls such princes "thieves," chap. i. 23; they robbed, they murdered the people to enrich themselves. Vespasian was ^{Suetonius in} such a thief to the Roman state, who ^{Vespasian.} put in the greatest offices the greatest extortioners, whom he used like sponges, to fill them while dry, and to crush out their liquor when they were full; when they were grown rich then he spoiled them. It is needful to pray for rulers, that they may fear God, hate covetousness, and never prove roaring lions, nor ravensing wolves.

Ver. 28. And her prophets have daubed them with untempered mortar, seeing vanity, and divining lies unto them, saying, Thus saith the Lord God, when the Lord hath not spoken.

Here we have the prophets brought in again, where, besides those sins mentioned, ver. 25, you have an addition of their flattery and lying.

"Have daubed them with untempered mortar." Of these words see before, chap. xiii. 10, 11. כֶּסֶל imports, a thing unseasoned, weak, inept to adhere and cleave to a thing, and quickly falling off, having no tenacity in it. When plasterers lay loam or sand upon a wall, and there be nothing binding therein, ere long it falls off again, though for the present it covers deformities, and makes it seem goodly. So these prophets flattered the princes and great ones, and plastered over their vile practices with smooth and fair words, encouraging them in their ways, and promising them safety; which they did, having countenance and maintenance from them, Micah iii. 11, and upon hopes of greater preferment; but it proved otherwise, for when the winds and storms of divine displeasure came, both prophets, princes, and the untempered mortar fell together.

"Seeing vanity, and divining lies unto them, saying, Thus saith," &c. These words were formerly spoken of, chap. xiii. 6, 7. They told the princes and people, that they had visions from God, that he had spoken unto them, and sent them to prophesy such things unto them; whereas they saw nothing, neither heard or had any thing from God, but followed their own spirits, which were vain and lying. Herein they dealt perfidiously with God and man.

Obs. 1. Though princes and rulers be exceedingly wicked, insatiably covetous and cruel, oppressing and destroying the people, yet there are prophets who will flatter, countenance, and encourage them in those ways. The princes were ravening wolves, shed blood, destroyed souls, to get dishonest gain, and Jerusalem's prophets daubed them with untempered mortar: they applauded their practices, justified their doings, and told them that God did approve of their ways. It was not the nobles, citizens, but the prophets of Jerusalem which did this. Princes and great ones want not false and lying prophets to bolster them up, and to bear them out in their vile and detestable courses.

Ahab was a wicked king, and he had a multitude of flattering, daubing prophets: 2 Chron. xviii. 10, 11, "Go, and prosper, for the Lord hath delivered it into the hand of the king;" the enterprise is warrantable, will prove successful; fear not. There were "flattering divinations" among the false prophets, Ezek. xii. 24; and with these they bedaubed the wicked princes, and strengthened the hands of evil-doers, Jer. xxiii. 14. When princes are evil-doers, and encouraged by false or true prophets, they will do mischief with a witness. When the king that lately suffered was upon oppressing designs, to get dishonest gain, did not England's prophets flatter, encourage, and daub with untempered mortar, when they told him, all the people had was his, that he might do what he pleased with his subjects and their estates?

Flattery is evil in any, but worst of all in prophets, and especially when they have to do with wicked princes, whom they harden in their wickedness thereby, and ripen for destruction. Flattery pleases men greatly, it is like tickling: but there is tickling unto death. Reproof is a precious balm, Psal. cxli. 5; but flattery is a destructive net, Prov. xxix. 5. Let the true prophets abhor it; and so speak the truth, that they may appeal to the consciences of great and small, as Paul doth, 1 Thess. ii. 5, "Not at any time used we flattering words, as ye know." It is good to be free from flattery, and also from reviling. Many, that they may not seem to flatter, yet will revile and speak evil of rulers; both which are evil.

Obs. 2. That what false prophets give out is unsavoury, and unsound, weak, and useless. It is untempered mortar: it may stick in men's heads a little, to strengthen them to do wickedly; but it will not stick in their hearts, to strengthen them against the day of evil, and to justify their doings. What is there in vanity and lies to establish? False prophets see vanity and divine lies, which are unsavoury and unprofitable things: it is truth, and divine truth, which establisheth, 2 Pet. i. 19; the vain and lying imaginations of men, do deceive and disappoint. Pashur prophesied lies, the things of his own heart and spirit, which himself and others trusted in; but see how he, and they who believed him, were deceived and disappointed, Jer. xx. 6. The scornful rulers which made lies their refuge, and hid themselves under falsehood, saying, "The overflowing scourge shall not come unto us," Isa. xxviii. 14, 15; see what the Lord saith in the 17th verse, "The hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding-place." False prophecies, false opinions, false confidences, will not advantage in a windy and stormy time; they are all untempered mortar; and what men give out from themselves, and not from God, doth not profit at all, Jer. xxiii. 32.

Obs. 3. The subtlety and impudency of false prophets, to make way for their vanities and lies: they pretend they have messages from God, and say, "Thus saith the Lord God," there is their cunning; and to make God author of their vanities and lies, there is their impudency. They knew their dreams, visions, vanities, lies, would not take with princes or people, if not presented unto them as from God. The true prophets told them, "Thus saith the Lord;" and the false made use of his name and authority, the better to usher in what came from their own spirits; for whatsoever seems to have the authority of men or God to back it, hath the better acceptance, and greater influence. This was the constant practice of false prophets, as you may see, Jer. xxviii. 10, 11; xiv. 14; xxvii. 14, 15; xxiii. 17. Ezek. xiii. 6, 7. They made God the author of all their vanities, lies, dreams, and whatsoever came out of their own heads and hearts, which argued a height of impudency in them. They did not only abuse men, but they greatly abused God; Jer. v. 12, "They have belied the Lord," and made that to be the word of God which was not; they walked in lies, and strengthened the hands of evil-doers; which provoked God so bitterly against them, Jer. xxiii. 14, 15, that he saith, he would "feed them with wormwood, and make them drink the water of gall." And because many prophets amongst us have belied the Lord, in making some scriptures speak that to maintain their opinions and tenets which never was the mind of God in them, therefore he is wroth with them, feeding them with wormwood, and making them to drink the water of gall.

Ver. 29. The people of the land have used oppression, and exercised robbery, and have vexed the poor and needy: yea, they have oppressed the stranger wrongfully.

Having spoken of the prophets', princes', and priests' sins, he comes now to the people's; they had no cause to insult over and censure them, for themselves were not free: and their sins were,

1. "Oppression."

II. "Robbery" and covetousness.

Both these aggravated from the persons they oppressed, robbed; and they were,

1. "The poor and needy."

2. "Strangers."

"The people of the land." There were four sorts of men in Canaan; "prophets of Jerusalem," Jer. xxiii. 14: "priests of the Lord," 1 Sam. i. 3, and "of the high places," 2 Kings xxiii. 20; "princes of the people," Ezek. xi. 1; and "people of the land," which were the inferior sort, the vulgar, whom the prophet terms so, not by way of disgrace and opposition to the others, who were in places of eminency, but for distinction only.

“Have used oppression.” The Hebrew is thus, did oppress with oppression, that is, did greatly oppress. The word for oppressing, notes oppression by force or fraud, as hath formerly been showed, and is rendered here by Junius, This people deals very deceitfully. Some read the words thus, They did calumniate one another, and so oppress; for calumniation, or slandering, is a great wronging and oppression of a man. Those who are given to oppressing will use slander, fraud, force, any way to accomplish their wills and desires.

“And exercised robbery.” These words are the same in the Hebrew with those chap. xviii. 12, “hath spoiled by violence.” There the verb is in the singular number, and the substantive in the plural; here the verb is in the plural, and the substantive in the singular number. They did steal and get from one another what they could, secretly or openly, which was violence and robbery, and this they did frequently, they were exercised in it.

“And have vexed the poor and needy.” The word for “vexed” here is, עָרַב the same with oppressed, or used oppression; of which, with the other words, “poor and needy,” was spoken chap. xviii. 7, 12; xvi. 49: the poor and needy should have been counselled, comforted, not vexed or oppressed.

“Ye, they have oppressed the stranger wrongfully.” Of oppressing the stranger hath already been spoken in the 7th verse of this chapter. The Hebrew for “wrongfully” is, בְּיָד חֲסֵד without right. They did unjustly oppress the stranger against all law and right. There was no justice amongst them, in their dealings with natives or strangers; only fraud and force took place.

Obs. 1. That people are usually such as those over them in church and state are. The prophets, the priests, the princes, were wicked, and the people were like unto them. The prophets were covetous, and thereupon oppressed, taking the treasure and precious things, ver. 25; the priests violated the law, and profaned the name of the Lord, ver. 26; the princes, for “dishonest gain,” did dishonest and cruel things, ver. 27; and here the people were like them, covetous, using oppression, and exercising robbery. Micah iii. 11, “The heads thereof,” that is, of Zion, “judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money.” Here the chief in the state and church had their eyes upon the reward, the hire, the money; and to enjoy the same, they would do, say, any thing. Covetousness is the root of all evil, and causeth all sorts of men in whom it is found, to comply with the humours of others, for its own interest, and to make a prey of those who oppose the same; and were not the people suitable unto these that were over them? Jer. v. 31, “The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so:” the false prophets, by their lies and flatteries, did strengthen the wicked priests in their practices; they took into their hands (so the words may be read) more power than they should, and gifts which they should not, and the “people love to have it so;” they love to hear the prophets’ lies, and to feed the priests with gifts, to bear them up in their ways. Chap. vi. 13, “From the least of them to the greatest of them every one is given to covetousness; and from the prophet even unto the priest every one dealeth falsely;” and how came it to be so? the people learned it of those in place; Jer. xxiii. 15, “From the prophets of Jerusalem is profaneness gone forth into all the land;” the word may be rendered hypocrisy, dissimulation, deceit; the false prophets were notorious hypocrites, deceivers themselves, and they infected all the land with their leaven. It was the prophets and priests principally that made the “king glad with their wickedness, and the princes with their lies,” Hos. vii. 3; and when a prince or “ruler hearkens to lies, all his servants are wicked,” Prov. xxix. 12. Wicked prophets and priests make wicked princes; wicked princes make wicked servants and wicked subjects. They tell them tales, lies, accusing unto them those who are contrary to their ways, designs, and interest, or not forwarders thereof; whereupon princes set their servants, creatures, agents on work, to obstruct and pervert justice, to entrap and crush such persons. This was much practised in late days. The prelates possessed the princes with their lies and falsehoods concerning the Book of Sports on the Lord’s day, concerning altars and altar-worship, and they quickly infected all their servants, and too many of their subjects therewith; so that if the prophets, priests, and princes be naught, the people are too like unto them.

Obs. 2. Covetous practices in deceiving of, or in getting and griping from others, is plain theft. “The people of the land have used oppression,” or deceit, as your margins have it, “and exercised robbery.” When covetousness puts men upon deceitful practices, as to use false weights, false lights, false measures, it is robbery; so when corrupt, counterfeit, embased materials be put off for sound and good, be it in moneys, clothing, corn, meal, wines, flesh, fish, any vendible commodity, it is, in the judgment of God, robbery; so exacting of fees, expedition-money, taking advantages of men’s necessities, of forfeitures of bonds or lands, withholding of servants’ and labourers’ wages, altering of wills, forging of deeds, warrants, Luke xix. 8. Lev. xix. 13, “Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbour, neither rob him; the wages of him that is hired shall not abide with thee all night until the morning:” the word for “defraud,” notes wresting and plucking from a man, and is the same with the word for oppressing here. So that he who oppresses, who wrests any thing from another by subtlety, he plays the thief, he robs him; so for the hired man’s wages, when the time agreed upon for payment comes, you must not defer one night, one day longer, it is oppression, it is robbery, and cries out against men, James v. 4. When many, for greediness of gain, bought and sold in the temple, Christ called them thieves; “Ye have made it,” saith Christ, “a den of thieves,” Matt. xxi. 13. The priests, for gain, gave way to others to buy and sell doves and other things which were of use for offerings and sacrifices, and they made them, who bought the same for such purposes, pay dearly for them, and for this they were called thieves, not simply for being in the temple; it was their covetous practices, their deceiving, their griping, that made Christ brand them with that name. When men out of covetousness do grate upon others, defraud and overreach them in bargaining, or otherwise, they are robbers; and such doings is called robbery; Amos iii. 10, “They know not to do right, saith the Lord, who store up violence and robbery in their palaces;” they were so exercised with covetous practices, that “they knew not to do right,” only they were acquainted with theft. Nineveh was such a city; Nahum iii. 1, “It is full of lies and robbery,” all shops, all places in it, were full of them. I fear London is too like Nineveh, “full of lies and robbery.” Are not men’s hearts, tongues, hands, exercised with covetous practices? is there not much fraud, griping, and catching advantages in most shops, places, and persons? When will the time come, that this city may be called "a city of righteousness, the faithful city?" If you do find your hearts carried out greedily after gain, and desire to be rich, consider these places of Scripture:

Prov. xxviii. 20, "He that maketh haste to be rich shall not be innocent;" he shall not go without punishment; God will plague him one way or other, send some secret curse into his heart or estate, if not some outward visible judgment.

Prov. xx. 21, "An inheritance may be gotten hastily at the beginning; but the end thereof shall not be blessed." Men may think God blesses them, leaves them, they thrive, they get great estates; but mark the end, the end of an estate so gotten shall not be blessed. How many get great estates in this city, and their children spend it shamefully when they are gone!

Jer. xvii. 11, "He that getteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool." He promises long life to himself, but he shall soon be plucked away, and be declared to be a fool: Luke xii. 19, 20, "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; eat, drink, and be merry;" he thought he should live long; but what followed? "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee; then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided?" It may be you think your children shall have what you get; but it is more than you know, if you will believe David, Psal. xxxix. 6. Suppose your heir do, can you tell what he will prove? it is more than Solomon could tell: Eccl. ii. 19, "Who knoweth whether he shall be a wise man or a fool?"

1 Tim. vi. 9, 10; read, study, mind those verses well, they have much in them.

Obs. 3. Who are a prey and spoil to the rich and great? It is the poor, needy, and strangers: "the people of the land vexed and oppressed them." Those who had estates, purses, and power, they dealt wrongfully with others. The Scripture sets out this evil by various expressions. Men are said to have an evil eye against the poor, Deut. xv. 9; to set their eyes against the poor, Psal. x. 8; to lie in wait to catch the poor, Psal. x. 9; to devise devices to destroy the poor with lying words, when he speaks right, Isa. xxxii. 7; to shame the counsel of the poor, Psal. xiv. 6; to despise the poor, James ii. 6; to mock the poor, Prov. xvii. 5; to hate the poor, chap. xiv. 20; to rule and lord it over the poor, chap. xxii. 7; to bend their bow to cast down the poor, Psal. xxxvii. 14; to grind the faces of the poor, Isa. iii. 15; to turn aside the poor in the gate, Amos v. 12; to take away the right from the poor and needy, Isa. x. 2; to tread upon the poor, Amos v. 11; to sell the poor for shoes, chap. ii. 6; to rob the poor, because he is poor, Prov. xxii. 22; to take away his house violently, Job xx. 19; to devour the poor secretly, Hab. iii. 14; to oppress the poor, crush the needy, Amos iv. 1; to swallow up the needy, chap. viii. 4; to turn aside the stranger from his right, Mal. iii. 5; to oppress him, as here; to slay him, Psal. xciv. 6.

The Lord takes special notice of the poor, and men's enriages towards them. Take heed, then, that the spoil of the poor be not found in your houses, as it is said, Isa. iii. 14; and that their blood be not found on your skirts, Jer. ii. 34; for the Lord will arise "for the oppression of the poor, and sighing of the needy," Psal. xii. 5; he will maintain their right, Psal. cxl. 12. Let your hearts and eyes be towards them, let your hands be stretched out to do them good, for "blessed is he that considereth the poor," Psal. xli. 1; and whoso bath mercy on them is happy, Prov. xiv. 21; be not of that generation, Prov. xxx. 14.

Ver. 30. And I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me for the land, that I should not destroy it: but I found none.

The Lord having made a large catalogue of Jerusalem's sins, and shown a universal corruption of all sorts of men, what could be expected but that he should proceed to the destruction of them? But, that he might more fully justify his proceedings towards those that were already in captivity, and likewise towards them that were yet remaining, he tells them what he did; he sought for some one or other to have appeared, interceded, and prevented judgments; he looked some course should have been taken, the land being so guilty, to have kept off destroying judgments; and seeing there was none minded the public good, doing aught that might occasion God to spare them, the fault was in themselves, and not in him, that they were wholly ruined.

"And I sought for a man among them." The Hebrew word בָּחַן signifies, to seek with great care; as Kirker observes, an earnest, diligent seeking, a running up and down to find out a thing. So here the Lord made a diligent search, he went up and down from prophet to priest, from priest to prince, from prince to people, to see if he could find out any man. It is spoken of the Lord after the manner of men, and is suitable to that expression, 2 Chron. xvi. 9, "The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth;" that is, Divine Providence exactly observes all things in the world, especially what men do; and here God looked earnestly upon all sorts of men, to see if any stirred to interpose, and stand in the gap. The French is, I demanded some one among them; I called for a man to come forth, and see if he could prevent those judgments which were coming upon them.

"That should make up the hedge." The Hebrew is, hedging a hedge. The words are metaphorical, and the metaphor is taken from vineyards, gardens, and places enclosed, which use to have fences and hedges about them, to preserve them from every thing that might harm them, both men and beasts. The Jews were God's vineyard, Isa. v. 1; and he had fenced and hedged them, ver. 2, 5; they were God's garden, and he had enclosed them, Cant. iv. 12. The fence, "hedge," or wall, about this people was,

1. God's protection of them. He had a special care of them, being his church and people, above all others; as the city Jerusalem had a wall about it, Neh. i. 3, so God was a wall to the citizens thereof; Zech. ii. 5, "A wall of fire round about them." Isa. xxvii. 3, lest any should hurt his vineyard, he kept it night and day, he watched over it continually, and preserved it.

2. Those things and means God had given them to be a hedge or wall unto them; as,

(1.) Sound doctrine; which was as a "hedge" to keep out all errors, corrupt and heathenish opinions, which they were in danger of, having the nations round about them; but God had given them good doctrine, Prov. iv. 2; right words, Psal. xxxiii. 4; lively oracles, Acts vii. 38; faithful commands, Psal. cxix. 86; sure testimonies, Psal. xciii. 5; such as they were to try all doctrines and opinions by, Isa. viii. 20.

(2.) Pure worship; which was as a "hedge" between them and the heathens. Deut. vi. 13, 14, "Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and serve him, and shalt swear by his name. Ye shall not go after other gods, of the gods of the people which are round about you." Ver. 17, 18, "Ye shall diligently keep the command ments of the Lord your God, and his testimonies, and his statutes, which he hath commanded thee. And thou shalt do that which is right and good in the sight of the Lord: that it may be well with thee." 2 Kings xvii. 36, 37, God had appointed them a pure way of worship, which hedged them in from all false ways of worship, from bringing in ought of their own and others'.

(3.) Good laws; Deut. iv. 8, "What nation is there so great, that hath statutes and judgments so righteous?" no nation under heaven had such laws to be governed by as the Jews had, and those laws were "hedged" against all injustice; they might not wrong one another, nor strangers.

(4.) God had given them good prophets, priests, and princes, for their safety, to be a "hedge" unto them. The prophets were to preserve the doctrine sound, the priests to keep the worship pure, and the princes to see justice impartially executed: Elijah, a good prophet, was the horsemen and chariot of Israel, 2 Kings ii. 12; xiii. 14: the priests were mediators between God and the people, Joel ii. 17; the princes were the strength of the land, Prov. xxix. 4: thus you see what the "hedge" was. And if you would have it more briefly, it was the covenant made between God and this people: he had promised to be their God, and to protect them; they had promised to be his people, and to walk in his ways; now when they transgressed the covenant, the "hedge" was broken, and gaps were made.

The Hebrew for gaps is כַּרְעַץ in the breach, from כָּרַץ to divide and break through: they had now broke through the "hedge," and made many gaps, which appears thus:

1. The doctrine was corrupted. There was much chaff mingled with the wheat, Jer. xxiii. 28: false prophets gave in that to be divine, which was from their own hearts, spirits, heads, Ezek. xiii. 2, 3: they prophesied lies, Jer. xiv. 14; the providence of God was denied, and his omnipresence, Ezek. viii. 12, "The Lord seeth us not; he hath forsaken the earth;" so his justice, Ezek. xviii. 2, 25, they said his ways were not equal, the fathers had eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth were set on edge; they taught the people to swear by a false god, even by Baal, Jer. xii. 16.

2. For the worship, that was greatly corrupted. The sanctuary was defiled with detestable things, Ezek. v. 11; they had brought images and idols near to the temple, and into the temple, chap. viii.; they had high places and altars in every street, chap. xvi.; they burnt incense to other gods, and worshipped the works of their own hands, Jer. i. 16; the statutes of Omri were kept, and the works of the house of Ahab, Micah vi. 16; and the fear or worship of God was taught by the precepts of men, Isa. xxix. 13.

3. The laws were wrested and perverted, so that there was no justice. Micah iii. 9, "They abhor judgment, and pervert all equity:" all that was right, equal, just, they oppressed or suppressed, and would not let it take place; so that, according to Isaiah, judgment was turned away backward, and justice stood far off; they thrust them out of doors, out of their gates and cities, and when they pressed hard to come in, there was no admission, the doors and gates were locked and bolted upon them, equity could not enter, Isa. lix. 14; only oppression was let in, Isa. v. 7.

4. For the men, who should have been as strong stakes to keep up the "hedge," they were rotten. The prophets were lions, Jer. xxiii. 14; the priests corrupters and wicked, Lam. iv. 13; the princes were rebellious, and companions of thieves, Isa. i. 23; and all of them brake covenant with God, Ezek. xvi. 59; so that it is evident the "hedge" was broken and gaps made.

"To make up the hedge, and stand in the gap." What that is, falls in now to be considered, and it lies in these things:

1. In public opposing those corruptions which were crept in, and practised amongst them. When of old the Jews had broken down the "hedge," by making a calf, Moses appeared for God against this wickedness; he seized upon the calf, Exod. xxxii. burnt it, ground it to powder, made the people drink it, sharply reprov'd Aaron, and "stood in the gate of the camp, saying, Who is on the Lord's side?" let him come unto me;" and when the sons of Levi came to him, he commissioned them to slay the idolaters; and this was the beginning of making up the breach. So when Josiah began to purge Judah and Jerusalem from the high places, the groves, images, and altars, that were therein, then was the "hedge" making up which they had broken down, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3, 4. In Nehemiah's days, when the "hedge" was new-made about them, there were some began to tread down the "hedge," and make a "gap" therein, by doing unlawful things on the Lord's day; whereupon the zeal of Nehemiah was kindled, so that he contended with the nobles of Judah, who countenanced them, and did violence to the sabbath themselves, saying, "What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the sabbath?" Neh. xiii. 15—18.

2. In mourning for such breaches, and deprecating the wrath and judgments due for the same. When the calf was made, and the people worshipped it, now the "hedge" was down, God's wrath ready to break in upon them, and to consume them, Exod. xxxii. 10; but Moses, being affected much with what they had done, and with what God was about to do, he falls to praying and interceding for the people; "Lord, why doth thy wrath wax hot against thy people? &c. Wherefore should the Egyptians speak and say, For mischief did he bring them out, to slay them in the mountains, &c. Turn from thy fierce wrath, and repent of this evil against thy people;" and he did so, ver. 14. Now this act of Moses was standing in the breach, and making up the "hedge," Psal. evi. 23; it kept out the fury of the Lord from breaking in upon them. The intercession of God's servants is a strong "hedge" and wall to prevent judgments; therefore when the Lord was resolved upon the destruction of the Jews, he forbade Jeremiah to pray for them; chap. vii. 16, "Pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me: for I will not hear thee." Intercession or deprecation is an obstructing of God in his way. The Vulgate hath it, Do not thou stop or oppose me. When an army is marching to a town to destroy it, if there be a strong wall in their way, that puts them to a stand, and oft causeth them to give over their attempt: so prayers against judgments, when God is marching out to destroy a people, puts him to a stand, and oft causes him to retreat into heaven.

3. In putting things into their primitive condition. When the bushes trod down, and stakes pulled out, are put into their places again, or new in their rooms, then is the "hedge" made up. When Josiah caused the house of the Lord to be repaired, the covenant with God to be renewed, the law to be read, and the passover to be kept according to the institution thereof, and all things were brought to their primitive condition, 2 Chron. xxxiv. xxxv. then was the "hedge" made up, then was there a man stood in the gap before the Lord. So when Jehoshaphat brought back the people from false doctrine, and false worship, to the Lord God of their fathers, that was, to the true religion and worship, and set judges in all the fenced cities of Judah, and set Levites, priests, and the chief of the fathers in Israel, in Jerusalem, and instructed them to do all things faithfully, with a perfect heart, and for the Lord, 2 Chron. xix. 4, &c. when he brought things to the pattern in Moses' days, then was the "hedge" made up, then God was with them, and protected them against those wild beasts, the Ammonites, Moabites, and those of mount Seir, chap. xx.

"For the land, that I should not destroy it." By "land," is meant the people of the land, the inhabitants, and their habitations, which were all shortly after laid waste by the Chaldean army. The Septuagint renders these words, that I should not destroy it, that I should not leave it for ever. God by degrees left the temple, the city, the land, and none of them entreated him to stay; and when he was gone, destruction came upon them.

"But I found none." Was there not Jeremiah and Ezekiel, who interceded with God for this people? were there not many that mourned for the abominations that were amongst them? Jer. ix. 1; xiv. 11; Ezek. ix. 4, 8.

It is true, Jeremiah did appear for God, he opposed the false prophets, cried out of their false and corrupt ways of worship, the perverting of justice, the iniquities of priests, princes, and people, but they would not hearken to him, Jer. xlv. 16; they devised devices against him, and slandered him, chap. xviii. 18; they sought to put him to death, and cast him into prison, chap. xxxviii. 4, 6; and God had forbid him to pray for them three times, chap. vii. 16; xi. 14; xiv. 11; and he could prevail with none of them towards making up the "hedge."

As for Ezekiel, he was in Babylon, and the Lord looked for a man amongst them in Jerusalem; so the Lord tells Ezekiel here, "I looked for a man among them," not among you.

For the sighers and mourners that were in Jerusalem, they did it in secret, and durst not openly be seen, they had not spirits to contradict the wicked prophets, priests, and princes; or if they had, yet they saw there was no good to be done, the times were exceeding and desperately wicked; a man was made an offender for a word, and a snare was laid for him that repoved in the gate, Isa. xxix. 21; if any appeared openly to speak against them and their ways, they were made a prey. It was an evil time, and the time for the prudent to keep silence, Amos v. 12, 13. So then, there was none among the prophets, the priests, the princes, or people, whom he mentioned in the verses before, that minded or made up the "hedge," or stood in the "gap."

Obs. 1. That sin makes breaches and gaps. In this chapter the Lord, having enumerated the sins of all sorts in Jerusalem, here he tells them the "hedge" was down, and "gaps" were in it. Their sins brake down the hedge, and made those gaps: Isa. xxx. 13, "This iniquity shall be to you as a breach ready to fall, swelling out in a high wall;" as storms, wars, do make breaches in a wall, so doth sin make breaches in a state. Solomon's sins made such a breach therein, that ten tribes were rent therefrom, and given to Jeroboam, 1 Kings xi. 31; whence it came to pass that Ephraim envied Judah, and Judah vexed Ephraim, Isa. xi. 13. Sin made the breach between the tribes, Isa. ix. 21; the breach between them and other nations, (Zedekiah's perfidiousness did it.) Ezek. xvii. 15; the breach between God and them; Isa. lix. 2. their iniquities separated between them and their God, and their sins hid his face from them, that he would not hear; and set God against them, Ezek. v. 8. Sin makes breaches in churches, 1 Cor. i. 11, 12; and breaks churches, Rev. ii. 5; it makes breaches in cities, Luke xix. 14; in families, Ezek. xvi. 38; in men's names, Prov. vi. 33; in men's estates, Dent. xxviii. 15, 16, &c. Mal. ii. 2; in men's consciences, Matt. xxvii. 3, 4; Prov. xviii. 14; xv. 4; and between the chiefest friends, Prov. xvi. 28.

There are some sins which make such breaches as shake the foundations: Psal. lxxxii. 5, "All the foundations of the earth are out of course." The laws were their foundations, but the iniquity of the judges moved those foundations out of place, and the state was like a bowing wall and tottering fence, Psal. lxxii. 3. Religion was a foundation unto them, but they had so corrupted the doctrine and the worship, made such breaches therein, that God was departing far from the sanctuary, and so from them, Ezek. viii. 6.

Obs. 2. When breaches and gaps are made by sin, the Lord hath a purpose to let in his judgments thereby, and to destroy for the same. They had trod down the hedge, and God had thoughts to destroy the land, to bring in a flood of wrath. Ezek. xx. 8, 13, 21, you may see how, upon their making breaches upon the worship, statutes, and sabbaths of the Lord, he resolved to pour out his fury upon them, and to consume them. Isa. i. 23, you have the gaps their sins made, and, ver. 24, the resolution of God thereupon, "Ah, I will (ase me of mine adversaries, and avenge me of mine enemies;" they had made breaches upon his law, and he would make breaches upon them: therefore, Isa. v. 5, 6, "I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up;" they have trodden down the hedge of justice, made great gaps therein, and I will take away the hedge of my protection, and let in the wild beasts and boars to tread them down, and eat them up: which the Lord did quickly after. When lately the hedge was trodden down here in England, and gaps made in it, did not the Lord let in wild beasts to devour? were not our princes roaring lions, our judges evening wolves? did not the prelates and priests raven the prey, devour souls, take the treasure and precious things? Though now the wild beasts be destroyed, or driven to their dens, yet every gap is not stopped, nor the hedge fully made up.

Obs. 3. When the hedge is down, gaps are made, and judgments ready to come in upon a people, the Lord looks that one or other should appear, put forth himself, to prevent those judgments. "I sought for a man to make up the hedge, to stand in the gap before me for the land, that I should not destroy it:" Jer. viii. 6, "I hearkened and heard, but they spake not aright." God expected they should have repented, and some at least to have said, What have I done? and what have I done? oh, I have trodden down the hedge of Jerusalem, made many gaps therein; I see God's judgments coming in thereat; now, I will labour to make up the hedge, stop the gaps, divert God's wrath, and bring things to their primitive condition: this God looked for, and would have been glad to have heard. So in Isa. lix. 13—15, the hedge was down, gaps were made, God was displeased, and now he looked that one or other should have showed a public spirit, opposed the sinful practices, and deprecated judgments; he looks in all the gaps round about, and, ver. 16, "He saw that there was no man, and wondered that there was no intercessor," none to meet God, to set upon him by prayer and strong arguments to withhold his judgments. The Septuagint is, There was no helper, none to help up the hedge being down, none to help keep out the floods of God's wrath, none to help the state or church in that tottering condition it was, none to settle their foundations, and bring things into a right order.

Obs. 4. Making up the hedge, and standing in the gaps, is the way to save a land from destruction. Let men oppose the sinful practices in a land, deprecate the judgments of God, and reduce things to the primitive condition, to what is required in the word, and then the Lord will spare a sinful nation, a guilty city. Jer. v. 1, "Run to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof; if ye can find a man, if there be any that executeth judgment, that seeketh the truth; and I will pardon." The hedge of justice was broken down, they had good laws, but they were violated by all sorts; now, if any man would have appeared against injustice and falsehood, and seen justice executed, and so made up the breach, the Lord would not only have withheld judgments, but have pardoned. In such a case one man may do much: Moses stood in the gap, and diverted the wrath of God, Psal. cvi. 23; the hedge of religion and worship was broken down by a golden calf, and he made it up: Numb. xvi. 41, 42, the people murmured, rose up against Moses and Aaron, trod down the hedge of authority, whereupon the plague brake in upon them; presently Aaron steps into the gap, makes up the hedge, and stops the plague, ver. 47, 48. That which they did was honourable; and they were repairers of breaches. We, through infinite mercy, have had some like Moses and Aaron, to make up our hedges, raise up our foundations, to stop some gaps; but all our gaps are not yet stopped. Are there not gaps in the hedge of doctrine? if it were not so, how came in such erroneous, blasphemous, and wild opinions amongst us? Are there not gaps in the hedges of civil and ecclesiastical authority? do not multitudes trample upon magistracy and ministry, all powers, both human and divine? are there not gaps in the worship of God? do not too many tread down all churches, all ordinances, yea, the very Scriptures? are there not gaps in the hedge of justice, through which the bulls of Bashan enter, which oppress the poor, and crush the needy? Amos iv. 1: are there not gaps in the hedge of love; is not that bond of perfection broken? are there not bitter envyings and strife amongst us; do we not bite and devour one another? are there not gaps in the hedge of conscience? is not the peace broken between God and your souls? doth not Satan come in oft at the gap, and disturb you? are there not gaps also in your several relations, whereby he gets advantage? Surely, if our eyes be in our heads, we may see gaps enough. Let us make up the breaches, stop all gaps in the public and private hedges, otherwise God will break in upon us by his judgments: Lev. xxvi. 18, 19, "If ye will not hearken unto me, I will punish you seven times more for your sins, and I will break the pride of your power."

Obs. 5. That in times of general corruption in church and state, it is hard to find a man of a public spirit to oppose those corruptions, to wrestle with God for mercy, and to bring things to their original condition. The Lord "sought for a man amongst them, that should make up the hedge and stand in the gap, but he found none." Isa. lix. 4, "None call-eth for justice, nor any pleadeth for truth." The judges and great ones did oppress the people, and none appeared publicly for them, to plead their cause, and reprove the oppressors. Many disliked the carriage of things, but they had no spirit to oppose, they were "not valiant for the truth," as Jeremiah saith, chap. ix. 3; therefore, Isa. lxxiii. 5, God saith, "I looked, and there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold." He doth not say simply, there were "none," but, "none to help, none to uphold;" the state and church were sinking, and not a man stepped out to put to his shoulder to help support them. God looked for and sought for such a man, but could find none; and, to convince them of the truth thereof, he bids them see and seek all Jerusalem over, if there were a man that executeth judgment: neither God nor men could find one. In common corruptions and calamities, few have hearts to appear for the public good, against overspreading evils; sinful prudence, or fear of crushing, makes them silent, and lie hid: Eccles. iv. 1, the oppressions under the sun were great, the tears of the oppressed many, but there was no comforter, none pitied them, none appeared for them, none used any means to relieve them.

Ver. 31. Therefore have I poured out mine indignation upon them; I have consumed them with the fire of my wrath: their own way have I recompensed upon their heads, saith the Lord God.

Seeing they were guilty of such sins as are mentioned in the chapter, and so universally corrupt, the Lord, in this last verse, denounces judgments against them. The verbs are in the preter-tense, "I have poured out," "I have consumed," "I have recompensed." So he had done upon those in captivity, but he speaks of those in the chapter who were then at Jerusalem; and it is usual, in the Hebrew, to put a preter-tense for the future, to note the certainty of a thing; and so here God saith, he had done so, because certainly he would do so. The words of this verse we have had before, chap. xxi. 31; xix. 12; ix. 10; xvi. 43.

Obs. 1. When a people is universally corrupt, the hedges of religion and justice trod down, and none appears to make up those hedges, God will certainly visit that people with his judgments. Prophets, priests, princes, and people, were degenerated and greatly corrupted, all hedges down; God looked for some or other to appear against the corruptions which were amongst them, and because there was none, therefore he would pour out his indignation upon them, and consume them with the fire of his wrath; and they found it so shortly after; Lam. ii. 4; iv. 11, they and their foundations were devoured.

Obs. 2. That God, in his severest judgments, is most just. "I have" or will "recompense their own way upon their head." God did not punish them for others' ways, but for their own; it was their own evil doings brought his judgments upon them; he did them no wrong, when sword, famine, plague, fire, consumed them. Whatever dreadful judgments have fallen out in our days, in this or other nations, let us justify the Lord, he hath recompensed men's own ways upon their heads: he is righteous in all his works, and holy in all his ways.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Ver. 1—4. The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying, Son of man, there were two women, the daughters of one mother: and they committed whoredoms in Egypt; they committed whoredoms in their youth: there were their breasts pressed, and there they bruised the teats of their virginity. And the names of them were Aholah the elder, and Aholibah her sister: and they were mine, and they bare sons and daughters. Thus were their names; Samaria is Aholah, and Jerusalem Aholibah.

IN this chapter are contained these generals :

I. A complaint of, or prophecy against, the idolatry and wickedness of the whole body of the Jews, under the names of Aholah and Aholibah, showing their several sins, and the greatness of Aholibah's above Aholah's.

II. Denunciation of judgment against them, and their destruction.

Ver. 1. "The word of the Lord came," &c. This verse shows our prophet spake not of his own heart or spirit, as the false prophets did; it was the Spirit of the Lord brought the "word of the Lord" unto him, and he spake as he was moved by the Spirit, which shows the divine authority of this prophecy.

Ver. 2. "There were two women, the daughters of one mother." The Jews were at first one people, till the days of Rehoboam, and then they were divided. Ten tribes fell off to Jeroboam, which frequently after were called Ephraim, and Israel, or the children of Israel, the house of Israel. The other two tribes were called Judah, and the house of Judah: one was the kingdom of Israel, the other the kingdom of Judah. These two were the two women here mentioned.

The word for women is, נשים which is from נשח to forget, they are so called, from their forgetfulness; and these metaphorical women, Israel and Judah, forgot their God greatly, and thereupon are called nashim, women, or, forgetters.

"The daughters of one mother." In the Scripture language, the whole of things is termed the "mother," and the parts thereof, "daughters." Ezek. xxi. 21, The king of Babylon stood at the mother of the way; so is the Hebrew: while the way was entire and one, it was called the mother, and when it divided into parts, those parts were as the daughters of that mother. The whole body of the Jews was as the one "mother," and when that body divided into two kingdoms, those kingdoms were as the "daughters" of that "mother." When they were in Egypt, and a long time after, they were as one woman, but in Rehoboam's days this woman grew big, brought forth twins, and so became one mother of two daughters, 1 Kings xii.

Ver. 3. "They committed whoredoms in Egypt." They being in the loins of their "mother," forsook the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and fell in love with the Egyptian gods: see Josh. xxiv. 14; Ezek. xx. 7, 8.

"They committed whoredoms in their youth." This Jewish nation, at her first beginning, while young and little, played the harlot, and defiled herself with the Egyptian idolatry. What she did is set out by way of aggravation; she sinned in her youth, or these sisters sinned betimes; their spirits were carried out that way early, and that in Egypt, or house of bondage and suffering.

"There were their breasts pressed, and there they bruised the teats of their virginity." The meaning is this, That quickly after the Jews came into Egypt, the Egyptians prevailed with them by flatteries, or threats, to embrace their idolatrous worship, whereby they lost their chastity, and became like the nations.

Ver. 4. "The names of them were Aholah, the elder." Here he comes to the "names" of these women, and shows you who they were. The name of the one was "Aholah," and this Aholah was Samaria, the chief city of the ten tribes, where the kings of Israel had their chief residency. Aholah is from אהל a tent, or tabernacle; and Aholah is, his own, or their own, tabernacle; that is, Samaria, or the ten tribes, have not me, or my worship, amongst them, they have devised a worship of their own, set up golden calves at Dan and Bethel, they have forsaken my temple, and set up their own tabernacle, and dwell by themselves, separate from me.

"The elder." The Hebrew is not "elder," but, the greater. This woman Aholah had ten tribes, the other only two: this we had, chap. xvi. 46, where it is said, "Thine elder sister is Samaria."

"Aholibah her sister." Thus is the name of the other woman. Aholah's sister was "Aholibah," which signifies, my tabernacle, or, dwelling in her; and this was Jerusalem, where the temple and worship of the Lord were; what was done there the Lord himself appointed, and that was the place he chose, Psal. cxxxii. 13, 14.

"They were mine." I tied them unto me by a covenant, Ezek. xvi. 8; I became their God, and they became my people. The Hebrew is, They were for me, that is, for me alone, for no other God, no other way of worship than what I should prescribe them.

"And they bare sons and daughters." God blessed them, so that they multiplied greatly, they had many sons and many daughters; Ezek. xvi. 7, "I caused thee to multiply as the bud of the field."

Obs. 1. That going after false ways of worship is, in God's account, whoredom. "They committed whoredoms." When they bowed to any of the false gods in Egypt, they did as basely and vilely as she that commits filthiness with another.

Obs. 2. The Lord takes notice where and when those who are in relation to him do sin. "They committed whoredoms in Egypt, and in their youth;" they sinned amidst the grand and bitter enemies of God, among Egyptians, and then when they were but growing up to be a people. They should have considered what enemies the Egyptians were to their God and to his worship, how odious their ways and worship were to him, that so they might have kept at a great distance from them; they should have walked circumspectly, that so they might have kept his name from being polluted; and likewise they, being in their youth, under bondage, should have minded God's kindness in preserving them, and making them to prosper; but they did not, "they sinned in Egypt, and in their youth," two great aggravations of their sin. When God is beginning to show kindness to a people in misery, and raising them up to some height and greatness, and then for them to turn aside to lewdness, to superstitions, idolatrous, and heathenish practices, this God observes in a special manner, and it provokes him greatly. See how it affected the Lord, that they sinned presently after he had showed them kindness, in bringing them out of Egypt: Psal. cvi. 7, "They provoked him at the sea, even at the Red sea:" I put forth my mighty power to bring them out to the sea-side, and was ready to divide the sea to carry them through, but even then and there they provoked me. When states, cities, families, degenerate in their youth, it sorely displeases God.

Obs. 3. Wheresoever a devised worship is brought in, there man's tabernacle is set up; where true worship is advanced, there is God's tabernacle. The ten tribes had a worship of Jeroboam's devising, like unto the worship of Jerusalem in many things; but this was Aholah, their own tabernacle, God owned it not, he was not in their assemblies, he accepted not their sacrifices, their incense was a stink in his nostrils; but Jerusalem was Aholibah, there God's own worship was set up, and so long as his worship was there, he acknowledged his tabernacle to be in her. Where his worship is, there he dwells, Psal. lxxviii. 16; and is to be seen and inquired of, Psal. xxvii. 4.

Ver. 5—10. And Aholah played the harlot when she was mine; and she doted on her lovers, on the Assyrians her neighbours, which were clothed with blue, captains and rulers, all of them desirable young men, horsemen riding upon horses. Thus she committed her whoredoms with them, with all them that were the chosen men of Assyria, and with all on whom she doted: with all their idols she defiled herself. Neither left she her whoredoms brought from Egypt: for in her youth they lay with her, and they bruised the breasts of her virginity, and poured their whoredom upon her. Wherefore I have delivered her into the hand of her lovers, into the hand of the Assyrians, upon whom she doted. These discovered her nakedness: they took her sons and her daughters, and slew her with the sword: and she became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her.

In these verses Aholah's sins and judgments are set out.

1. Her sins; which were,

1. Confederating with the Assyrians, ver. 5; see 2 Kings xv. 19; and those Assyrians are described, ver. 6, 7, (1.) From their garments.

(2.) From their titles.

(3.) From their age.

(4.) From the creatures they used.

2. Entertaining and defiling herself with the Assyrian idols, ver. 7.

3. Retention of her old Egyptian idolatry, ver. 8; there she had a calf, and under Jeroboam and others she had golden calves.

11. Her judgments: which were,

1. Loss of her freedom, ver. 9.

2. Desolation, ver. 10; in which verses we have also,

(1.) The causes of the judgments:

[1.] The principal, God himself, ver. 9.

[2.] The instrumental, viz. the Assyrians.

(2.) The event of those judgments; ver. 10, "She became famous among women."

Ver. 5. "When she was mine." The Hebrew for "mine" is, אני when she was under me, under my covenant, under my worship, my power, and authority. Septuagint is, ἀπ' ἐμοῦ, she hath gone out from me her husband, and played the harlot: or, instead of me and my worship, she hath taken in other gods and their worship. The Chaldee is, she hath left my pure worship, and fallen to the abominable idolatries of the Assyrians.

"She doted on her lovers." The Hebrew word בָּגַד notes, violent and base love, and is rendered by the Vulgate, insanivit in amatoribus suis, she was mad upon her lovers, the Assyrians and other nations.

Ver. 8. "Neither left she her whoredoms brought from Egypt." That superstitious, idolatrous disposition which she had, being in Egypt, still abode with her: she made leagues with the Egyptians, 2 Kings xvii. 4; she had her calves like the Egyptian calf, 1 Kings xii. 28.

Ver. 10. "These discovered her nakedness." The Assyrians took away her ornaments and clothing, as v. 26, and used her shamefully and cruelly, as women often are being taken in war, Isa. xlvi. 2, 3.

"She became famous among women." Hebrew is, she was a name to women. Septuagint, ἐγένετο λάλημα εἰς γυναῖκας, she was a talk among women. Some talked of her for her whoredoms and filthiness; others, for her miseries, judgments, and grievous sufferings, and so she was "famous among women."

Obs. 1. That when people go out from God to false ways of worship, and confidences therein, they are violent and strong in their affections thereunto. Aholah doted upon her lovers, her heart was fired with Babylonish gods, and confidences in them.

Obs. 2. What evil persons have practised in their youth, that they affect in their age. Aholah had loved the Egyptian idols in her minority, and after she was grown up, come to her latter days, those idols were not out of her thoughts; her Egyptian lovers were still in her mind, like harlots that mind their former lovers long after they are married. What corruption gets in in youth, grows up and abides; an unclean, idolatrous heart in youth, will be so in age.

Obs. 3. That idolatry may continue long in a nation, but shall at last be severely punished by the Lord. Aholah had been an idolatress from her youth, and when she was grown up to some greatness, then she brake out into gross, notorious idolatry, 1 Kings xii. in which she continued some two hundred sixty and odd years, and then the Lord plagued, yea, destroyed her, her sons and daughters. It is wisdom to cleave to the Lord and his worship, not to follow or confide in other nations, or their ways.

Obs. 4. God makes places and persons remarkable by the judgments he executeth upon them. Aholah was made famous among women by those judgments he brought upon her. Aholah was Samaria, which Shalmaneser besieged three years, and then took it, 2 Kings xvii. 5, 6; and after burnt it, as Lavater observes.

Ver. 11—21. And when her sister Aholibah saw this, she was more corrupt in her inordinate love than she, and in her whoredoms more than her sister in her whoredoms. She doted upon the Assyrians her neighbours, captains and rulers clothed most gorgeously, horsemen riding upon horses, all of them desirable young men. Then I saw that she was defiled, that they took both one way, and that she increased her whoredoms: for when she saw men pourtrayed upon the wall, the images of the Chaldeans pourtrayed with vermilion, girded with girdles upon their loins, exceeding in dyed attire upon their heads, all of them princes to look to, after the manner of the Babylonians of Chaldea, the land of their nativity: and as soon as she saw them with her eyes, she doted upon them, and sent messengers unto them into Chaldea. And the Babylonians came to her into the bed of love, and they defiled her with their whoredom, and she was polluted with them, and her mind was alienated from them. So she discovered her whoredoms, and discovered her nakedness: then my mind was alienated from her, like as my mind was alienated from her sister. Yet she multiplied her whoredoms, in calling to remembrance the days of her youth, wherein she had played the harlot in the land of Egypt. For she doted upon their paramours, whose flesh is as the flesh of asses, and whose issue is like the issue of horses. Thus thou calledst to remembrance the lewdness of thy youth, in bruising thy teats by the Egyptians for the paps of thy youth.

Having set out Aholah's sins in the former verses, here he comes to Aholibah's sins, and the events of them.

Her sins were,

1. Her not taking warning by her sister to amend, but growing worse, ver. 11.

11. Her confederacy and idolatry with,

1. The Assyrians, ver. 12; who are described,

(1.) From their nearness, "neighbours."

(2.) From their titles or offices, "captains, rulers,"

(3.) From their habit, "clothed most gorgeously,"

(4.) From their rank, "horsemen riding upon," &c.

(5.) From their age and comeliness, "all of them desirable young men."

2. The Chaldeans, ver. 14; which idolatry is set out,

(1.) From the occasion of it, viz. pictures, or "images;" which are described, ver. 14.

[1.] From their colouring, "vermilion."

[2.] Their form, "girded, dyed attire," &c.

[3.] Aspect, "princes to look to."

[4.] Pattern and place, ver. 15.

(2.) From the haste she made thereunto, ver. 16, 17.

(3.) The Egyptians, ver. 19; which is aggravated from the violence of her affection, ver. 20.

111. The events were,

1. God's displeasure, ver. 13.

2. Alienation of his mind from her, ver. 18.

Alienation of Aholibah's mind from the Chaldeans, ver. 17.

Ver. 11. "She was more corrupt in her inordinate love than she." The Hebrew is, she corrupted her love more than she. The Septuagint is, ἀφθαρε τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν, she corrupted her desire, she was more filthy and vile in her dotings and violent loves, than her sister. Jerusalem was more addicted unto idols than Samaria.

"And in her whoredoms more than her sister in her whoredoms." In the original it is, her whoredoms were before, or more than, the whoredoms of her sister: she exceeded Samaria and other places in her idolatries, as you may see, Ezek. xvi. 47, "Thou wast corrupted more than they in all thy ways."

Ver. 12. "She doted upon the Assyrians." For "Assyrians," the text saith, the sons of Assur. This you have verified, 2 Kings xvi. 7, 8, when Ahaz hired Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria, with the gold and silver of the temple, to come and help him.

"Clothed most gorgeously." In the Hebrew it is, clothed with an absolute garment, with every kind of comely clothing. Junius hath it, clothed most perfectly, with every kind of precious garments.

"Desirable young men." The Hebrew is, the elect of desire; such men as desire itself would choose. They were no ordinary men, but such as were comely, amiable, even men of desires, very desirable.

Ver. 14. "Portrayed with vermilion." The Hebrew for "vermilion" is שָׁרָב which signifies, red colour, with which any thing is painted. The rabbies say it is red lead. It is but twice used in the holy Scriptures, in Jer. xxii. 14, and here.

Ver. 15. "All of them princes to look to." The word for "princes" is שִׂיטִים which Montanus renders, those that were of the third rank or dignity from the king. 2 Kings vii. 2, "Then a lord on whose hand the king leaned answered;" the word is, hashatish, one that was a man in place third from the king.

Ver. 17. "The Babylonians came to her into the bed of love, and they defiled her with their whoredom." This is spoken of metaphorical whoredom. The Jews sent to the Babylonians to enter into league with them, and that being done, they brought in their Babylonish idols and worship amongst them, and taught the Jews to sacrifice unto them, and so defiled the temple and ordinances, "the bed of love." Ahaz brought in the altar from Damascus, which did defile, 2 Kings xvi.

"Her mind was alienated from them." In the Hebrew it is, her soul was removed from them. The Septuagint, her soul departed from them. She grew weary of them, and fell in with the Egyptians, 2 Kings xxiv.; those she had doted upon before now she affected no longer, her soul was loosed from them, and as a thing out of joint.

Ver. 19. "In calling to mind the days of her youth." That is, she remembered, and, together with her remembering, exercised her former spiritual whoredom.

Ver. 20. "She doted upon their paramours." The word for "paramours" is, פְּלִנְיָהּ; פְּלִנְיָהּ is a concubine. Montanus renders the word here, their harlots. The Egyptians had the neighbouring nations leaguin it with them, and imitating their idolatry; these were Egypt's concubines. Now Aholibah, or Jerusalem, doted upon these also: or rather thus, She doted above their paramours, above their concubines, more than they, she was carried more strongly towards the Egyptians than other nations.

"Whose flesh is as the flesh of asses, and whose issue is as the issue of horses." The strength and wealth of Egypt are here represented, which provoked the Jews to make leagues with them.

Obs. 1. That when God executes severe judgments upon cities, he looks that sister cities should take warning thereby, and reform in those sins which brought such judgments upon them. God destroyed Aholah, or Samaria, for her idolatry, and confederating with heathenish nations. When Aholibah saw this, she reformed not, but was more corrupt. God expected that Jerusalem should heretupon have purged out all idolatry, knocked off her confidences in other nations, and cleaved wholly to him, that so she might have been spared, but she made no good use of his dealings with Samaria.

Obs. 2. That progress in the same sins after judgment executed upon others for the same, and seen, is a fearful aggravation of sin. Aholah's sins were the same that Aholibah's were, and Aholibah saw God's judgments executed upon her for those sins, and yet she continued and proceeded in the same: "When she saw this, she was more corrupt." When God's hand is lift up, judgment executed, men should fear and learn righteousness; but to go on in wickedness is a horrible slighting, yea, despising of God, and his judgments.

Obs. 3. That sinful cities usually grow worse, whatever judgments they see or hear to be executed upon others. Jerusalem was more corrupt than Samaria, and abounded in whoredoms more than she did, and doted more upon the Assyrians, Chaldeans, and Egyptians. So corrupt is the nature of man, that it is not only the worse after mercies, but even after judgments. Are not we in this city and land, worse now after all the judgments and mercies we have seen, felt, and enjoyed?

Obs. 4. The Lord takes notice what ways cities go, and how they do defile themselves. Ver. 13, "I saw that she was defiled" with Assyrians, Chaldeans, Egyptians, by her trusting in them more than in me, by her idols she fetched in from them. God's eye was upon Sodom, Gomorrah, Nineveh, Babylon, Tyre, Rabbath, and all other cities, and so it is now upon Rome, &c.

Obs. 5. From this 13th verse, That sinful cities do tread in one another's steps. "They took both one way," what one did that the other did; if Aholah was gone to Assyria, Aholibah will follow her; if one run to Egypt, the other will run after her; if one dote upon them both, so will the other; if one prostitute herself to corporal and spiritual whoredom, so will the other: Simeon and Levi were brethren in evil, and went both one way: Samaria and Jerusalem were sisters in wickedness, and went both one way.

Obs. 6. From ver. 14—16, That the eyes are instruments and occasions of great evil. When she saw the images of the Chaldeans in their dresses, with their belts and aspects, she was taken with them. "As soon as she saw them with her eyes;" Hebrew is, at the sight of her eyes she doted upon them; the images affected her eyes, and they conveyed corruption to her heart, or that which stirred the corruption pre-existent in her heart, which set her on work to send into Chaldea for the men themselves. Adultery and idolatry have their chief entrance by the eye, and many other sins likewise: if men and women would have chaste hearts, they must have special care of their eyes: what a sad thing was it, that Jerusalem's eyes should be taken with the painted images of Babylonians! Some confess there is danger by gazing upon living objects, the beauties of men and women, but they fear none from dead objects; but Achan saw a wedge of gold and a Babylonish garment, and they snared him; Aholibah here saw Babylonish pictures, and they ensnared her. If you would be safe, keep your eyes from wandering, and beholding wanton pictures; such sights have cost some dear, and brought forth much wickedness.

Obs. 7. From ver. 17, For God's people to confederate with Babylonians, and admit of any part of Babylonish worship, is to defile the bed of love. For a woman to make leagues with other men, and to admit any one into the marriage-bed, is to defile it. God is a jealous God, his worship must be pure, and the heart must be pure; if the worship be mixed, or heart lean upon an arm of flesh, the bed of love is defiled: in the worship and ordinances God lets out his love to the soul; when they are pure, in the heart being pure and confiding in God, God lets out himself and his love. Let us look to our hearts, that they may be disengaged from all creature confidences, and to our worship, that it be according to God, and then the bed of love is undefiled, and we shall have communion with and comfort from our Beloved.

Obs. 8. Wickedness is inconstant. Aholibah doted upon the Assyrians, ver. 12; and again she doted upon the Chaldeans, ver. 16; and here, in ver. 17, her mind was alienated from them. Wickedness is violent and inconstant; she was taken with the very images of the Babylonians; now she cares not for the men themselves, her soul is disjointed from them; but it was to fall in with some others, and they were the Egyptians, ver. 19; but she held not there long; which made the Lord to say, Jer. ii. 36, "Why gaddest thou about so much to change thy way? thou also shalt be ashamed of Egypt, as thou wast ashamed of Assyria."

Obs. 9. Impudence and open sinning cause God to disown and renounce them that do so. Aholibah, ver. 18, discovered her whoredoms and nakedness; she talked openly what she had done with the Babylonians, she set up altars and idols in every street, was openly and impudently wicked, even like a whore that should prostitute herself to any in the streets. Now it being so, saith the Lord, "then my mind was alienated from her;" seeing she is become so audaciously wicked, I can affect her no longer: there is a necessity in it, that I should alienate my heart from her, as I did from her sister Aholah; else I shall be thought not to have dealt justly with her, especially seeing Aholibah's sins exceed Aholah's. Jerusalem's wickedness alienated God's heart from her, that is, made him renounce her for a harlot. It is sad when God renounces. Hos. i. 9, "Lo-ammi; ye are not my people, and I will not be your God;" what more dreadful sound was there ever in the ears of Ephraim, Samaria, or Aholibah, than that? There can be nothing more dreadful, than to have God disclaim and renounce; then is God turned against them; he so renounces; and so he was against Jerusalem, Ezek. v. 8, "Behold, I am against thee, and will execute judgments in the midst of thee." If we would not have God's heart alienated from us, and so be disowned, renounced by him, let us take heed of all sins, especially of impudency in any sin; let us give him our hearts, not alienate them from him, and so he will not alienate his heart from us.

Obs. 10. From ver. 19—21, That fresh sins bring to mind former old sins. Aholibah's latter trucking with the Egyptians minded God of her primitive whoredoms and abominations, when she lived in Egypt, which was one thousand years before: there she had her lovers, there she defiled herself "with the idols of Egypt," Ezek. xx. 7; and her affection now to Egypt, and Egypt's paramours, caused God to mind those sins of her youth: he had no pleasure in doing so, but Aholibah called them to remembrance, by acting the same or like things again; she called them out of darkness, and presented them to the view of God.

Ver. 22—35. Therefore, O Aholibah, thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will raise up thy lovers against thee, from whom thy mind is alienated, and I will bring them against thee on every side; the Babylonians, and all the Chaldeans, Pekod, and Shoa, and Koa, and all the Assyrians with them: all of them desirable young men, captains and rulers, great lords and renowned, all of them riding upon horses. And they shall come against thee with chariots, wagons, and wheels, and with an assembly of people, which shall set against thee buckler and shield and helmet round about: and I will set judgment before them, and they shall judge thee according to their judgments. And I will set my jealousy against thee, and they shall deal furiously with thee: they shall take away thy nose and thine ears; and thy remnant shall fall by the sword: they shall take thy sons and thy daughters; and thy residue shall be devoured by the fire. They shall also strip thee out of thy clothes, and take away thy fair jewels. Thus will I make thy lewdness to cease from thee, and thy whoredom brought from the land of Egypt: so that thou shalt not lift up thine eyes unto them, nor remember Egypt any more. For thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will deliver thee into the hand of them whom thou hatest, into the hand of them from whom thy mind is alienated: and they shall deal with thee hatefully, and shall take away all thy labour, and shall leave thee naked and bare: and the nakedness of thy whoredoms shall be discovered, both thy lewdness and thy whoredoms. I will do these things unto thee, because thou hast gone a whoring after the heathen, and because thou art polluted with their idols. Thou hast walked in the way of thy sister; therefore will I give her cup into thine hand. Thus saith the Lord God; Thou shalt drink of thy sister's cup deep and large; thou shalt be laughed to scorn and had in derision; it containeth much. Thou shalt be filled with drunkenness and sorrow, with the cup of astonishment and desolation, with the cup of thy sister Samaria. Thou shalt even drink it and suck it out, and thou shalt break the sherds thereof, and pluck off thine own breasts: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God. Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because thou hast forgotten me, and cast me behind thy back, therefore bear thou also thy lewdness and thy whoredoms.

In these verses you have a declaration of God's dealings with Aholibah, and the grounds thereof: and herein,

I. Whom God would raise up against her, those who had been her lovers; and the cause thereof, her defection from them, ver. 22. Now these are,

1. Nominated and described, ver. 23.

2. The manner of their coming against and judging Aholibah is set down, ver. 24.

3. Specification of the evil they should do unto her, ver. 25, 26, 29.

II. What God would do himself.

1. Like a husband enraged, he would set his jealousy against her, ver. 25.

2. Put her into the hands of those who hated her, ver. 28.

3. Bring her to the condition her sister Samaria was in, she should drink of her cup, and that deeply, ver. 32—34.

III. The grounds moving God thus to deal with her, which are principally two:

1. Her idolatry, ver. 30, 31.

2. Her forgetfulness of God, ver. 35.

IV. The events, which are two:

1. Cessation from her idolatry and confederating with Egypt any more, ver. 27.

2. Scorn and derision, ver. 32.

Ver. 22. "I will raise up thy lovers against thee." The Babylonians were lovers of Aholibah, or Jerusalem, because she had affected their gods, rites, and sacred things, and trusted in them for help against others; but being now fallen off to the Egyptians, God would stir up the Babylonians against her, and so generally, that they should come and compass her round about.

Ver. 23. "Pekod, Shoa, and Koa." Some make these the names of great men, but they are rather the names of provinces, which were under the Babylonians, the people whereof God stirred up with others to come to the siege of Jerusalem.

Ver. 24. "I will set judgment before thee," &c. Mariana understands the words thus, I will punish thee, O Jerusalem, the Babylonians beholding it: they were the executioners of God's judgments, and must needs behold them. We may take the words thus, I will make known my mind to the Babylonians concerning thy destruction, and leave thee to them to be punished according to their laws, seeing thou hast been perfidious and treacherous unto them. I will put thee into their hands, give them power to punish thee, and they shall do it according to their laws and judgments.

Ver. 25. "And I will set my jealousy against thee."

By "jealousy," Maldonate understands the Chaldeans, because they were the instruments of his wrath: but here the Lord alludes to the practice of jealous husbands, who finding their wives faulty, set themselves against them, and turn them out of doors: so would God deal with this woman whom he had taken to be his; he would drive her out of the land for her spiritual whoredom, he would give her a bill of divorce, and send her away.

"They shall take away thy nose and thine ears." This Aholibah did trust in her beauty, and play the harlot, chap. xvi. 15; and the Lord would have her deformed like a most filthy harlot, whose nose and ears were wont to be mangled or cut off. It was a law or custom in Egypt, that if a man were taken in adultery, he should be beaten with rods, to a thousand stripes, and that a woman found therein, should have her nostrils cut off. And Pradus saith, it was so in many nations, that for the greater

was shameful to any, specially to women. Hereunto it is conceived our prophet alludes; but because it is doubtful whether any such thing was really done to Aholibah, divers interpret "nose" of the king, and "ears" of the judges, or chief priests: but we need not allegorize; the meaning is, that God would bring Jerusalem to suffer open and extreme shame.

Ver. 26. "They shall also strip thee out of thy clothes." This metaphorical woman was well clad, she exceeded in her apparel, both for the matter, quantity, and quality, as appeared, chap. xvi.; she took up the fashions of the Babylonians and Egyptians, whom she doted upon, and had confederated with; but whatever she had, when the soldiers came, they stripped her of all. The Hebrew for "strip" is, הַשִּׁיטָהּ they shall make thee to put off; they shall handle thee so roughly, that thou shalt be forced with thy own hands to put off thy garments, and give them to them, those garments thou hast taken much pride and pleasure in. Of these words, and "fair jewels," was spoken, chap. xvi. 39.

Ver. 27. "Thus will I make thy lewdness to cease from thee," &c. By my judgments upon thee, I will make thee give over thine idolatry; thou shalt mind neither Egyptians, nor gods, their idols, thou shalt neither adore nor desire help from them; thou shalt be made to mind other things, as food, raiment, habitations.

Ver. 28. "I will deliver thee into the hand of them whom thou hatest." In chap. xvi. 27, God delivered her into the hand of them that hated her; chap. xxi. 31, he saith, he would deliver her "into the hand of brutish men, and skilful to destroy;" and here, into the hand of those she hated: there was hatred on both sides, she hated her lovers, and her lovers hated her, and into their hands would the Lord put her; she should find it was the Lord's doings.

Ver. 29. "They shall deal with thee hatefully." They shall speak evil of thee, do evil unto thee, they shall show thee no mercy; they shall spare neither thee, nor thy estate, nor thy name, but shall take away all thou hast gotten by thy labour, and make known to the world what a filthy strumpet thou hast been.

Ver. 30. "Because thou hast gone a whoring after the heathen," &c. Thou hast left me thy husband and Guide, and gone out to the heathenish gods and idols for help; thou hast bestowed thyself and love upon them, and art defiled by taking them into the bed of love: see chap. vi. 9, where you have the same or like words.

Ver. 31. "Thou hast walked in the way of thy sister." Aholah doted upon the Assyrians, made leagues with them, defiled herself with their idols, manifested her idolatrous disposition she had in Egypt to be still living; and thus did Aholibah, ver. 12, 16, 17, 19.

"I will give her cup into thine hand." Ver. 32. "Thou shalt drink of thy sister's cup." Thou shalt be punished with the same punishments Aholah was; she was taken by the Assyrians, shamefully entreated, and her children carried into captivity, and so shalt thou be dealt with; the same cup she drank of, thou shalt also drink of. This metaphor is very frequent in Scripture, Isa. li. 17, 22; Jer. xxv. 15, 17, 28; Psal. lxxv. 8; Lam. iv. 21. Some think this metaphor to be borrowed from physicians giving potions in cups to their patients, which are troublesome to behold and grievous to taste; so God's judgments are cups of that nature. Others think it taken from that practice of giving cups of wine or strong drink to those that were to suffer, Amos ii. 8, which hebetating their senses, should take away the sharpness of their pain. Others fetch it from the practice at feasts, where the master of the feast did temper and proportion a cup for each guest according to his capacity, and for those they purpose to make drunk, they would fill the larger cups. Let the metaphor of "cup" be borrowed from which you will, it notes out here, God's ordering and measuring out of judgments for Aholibah and hers.

"Deep and large." It shall not be a "cup" to drink off at one draught, or in one day, but it shall be a "cup deep and large," containing much, grievous, great, and long afflictions; a "cup" thou shalt be seventy years drinking.

"Thou shalt be laughed to scorn and had in derision." When whores are punished for their whoredoms, they become matter of scorn and derision to all. The like words we had before, chap. xxii. 4, 5.

Ver. 33. "Thou shalt be filled with drunkenness and sorrow." Thy afflictions, thy punishments shall be such, as shall make thee stagger like one that is drunk; thy pains and sorrows shall be great; it shall not be a cup of consolation, but of astonishment to thyself and all about thee, yea, a cup of desolation, and, as the Septuagint hath it, of perdition.

Ver. 34. "Thou shalt even drink it and suck it out." Thou mayest think this "cup" shall pass away from thee, or if not, that thou shalt drink only a little of it, but thou deceivest thyself, it shall not pass from thee, thou shalt drink it, and drink it off all, thou shalt "suck it out," even the lees and dregs of it, how bitter soever they be.

"Thou shalt break the sherds thereof." Not only drink up what is in the "cup," but as drunkards oft break the vessel, and lick the fragments, not suffering the least drop to be lost, so would God make Aholibah to drink every drop of his fury, which he had put in this "cup." The greatness of their punishment is set out hereby.

"And pluck off thine own breasts." In time of great afflictions many do strange things, rend their garments, bite their flesh, tear their hair; and Aholibah should pluck off her breasts. Before she had let Egyptians and Assyrians bruise the breasts of her virginity, and draw her to idolatry, and now she should scratch and rend them; she should express signs of great grief and great misery upon her.

Ver. 35. "Because thou hast forgotten me, and cast me behind thy back." Here is the ground of her wickedness, and God's judgments coming upon her, she forgot God; which words we had, chap. xxii. 12.

"And cast me behind thy back." The Hebrew is, behind thy body: the sense is this, Thou hast turned from me to thy lovers, to the Assyrians and Egyptians, so that thy face and heart are towards them, and thy back is towards me. A like expression we had chap. viii. 16, where it is said, "Their backs were toward the temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the east." Or thus, Thou hast dealt by me as men do by things they throw behind them, they slight them, and mind them no more. Neh. ix. 26, "They cast thy law behind their backs, and slew thy prophets;" that is, they slighted the law, minded it not, it was out of their sight as a thing behind them, as if there were no such thing. When Jeroboam slighted the counsel of the prophet, 1 Kings xi. 38, and set up other gods, then he cast God behind his back, chap. xiv. 9.

Obs. 1. God makes them instruments of our woe and misery, with whom we have sinned. "I will raise up thy lovers against thee," the Babylonians, Chaldeans, Assyrians, "I will bring them against thee on every side." Jerusalem had doted upon and trusted in them, and by them would God plague Jerusalem. She had oft sinned by her confidence in Egypt, Isa. xxx. 2; xxxi. 1; and God by the Egyptians scourged her, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 3. Parents dote upon their children, and oft God makes them rods to whip them, yea, clubs to break their hearts and bones.

Obs. 2. When people go out from God to false ways of worship, and put confidence in arms of flesh, God will deal severely by them. God would put Aholibah into the Babylonian hands, they should do with her as they pleased, judge her according to their judgments. God would set his jealousy against her, thrust her out of doors; and what then? the Babylonians should deal furiously with her, abuse her body, destroy her children, burn her habitation, strip her of her vestments and jewels, take away all she had gotten, lay open her shame, and do hatefully by her; she should be punished with the same punishments Aholah was.

Obs. 3. Judgments and afflictions are cups which the Lord gives sinners to drink of, some more, some less. "Thou shalt drink of thy sister's cup deep and large." Sometimes God's judgments are called a "cup of trembling," as Isa. li. 22; sometimes a "cup of fury," as Jer. xxv. 15; and sometimes a "cup of astonishment," as here; and Aholibah had all these cups given her to drink, they were "deep, large," contained much, and she was made to drink them all off, yea, to drink the very dregs of them; as men fill up the measure of their sins, so God fills up the cups of his judgments; Rev. xviii. 6, "Fill to her double." Babylon's sins were come to the full, and the cup of the Lord's fury was full.

Obs. 4. Neglect and contempt of God, and his word, causes him to execute judgment. "Because thou hast forgotten me, and cast me behind thy back, therefore bear thou also thy lewdness and thy whoredoms;" that is, bear the punishment of thy lewdness and whoredoms; thou hast made me bear thy sins, and thou shalt bear my punishments. As the fear of God is the beginning of wisdom, so the forgetting of God is the beginning of folly and all evil; then God is out of sight, behind the back; and what will not men do when no awe of God or his word is upon them? Then, like Aholibah, they will commit any lewdness; and because they do so, God lets out his wrath, loads them with his judgments, and makes them bear the merit of their wickedness.

God had done much for Aholibah, dealt by her like a loving husband; but she slighted him, went out a whoring from him, did those things which greatly dishonoured him, and so provoked him to mind her, that forgot him, for he fell upon her with his judgments, and destroyed her; and so will the Lord do by all that forget him: Psal. ix. 17, "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God:" whatever sins the nations commit, they are comprehended in their forgetting God, that is the root of all evil; and because they did forget God, they should be "turned into hell," and bear the burden of their sins there for ever.

Ver. 36—44. The Lord said moreover unto me; Son of man, wilt thou judge Aholah and Aholibah? yea, declare unto them their abominations; that they have committed adultery, and blood is in their hands, and with their idols have they committed adultery, and have also caused their sons, whom they bare unto me, to pass for them through the fire, to devour them. Moreover this they have done unto me: they have defiled my sanctuary in the same day, and have profaned my sabbaths. For when they had slain their children to their idols, then they came the same day into my sanctuary to profane it; and, lo, thus have they done in the midst of mine house. And furthermore, that ye have sent for men to come from far, unto whom a messenger was sent; and, lo, they came: for whom thou didst wash thyself, paintedst thy eyes, and deckedst thyself with ornaments, and satest upon a stately bed, and a table prepared before it, whereupon thou hast set mine incense and mine oil. And a voice of a multitude being at ease was with her: and with the men of the common sort were brought Sabaeans from the wilderness, which put bracelets upon their hands, and beautiful crowns upon their heads. Then said I unto her that was old in adulteries, Will they now commit whoredoms with her, and she with them? Yet they went in unto her, as they go in unto a woman that playeth the harlot: so went they in unto Aholah and unto Aholibah, the lewd women.

In these nine verses Aholah's and Aholibah's sins are further declared and amplified.

I. Here is a mandate to the prophet, to declare their abominations, ver. 36.

II. The declaration of those abominations; which are,

1. Idolatry, expressed by the term of "adultery," ver. 37.

2. Cruelty, in sacrificing their children, ver. 37, and slaying of them, ver. 39.

3. Defilement of holy things, "sanctuary, sabbaths," which is set out with aggravation, ver. 38, 39.

4. Invitation, and alluring men of other nations to commit lewdness, ver. 40—42.

5. Incurribleness; they were reprov'd for their wickedness, warn'd and counselled to desist, but they went on, ver. 43, 44.

Ver. 36. "Wilt thou judge Aholah and Aholibah?" God being very angry with these two women for their lewdness and abominations, turns to the prophet, who being charitable, was ready to excuse them (for so the words may be read, and are by Piscator): See thou do it not, they are inexcusable. But take the words as they are here, "Wilt thou judge Aholah and Aholibah?" thou seest what they have done, what vile strumpets they are, how justly they deserve severely to be punished; what sayest thou, wilt thou judge them, wilt thou reprove and sentence them for their sins? speak, son of man. I see thou art backward to it, thou thinkest there will no good come of it, thou art discouraged; but rouse up thy spirit, it is thy duty to do it, and thou shalt do it.

Ver. 37. "That they have committed adultery, and blood is in their hands, &c. and have also caused their sons, whom they bare unto me, to pass," &c. For this verse see what hath been said, chap. xvi. 16, 20, 21, 32; ix. 9; xxii. 3.

Ver. 38. Moreover this they have done unto me: they have defiled my sanctuary in the same day, and have profaned my sabbaths." Of defiling the sanctuary, see chap. v. 11, where these words, "because thou hast defiled my sanctuary," were handled; and of profaning the sabbaths, was spoken chap. xx. 13, 16; and xxii. 8.

One thing here is to be considered, viz. the time when they did defile the sanctuary, and profane the sabbaths; it is said, "in the same day;" what day that was, the next verse tells more fully.

Ver. 39. "When they had slain their children to their idols, then they came the same day into my sanctuary to profane it." It was unnatural and barbarous for them to slay their children, impious to offer them to idols, to devils; and to do those things upon the sabbath days, wherein they were to rest from ordinary works, how extremely wicked and abominable was it! and then after such evils to come into the temple, and appear before God, as if they had done no wickedness, but well, what height of iniquity was here! The blood of their children was yet hot upon their hands, and fresh upon their skirts, and in that state they came into the temple to have communion with God in his worship.

"Lo, thus have they done in the midst of mine house." They have not only set up idols in hills and groves, offered their children to Molech in the valley of Hinnom, but they have set up idols in the temple, and have sacrificed their children to them there. So I find some interpreters to understand these words. Maldonate saith, Even in the temple itself they have sacrificed their sons; and he grounds it upon Jer. vii. 30; Ezek. viii. 10, 11; which places prove there were idols in the temple, that they sacrificed unto them, but not that they sacrificed their children there; but rather came with the guilt of their children's blood upon them into the temple, and so polluted it, and the worship of it.

Obs. 1. That wicked ones make little or no conscience of horrible sins, or holy duties; they do pass from the one to the other immediately. When Aholah and Aholibah had slain their children to their idols, the same day they came into the sanctuary and joined the duties of the place and day; from shedding of blood and sacrificing to idols, they step into the temple, and worship of God. Had not their consciences been seared, they would have accused them and told them they were unclean, not fit to meddle with holy things, that they might look for vengeance every hour, who had done such things, and that if they come before the Lord, he would be a consuming fire unto them; but they go boldly and impudently into his presence, not being troubled for what they had done, nor considering how they polluted holy things. So in Jer. vii. 9, 10, they did steal, murder, commit adultery, swear falsely, burn incense to Baal, walk after other gods, and then come presently and stand before him in his house, and say, "We are delivered;" they passed from wicked practices unto holy duties, making no conscience of the one or the other.

Obs. 2. The Lord takes notice how men draw near to him on his days, in the duties of his worship. When they slew their children to their idols, then they came to my sanctuary the same day; they defiled themselves with blood and idolatry on my sabbaths, and in those defilements they came to worship me, Jer. vii. 10. God observed them there, how they came in their sins, and stood before him; they were notoriously wicked, and thrust into the temple worship, and into the presence of God, as if they had been innocent, and as acceptable to God as any. Men may deceive others and themselves, but they cannot deceive the Lord; he sees their spirits, knows them fully, whether they come before him with bloody, idolatrous, unclean, profane, covetous, proud, froward, and malicious hearts, or no; whether they come unprepared in the guilt of former or present sins.

Obs. 3. Profaning of holy things is wronging of God, provokes greatly, and causes him to set an emphasis thereon. When they had sinned, and so came into the sanctuary, and profaned that and the sabbath, saith God, "This they have done unto me. Lo, thus have they done in the midst of mine house." God takes the wrong done to his house, worship, and day, as done unto himself; for he dwelt in the temple, instituted the worship and day, had stamped holiness upon them; and therefore the defiling and profaning of them he counted the defiling and profaning of his name, and of himself, and it did so sorely offend him, that he sets a double mark, or brand thereupon: "This have they done to me. Thus have they done in my house."

Three ways especially are holy things defiled, profaned:

(1.) When men come in their sins, without purging themselves, and preparing for them. James iv. 8, if men draw near to God without cleansing their hands, and purifying their hearts, God will not draw near them; he will not touch unclean things, they will defile him.

(2.) When we mingle aught of ours therewith. Additions of human things are pollutions of divine things: when they brought aught into the temple which God appointed not, that was a defiling that, and the worship thereof. When Nadab and Abihu put strange fire into the censers, they defiled them, and the worship, and provoked God to their destruction, Lev. x. And when they set their threshold with God's threshold, they defiled his name and worship, Ezek. xliii. 7, 8.

(3.) When holy things are handled irreverently. The Bethshemites in a rude manner peeped into the ark, and profaned it, which caused the Lord to smite them with sudden death, 1 Sam. vi. 19. Hence it is, that Solomon gives counsel, Eccles. v. 1, that men should keep their feet when they go to the house of God: why then? because they are to be conversant in holy things; and if they look not well to their affections, they will play the fool, and profane those holy things, and procure a curse instead of a blessing.

Ver. 40. "And furthermore, that ye have sent for men to come from far, unto whom a messenger was sent; and lo, they came." They were not content to do wickedly themselves, but they sent to and invited others, the Chaldeans, Assyrians, and Egyptians. These metaphorical harlots were wanton with those that did provoke them thereto, and also provoked others afar off to wantonize with them, according to what you had, Ezek. xvi. 33; the meaning is, they sent for men of other nations to make leagues with them, and being come, admitted their idols and idolatrous ways of worship, as appeared ver. 17.

"For whom thou didst wash thyself, paintedst thine eyes, and deckedst thyself with ornaments." Here is set forth the practice of whores, they wash, they paint, they deck themselves for their lovers; and so did these city harlots. Aholah and Aholibah, they fitted themselves for the Babylonians and Egyptians, their courtings and loves.

"Paintedst thine eyes." The Hebrew word, כָּמַר is only in this place, and signifies to colour, to paint, with stibium or red. Montanus renders the words, thou hast coloured thine eyes. The Septuagint is, ἐβαφίς, thou hast stibiumed thine eyes. Stibium was a colouring stuff women used to make themselves black-browed with. "Eyes" here are put synecdochically for the whole face; and by painting their eyes, is meant the painting of their faces: 2 Kings ix. 30, it is said of Jezebel, "she painted her face;" the Hebrew is, she put her eyes in painting, the eyes are put for the face. Painting of faces was long ago in practice. Some out of pride painted them, that none might seem more beautiful than they; some out of lust, that they might please men therewith, and allure them thereby to folly and wickedness: painted faces are like Samson's foxes, which set the corn on fire. This practice is not warrantable. If women may not counterfeit and change their habits, Dent. xxii. 5, why should they counterfeit and change their faces? if the body be more than meat, the face is more than clothes. The apostle forbids us to "take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot," 1 Cor. vi. 15; and may we take the faces which are the Lord's, ver. 19, and make them the faces of harlots by painting them?

Again, all hypocrisy is odious in the sight of God, and there is face hypocrisy as well as heart hypocrisy. This painting is face hypocrisy; women thereby seem that which they are not. Christ calls them hypocrites for disfiguring their faces, that they might appear unto men to fast, Matt. vi. 16; and do not they who paint their faces disfigure the workmanship of God, that they may appear unto men beautiful, which they are not? Matt. xxiii. 27, 28. By this painting you say you are beautiful, but you lie both to God and man, pretending it to be the work of God, when it is not.

"And deckedst thyself with ornaments." Of ornaments, and decking therewith, was spoken in chap. xvi. 11, 13. Aholibah put on her bravery, and trimmed up herself for strangers, as whores do for their lovers.

Ver. 41. "And satest upon a stately bed." The Hebrew is, a bed of honour, or, an honourable bed. Others, in a bed of state. The Scriptures mention two kinds of beds: lecti cubiculares, which men sleep in; Psal. vi. 6, "All the night make I my bed to swim;" and lecti discubitorii, which they did eat and feast at, Esth. i. 6; Amos vi. 4; and these were called tricliniaries, tables, or beds, with three feet. Which bed she sat upon is not much material: like the harlot in the Proverbs, chap. vii. 16, 17, she prepared all things to affect and please her lovers; she had a table furnished, and set the incense and oil which were for God's worship, in a readiness for idolatrous worship, or to be spent upon the Chaldeans and Egyptians, when she entertained and feasted them; she was profuse in her expenses upon idolaters.

Ver. 42. "And a voice of a multitude being at ease was with her." When the Chaldeans and Egyptians came to Aholibah and Aholah, they were feasted, leagues made between them, and all were at peace, so that the voice of a multitude at peace was with her; so the word for "ease" signifies, being שָׁלוֹם from שָׁלוּ to be at peace and quiet. Peace being made they were at "ease," and the voice of music, singing, and rejoicing was amongst them; they walked, they worshipped, they feasted together.

"With the men of the common sort, were brought Sabeans from the wilderness." These harlots were not satisfied with the captains, rulers, lords, and princes of the Assyrians, Chaldeans, and Egyptians; but they invited the baser sort of people, who thought it a great honour that they should be entertained by these famous harlots, Samaria and Jerusalem. Jer. xxvii. 3, there were messengers sent from the kings of Edom, Moab, Ammon, Tyre, and Sidon, which were inconsiderable to the kings of Babylon and Egypt; and as these were drawn in, so men inferior to them, those of the common sort, yea, Sabeans, or drunkards, as some render the word.

"Which put bracelets upon their hands, and beautiful crowns upon their heads." They brought their presents with them, "bracelets and crowns," which they bestowed upon those harlots, who hired and gave gifts to the great ones, to come unto them, chap. vi. 33, 34, but were cunning here, and received gifts of the meaner and under sort. Of "bracelets" and "beautiful crowns," the 16th chapter gave occasion to speak, ver. 11, 12.

Obs. Wicked ones are active and expensive to draw others to themselves and their wicked ways. These harlots, Aholah and Aholibah, sent to Assyria, to Egypt, to others, to come unto them; they trimmed and decked up themselves, made great preparations to entertain them, they spared not for any cost whereby they might please and satisfy them. Thus did the harlot, Prov. vii.; she perfumes her bed, trims up herself, goes forth, and diligently seeks, finds, and brings in a prey. Some, bad enough, compass sea and land to make proselytes: shall wicked ones, and wickedness, be active, expensive to draw and ruin others, and shall not godly ones, and godliness, be as active and expensive, to win and save sinners?

Ver. 43. "Then said I unto her that was old in adulteries, Will they now commit whoredoms with her," &c. What! art thou yet satisfied? thou art old in wickedness, art like a dry and dead thing; what! can thy lovers have any pleasure in thee, or thou in them? Cease, ye harlots, from your wicked and lewd practices. Here the Lord chides and reproves them, upbraiding them from their long continuance in their sin. Aholah, Samaria, was oldest in her adulteries, she had continued from the time of Jeroboam in her idolatrous worship; and Aholibah had many years lived in that sin. God's reproof, upbraiding, prevailed not, for,

Ver. 44. "Yet they went in unto her, as they go in unto a woman that playeth the harlot." &c.

Obs. 1. Those who are given to corporal or spiritual uncleanness, are seldom recovered, but go on and grow old in those sins. These women had many reproofs and threatenings, but none prevailed. Such sins are bewitching, and hold men captive; Prov. ii. 19, "None that go unto her return again."

Obs. 2. The Lord takes notice of persons' beginning, progress, and continuance in sin. He observed when Aholah began her whoredoms, when the calves were set up at Dan and Bethel, how she grew up and grew old in adulteries. God's eye goes along with sinners, from the beginning to the end.

Ver. 45—49. And the righteous men, they shall judge them after the manner of adulteresses, and after the manner of women that shed blood; because they are adulteresses, and blood is in their hands. For thus saith the Lord God; I will bring up a company upon them, and will give them to be removed and spoiled. And the company shall stone them with stones, and dispatch them with their swords; they shall slay their sons and their daughters, and burn up their houses with fire. Thus will I cause lewdness to cease out of the land, that all women may be taught not to do after your lewdness. And they shall recompense your lewdness upon you, and ye shall bear the sins of your idols: and ye shall know that I am the Lord God.

1. In these verses the judgments of God upon those harlots are further set out.

1. They shall be punished like adulteresses and murderesses, ver. 45.

2. They shall be carried into captivity, and spoiled, ver. 46.

3. They, their sons and daughters, shall be stoned and slain, and their houses burned, ver. 47.

11. The events or effects of these judgments are,

1. Cessation of lewdness, ver. 48.

2. Instruction of other women to take heed of doing the like, ver. 48.

3. Conviction of the equity of God's dealings, ver. 49.

Ver. 45. "And the righteous men." The Assyrians and Babylonians who destroyed Samaria and Jerusalem, are called "righteous" or just "men," not that they were so really, but comparatively: they are styled so in respect of the Jews; they were such, Ezek. v. 6, 7; xvi. 27, 47, who exceeded the nations in wickedness; or because they were God's instruments to execute his just judgments upon them, especially for their perfidiousness with those nations.

"They shall judge them after the manner of adulteresses, and after the manner of women that shed blood." Adulteresses were punished with death under the law, Lev. xx. 10; Deut. xxii. 22; and the death was stoning, John viii. 5, 7, else Christ would not have commissioned them to have thrown stones at the woman, if they had been faultless themselves; and as these were to die from their uncleanness, so were those that shed blood. Of these words see chap. xvi. 38.

Ver. 46. "I will bring up a company upon them." I brought up an army against Samaria, and destroyed it; and so I will do with Jerusalem, I will bring the Babylonians upon her, who shall spoil her, by stoning, slaughtering, burning, and removing her into captivity. No enemies can stir out of their country to mischief others, till the Lord call and bring them; and when he doth so, sad effects follow; they lay all waste, making cities heaps, and pleasant lands wildernesses. Of this 46th and the 47th verse, see chap. xvi. 40, 41.

Ver. 48. "Thus will I cause lewdness to cease out of the land." When the Lord should have accomplished his judgments upon these harlots, when Aholah and Aholibah should be destroyed, then idolatry should cease, and be no more in the land; then sacrificing their children to idols, and shedding of blood, should be no more heard of. God's judgments will silence wickedness, and take away evil from the land.

"That all women may be taught not to do after your lewdness." By "women" here understand, cities, provinces, nations, which seeing the just judgments of God upon these whorish women, Aholah and Aholibah, might learn to beware of such sins, and not to go out from God, having once given up themselves to him, lest they draw such severe and shameful punishments upon themselves.

Obs. God's judgments are teaching things. He brought dreadful judgments upon Aholah and Aholibah, that all women might be taught thereby.

Gideon by thorns and briers taught the men of Succoth, Judg. viii. 16; and God by his piercing judgments teaches the nations; he punisheth one city, that others may take warning. There is no judgment of God upon any city, nation, or people, but it speaks and teaches: Micah vi. 9, "Hear ye the rod;" it hath a voice, a teaching voice.

1. It teaches all who are guilty of the same sins, and not visited with the same judgments, to admire the long-suffering and goodness of God towards them.

2. It teaches those presently to consider their ways, turn to the Lord by repentance, who are guilty of such sins, lest the Lord, being now in a way of judgment, should break out also upon them, and make them examples of his justice.

3. It teaches others to fear and flee from such practices, as bring such destructive judgments. When Samaria and Jerusalem shall be destroyed by dreadful judgments for their confidence in arms of flesh, by confederating with other nations, for their idolatry, cruelty, profaneness, and perfidiousness, will not other cities fear to do the like? will not every city learn to see what is the reward of wickedness, in the sufferings of others? This God's judgments teach sinners to do, that so they may consult for their credit and safety.

Ver. 49. "And they shall recompense your lewdness upon you." The Hebrew is, And they shall put your filthiness and lewdness upon you; that is, the nations and cities round about shall concur with the Babylonians to punish you for your wickedness, to bring upon you the merit of your sins; or thus, They shall approve of what the Lord doth in destroying of you, saying, All is the fruit and just recompence of your own doings.

"And ye shall bear the sins of your idols." Their idols did not sin, but they sinned with their idols, and the fruit of those sins they must eat, the punishment due to them they must bear: there is a near connexion between sin and punishment, they have the same names; so ver. 35.

Obs. God's proceeding with sinners in judgment righteously, brings them to acknowledge the equity of his dealing with them. When the just punishment of your lewdness and idolatry shall be upon you, "ye shall know that I am the Lord God," who observed all your ways, who waited long for your repentance, who have dealt justly with you in all the evils I have brought upon you; you cannot but justify me, and condemn yourselves.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Ver. 1—5. Again in the ninth year, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, write thee the name of the day, even of this same day: the king of Babylon set himself against Jerusalem this same day. And utter a parable unto the rebellious house, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Set on a pot, set it on, and also pour water into it: gather the pieces thereof into it, even every good piece, the thigh, and the shoulder; fill it with choice bones. Take the choice of the flock, and burn also the bones under it, and make it boil well, and let them seethe the bones of it therein.

This chapter is conceived to be the last prophecy against the kingdom of Judah, before the final destruction thereof; which, with the great calamity thereof, is set out under the type of a boiling pot, and the death of the prophet's wife.

In the chapter is contained a double prophecy:

1. That of the boiling pot, and the interpretation thereof, to the 14th verse.

11. That of Ezekiel's wife dying suddenly, his not mourning for her, and the explication thereof, from the 15th verse to the end.

In the verses before us we have,

1. The time of this prophecy, ver. 1.

2. The occasion, ver. 2; which was, the king of Babylon's setting himself against Jerusalem.

3. The prophecy itself, ver. 3—5.

Ver. 1. "In the ninth year, the tenth month, and the tenth day thereof." Our prophet being in Babylon, reckons from the ninth year of the captivity, the time that Jehoiachin, himself, and others, were brought into Babylon, Ezek. i. 2; viii. 1; and not from the time of Zedekiah's reign, though it were the "ninth year, tenth month, and tenth day" thereof, for that day the one was carried away the other was made king. It concerned them in Babylon to keep account of their captivity.

"The word of the Lord came unto me, saying." He had nothing of his own to give out that day, but the "word of the Lord came" to him, the Spirit of the Lord brought it, and with such power, that he must write and speak.

Ver. 2. "Write thee the name of the day, even of this same day." The Hebrew is, Write the name of the day, and the body, or substance, of the same day. It was a day wherein something considerable and substantial was acting. God would have the prophet "write the day," not only to add weight to his prophecy, but to stir them up to be affected, and to see how the providential hand of God ordered things at a great distance.

"The king of Babylon set himself against Jerusalem this same day." Here was the occasion, or cause, of his writing down the day, and so prophesying upon it. Nebuchadnezzar was that "day" sitting down before Jerusalem, as you may clearly see, 2 Kings xxv. 1; Jer. xxxix. 1; lii. 4. When Nebuchadnezzar was upon a warlike expedition, he knew not whether he should go to Rabbath or Jerusalem, chap. xxi. 21; but he was ordered by a divine hand to lay siege to Jerusalem, the tenth day of the tenth month, in the ninth year, which Ezekiel could not possibly know, had not the Lord revealed it. This was a business of high concernment to the Jews in Judea, and those in Babylon.

Obs. 1. The Lord takes notice of what men do, and can make known the same to whom he pleases, at what distance soever. Nebuchadnezzar and his forces were in Judea, sitting down before Jerusalem, and this the Lord revealed to Ezekiel, being in Babylon. It was declared to Elisha, whither the king of Syria would march, and where he would pitch his camp, 2 Kings vi. 9, 10. The death of Herod in Judea was discovered to Joseph, being in Egypt, Matt. ii. 19, 20. And when Moses was in Midian, the Lord told him that all the men were dead in Egypt, which sought his life, Exod. iv. 19.

Obs. 2. There are some things and times the Lord would have his people take special notice of, and keep the chronology thereof. Ezekiel must write the year, the month, and day, of Jerusalem's besieging: "In the ninth year, the tenth month, the tenth day, the king of Babylon set himself against Jerusalem;" that was a sad business and a sad time. When God hath been upon executing great judgments, or showing great mercies, the days and months have been recorded.

The day and month of Noah's entrance into the ark, and of his coming out again, are mentioned, Gen. vii. 11; viii. 14, 16. The time of the Jews' going out of Egypt you have punctually set down, Exod. xii. 41, 42; so the time of their passing over Jordan, Josh. iv. 19; of Solomon's building the temple, 2 Chron. iii. 2; of Haman's plot to destroy the Jews, Esth. iii. 8, 13; and several other things, the year, month, and day, stand recorded: which shows they were providential, not casual, that the wisdom and power of God were interested in them, whoever were the instruments; and that, being so exactly set down, posterity should not forget them. And unquestionless the Lord expects, that we should keep a chronology of the great and remarkable things done by him for us: as the fight at Marston-moor, July 2nd, 1644; at Naseby, the 14th of June, 1645; at Maidstone, 2nd June, 1648; Scots routed in England, August 17th, 1648; Ormond beaten from Dublin, August 2nd, 1649, &c.

Ver. 3. "Utter a parable unto the rebellious." The Hebrew is, Speak thou parabolically to the house of rebellion, a parable; that is, speak thou darkly unto them, that they may the better attend, and make the more diligent inquiry after the meaning of what thou deliverest. Of "parable" and proverbs formerly have been spoken, chap. xvii. 2; and of the "rebellious house," chap. ii. 5.

"Set on a pot, set it on." It is for cooks to set on pots, put in water, then the meat. Ezekiel, he must bid them "set on the pot;" a strange work for a prophet, and because strange, it would make the people mind it the more, and search out the mystery. By this "pot" is meant Jerusalem. Ezek. xi. 3, "This city is the caldron;" הַרְרָה it is the same word that is here for "pot," which notes, strength, comprehensiveness, and durableness. So Jerusalem was strong, comprehended much, and was more durable than other places when besieged: not Jerusalem simply, but under judgment, was the "pot."

"And also pour water into it." When pots are set over the fire, they put in and fill them with "water," that so whatever they please may be boiled therein. By this "water" is meant the afflictions and judgments, in which, as in "water," God would boil Jerusalem. Now the king of Babylon was set down round about it, had straitly besieged it, and variety of calamities were upon it, and the waters of affliction began to be hot. So calamities are called, Isa. viii. 7.

Ver. 4. "Gather the pieces thereof into it." When the cook hath set on the pot, filled it with water, then he takes the several pieces of flesh, which are to be boiled, and puts them into the pot; and they are called the "pieces thereof," because they are to be boiled therein.

"Even every good piece, the thigh, and the shoulder." Here the people, or commonwealth of Israel, is likened unto a body dissected; as the Levite's concubine was, Judg. xix. 29; and they must take the good or principal pieces, those that were the strength and support of the body and head, as the thighs and shoulders; that is, the nobles, counsellors, priests, and chief soldiers amongst them.

"Fill it with choice bones." The Hebrew is, Fill it with the choiceness of bones; which Rabbi David interprets, as we do, Fill it with choice bones; that is, with choice pieces: because the pieces, saith he, are cut according to the "bones." This "pot" must not have a "piece" or two, a "bone" or two, put into it, but must be filled with the choicest pieces and bones which were in all the body.

Ver. 5. "Take the choice of the flock." By the "choice" may be understood the king himself, who is the head of the flock; or, the fat and wealthy ones.

"Burn also the bones under it." By "bones" here, divers expositors understand the bones of the innocent prophets, and others, who were slain unjustly. These the prophet bids them to burn under the pot, and that to manifest the cause of God's great wrath against, and just destruction of, the city. But this interpretation of "bones," suits not with the scope of the place, which is not to disquiet the bones of the innocent, and lay punishment upon them, but to revenge their death. The "bones" here are to suffer as well as the flesh. We may understand these words thus; Let flesh and bones boil together, and when they are so boiled, that all the flesh and fat is taken from the "bones," then burn them; that is, when all the wealth, places, honour are taken from the rich, then let them be destroyed by famine, plague, or sword, and that is the burning of the "bones;" let nothing of them or theirs be spared, but let all be consumed. Or thus, Boil the fat ones in the "pot," and burn the poor under it; they are like "bones" without flesh, make them instrumental to consume the rich; and doubtless, in the famine, they were like a fire devouring the flesh in the "pot."

"And make it boil well." The Hebrew is, רַחַח רַחַח which Montanus renders, make its boilings to boil, boil it thoroughly. There be old tough pieces in the "pot," which will not easily or suddenly be boiled, they will require a hot and continued fire; therefore Euxtorf interprets the words, see that the boilings be very hot. The Chaldean army were not the "bones" and fire under this metaphorical "pot," but the bellows rather, to blow up and increase the fire.

"And let them seethe the bones of it therein." The Hebrew is, let the bones thereof be sodden in the midst of it; and the stream of interpreters carry the words plurally, and so it suits best with the words going before: Make it boil well, and let the bones thereof be sodden in the midst of it; that is, let them be thoroughly sodden. "Bones" are strong things, they require more than ordinary seething, especially if old; and there be many old bones in the "pot," many hardened sinners, many stout spirits amongst the soldiers, princes, nobles, and others; but let them be soundly boiled in this "pot" of affliction, and that will make them tender. The Vulgate is, the bones are boiled till the flesh and they are sundered, they are thoroughly boiled; and Vatablus makes this the sense of it, let the strongest and stoutest men be slain and consumed in that siege.

Obs. 1. The sinfulness of men hath occasioned God to give out much Scripture. "Speak a parable to the rebellious." God took occasion from their rebelliousness to give forth this "parable," and many others. Much of Jeremiah and our prophet was occasioned to see the world, by the wickedness of the Jews. Sin accidentally occasions good: sin made way for Christ; and as for him, so for much, if not the greatest part, of the holy Scriptures.

Obs. 2. Teaching by parables is warrantable. God sends and commands the prophet to utter a "parable." Isaiah, Jeremiah, Zechariah, were not without parables. Christ was abundant in them. The parables they used were taken from ordinary things, known and familiar, such as were obvious to the senses, as here from a pot, water, pieces of flesh, bones, &c. Hereby the mind and memory are much enlivened, and stronger impression made upon the heart. Chap. xxii. 18, "All they are brass, and tin, and iron, and lead, in the midst of the furnace;" and here they were as flesh, and bones, in the midst of the pot.

Obs. 3. The judgments of God upon places, makes them pots, in which he boils sinners. Now Jerusalem was a "pot" over the fire; the Babylonish forces were round about it, dreadful calamities upon it, multitudes in it who were like pieces of flesh in a boiling pot. What boiling thoughts, fears, cares, distractions, discontents, were amongst them! We may judge what boiling was therein, by the army's lying near this city, and being in readiness to come upon it.

Obs. 4. That God at his pleasure commands judgments upon places. "Set on a pot, pour water into it;" make Jerusalem miserable with plague, famine, and sword. If he speak the word, the thing must be done; whatever he calls for, takes place. Jerusalem, that was a paradise, must now become a boiling pot.

Obs. 5. That when God's judgments are abroad, he meets with all sorts of men, the fat and lean, the strong and weak, the rich and poor. When the "pot" is on the fire, God will have the choice pieces and choice ones into it; the shoulders, the thighs, the choice bones, prince, nobles, men in place, of wealth, as well as the poor and lean ones.

Obs. 6. When God is boiling of sinners in the fire of his judgments, he will boil them to purpose. "Make it boil well, and let the bones thereof be sodden in the midst thereof:" this pot was boiling not a few hours, days, or months, but a year and half, 2 Kings xxv. 1—3. So when God made Samaria a boiling pot, 2 Kings xvii. 5, he boiled the sinners in it three years together. God so boiled them there, and these here, that he made the proudest and stoutest of them to stoop, yea, all of them to become meat to their enemies.

Ver. 6—8. Wherefore thus saith the Lord God; Woe to the bloody city, to the pot whose scum is therein, and whose scum is not gone out of it! bring it out piece by piece; let no lot fall upon it. For her blood is in the midst of her; she set it upon the top of a rock; she poured it not upon the ground, to cover it with dust; that it might cause fury to come up to take vengeance; I have set her blood upon the top of a rock, that it should not be covered.

Here the Lord comes to interpret the parable, denouncing a fearful "woe" to Jerusalem, and giving the grounds thereof; which are,

I. Her bloodiness, with the aggravation thereof, ver. 6, 7.

II. Her unprofitableness under judgments; when she was boiling, her scum abode with her, went not out of her.

Ver. 6. "Woe to the bloody city!" Jerusalem was guilty of much blood, Ezek. xxii. 3, 4, 6, 9, 12, 13, 27; 2 Chron. xxi. 16. Jerusalem was now as bad as Nineveh, which, Nahum iii. 1, is called the "bloody city," and hath the same "woe" denounced against it. By blood, not only murder, but also other notorious wickednesses, which deserved death, are to be understood; Ezek. vii. 23, "The land is full of bloody crimes;" of such sins for which men ought to be cut off. Fide loc.

"To the pot whose scum is therein, and whose scum is not gone out of it!" Here it is clear, that by this metaphorical "pot" is meant the city; he calls the city the "pot," which was not without its scum. הַצֵּמָה from הָלָה agrotavit; for the Avenarius. "scum" is agritudo olla, the sickness of the "pot." Rabbi Solomon calls it, excrementum, the excrement and filth of the pot. The Septuagint is, toç, the poison of it. The Vulgate is, rubigo, the rust of it. Frosterus hath it, sordes, those filthinesses, which, through great boiling, do adhere to the "pot," from what is boiled therein. By "scum" is meant the sin and wickedness of the city; which is likened thereto, in respect,

1. Of its loathsomeness. "Scum" and filth are loathsome things: the sins of this city were loathsome, it was full of abominations, blood, idolatry, uncleanness, &c. such evils as made it to be abhorred, Ezek. xvi. 25; as made the Philistines ashamed, ver. 27; such sins as were loathsome afterwards to themselves, chap. xx. 43.

2. Of its visibleness. The "scum" and filth is uppermost, next to view: such were Jerusalem's sins: they were open, she had an eminent and high place in every street, Ezek. xvi. 24; "she opened her feet to every one that passed by," ver. 25; she and her princes shed blood openly, chap. xxii. 6; nothing but sin and wickedness appeared in her.

3. Of its adherency to the "pot." So Jerusalem's sins did cleave close to her; the more she was boiled in the judgments of God, the more fast she held her sins, her scum and filth stuck to every side of her. Jer. viii. 5, "They hold fast deceit:" their sins cleaved to them, as flesh to the bones, as rust to a pot; though they were off in the fire, or over it, yet their filthiness departed not from them, their scum, their dross, boiled in, and cleaved fast to them, Jer. vi. 29.

"Bring it out piece by piece." He persists in the allegory of the "pot," and orders how they should be dealt with who were in the city. They should be brought out severally, not all at once, but as pieces are taken out of the pot, one after another, till there be no more: so it should be done with this city, one piece of it should be brought out and consumed with famine, another piece of it with the plague, ver. 3, with the sword, ver. 4; should be carried away into captivity, so that it should be emptied of all: so the words are rendered in Vatablus, part by part empty it. This city was emptied somewhat under Jehoiachim, when he was carried to Babylon, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6, 7; it was emptied more when Jehoiachin was taken, and many with him also carried thither, 2 Kings xxiv. 15; but it was wholly emptied when Zedekiah was taken, and carried away, 2 Kings xxv.

"Let no lot fall upon it." Let it not have that favour or mercy. Among soldiers, in their military discipline, when they take many enemies worthy all to die, they single out some by lots to suffer, and spare the rest: but Jerusalem should not have any spared, they should all, young and old, taste of one judgment or other. We may refer this lotting to the city itself; let it not come to that, as to cast a "lot," whether the city shall be saved or destroyed: such a famous, great, ancient city might fall into consultation, whether it should be ruined or no. Carthage was long in debate in the senate of Rome, saith Lavater, whether it should be utterly destroyed. But the Lord prevents such a consultation, and saith, "Let no lot fall upon it:" I have decreed it to be ruined, and it shall be ruined, utterly ruined.

Ver. 7. "Her blood is in the midst of her, she set it upon the top of a rock." &c. The meaning of this verse is, she shed blood openly, did bloody and notorious things publicly, as if she had done them "upon the top of a rock:" if blood be shed there, it is dry, hard, drinks not in the blood at all, but it lies to be seen of all that come upon the "rock:" whereas, if blood be shed upon the earth, that drinks it in quickly, or it may be covered with dust, that others may not discern it. Jerusalem did not sin closely, and hide her wickedness from the world, but so openly, that all nations took notice of it.

Ver. 8. "That it might cause fury to come up to take vengeance." They did not sin to that end that God might take "vengeance" on them, but the nature of their sin was such, as it provoked God to "fury," and to hasten vengeance: their sins were open, great, and crying for "vengeance;" their sins ascended, and God's "fury" descended.

"I have set her blood upon the top of a rock." As she did, so did the Lord. She shed blood openly, and was not ashamed of it, and I have shed her blood openly, and am not ashamed of it. She did not cover her sin, but exposed it to the view of all, and God, by his punishments, set it on "the top of a rock," and made it known to the whole world.

Obs. 1. That cities have their filth and scum in them. Jerusalem here is likened to a "pot" with the "scum" in it. The poor are not the "scum" of the city, but the sin and wickedness of poor and rich, that is the "scum;" Jerusalem was full of it. Ezekiel, chapters viii. xvi. and xxii. tells you what "scum," and abundance of it, was in Jerusalem. There was much "scum" in Sodom, much in Samaria, much among the nations, but most in Jerusalem. To great cities there is a confluence of all sorts of people, who bring "scum" and filth with them, and add to what they find there. What scummy doctrine did the false prophets teach in Jerusalem! Jer. xxiii.; what scummy counsel did Jaazaniah and Pelatiah give in that city! Ezek. xi. 1, 2; what dunghill gods did Jerusalem entertain! Jer. ii. 28, "According to the number of thy cities are thy gods, O Judah:" there was no sin against God or man, but it was in Jerusalem. And other cities are not without their "scum," no, not this city.

Obs. 2. Heavy judgments upon sinful places do not work out the wickedness which is in them. Jerusalem was besieged, suffered hard things, and her "scum" went not out of her, it boiled in, she was the worse for all those fiery judgments God brought upon her. Jer. v. 3, "Thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved; thou hast consumed them, but they have refused to receive correction: they have made their faces harder than a rock; they have refused to return." God did strike them with Egyptian and Babylonish rods, but there were no tears, no relentings, no returnings, but grew harder and harder, even to a rockish hardness. Ahaz, the head of this city, in the time of his distress sinned the more against the Lord, 2 Chron. xxviii. 22. When Samaria was besieged by the Syrians, 2 Kings vi. did the "scum" of it boil out? no, Jehoram at that time sent to take off Elisha's head, ver. 31, and said, he would wait no longer for the Lord, ver. 33: his "scum" boiled in, and boiled up to a greater height. Is the "scum" gone out of Ireland, by all the bloody judgments of God which have been upon them? is it gone out of England, or London, by all the sad strokes we have had?

Obs. 3. When judgments prevail not with sinful places to cleanse them from their iniquities, God threatens, and will certainly destroy such places, and that without mercy. Jerusalem was as a pot over the fire, her "scum" went not out of her; and what then? "Woe to the bloody city! bring it out piece by piece; let no lot fall upon it:" because the scum wrought not out, the flesh, the people, must be brought out to destruction, and the pot be broken in pieces. God said of Jerusalem, Jer. xxxii. 31, "This city hath been to me as a provocation of mine anger and of my fury from the day that they built it even unto this day:" sometimes there were good kings, and good people, in it, but generally the people were wicked; and therefore, Jer. xix. 11, "I will break this people and this city, as one breaketh a potter's vessel, that cannot be made whole again." It was bloody, merciless, and now should have bloody judgments without mercy.

Obs. 4. Open, impudent sinning provokes to vengeance, and shall be punished openly. The 7th and 8th verses together yield this observation. Jerusalem shed blood, not in a corner, or some secret place, she had no care to conceal and cover what she did; but openly, as on the top of a rock, she set up scaffolds to execute the innocent: this caused fury to rise in the Lord, and hastened him to take vengeance, and to punish her openly: he called for Nebuchadnezzar to come out of Babylon, he led him to the gates of Jerusalem, caused him to sit down there, and visibly to execute his vengeance upon her, so that her punishment was as open as her sin: she sinned as on the top of a rock, and God set her blood "on the top of a rock." The besieging, taking, and burning of Jerusalem was so known, and famous, as that all the nations took notice thereof, and made themselves sport therewith, Lam. ii. 15, 16; she would not cover her sin and shame, and God would not cover her punishment.

Ver. 9—14. Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Woe to the bloody city. I will even make the pile for fire great. Heap on wood, kindle the fire, consume the flesh, and spice it well, and let the bones be burned. Then set it empty upon the coals thereof, that the brass of it may be hot, and may burn, and that the filthiness of it may be molten in it, that the scum of it may be consumed. She hath wearied herself with lies, and her great scum went not forth out of her: her scum shall be in the fire. In thy filthiness is lewdness: because I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged, thou shalt not be purged from thy filthiness any more, till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee. I the Lord have spoken it: it shall come to pass, and I will do it; I will not go back, neither will I spare, neither will I repent; according to thy ways, and according to thy doings, shall they judge thee, saith the Lord God.

In these verses the Lord proceeds,

I. In threatening of judgments, ver. 9, "Woe to the bloody city!" as before, ver. 6.

II. In a parabolical declaration of those judgments, in the end of ver. 9, and in ver. 10, 11.

III. In showing the causes thereof, ver. 12, 13.

IV. In sealing up the certainty and irrevocableness of these judgments, ver. 14.

Ver. 9. "I will even make the pile for fire great." I will bring a multitude of Babylonians, a mighty army, which shall besiege Jerusalem, and be as a great fire unto it; by them I will execute fiery judgments upon the "bloody city." The Hebrew is, I will make a great fire, that is, I will consume the whole city: here are a multitude of houses, stately buildings, and they shall be all as a pile of wood for fire; yea, the inhabitants thereof shall be consumed by the fire of my wrath.

Ver. 10. "Heap on wood, kindle the fire, consume the flesh." The Hebrew verbs in this verse are infinitive, but rendered imperatively. Vatablus reads them in the future, I will heap on wood, I will kindle the fire; that is, saith he, I will add spirit and power to the Babylonish forces, to besiege the Jews, that so by famine, sword, and plague, they may be consumed. According to our reading the words, God calls for, and hastens, the destruction of Jerusalem.

"Spice it well." The Hebrew is, הרקם המרקמה, which Montanus renders thus, Season a seasoning with spicery. רקם signifies, to make an ointment, sauce, or seasoning, of divers kinds of grocery or sweets, that so it may be the more pleasing to the nostrils or palate. Cooks "spice" their meats and sauces, that so they may be more acceptable to the taste of those who feed upon them. The spicing here I conceive to be, the various judgments which were to be inflicted upon Jerusalem, which made it as savoury meat both to men and God; when it was salted and spiced with his judgments, God was at rest and comforted, Ezek. v. 13. Their fears, sorrows, distractions, sufferings, famine, were several spices they were spiced withal; and it was meat and drink to the Chaldeans at last, to destroy them, being made faint and feeble with a long siege.

"Let the bones be burned." Let the strongest soldiers, wealthiest citizens, and principal men of the city, be weakened and consumed in this siege, or at the end of it; not only the poor and low ones, but the highest and mightiest ones. The Chaldees hath it, Let her strong men be mad.

Ver. 11. "Then set it empty upon the coals thereof." When the city should be emptied of the inhabitants thereof, it should be as a "pot" set on the fire without any thing in it; when it is so, it quickly melts, consumes, and comes to nothing. This "pot" must be set on,

1. That it may be melted.
2. That the filthiness of it may be separated.
3. That the scum and rust may be consumed.

Obs. 1. That sin and wickedness do defile the places and persons where they are, as filthy liquors, scum, and rust, do the vessels and pots in which they are. This metaphorical "pot" had her filthiness in it; Jerusalem had shed blood, set up altars and idols, oppressed the fatherless, widows, and strangers, and these things defiled her; not only were the citizens, but even the city itself was defiled. The leprosy defiled the garments and the houses, Lev. xiv.; sin is that leprosy which defiles men, garments, houses, towns, cities, and lands: Ezra ix. 11, "The land which ye go to possess, is an unclean land with the filthiness of the people;" filthy people make all like themselves.

Obs. 2. Destructive judgments upon sinful places are pleasing unto God. He encouraged the Chaldeans to "heap on wood," to "kindle the fire, consume the flesh," and to "spice it well." Execution of justice, destruction of sinful cities and persons, is a sacrifice well pleasing to God, delighting him as much as any spiced meats do the palates of men. When Jehu had executed justice upon Ahab's sons and Baal's priests, see what the Lord said; 2 Kings x. 30, "Because thou hast done well in executing that which is right in mine eyes, and hast done unto the house of Ahab all that was in mine heart, thy children of the fourth generation shall sit on the throne of Israel." Was not the destruction of those wicked ones very pleasing unto the Lord, when he rewarded it so well?

Ver. 12. "She hath wearied herself with lies." Montanus renders the Hebrew thus, she hath afflicted or wearied herself with injuries, that is, with wronging others. Vatablus, in his notes, hath it thus, she hath wearied herself, and that in doing injury to others. "Herself" is not in the original; the words may therefore refer to God, and so both Junius and Piscator read them: She hath wearied me with her lies and vexations; I often reproved her for her sins, threatened her by my prophets, visited her with my judgments, but all was to no purpose: if at any time she promised amendment, it was hypocritically, she performed it not; or she took those ways and courses which pleased not me, nor profited herself, and in those she both wearied me and "herself." The word for "lies" signifies, iniquity, vanity.

"Her great scum went not forth out of her." In the sixth verse the words are, "whose scum is not gone out of it;" here, "her great scum went not forth out of her." What course soever she took to advantage herself, her "scum" rather increased than diminished; she pretended oft to part with her "scum," but never did.

"Her scum shall be in the fire." Seeing her "scum" and rust (for so the word may be interpreted) will not be gotten out of her, she shall be served like the unclean vessels, that were to pass through the fire, Numb. xxxi. 22, 23. So this "pot" or city should be burnt with fire, and so her "scum" and rust should be consumed with her.

Obs. 1. Wicked, vain, sinful practices, do weary God, and those that do use them. She hath wearied me, she hath wearied herself with lies; that is, with her wretched doings; I have oft presented mercy to her, she refused it; I have oft called upon her to turn from her idolatry, unjust and bloody doings, but she hath had a deaf ear; I have waited long for her repentance, and she hath dissembled with me, and is grown impenitent; I am weary of waiting any longer. Isa. lxxv. 2, 3, "I have spread out my hands all the day to a rebellious people, which walketh in a way that was not good, after their own thoughts; a people that provoketh me to anger continually to my face," &c. How could it be but that God should be weary of such people, and such doings? God tells her, she had wearied him with her iniquities, Isa. xliii. 24. O Jacob, Israel, Jerusalem, thine iniquities are so great, many, oft iterated, that I am weary of beholding, of hearing, of bearing them any longer; others have wearied me with their words, Mal. ii. 17, but you have wearied me with your lying words, and wicked deeds. When my fury hath been kindled in me, so that I have been ready to pour out judgments upon you, I have been stopped by the prayers of some precious ones, and repented me of what I intended against you, but I will do it no more, "I am weary with repenting," Jer. xv. 6: God repented, but they repented not, he would repent no more. And as sinners, by their sinful ways, do weary God, so they weary themselves; Jer. ix. 5, "They have taught their tongue to speak lies, and weary themselves to commit iniquity." Some tire themselves more in the service of sin and Satan, than others do in the service of God and Christ: Isa. v. 18, they draw iniquity, and they toil at it as horses in a cart.

Obs. 2. When the scum will not be got out by the word and lesser judgments, God will destroy both scum and pot together. "Her scum went not forth of her; God's threats by the prophets did no good, his lesser judgments procured it not, the "scum" still boiled in, the rust still cleaved to the pot: what then? "her scum," her rust, "shall be in the fire:" when neither wind nor water will do it, fire shall.

Ver. 13. "In thy filthiness is lewdness." Thou hast defiled thyself with all manner of sin, with idols, blood, profaneness, hypocrisy, covetousness, &c. and to these thou addest "lewdness," that is, obstinacy; thou art settled upon thy lees, and wilt not be reclaimed; no counsel, admonition, reproof, takes with thee, thou standest out against them all. The Vulgate reads it, thy filthiness is execrable. Zuramah notes, a resolved wickedness, which is execrable. Æcolampadius makes the "filthiness" to be, evil counsel: Jerusalem had hearkened to the false prophets, taken in their counsel against the true prophets, and was resolved to go on in her ways; Jer. xxiii. 14, "They strengthen the hands of evil-doers, that none doth return from his wickedness."

"Because I have purged thee." The Hebrew is, tihartlich, which Montanus in the margin gives the sense of, I have purged thee; that is, I have commanded that thou shouldst purge thyself. God sent prophets unto Jerusalem, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 15, to tell her of her sins and danger, and to invite and press her to repentance, as Jer. iii. 12—14; who fully declares throughout his prophecy, what sad judgments God would bring upon her, if she did not purge and cleanse herself. See chap. vi. 26; vii. 14; ix. 11; xiii. 17. God affording them means for purging, as prophets, reproofs, admonitions, counsels, exhortations, corrections, is said to have purged them; he did that which in his wisdom he thought meet to do. The purging here meant is from idolatry, injustice, profaneness, &c.

“And thou wast not purged.” Hebrew, thou hast not purged thyself; thou didst not entertain and improve the means afforded. When the prophets came to thee, and told thee of thy sins and dangers, thou didst mock at them, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16, and despise the word they brought. When I smote thee with my correcting hand, thou didst “revolt more and more,” Isa. i. 5; and thy children “received no correction,” Jer. ii. 30; that is, no benefit by those blows I gave them: thou saidst, “I have loved strangers, and after them will I go,” ver. 25; and those in thee said, “We are lords; we will come no more unto the Lord,” ver. 31; so Jer. xlv. 16, 17: they did not cease from their wicked ways.

“Thou shalt not be purged from thy filthiness any more.” I will cease from using means to purge thee, my prophets shall labour no more in vain about thee; they have spent their lungs and strength to reclaim thee, but they shall not do it again, they shall neither reprove, threaten, counsel, or invite thee any more to turn, but thou shalt be left as desperate and incurable. Hebrew is, thou shalt not purge thyself from thy filthiness any more; if thou wouldst now go about it, it will be in vain, it is too late, I am resolved upon thy destruction.

“Till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee.” Anger, indignation, wrath: fury is anger never at rest till vengeance is taken. There is now no purging, but destruction; I shall spend all my judgments upon thee, consume thee and thine, and so my fury shall rest upon thee. These words we had before, chap. v. 13; xxi. 17. “Till” doth not imply a purging afterwards, Psal. cx. 1; Rom. viii. 22; Matt. v. 26, “Till thou hast paid the uttermost,” &c.

Obs. 1. Obstinaey in sin provokes God to the destruction of sinners. “Her scum shall be in the fire;” Jerusalem shall be burnt, and why? “In thy filthiness is lewdness;” thou art obstinate, hardened in thy wickedness. All sin offends, some sins provoke to judgments, obstinaey provokes to destruction. Jer. xlv. 15—17, in those verses you have the obstinaey of the Jews in Egypt, (they, and others of them, had been so obstinate in the land of Judea, that God could bear them no longer, but laid the land desolate, and made it a curse, ver. 22,) and see how the Lord threatens them; ver. 27, “I will watch over them for evil, and not for good; and all the men of Judah that are in the land of Egypt shall be consumed by the sword and by the famine, until there be an end of them:” and not only would he destroy them, but Egypt likewise, where they were, ver. 30; even that should fare the worse for their being in it. Obstinaey in sin is worse than the sin itself; many sins are committed against man’s will and purpose, but obstinaey in sin hath the will fully in it, and therefore must needs exasperate the Lord. Neh. ix. 30, “Many years didst thou forbear them, and testifiedst against them by thy spirit in thy prophets: yet would they not give ear: therefore gavest thou them into the hand of the people of the lands:’ this stubbornness of theirs made the Lord cast them out, and put them into the hands of heathens. Zechariah tells you, that for this sin “came a great wrath from the Lord of hosts” upon them, chap. vii. 12; not only “wrath,” which is destructive in itself, but “great wrath,” and that not only from the Lord, but from the “Lord of hosts;” as if the Lord mustered up all his forces, to come against obstinate and rebellious sinners, and pour out great wrath and vengeance upon them. Certainly obstinate sinners are those the Lord will accomplish his wrath upon; 1 Thess. ii. 16, the wrath of God came upon the Jews to the uttermost, even to perfection.

Obs. 2. In Scripture language, that is said to be done, which God or men endeavour to do, though it be not done. “I have purged thee.” God using means, and endeavouring, by his prophets, mercies, threats, and judgments, to purge Jerusalem from her sin, is called purging, though Jerusalem were not purged. Psal. lxxix. 5, “They that destroy me are mighty:” David’s enemies, who sought to destroy him, are said to do it. Rom. ii. 4, “The goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance;” that is, its agency and tendency is that way. Deut. xxvi. 5, “A Syrian ready to perish:” Jacob increased and prospered when he was with Laban, but because Laban did that which tended to his perishing, he changed his wages, he pursued him returning home, therefore he is said to be in a perishing condition. 1 Cor. x. 33, “I please all men in all things:” in the fourth chapter, he tells you he was reviled, persecuted, defamed, made as the filth of the world, and the scourging of all things, how then did he please all men in all things? he is said to do it, in that he endeavoured to do it, seeking their good, their salvation. Matt. v. 32, “Whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery:” that is, this action of putting her away exposes her to that sin, whether she fall into it or not. Because, therefore, the man’s act in putting away his wife is likely to produce such an effect, he is said to do it, to cause her to commit adultery. Gal. v. 4, “Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law:” they sought to be justified by the law, and thereupon are said to be so; not that the law justified any, or any could be justified by it. This should teach us how to understand the like scriptures. Things may be said to be done, when only there hath been means used conducing thereunto.

Obs. 3. A people may have the means, and not improve the same for their good. Jerusalem had prophets, ordinances, sabbaths, sacrifices, mercies, judgments, by which God would have purged her, and she was not purged; she did not purge herself, she improved not the same for her good, she did not hearken to the prophets, humble herself for her sins, fear the Lord and his threatenings, observe his sabbaths, worship him only, and execute justice. God called upon her oft to purge herself: Jer. iv. 14, “O Jerusalem, wash thine heart from wickedness, that thou mayest be saved. How long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee?” I have given thee water to wash thine heart from all thy vain, base, destructive thoughts, why dost thou not use it? Chap. xiii. 27, “O Jerusalem! wilt thou not be made clean? when shall it once be?” my prophets would cleanse thee, if thou wouldst receive them, and my word by them; mine ordinances would sanctify thee, if thou didst use them according to mine institution of them; my mercies and judgments would cause thee to cleanse thyself, if thou didst well weigh them; but thou hast means, and dost not improve them. It is not the having of means, but the right use of means, will do good. Jerusalem thought herself clean, not needing to be purged: chap. ii. 23, "How canst thou say, I am not polluted?" Jerusalem, that was more guilty than Sodom or Samaria, justified herself, and so neglected purging; yea, "rejected the word of the Lord," which should have purged her, chap. viii. 9; she gave ear to false prophets and priests, chap. xxiii. 14, who strengthened her in her wickedness, and defamed the true prophets, chap. xviii. 18; she profaned the means, Ezek. xxii. 26; she idolized the means, and rested in the act done, Jer. vii. 4, 9, 10; viii. 8; she went on still in her own ways, whatever God or man said unto her: chap. vii. 28, "This is a nation that obeyeth not the voice of the Lord their God, nor receiveth correction." God had spoken to Jerusalem and Judea oft, yea, corrected them oft, but neither word nor rod did better them.

Obs. 4. People may so slip the time of repenting, and turning to God, as that it may be too late for them to go about the same; they may sin away the time of mercy. Because Jerusalem, having means, took not the opportunity of purging herself, she should never be purged, her filthiness should abide with her. As Judea was the land not cleansed, Ezek. xxii. 24, so was Jerusalem the city not purged; she passed the time of her purging; she lost the season for mercy. The Scripture is clear for it: Psal. lxxxii. 11, 12, "My people would not hearken to my voice; and Israel would none of me. So I gave them up to their own hearts' lust: and they walked in their own counsels." God invited them by means and mercies, which they entertained not so as to profit by them, they stood it out with God, who cast them off, and now it was too late for them to come: "Oh that they had hearkened!" not, Oh that they would hearken! The foolish virgins staid so long before they got oil, that the door of the bridegroom was shut, and no entrance for them, Matt. xxv. they came too late. Matt. xxiii. 37, 38, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" I used all means, but Jerusalem took not her time to do herself good, therefore her house was left desolate; her temple, her city, should be emptied of all means and mercies, and her children be left in a desolate condition. God would have purged the old world, but it slipped the time of its purging: Gen. vi. 3, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man;" they have been warned, counselled, reproved, convinced by my Spirit, in the patriarchs, and in their bosoms that hath been labouring to bring them to repentance, but they grieve, resist, and vex my Spirit, therefore it shall cease to strive any more with them, to do them any good. Let us not presume upon hereafters, that we will purge, repent, and turn to God hereafter; thy hereafter may be too late: "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near," Isa. lv. 6. There is a time when he will not be found, a distance at which he will not hear: Prov. i. 28, "Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me." They slighted and improved not the means which God afforded them, thereupon judgments came on them, whereupon they betake themselves to a more serious use of the means; but it was too late, God had no ear to hear them, neither would make any appearance for them. Time present is the acceptable time, 2 Cor. vi. 2. "Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God," 2 Cor. vii. 1.

Obs. 5. Those who have had means, and not profited thereby, God will deal most severely with, there is no mercy, but altogether judgment, for them. Jerusalem had means, but was not purged, and she should not be purged, but God's fury should rest upon her: "Thou shalt not be purged from thy filthiness any more, till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee;" that is, thou shalt never be purged in mercy, but destroyed in my fury; and so it was quickly after, by the Chaldean army. Capernaum was exalted to heaven in means, but what said Christ? she should "be brought down to hell," Matt. xi. 1; that is, suffer extreme punishment; and why? she improved not the means: "For if the mighty works which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained unto this day:" had Sodom had the preaching and miracles thou hast had, it would have made such improvement of them, as to have kept off the fire and brimstone which fell upon it; therefore the punishment of the Sodomites should be less than of the Capernautes, at the day of judgment. God is severe against those who have the means to purge them, and do it not, that have the gospel, and improve it not. The fig-tree in the vineyard had stood there three years, and was not better at last than at first; the influences of heaven, and fatness of the earth, had done it no good; and behold the severity of the owner, "Cut it down; why cumberest it the ground?" Luke xiii. 7. He saith not, Dig it up, set it elsewhere, but, Cut it down, it is a burden to me, to the earth, and reproach to all the trees in the garden. What made the Lord deal more severely with the Jews than other nations? It was because they had the means to do them that good which others had not: Amos iii. 2, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth;" I have so known you, as to own you for my people, as to give you my prophets, my law, mine ordinances, my covenants, &c.: "therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities," you shall be made as exemplary by my judgments as ever you were by my mercies.

Ver. 14. "I the Lord have spoken it." This verse seals up the certainty of all threatened, and cuts off all evasions which Jerusalem might make whatsoever: as,

1. She might say, Ezekiel hath had thoughts of me, he speaks these things out of his own head and spirit, they are his devices, and I weigh them not. This is answered in these words, "I the Lord," I, Jehovah, who am of myself, and give being, life, to all my threats, "have spoken." What is said is no vain vision, lying prophecy, like to what the false prophets have given out; what Ezekiel hath said, he had from me, I commissioned him to speak, and it is not he, but I that have spoken it.

"It shall come to pass." 2. Be it so that thou hast spoken it, yet the time may be long ere these threats against me may take place: such thoughts were in the breast of Jerusalem, chap. xii. 27. This is answered here; It comes, נשׂא רעול, saith Montanus; it is not afar off, for many days, but it is at hand. Others have it, it is ready to come; Nebuchadnezzar is upon his march, hastening to thy gates, and will suddenly sit down before them.

"I will do it." 3. What if Nebuchadnezzar be coming, he and all with him are but men, they may fail of their purposes, sink in their undertakings, and never be able to perform what they enterprize. This shift is here taken off; "I will do it;" I am not man, but Jehovah, I fail not in my purposes, I sink not in my undertaking, I am able to perform whatever I enterprize; the whole work is mine; I have called forth Nebuchadnezzar and his army, I will bring them to thy gates, and enable them to do all my pleasure. I have done it, so is the original, it is as certain as if done.

“I will not go back.” 4. Grant it, that the work is thine, and thou hast determined to see it done, yet upon second thoughts thou mayest change thy resolutions, when thou shalt consider that I, Jerusalem, am thy city, and the only city thou hast chosen in all the world; and wilt thou bring a heathenish king and an army to destroy me, and the temple where thou dwellest, and art worshipped? surely it cannot be, Lam. iv. 12. This conceit of hers is blown away by these words, “I will not go back:” thou art a bloody city, thy scum is not gone out of thee, thou art filthy, and in thy filthiness is lewdness, obstinacy, thou goest not back from thy wicked doings; “I will not go back” from doing what I have purposed. The Hebrew is, אֶפְשָׁר לֹא אֶחְזֹק I will not retract what I have said and purposed, I will not withdraw myself from it. Avenarius renders the words thus, I will not make holy-day, and cease to prosecute what I have determined.

“Neither will I spare.” 5. Jerusalem might yet say, The Lord is merciful; though he be angry, and in his anger bring the enemy to my gates, he will not keep his anger always; when I shall fast, weep, pray, he will be entreated, he will pardon, spare, and not suffer me to be destroyed. This refuge is here made useless; “Neither will I spare,” fasting, prayers, and tears, shall do her no good. Jer. xiv. 12, when Jerusalem’s children should fast, God would not hear their cry, no, nor Jeremiah for them, chap. xi. 14; nor Ezekiel, chap. ix. 8—10. Though themselves, their prophets, should importune God, he saith, “As for me, mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity;” thou hast caused my fury to come up to take vengeance, and I will be avenged on thee; I will not abstain from revenge, so the word signifies.

“Neither will I repent.” 6. Thou hast oft repented thee, when thou hast been upon destroying designs; see Jonah iii. 10; Hos. xi. 8; Ezek. xx. 8, 9, 13, 14, 17, 22; and I hope thou wilt repent thee of what thou art about: if thou dost not repent before my destruction, thou wilt repent after it, that thou hast dealt so by me. This strong hold is here battered down; “Neither will I repent;” what though I have oft repented me of the evil I purposed to bring upon thee and thy children, must I always be upon those terms with thee? No, no, Jerusalem, my repentings have not caused thee to repent, my repenting shall now cease: Jer. xv. 6, “I will stretch out my hand against thee, and destroy thee; I am weary with repenting:” I will neither repent when thou art destroying, nor when thou art destroyed; it will be an ease to me to see thee and thy children consumed.

Repentance sometimes in Scripture is attributed to God, and then it is spoken after the manner of men; and it must warily be understood, so as God may not be wronged in men’s apprehensions thereby. In men’s repentance there is grief, change, something falls out they did not foresee: David repents of murdering Uriah, defiling Bathsheba, because that fell out in it which he did not foresee, as the blaspheming God’s name, and the sword it brought upon his house; hereupon he changed his mind, was affected with grief. These things are not in God; he foresees all events, he grieves not, he changes not: therefore in this sense he cannot be said to “repent.” Theodoret speaks right, when he saith, Repentance in God is a change in his dispensations; if God had not destroyed Jerusalem, he should have been said to “repent.” His repentance is alteration of things and actions, no change of his purpose and will. In human repentance there is the change of the will;

in divine repentance there is the willing of a change, and that in the thing, not in the will or counsel of God, which are unchangeable. Here God would not change the thing, “I will not repent.”

“According to thy ways, and according to thy doings, shall they judge thee.” 7. Jerusalem might yet say, If it be so, that thou wilt not repent, and show mercy unto me, thou wilt show thyself a cruel and merciless God. This imputation is here prevented; “According to thy ways and doings” shalt thou be dealt with: if thy judgments be sharp and dreadful, thou hast deserved them; the equity of my proceedings shall be so conspicuous, that all the world shall clear me, and say, The fault is thine own, that thou sufferest such hard things; thou hast done such wickednesses, lewdnesses, abominations, that God is righteous in consuming of thee, all is suitable to thy “ways.”

These words, “they shall judge thee,” by the Septuagint are rendered in the first person singular, I will judge thee; and so by the Vulgate. By Junius, in the second person, thou shalt be judged. By others, as here, they shall judge thee, that is, the Babylonians. And these several readings or renderings of the word make up but one and the same sense, thou shalt be judged, that is, by the Lord, and the Babylonians, who are his instruments to execute his pleasure: Ezek. xxiii. 24, “I will set judgment before them, and they shall judge thee;” I will make known to them my purpose of utter destroying thee, and they shall do it.

Obs. 1. Great sinners do not believe judgments threatened, but are apt to shift them off, and flatter themselves with hopes of mercy. Jerusalem had great scum, God threatened to consume her and her scum in the fire, but she believed it not, she shifted off all threatenings, she still expected peace and safety. Jerusalem’s prophets had so bewitched and possessed her with thoughts of peace and security from evil coming upon her, Jer. xxiii. 17, that nothing Jeremiah or Ezekiel threatened could be heard; therefore saith God here, “I the Lord have spoken it, it shall come to pass,” &c. Thou thinkest I will not do it, that I will recall my threats, spare thee, and repent: such vain thoughts lodged in Jerusalem, Jer. iv. 14, and such vain speeches were uttered by Judah, “Thou sayest, Because I am innocent, surely his anger shall turn from me,” Jer. ii. 35. Jerusalem and Judah thought, said, they were innocent, and thereupon shifted off all that was threatened, and flattered themselves with hopes of mercy; but they were guilty, yea, more guilty than all the nations and cities round about them, Ezek. v. 5, 6, and had such judgments coming upon them, as never had any the like, ver. 9, 10; which they would not believe, though the Lord himself told them thereof, for, Jer. v. 12, “They belied the Lord, and said, It is not he; neither shall evil come upon us; neither shall we see sword nor famine:” we shall do well enough in this city; and if they should come, we will appear before him with our sacrifices, and we shall be delivered, Jer. vii. 10. Wicked men do flatter themselves, in their own fancies, shifts, evasions they have, till their iniquity be discovered, and judgment surpriseth them, Psal. xxxvi. 2. That wretched art they have of putting off the evil day, of shifting the threats and judgments of God, undoes them: and many precious souls are too well skilled in this wretched art and work of putting off the promises and mercies of God from themselves, which greatly prejudice their peace and comforts, and gratify the enemy of their souls. Those make conscience of their ways, that desire to be purged and wait on God in the use of means; they lie not under these threats, but are under many gracious promises, especially that, Psal. cxlv. 19, "He will fulfil the desire of them that fear him."

Obs. 2. Those who profess themselves God's people, may be such sinners, as that God resolves their destruction, excluding all hope of mercy. Jerusalem, which was the Lord's city, and the people of it his, had so sinned, that God would irrevocably destroy both it and them. "I the Lord have spoken it; it shall come to pass, and I will do it; I will not go back, neither will I spare," &c. God was fully set upon it, and therefore peremptorily cuts off all hope of mercy. Jer. xvi. 5, "I have taken away my peace from this people, saith the Lord, even loving-kindness and mercies." I have gone up and down and gathered up my peace, my kindnesses and mercies, and carried them away from this people; what hope was then left for them? both the great and the small shall die in this land. God's heart was so against them, that Moses and Samuel could not incline it towards them, if they should entreat for them, chap. xv. 1; and therefore saith God, "Cast them out of my sight," I have no pity, no mercy for them. Ezek. ix. 10, "As for me, mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity." If God would not spare them, who would? if he would not have pity on them, who could? they were hopeless, their case was desperate. Chap. v. 8. 11, "Behold, I am against thee: I will not have any pity." Jer. xi. 11, "I will bring evil upon them, which they shall not be able to escape."

Obs. 3. When God cuts off hope of mercy, and brings sinners into a forlorn condition, the fault is in themselves, not in the Lord; it is their own doings, their own ways, which bring irrevocable judgments upon them. "According to thy ways, and according to thy doings, shall they judge thee." Thou hast been irrevocable in thy sins, and I am irrevocable in my judgments: thou hast gone on to commit great iniquities, and I am going on to execute answerable punishments; I could not prevail with thee to desist from sinning, and thou shalt not prevail with me to desist from destroying; thou by thy obstinacy madest me without hope of thy amendment, and now by my threatenings I have made thee hopeless of any mercy. Jerusalem might thank herself, that she was brought to so desperate a condition. Jer. xiii. 22, "If thou say in thine heart, Wherefore come these things upon me? why must I be besieged? why must plague, famine, and sword devour my children? why must I be burnt to ashes, and have no mercy showed me? the answer is, "For the greatness of thine iniquity;" and what that iniquity is, you have specified, chap. xvi. 11, 12; they forsook God, worshipped other gods, walked after the imaginations of their own hearts, and did worse than their own fathers; they sinned till there was no remedy, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16. Jerusalem with her children provoked God, so that his glory, his truth, his name, his prophets, must have suffered if they had been spared; therefore the lions roared upon Israel, yelled, and made his land waste: when his cities were burnt, and without inhabitant, what said God? "Hast thou not procured this unto thyself, in that thou hast forsaken God?" Jer. ii. 15, 17.

Ver. 15—18. Also the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, behold, I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes with a stroke: yet neither shalt thou mourn nor weep, neither shall thy tears run down. Forbear to cry, make no mourning for the dead, bind the tire of thine head upon thee, and put on thy shoes upon thy feet, and cover not thy lips, and eat not the bread of men. So I spake unto the people in the morning: and at even my wife died; and I did in the morning as I was commanded.

The second general part of the chapter begins here, being a prophecy declaring the destruction of the temple and city, represented under the type of the sudden death of Ezekiel's wife. This type is in the words read; the interpretation is in the words following.

The parts of these verses are,

I. The divine authority for this type, and for what is commanded and done thereupon, ver. 15.

II. The narration of the type, ver. 16. "Son of man, behold, I take away from thee the desire," &c.

III. Several commands laid upon the prophet, ver. 16, 17.

IV. The execution of the type, ver. 18.

Ver. 15. "The word of the Lord came unto me." The false prophets ran when they were not sent, and spake when they had no word; but Ezekiel was sent, chap. ii. 3, and he had a word from God when he spake: he durst not be the mouth of God to others, until the Lord had opened his mouth to him; the Spirit of prophecy brought the word to him, and then moved him to utter it to others.

Ver. 16. "Son of man." He saith not, Man of God, or, Son of God, but, Son of Adam, (for so the original is,) that is, son of him who was made of the earth, that had an earthly beginning. Ezekiel, thou art a weak, worthless creature, that ere long must away to the earth from whence thou camest; see thy heart do not swell with the prophetic honour I have put upon thee, the many appearances of my Spirit unto thee, nor be thou refractory, that I put thee upon hard services, or command thee hard things: when thy father Adam disobeyed me, I turned him out of Paradise: obey therefore my voice, and do what I command thee, therein shalt thou show thyself a son of God.

"Behold, I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes." By "desire of thine eyes" is meant, Ezekiel's wife, ver. 18. The Septuagint is, τὰ ἐπιθυμήματα ἐσθλαῶν, the desires of thine eyes. This expression, the desire of the eyes, imports a thing very dear to one; and what is dearer to men than their wives? There are many things to endear a woman to her husband.

1. She was made for man; 1 Cor. xi. 9, "The man was not created for the woman, but the woman for the man." She was made "an help meet" for man, Gen. ii. 18.

2. She is a gift of God, Prov. xix. 14.

3. She is joined to man, by a divine ordinance, and is made one with him thereby, Gen. ii. 24; Matt. xix. 5; 1 Cor. vi. 16; Eph. v. 31.

4. She is "the glory of man," 1 Cor. xi. 7. Man represents God, being his image and glory; and woman represents man, and so is his image and glory.

5. She is "a crown to her husband," a great ornament unto him, Prov. xii. 4.

6. She is the builder of the house; Ruth iv. 11, "Rachel and Leah did build the house of Israel."

7. She is a companion in all conditions, "the wife of thy youth," and the wife of thine age, Prov. v. 18.

8. She is a bosom friend, in whom the heart of her husband may safely trust, Prov. xxxi. 11.

9. She is an heir "of the grace of life," together with her husband, 1 Pet. iii. 7.

These things, besides beauty, amiableness, and sweetness of nature, do endear wives to husbands, and so cause them to eye and mind them the more; for things or persons which are dear to us, our thoughts, our eyes are upon: where love is, there will be the eye. Christ loved his church dearly, and therefore said, Cant. ii. 14, "Let me see thy countenance." The church was black, chap. i. 5, yet the delight of Christ's eyes, because she had inward glory, beauty, excellency; so, many wives, though they be not outwardly so amiable and beautiful as others, yet they may have inward virtues, excellences, and those graces which may make them the desires of husbands' eyes, if gracious themselves. And if such inward attractives be wanting, propriety may do it. Every one affects what is his own; a piece of land, a house, a ship, a child, that is one's own, is more delightful to the owner than what is another's.

Doubtless Ezekiel's wife was amiable, virtuous, gracious, endeared much unto him, upon several grounds, so that she was a delight unto, and the desire of his eyes, else the Lord would not have forbidden him to mourn and weep for her. His love was such to her, that it would have carried him out strongly thereunto, if the Lord had not prohibited it.

"With a stroke." The Hebrew is כּוּסַפָּה which Montanus renders, in percussione, in striking, or, by a stroke; it is from נָקַח which signifies to beat, to smite, yea, to smite unto death. It hath some affinity with the word נָגַח which is, to touch or hurt more lightly; but this notes hurting more vehemently, and is applied in Scripture to God's striking with extraordinary judgments: as Exod. viii. 2, "I will smite all thy borders with frogs;" 1 Sam. iv. 2, "Israel was smitten before the Philistines;" 2 Chron. xiii. 15, "God smote Jeroboam and all Israel;" Exod. xii. 29, "At midnight the Lord smote all the firstborn in the land of Egypt." Hence the nouns נָקַח and כּוּסַפָּה signify, "a stroke," and the heavy strokes of God. Exod. ix. 14, "I will at this time send all my plagues upon thine heart, and upon thy servants, and upon thy people;" the word for "plagues" is the same with that here, the ten plagues of Egypt were ten strokes of God. Sometimes the word is put for that sad stroke of God, viz. the plague: Numb. xvi. 46, הִרְחֵל הַדָּבָר "the plague is begun." Some think the "stroke" here was the plague, but whether that, an apoplexy, imposthume, or palsy, is not set down; this only we have for certain, that it was sudden, whatever it was; she did not lie long with a pining disease, but was suddenly snatched away from Ezekiel.

"Yet neither shalt thou mourn." The Jews were wont to honour their dead with great mourning. When Aaron died, "they mourned for him thirty days," Numb. xx. 29; and so many days they mourned for Moses, Deut. xxxiv. 8. Joseph mourned forty days for the death of his father Jacob in Egypt, and seven days after that in the land of Canaan, Gen. l. 3, 10; and seven days' mourning for the dead was the ordinary practice, as Ecclesiasticus observes, chap. xxii. 12; but Ezekiel is here forbid to mourn at all in a public and solemn manner. The Hebrew word for mourning is, כָּבַד which notes mourning by striking the head or breast, and refers most to funeral pomp.

"Nor weep, neither shall thy tears run down." The word for weeping in Hebrew is, בָּכָה which signifies weeping with lifting up of the voice, as Judg. ii. 4; Job ii. 12, "They lifted up their voice, and wept;" and herein it differs from יָבַח which is to weep also, but silently, without noise. Weeping oft is a great ease to the heart, but Ezekiel must not testify any grief, by voice, tears, or any outward gesture.

Ver. 17. "Forbear to cry." The Hebrew is, Hold thy peace from crying. The Vulgate is, Sigh, holding thy peace, so sigh as none may hear thee. Others allow not so much as sighing, but read the words thus, Let there be no sign of any sigh.

"Make no mourning for the dead." The Jews were wont to bewail their dead: 2 Chron. xxxv. 24, 25, "All Judah and Jerusalem mourned for Josiah; Jeremiah lamented for him, and all the singing men and singing women." Abraham mourned for Sarah, Gen. xxiii. 2. They were wont to cry, "Ah my brother! or, Ah sister!" Jer. xxii. 18; to cut and make themselves bald in their lamentations for their dead, Jer. xvi. 6; which was forbid the priests, Lev. xxi. 5, though they might mourn for their near kindred, ver. 2, 3. But Ezekiel must "make no mourning," he must not put on sackcloth, shave his head, or the corners of his beard, nor cut his flesh at all; he is forbid all funeral pomp and expressions.

"Bind the fire of thine head upon thee." It was in practice among the Jews, sometimes to cover their heads in their mournings, as being unworthy to see the light or any creatures, and sometimes to uncover them, as not being worthy of any ornament, 2 Sam. xv. 32, David and those with him had their heads covered, and went weeping. Lev. x. 6, when Nadab and Abihu were destroyed by fire, and Aaron, with his remaining sons, had great cause to mourn, Moses commands them not to uncover their heads, or rend their clothes, clearly demonstrating that that was their custom in their mournings. They made bare their heads, and laid ashes or earth upon them, as you may see, 1 Sam. iv. 12; Lam. ii. 10. This Ezekiel might not do, he must not throw off his head tire; the word is, פָּאָר pear, which signifies, glory, ornament; whatever the prophet did wear upon his head, he must keep it on, and not lay it aside.

"And put on thy shoes upon thy feet." In their mournings and funerals they went barefoot. 2 Sam. xv. 30, David was barefoot when he went up the ascent of mount Olivet, Antonius Margarita, who of a Jew became christian, and wrote of the rites of the Jews, saith, that the kindred at the death of a friend do tear their garments, eat nothing that day in that house, but abroad; that they eat no flesh, drink no wine, unless it be upon the sabbath; and that they follow the hearse with bare feet. To this agrees what Leo Modena hath lately commended to the world. The nearest kindred of the party deceased, when they are returned to their house, they sit down all together upon the ground without shoes upon their feet. This rite of going barefoot was a token of grief and shame, Isa. xx. 2, 4.

"And cover not thy lips." Another ceremony the Jews used in their mournings, was the covering of their chin, mouth, all under the nose, which is understood by the word "lip." Lev. xiii. 45, the leper was to "put a covering upon his upper lip," that so, his mouth being covered, his breath might not infect any. Or we may by "lip" understand the whole face; and so that in Micah iii. 7 may be taken, "They shall all cover their lips;" the Hebrew is, their upper lip; "for there is no answer of God:" the seers and diviners should be ashamed and confounded, having no vision, from being discovered by him to be false prophets, they should cover their faces; so the Vulgate reads it, they shall all cover their faces.

"And eat not the bread of men." Jerom and the Vulgate have it, the bread of mourners; the Hebrew word אֲנִישֵׁי signifies men, not simply, but woful, sorrowful, miserable man. Enosh, as Pradus observes, is not a word signifying the nature of man, as Adam; nor a word to distinguish the sexes, as Ish; but it sets out the miserable condition of men, whose days are few, and full of sorrow. It was a custom among the Jews at the death and funeral of friends, to send in meats and drinks to those who were chief mourners, to comfort and refresh them.

Jeremiah bears witness to this practice, chap. xvi. 7, 8, "Neither shall men give them the cup of consolation to drink for their father or their mother:" they feasted with them, as the next verse shows, and sought hereby to drive away their sorrows. Not only did the Jews make feasts at the funerals of their dead, but the gentiles also had it much in practice. They had their feasts, called Parentalia, and Silicernia. Sometimes their feasts were ad mortuorum memoriam, for memorials, and honour of the dead; sometimes, ad heredum gratiam, in behalf of their heirs which succeeded them; and mostly, ad amicorum solatium, for the comfort of their friends. Prov. xxxi. 6, 7, they that had heavy hearts, were to have wine given them to drink, that being comforted therewith, they might remember their misery no more. Ezekiel must not mourn, neither drink of any thing that belonged to mourners, nor meddle with any of their rites.

Ver. 18. "So I spake unto the people in the morning." The next morning Ezekiel makes known unto the people what he had received from the Lord, viz. the parable of the boiling pot, the taking away of his wife by a sudden stroke, and how all mourning and funeral rites were prohibited unto him; which the Lord therefore did, that he might provoke the people to make diligent inquiry into the meaning of the thing, being unusual, yea, contrary to custom.

"And at even my wife died." The Hebrew word for "wife" is, אשה signifying both woman and wife, from ish, both man and husband; the woman was of man, and being a wife is for man, for man's help and good, some therefore derive uxor from the Hebrew, אזרח auxilium, help. Others from אזעו, augco, because she increases the family. Here was accomplished what the Lord said, ver. 16.

"I did in the morning as I was commanded." I did forbear all signs of open mourning; I did not weep, sigh, or cry out, I kept my tire upon my head, I walked out with shoes on my feet, with my lip uncovered; I ate not with those that brought the bread of mourners, I drank not with them that brought the cup of consolation.

Obs. 1. Marriage, even in prophets, and men in spiritual functions, is lawful. Ezekiel, a prophet and priest, was in that condition. Jehoiada the high priest was married, and had no meaner person to his wife than a king's daughter, 2 Chron. xxii. 11. Moses was a great prophet, and he had to wife Zipporah, daughter to the prince of Midian, Exod. ii. 16, 21. Isaiah, that evangelical prophet, had his prophetess, which conceived and bare him a son, Isa. viii. 3. Samuel the seer, and man of God, had sons who were judges over Israel, 1 Sam. viii. 1—3. Few of the prophets lived single lives. 2 Kings iv. 1, "There cried a certain woman of the wives of the sons of the prophets," that is, one of the prophets' wives cried "unto Elisha;" which shows that their calling did not exclude them from marriage. God took special care about the priests' marriage, ordering whom they might marry, and whom not, Lev. xxi. 13, 14; Ezek. xliv. 22. Neither was it lawful only for prophets and priests to marry, but for apostles and ministers of the gospel also. Peter himself had a yoke-fellow, Matt. viii. 14. Paul tells you, 1 Cor. ix. 5, that he had "power to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as other apostles, and as the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas;" which evidences, that most of the apostles had their wives, and that Paul had not done ill if he had had is. It is a doctrine therefore of devils, to forbid marriage to any sort of men, 1 Tim. iv. 1, 3, when "marriage is honourable in all" men, Heb. xiii. 4.

Obs. 2. Conjugal affection between man and wife is warrantable and pleasing unto God. Ezekiel's wife was the desire of his eyes, dear and delightful to him, he took pleasure and content in her, as husbands ought to do in their wives. Col. iii. 19, "Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them." God would have no waters of Marah, no bitter passages, to come from husbands against their wives, but altogether and always streams of love; their love to and delight in their wives, should be not only at first, while youth, beauty, and means do last, but all the time they are their wives; no bitter looks, no bitter words, no bitter actions, but their looks, words, carriage, should be full of love and sweetness. God hath therefore not only prohibited bitterness, and commanded love, but given direction for the manner how they should love their wives; Eph. v. 25, "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it." Christ loved the church, notwithstanding all its spots, wrinkles, blemishes, sincerely, spiritually, and strongly; and so should men their wives, notwithstanding all infirmities or deformities, they should love them sincerely, spiritually, strongly; yea, ver. 28, "So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies;" men are great self-lovers, and they should be as great wife-lovers; he that loves not, that takes not complacency in his wife, doth not love nor take delight in himself. God would have men so love their wives, as to honour them whatever objection lies in the way; 1 Pet. iii. 7, though the wife be the weaker vessel, yet she must be honoured, her weakness must not hinder her honouring: a Venice glass is a vessel of more honour in the house than a brass pot. The husband is to honour his wife by making known bosom secrets to her, by taking her counsel and advice, by speaking well of her as his glory and crown, by trusting her, by esteeming of her above others, and by taking her part against all others. If God did not approve of love in husbands producing such effects, he would not have said, "Let her breasts satisfy thee at all times; and be thou ravished always with her love," Prov. v. 19. God would have men abound in their love to their wives; and because they fall short therein, he bids them err in their love, for so is the Hebrew, תשובה תשובה errabis jugiter, thou shalt love thy wife rather too much than too little. And, did husbands consider, besides God's command, and Christ's example, how it would further their prayers, prevent temptations, and honour a married condition, they would love their wives more conscientiously, sincerely, spiritually, and strongly.

Obs. 3. Our nearest and dearest comforts are in the hand of the Lord, to dispose of as he please. "Behold, I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes:" I have let thee enjoy her thus long, I have continued her with thee many days and years, but now I take her away, she shall abide with thee no longer. A prudent wife is from the Lord, given by him, he brought the woman unto Adam, Gen. ii. 22; and as he gives, he takes at his pleasure. He took away Sarah from Abraham, Gen. xxiii.; Elijah from Elisha, 2 Kings ii. 3; and Rachel from Jacob, Gen. xxxv. Wives, husbands, children, friends, are only lent us of the Lord for a season, and when that season is expired, he takes them to himself; we should therefore in all such cases look unto the hand of God.

Obs. 4. That God can, and sometimes doth, suddenly deprive us of our choicest comforts. "I take away the desire of thine eyes with a stroke." There was no antecedent sickness, no visible symptoms of death, but in a moment was Ezekiel's wife snatched away. How suddenly was the fire kindled that consumed Nadab and Abihu! Lev. x. 2, "There went out fire from the Lord and devoured them" presently. Was not Sodom overthrown in a moment? Lam. iv. 6. Did not the Lord strike fourteen thousand and seven hundred with the plague in a moment? Numb. xvi. 45, 49. Were not all the first-born of the Egyptians smitten and destroyed in an hour at midnight? Exod. xii. 29. Was not Sisera in a minute deprived of his breath, and head? Judg. v. 26. God hath a scourge, yea, many scourges, to slay suddenly, Job ix. 23; he hath arrows to shoot, which wound suddenly, Psal. lxiv. 8; there is no foresight, no preventing of them, nor cure of their wound. How unexpectedly was Rachel made childless, Matt. ii. 16, 18, when Herod slew the children! God hath various strokes, and sudden ones, to take away us, and our comforts; by gunpowder, by fire, &c. Man's calamity comes suddenly, and he is broken suddenly, without remedy, Prov. vi. 15. The consideration hereof should cause us,

(1.) To fear the Lord, that can strike such strokes as to deprive us of our chief comforts in a moment: we should sanctify him in our hearts, and make him our fear, that so he may be a sanctuary unto us, to defend us, and not a hammer or sword to strike or destroy us.

(2.) Not to promise long continuance of any creature comforts unto ourselves; use them for the present, but expect not much, nor long continuance of them. 1 Cor. vii. 29, "The time is short; let them that have wives be as if they had none." Isa. ii. 22, "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils."

(3.) To prepare for death. Men put off the evil day, and are snared in an evil time, when the stroke falls suddenly upon them, Eccles. ix. 12. "They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave," Job xxi. 13, which is a sad thing; but if men spent their days in getting grace, labouring to win Christ and be found in him, their end would be happy, though their death be sudden, for "blessed are those that die in the Lord," Rev. xiv. 13. Live every day therefore as your last day.

Obs. 5. Bitter and great afflictions are not always arguments of God's hatred and indignation. Ezekiel was a prophet, a choice servant of the Lord's, yet from him doth God take away the desire of his eyes; which was a very bitter and grievous affliction, if we consider the aggravations which were in it.

(1.) He was now in captivity among Babylonians, where his wife was a sweet companion and comfort unto him, in the midst of all the troubles, reproaches, and difficulties he met with.

(2.) She was taken away, not in the common way of men and women, but by a sudden stroke: such strokes go to the quick, wound deep, and might have sunk our prophet had not the Lord given him a little notice of it.

(3.) That it should be to type out the destruction of the temple and city of Jerusalem: that God should suddenly strike, and take away his wife thereby, to represent the sudden ruin of them, could not but be grievous to him.

(4.) He is forbidden to mourn, weep, or perform any funeral rites for her. Might he have sighed, mourned, wept, that would have eased his heart; might he have used the Jewish rites and customs at her death and burial, that would have testified respect and love unto her; but he might not do either of them.

So then, by these aggravations, you see he had no light affliction upon him, and whatever they were, in them was nothing of divine hatred and indignation. Aaron was "the saint of the Lord," Psal. cvi. 16, and him the Lord gave a bitter cup to drink off; he slew two of his sons at once, both the eldest, Exod. vi. 23, and for offering a little kitchen or strange fire, which was not prohibited, though not commanded, being the first time, and then forbade him and his other sons to mourn for them, Lev. x. 1, 2, 6. Christ was more than a prophet, than a saint, he was a Son, the only begotten, the well-beloved; yet he had a cup given him to drink, which had more gall and wormwood in it than any, yea, than all the cups the prophets and saints had before or since. Afflictions argue not God's hatred; if we say so, we shall condemn the generation of the righteous, and falsify the truth, for it is said, "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten," Rev. iii. 19. Those therefore that have bitter and heavy afflictions, should take heed how they yield unto the persuasions of Satan and corruption, saying, Surely if God loved you he would never deal so by you.

Obs. 6. That mourning for the dead is not unlawful. Ezekiel would have mourned, wept, and used all funeral rites amongst the Jews, not superstitious, if he had not been forbidden by the Lord. He was not stoical, without affection; neither are the people of God now unnatural, they do and may mourn for their dead, so it be neither excessively nor despairingly. David's mourning for Absalom, and Rachel's for her children, were too excessive, and the Thessalonians' too hopeless; 1 Thess. iv. 13, Paul allowed them to sorrow and mourn for their dead, but not as others which had no hope. Christianity doth not abolish, but moderate and direct affections. Christ himself wept for Lazarus when he was dead; his weeping was with moderation and hope. Many forget themselves in this kind, and give so much scope to their passions, that they offend God, shame their professions, and hazard their own health. But we should remember what Solomon commends unto us, Prov. xvi. 32, "Better is he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city;" the bridling our spirits, and keeping our affections, hath a great excellency in it.

Obs. 7. A gracious spirit will deny itself, and obey God in difficult cases, and that speedily too. No sooner had God made good his word, in taking away Ezekiel's wife, but he did what the Lord commanded. Nature prompted him to mourn, to weep for his wife, but he denies the dictates of nature, and is content to seem unnatural for God. His credit and love to his wife called upon him to show respect unto her dead corpse, as others did in that kind, by funeral rites; but he prefers God's command before his credit, love, and respect to his wife, and is willing to bear the censures and reproachings of the people in this case; his wife dies in the night, and next morning he appears in his wonted habit and tire, he sheds no tears, puts off no shoes, covers not his lip, eats not the bread of men or mourners, shows no sign of sorrow, but was in as sweet and settled a posture as if there had been no stroke in his family; he was the same his wife being dead, as he was she being living; her death that was so dear to him, that was so strange and sudden, that was in such a place, made no alteration in him, and upon this ground only, because God had commanded it should be so. Here is a rare example of obedience, and that in a difficult case. Obedience to God is always commendable, but especially when hard things are commanded. The many difficulties Abraham brake through, to sacrifice his son, made his obedience so acceptable, Gen. xxii. Moses' refusing the honours, dignities, treasures, and temptations of Egypt, and Pharaoh's court, his choosing an afflicted condition, and reproached godliness, endeared him and his obedience unto the Lord, Heb. xi. When servants suffer for well-doing, and go on cheerfully in their work, honouring the gospel, this is acceptable with God, 1 Pet. ii. 19.

Ver. 19—24. And the people said unto me, Wilt thou not tell us what these things are to us, that thou doest so? Then I answered them, The word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Speak unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will profane my sanctuary, the excellency of your strength, the desire of your eyes, and that which your soul pitieth; and your sons and your daughters whom ye have left shall fall by the sword. And ye shall do as I have done: ye shall not cover your hips, nor eat the bread of men. And your tires shall be upon your heads, and your shoes upon your feet: ye shall not mourn nor weep; but ye shall pine away for your iniquities, and mourn one toward another. Thus Ezekiel is unto you a sign: according to all that he hath done shall ye do: and when this cometh, ye shall know that I am the Lord God.

Having in the former verses spoken typically and darkly, here he comes to open and interpret what he had said; and we have before us,

I. The occasion of his interpreting these hieroglyphical passages, ver. 19.

11. The interpretation itself, in ver. 21—24.

Ver. 19. "Wilt thou not tell us what these things are?" The people seeing Ezekiel's wife suddenly struck dead, and he not affected with it, which was not only contrary to the Jewish custom, but even to nature itself, they are startled at these things, and set upon the prophet in a heat, and will know what was in these strange things: We know there is some mystery in them, they have relation unto us, and we are unquiet, restless in our spirits, till we know what it is; wilt thou not tell us? Ezekiel, hide it not from us, whatever it be, we must know it. This was the thing God aimed at, in putting Ezekiel upon things unusual and unnatural, to provoke them thereby to consider and make a special inquiry into them. Unwonted things do awaken, breed admiration, and cause examination, men search into the meaning of such things. When Ezekiel sighed to the breaking of his loins, chap. xxi. 7, they said, "Wherefore sighest thou?" When Ezekiel was put upon removing, digging a hole through the wall, and carried his stuff upon his shoulder, as stuff for captivity, God said to him, "Son of man, hath not the house of Israel said to thee, What doest thou?" chap. xii. 9. God expected such strange doings should affect them, and make them consider, ver. 3, and inquire into the matter. Ordinary things are slighted, when extraordinary have answerable operations.

Ver. 21. "Behold, I will profane my sanctuary." By Ezekiel's wife was typed out the temple, and what was desirable; and by her sudden death, the destruction of the same. The temple was as dear to the Jews as Ezekiel's wife was unto him. God would bring the Chaldeans into it, and they should profane it with the blood of those they found in it, (for many fled thither for refuge,) and then set it on fire. The Jews had profaned it with idols and idolatrous worship, Ezek. viii.; by coming into it with the guilt of notorious sins upon them, Jer. vii. 9, 10; and now heathens should enter into it, defile and destroy it; the thought whereof made the Psalmist long before to complain, saying, "O God, the heathen are come into thine inheritance; thy holy temple have they defiled; they have laid Jerusalem on heaps," Psal. lxxix. 1. The defiling the temple was grievous to prescience, to remote apprehensions; what was it then to those who had the present sight of it! The Septuagint reads the words in Ezekiel thus, I will pollute my holy things, that is, I will cause the heathens to come and profane the temple, the altar, and all the holy things belonging thereunto; yea, so to profane them, as to lay them all waste.

"The excellency of your strength." The Hebrew is, the pride of your strength. גאון signifies majesty, excellency, pride; from גא to be lifted up, to excel, to grow proud. The translation Vatablus follows kath it, the glory of your strength. The temple was a strong place, in which the Jews put so much confidence, as that they thought it standing they should for ever be safe; they prided themselves in it, and cried, "The temple of the Lord, The temple of the Lord, The temple of the Lord," Jer. vii. 4. They thought none able to harm them, and destroy that temple.

If we read the words, "the excellency of your strength," as Junius, or, your strong excellency, as Piscator, the sense is, that though they had other strong holds and towers, yet none like unto the temple; that excelled all, not only in strength, but in renown. It was for the structure the wonder of the world, fifteen hundred thousand having been employed seven years in the building thereof, 1 Kings v. 15; it bare the name of the Lord, 1 Kings viii. 29; in it God dwelt, Psal. lxxx. 1; of it he had a special care, 1 Kings ix. 3, and it was "the excellency of Jacob," Amos vi. 8.

"The desire of your eyes." Some understand by these words, their wives, but most interpreters expound them of the temple, which seems to me to be the truest interpretation: for Ezekiel's wife typed out the temple; and as she was the desire of his eyes, so was the temple of the Jews' eyes; and the words of this verse do give countenance and life to this sense. "I will profane my sanctuary, the excellency of your strength, the desire of your eyes." What was the excellency of their strength? it was the desire of their eyes, viz. the sanctuary. By "desire of the eyes" is meant, that which is affected and delighted in, and such was the temple or sanctuary: Psal. xvi. 6, "Strength and beauty are in his sanctuary;" there was material and spiritual beauty; Psal. xxvii. 4, there David desired to dwell all the days of his life, "to behold the beauty of the Lord." The temple was the desire of his eyes; when he was shut out of it, see how he thirsted after it, Psal. lxxiii. 1, 2; so of Jonah when he was in the fish's belly, he looked towards the "holy temple," Jonah ii. 4. It was beautiful in itself, and had the beauty of holiness in it, the beautiful ordinances and worship of God; so that hence Zion was called "the perfection of beauty," Psal. 1. 2, and "the joy of the whole earth," Psal. xlviii. 2. In Lam. i. 7, it is said, "Jerusalem remembered in the days of her affliction and of her miseries all her pleasant things," the Hebrew is, all her desirable things, that "she had in the days of old;" and the temple was one of them, yea, the most desirable of all her desirables.

"And that which your soul pitieth." Machmall naphshechem, that which your souls indulge and favour, viz. the temple, which they dearly affected, and would not by any means that it should be destroyed, or profaned by heathens. The Vulgate hath it, that for which your souls are afraid; men are jealous of that which is dear unto them, lest it should be violated. Isaiah foreseeing by a prophetic eye what would befall the temple, shows how his soul pitied it; Isa. lxiv. 11, "Our holy and our beautiful house, where our fathers praised thee, is burned up with fire; and all our pleasant things are laid waste." The profaning of the temple, which was holy, full of glory and beauty, the place of prayer and praise, went nearer the heart of this great prophet than any thing else. So Jeremiah, Lam. ii. 7, declares what pity he had for the house of the Lord: "The Lord hath cast off his altar, he hath abhorred his sanctuary, he hath given up into the hand of the enemy the walls of her palaces; they have made a noise in the house of the Lord, as in the day of a solemn feast." The temple lay heavy upon Daniel's heart, chap. ix. 17. These words by some are referred to their children, whom their souls pitied, and would have spared, but of them are the words following:

"And your sons and your daughters whom ye have left shall fall by the sword." When the Babylonians should come, profane and destroy the temple, many of their children should suffer and perish, some by famine, some by plague, some by other calamities and casualties; and those that were remaining, he tells them they should fall by the sword. The Lord would take from them, not only the temple, but all things that were dear unto them, their city, their kingdom, their wives, their children.

Ver. 22. "And ye shall do as I have done: ye shall not cover your lips, nor eat the bread of men." You wonder at me that I mourn not for my wife, being taken from me by a sudden stroke, but ere long you will cease to wonder at me, and find the ease to be yours: when the enemies shall come, take away the temple, your wives and children, what things soever are dearest to you, then you will be so confounded and amazed, that you will have neither hearts nor opportunity to change your garments, and accompany your dead to the grave, but rather throw them out into the streets, and shift for your lives. Then you will remember me, make no lamentation for your dead: then you will not pull off your tires from your heads, nor the shoes from your feet, nor cover your lips, nor eat the bread of mourners; then you will use no funeral rites or gestures.

Ver. 23. "But ye shall pine away for your iniquities." The word for "pine away," is from קמק to dissolve and melt away, to consume, corrupt, to be filthy, loathsome; because those things which do corrupt, at last become stinking and unsavoury. So these Jews, their spirits, flesh, fat, and strength, should consume, "pine away," till they became even loathsome, and that "for their iniquities," that is, the punishment of their iniquities, for so the word is frequently used, as Isa. liii. 6; and 2 Kings vii. 9, "Some mischief will come upon us," the Hebrew is, iniquity, that is, mischief or punishment.

"And mourn one toward another." In this verse he had said, "ye shall not mourn nor weep," and here, as with the same breath, he affirms, they should "mourn one toward another." Though the words run so, there is no contradiction in them. Though they could not mourn openly, and in a funeral way, yet they should mourn inwardly, and so as to "pine away" themselves. You here in Babylon, when the report comes of taking the city, of burning the temple, and of the spoiling of all the desirable things in them by Nebuchadnezzar's forces, you will be in such a strait, as that you will not dare to mourn for fear of the Babylonians, who will endanger your liberties and lives, if you lament the successes and doings of their king. So that what with God's judgments upon them at Jerusalem, and the fear of the enemies both there and in Babylon, neither Jews in Jerusalem nor in Babylon should dare to mourn, or express any tokens of sorrow, how full soever their hearts were thereof. But when they were in secret, a man with his brother, (for so is the Hebrew,) then they should open their minds "one toward another, and mourn."

Ver. 24. "Thus Ezekiel is unto you a sign." The Hebrew is, לַמִּצֵּה in portentum, for some prodigious thing. Mopheth, it notes a visible sign presaging good or evil, and so accordingly is pleasing to the sight, or horrible; it is that which is unusual, foreshowing somewhat to come. Ezekiel not mourning for the death of his wife, was a sign to them that they should be in such perplexity as not to mourn for their temple, city, and desirable things, which should be pulled from them by a sudden stroke of God. The Hebrew have מוֹפֵת and מִצֵּה which coming together are rendered, a sign and a wonder, as Isa. xx. 3; that is oth, or "a sign," which is not against nature, as to cure the sick; that is mopheth, or a prodigy, which is against nature, as to raise the dead, and do strange things.

"According to all that he hath done shall ye do." You have beheld Ezekiel's doings, and wondered at them; he hath but preached what ye are to do, and the time is at hand wherein he shall see you acting over the same things.

Obs. 1. The resting in holy things, causes God to remove them, how dear soever they be unto us. "I will profane my sanctuary, the excellency of your strength, the desire of your eyes, and that which your soul pitieth:" you confide in the outward means, you are taken with the outward splendour of the ceremonies and pomp of the temple, but the spiritual true worship ye mind not; the temple, city, and state, are dearer unto you than I am, they have your eyes, your hearts, your souls, when I am neglected. I have honoured you with my sanctuary, and all the holy things in it, belonging to it, but you have not honoured me: why is the temple, and not myself, "the excellency of your strength?" why is that "the desire of your eyes," and not myself, who fill the temple with my glory? why is that the pity of your souls? being troubled that it should be laid in the dust, and not my honour, my glory, my name, which are profaned amongst you, and laid in the dust.

Obs. 2. That sometimes men's sins bring them into such straits, that though they have lost their dearest comforts, yet they dare not outwardly manifest any sorrow for them. God would take away the temple, the excellency of their strength, the desire of their eyes, the pity of their souls, their sons and daughters, and they should not dare to "mourn nor weep" openly, but should secretly "pine away," and come to nothing. It was sad to lose their dearest comforts, and more sad that they might not ease their hearts by tears or sighings, and most sad that they must show no respect to their dead friends by any funeral rites. This sad condition had Jeremiah told them of, chap. xvi. 6, 7, "Both the great and the small shall die in the land: they shall not be buried, neither shall men lament for them, nor cut themselves, nor make themselves bald for them: neither shall men tear themselves for them in mourning, to comfort them for the dead; neither shall men give them the cup of consolation to drink for their father or for their mother:" they should be in such straits, through the fury and violence of their enemies, (whom their sins had brought upon them,) that they should not dare to mourn for their dead, and the great evils upon them.

Obs. 3. God may and doth put his own faithful servants upon hard and unwonted things, thereby to declare what shall be the condition of the wicked. "Thus Ezekiel is unto you a sign:" he hath had his dearest comfort taken away by an extraordinary stroke, he hath not been suffered to mourn or weep therefore; and why so? that he may be a sign unto you: you would not be taught by my doctrine, now you must be taught by my example; "according to all that he hath done shall ye do." The things are harsh and unnatural that I have done, but it is for your sakes that I am put upon them; and ye shall do as I have done. Thus Isaiah was put upon it to walk naked and barefoot three years, which was hard and reproachful; and why? that he might be "for a sign and wonder upon Egypt and Ethiopia," Isa. xx. 3. Some may think God deals ill with his servants, in putting them upon harsh, reproachful, unnatural, ridiculous things; but know, all souls are the Lord's, and he may command them what he please: they have comfort in their obedience, whatever men think or say of them; whereas those they are made signs unto have nothing but bitterness and terrors.

Obs. 4. Signs accomplished, convince men of the truth and just proceedings of God. "When this cometh, ye shall know that I am the Lord God;" by the fulfilling what this sign foretold, ye shall be so convinced as to acknowledge Ezekiel was a true sign, made so by me, and that I have dealt justly with you for your iniquities, in bringing you into such straits, as not to dare to mourn openly for your miseries. If Ezekiel have nothing to object against me, from whom, being innocent, I took away the desire of his eyes, and forbade him to mourn for her; what can you object against me, being so guilty as none more, if I rend away your desirable things, and hem you about so with my judgments and enemies, that you shall not dare to mourn?

Ver. 25—27. Also, thou son of man, shall it not be in the day when I take from them their strength, the joy of their glory, the desire of their eyes, and that whereupon they set their minds, their sons and their daughters, that he that escapeth in that day shall come unto thee, to cause thee to hear it with thine ears? In that day shall thy mouth be opened to him which is escaped, and thou shalt speak, and be no more dumb: and thou shalt be a sign unto them; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

In these words you may perceive,

I. A repetition of the taking away what was dearest to the Jews, ver. 25.

II. The events thereupon: which are,

1. Tidings thereof brought to the prophet, ver. 26.

2. Freedom of prophesying in Ezekiel, ver. 27.

3. Conviction of the people, ver. 27.

Ver. 25. "When I take from them their strength." What in ver. 21 he called "the excellency of their strength," here he calls "their strength," that was, the temple: it was strong, but should not have been their strength; the God of the temple should have been their hope and confidence.

"The joy of their glory." The word for "joy" is, שמחה which is, to have inward delight in the mind, and that without external gesture. The Septuagint is, the lifting up of your glory. The temple was "their glory," and that cheered and lifted up their hearts. Both Junius and Piscator have it, the joy of their ornament. The temple was their ornament, Ezek. vii. 20; nothing did so become and adorn them, as their temple did, and that worship which God appointed to be in it; but they corrupted that worship, stained their glory, and joyed sinfully therein.

"The desire of their eyes." They took pleasure in beholding the temple, which was a stately building, beautified with precious stones, and gold of Parvaim, 2 Chron. iii. 6, 8. The second temple took them much, Matt. xxiv. 1; Luke xxi. 5; yet that was inferior to the first temple. The material temples were very dear unto the Jews.

"And that whereupon they set their minds." In the Hebrew it is, the lifting up of their souls, or minds; that unto which they lift up their soul, so Junius; the Vulgate, that on which their souls do rest: Steph. in Phrasibus Hebraicis, renders the place thus, That their hearts are lifted up unto, or, that which is the burden of their souls, and pressed them most, as the temple, and their children; they were perplexed about the loss of these.

This phrase of setting the mind upon a thing imports,

1. Overprizing of the thing; when the mind is set upon a thing that is valued: every man values what his lust is set upon.

2. Adhering to it. When the mind is set upon a thing, it cleaves to it, and fixes upon it: 1 Sam. ix. 20, "Set not thy mind on them."

3. Taking content and delight in a thing, seeking no further; Col. iii. 2, "Set your affections upon things above."

Ver. 26. "He that escapeth in that day, shall come unto thee to cause," &c. The Lord, in his wise providence, ordered it so, that some three years after this prophecy, there came one who escaped at the delivery up of Jerusalem unto Nebuchadnezzar, and brought tidings that the city was smitten, chap. xxxiii. 21, which was half a year after the smiting of it, if you compare this place in Ezekiel with Jer. lii. 6, and 2 Kings xxv. 3.

"To cause thee to hear it with thine ears." The Hebrew is, to the hearing of the ears; not to tell what he hath heard, as some rabbins would have it, but to tell in the ears of Ezekiel what he had seen, and been an eye-witness thereof. It is not improbable but that they had heard some rumour of it before, it being half a year since the taking of that city, and desolation of all things. This man therefore came to inform Ezekiel of the certainty of all things which had passed.

Ver. 27. "In that day shall thy mouth be opened to him that is escaped, and thou shalt be no more dumb." That Ezekiel was "dumb," and prophesied not at all till the man brought tidings of Jerusalem's destruction, is not the sense of this place; for in the 26th chapter he saith, the word of the Lord came unto him in the eleventh year, in the first day of the month. The meaning then is this; That as to the Jews, he ceased prophesying, and was as a "dumb" man unto them; God gave him not the gift, nor called him to speak any more unto them: they believed not what he had prophesied unto them, but gave ear to false prophets, who seduced them, telling them that they should shortly return, and Jerusalem should not be destroyed; but when the news came to our prophet, that God had fulfilled what he had prophesied against the city and temple, then God put his word into his mouth again, and he spake freely and boldly.

"And thou shalt be a sign unto them." As thou hast oft been "a sign" unto them, sometimes representing an army laying siege against a city, chap. iv.; sometimes a barber shaving the hair, chap. v.; sometimes a man removing his stuff, chap. xii.; sometimes representing a mourner, chap. xxi. 6; sometimes a condition wherein there must not be mourning, as, ver. 16—18 of this chapter; so here he must be a “sign unto them” by his silence. All the time from this chapter to the day that tidings came of the taking and smiting of Jerusalem, he was for “a sign unto them.”

“They shall know that I am the Lord.” Those that are here in Babylon, those that escape the famine, pestilence, sword, “shall know that I am the Lord,” and sent thee to prophesy; “that I am the Lord,” and have made good what thou didst prophesy; “that I am the Lord,” and have punished them justly for their iniquities.

Obs. 1. That our natures are prone to overprize, adhere to, and rest in external privileges and mercies. The temple they doted upon, they made it their strength, their glory, the joy of their glory, the desire of their eyes; they set their minds upon that, and their sons and daughters; these had their thoughts, affections, and hearts, they ran out strongly unto them, their souls were lift up unto them: they looked at their temple as their strength against all enemies, as their joy at home, and their glory abroad: so for their children, they made idols of them, setting them up in their hearts, and their hearts upon them; Hosea ix. 11, their children were “their glory,” they gloried in them, their hearts were set upon them. Because children are parts of their parents, coming out of their loins, because they bear their image, are their hopes, perpetuate their lives, names, and memories, therefore they let out their hearts too far towards them, and set their minds upon them; and not only on these, but on other things also, as riches; Psal. lxxii. 10, “If riches increase, set not your heart upon them;” as they increase, usually men’s affections and desires increase towards them, so that they come to trust in them: Psal. lxxi. 7, he “trusted in the abundance of his riches;” they were his security against all dangers, all enemies. There is scarce any thing we have of any moment, but we are apt to set our minds and hearts thereon; hence we are commanded to keep our hearts “with all diligence,” Prov. iv. 23; the Hebrew is, above all keeping, keep that. The less we set our minds upon the creatures, the longer we are like to enjoy them; the more we set our minds upon them, the sooner they may be pulled away. God will not endure any thing to deprive him of his interest in the heart.

Obs. 2. God hath his times to take away mercies, privileges, idolized, and confided in. “In the day when I take from them their strength, the joy of their glory, the desire of their eyes, and that whereupon they set their minds,” &c. God took away the temple, their children, he had his day for them both. 1 Sam. iv. 3, the Jews trusted in the ark, and idolized that; “Let us fetch the ark of the covenant of the Lord out of Shiloh unto us, that when it cometh among us, it may save us out of the hand of our enemies;” but God had a day quickly after that to deprive them of it: ver. 11, “The ark of God was taken;” the Philistines took it, and slew thirty thousand footmen. Ephraim gloried in his children, but God had his time to pluck them away: Hosea ix. 11, 12, “Their glory shall flee away like a bird, from the birth, and from the womb, and from the conception. Though they bring up their children, yet will I bereave them, and there shall not be a man left:” their priding themselves in their children and increase made the Lord to diminish them, he took his times for that purpose. When Jonah idolized the gourd, the Lord had his day to smite it, Jonah iv. 7. Jacob was over-fond of Joseph, and God had his day to send him far from him, Gen. xxxvii.

Obs. 3. That when God is most angry, executing his severest judgments, then, even then, some are spared, some find mercy. When the Lord should take away the temple, city, their sons and daughters, and make good all the dreadful threatenings given out by Jeremiah and Ezekiel against the Jews, by plague, famine, sword, wild beasts, which was as black and sad a time as ever they saw, even then some escaped: “He that escapeth in that day.” It was hard for any to escape, when such an army of Babylonians, so cruel and bitter, had lain so long round about Jerusalem, watching as lions for the prey; yet some did escape. Jeremiah saith, Lam. ii. 22, “In the day of the Lord’s anger none escaped or remained:” he doth not mean absolutely none, for himself escaped, and divers others; his meaning is, that they were few in comparison of those who suffered. Since the beginning of the world, hath it been heard that God was so severe in any judgment executed upon the sons of men, as to show no tokens of mercy? When he drowned the world, he showed great mercy to Noah and his family; when he consumed Sodom and Gomorrah to ashes, he gave Lot and his daughters their lives for a prey; and when he made Jerusalem here a spectacle of his vengeance, he made an outlet and escape for some. He is a God that “in wrath remembers mercy:” and doubtless, in that great overflowing and drowning made in the Low Countries at this time, as he hath showed much severity, so he hath not forgotten mercy.

Obs. 4. God at his pleasure puts singular honour upon his faithful servants the prophets. He tells Ezekiel that when he shall have accomplished what he had prophesied against Jerusalem, that he should be informed thereof, that he would give some or others their lives for a prey, that they might bring him tidings thereof; and so lift up his head against all his adversaries, who looked upon and counted him a false prophet. Herein was great honour put upon the prophet: “He that escapeth shall come unto thee, to cause thee to hear it,” &c. So God honoured Abraham, in telling him what he was about to do unto Sodom; Gen. xviii. 17, “Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do?” no; he is a prophet, a friend of mine, my faithful servant; and he would not conceal the matter from him. So, Amos iii. 7, “The Lord revealeth his secret to his servants the prophets;” he sends a messenger unto them, even his Holy Spirit, to acquaint them with what he is doing, and with what he hath done: so he sent an angel to Joseph, to tell him that Herod was dead, who sought the life of the young child, Matt. ii. 20.

Obs. 5. God hath his times of shutting and opening the mouths of his prophets. “Thou shalt speak, and be no more dumb:” after this time the prophet was as a dumb man towards the Jews, because they believed not his prophecies, entertained him not as a prophet, but slighted, mocked, and scorned him for those unusual passages of his, which the Lord put him upon: therefore the Lord took him off from being a prophet unto them, he had no more word for them; the false prophets went on still, but the true prophet is silenced. Men’s sins do cause the Lord to stop the mouths of his prophets: their unbelief, unprofitableness, perverse constructions they make of what is said and done by them, their hearkening to lies, errors, and vain visions of false prophets, do discourage them and cause them to be silent. Thus people’s untoward carriage made Jeremiah resolve to be silent, and preach no more in the name of the Lord, Jer. xx. 9. The prophets then had, and the prophets now have, great discouragements, and cause enough to be silent; and God may cause them to be as dumb unto them, removing them into corners, or taking them away: the people's sins rob them of spiritual mercies. Ezek. iii. 26, "I will make thy tongue cleave to the roof of thy mouth, that thou shalt be dumb, and shalt not be to them a reprover; for they are a rebellious house:" their sin deprived them of prophecy, and made the prophet "dumb." Let us look to it, that our sins deprive not us thereof, and make our prophets "dumb;" God may in justice make them "dumb to us," and open their mouths to others. If you would still hear the prophets speaking unto you, let the Lord see you practising what they present unto you in his name, yea, let the Lord hear you praying for them: and then see what is written and promised, Isa. xxx. 19—21; then your teachers shall not be removed into corners, but your eyes shall see them, and your ears shall hear them.

Obs. 6. That prophets, when they are discouraged, silenced, and become signs unto the people, they are to be patient, waiting upon the Lord to make good what they have spoken in his name, and for the opening of their mouths again. Ezekiel was a "sign" unto them, being silenced and discouraged; he was patient, expecting that God should accomplish what he had prophesied, and open his mouth again, which he did: "In that day shall thy mouth be opened to him that is escaped."

CHAPTER XXV.

Ver. 1—7. The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying, Son of man, set thy face against the Ammonites, and prophesy against them; and say unto the Ammonites, Hear the word of the Lord God; Thus saith the Lord God; Because thou saidst, Aha, against my sanctuary, when it was profaned; and against the land of Israel, when it was desolate; and against the house of Judah, when they went into captivity; behold, therefore I will deliver thee to the men of the east for a possession, and they shall set their palaces in thee, and make their dwellings in thee: they shall cut thy fruit, and they shall drink thy milk. And I will make Rabbah a stable for camels, and the Ammonites a couching-place for flocks: and ye shall know that I am the Lord; For thus saith the Lord God, Because thou hast clapped thine hands, and stamped with the feet, and rejoiced in heart with all thy despite against the land of Israel, behold, therefore I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and will deliver thee for a spoil to the heathen; and I will cut thee off from the people, and I will cause thee to perish out of the countries: I will destroy thee; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord.

In this prophecy of Ezekiel are four things chiefly considerable: the first is, The destruction of the Jewish state by the Babylonians; which our prophet having declared in the twenty-one chapters preceding, he comes now to the second general head, which is, threatening of judgment to other nations, for their pride, and insulting over the Jews in their misery; and this he doth in the eight next chapters, from the beginning of this to chap. xxxiii.

In this chapter our prophet denounceth the judgments of God against four of those nations, which were enemies to the Jews; as,

I. The Ammonites.

II. The Moabites.

III. The Edomites.

IV. The Philistines.

In these words read, is a prophecy "against the Ammonites," wherein,

1. Their sins are propounded, ver. 3, 6.

2. Their judgments, ver. 4, 5, 7.

3. The end, why God would bring such judgments upon them, ver. 5, 7.

Ver. 1. "The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying." Being taken off from prophesying against the Jews for the present, he receives commission now to prophesy against the gentiles, who accused the God of the Jews either of weakness, that he could not defend his city and temple, or of malice towards his people, whom, if he could deliver, yet he left to the spoil of enemies. The Lord, therefore, would have them know that he is neither weak, nor malicious, but the great God of heaven and earth, who in justice punished his own people for their sins, and would not spare them, being guilty; and therefore commands Ezekiel now to declare his judgments against them.

Ver. 2. "Set thy face against the Ammonites." In chap. vi. 2, God bids him set his "face towards the mountains of Israel;" chap. xiii. 17, "against the daughters of his people;" in chap. xx. 46, God bid him "set his face towards the south;" chap. iv. 3, he bids him set it against the city; and now, to set it "against the Ammonites." This phrase, to set the face against one, imports a full and fixed resolution of doing a thing. Ezekiel must now resolve to look sourly upon the nations, and prophesy as harsh things against them as he had formerly done against the Jews. Jer. xlv. 11, "I will set my face against you for evil, and to cut off all Judah;" God was resolved not to behold them with a countenance promising mercy, but with a countenance threatening judgment and utter destruction: so Ezekiel must "set his face against the Ammonites;" and prophesy no pleasing things, but sad, bitter, and destructive. The Ammonites had an incestuous beginning; they came from Lot and his younger daughter, who named her son Ben-Ammi, who was the father of the children of Ammon. Gen. xix. 38; they were bitter and bloody enemies to the Jews, 2 Chron. xx. 1; Amos i. 13; 2 Sam. x. 3, 4, 6; their country was strong, well peopled, and full of cities, Numb. xxi. 24; Judg. xi. 33.

Ver. 3. "Say unto the Ammonites, Hear the word of the Lord God." How the Ammonites should hear Ezekiel being in Babylon, and they far off from him, is inquirable. When he had denounced the judgments of God against them, and left this prophecy upon record, by some Babylonians or Jews it might be conveyed unto them. The words, "hear the word of the Lord," import not, that they should hear it at that instant when he prophesied, but that they should in time know what the mind of the Lord was towards them: and doubtless he was commanded thus to say and prophesy, for the Jews' sake, that they, hearing Ezekiel declare and denounce such judgments against the Ammonites, who had insulted over them, might in some measure be comforted thereby.

"Because thou saidst, Aha, against my sanctuary, when it was profaned." When the "sanctuary" was, by the Babylonians, taken and destroyed, the Ammonites, as one man, or one woman, said, "Aha;" they rejoiced at it, and scoffed at the Jews. The Hebrew word for "Aha" is, אַהָּ which is a note of one rejoicing and insulting. Psal. xxxv. 25, it is rendered, "Ah, so would we have it;" and Psal. xl. 15, "Aha, aha;" they rejoiced and insulted in the misery of David. So these Ammonites, that should have grieved at the profaning of the sanctuary, and the holy things thereof, and at the sufferings of God's people, they sported themselves thereat, and said, So would we have it, we are glad to see this day; where now is your God? what are you the better for all your sacrificing and worship? who hath the true religion, you or us? Zeph. ii. 8, they reviled and reproached the people of God, and magnified themselves against their borders, they spake evil of them in the day of their calamity, and added affliction to their affliction. Lam. ii. 16, "All thine enemies have opened their mouth against thee; they hiss and gnash the teeth; they say, We have swallowed her up; this is the day we looked for." The Septuagint for "Aha" is, ye have been glad: the Latin expositors turn it, Euge, Euge: they commended the heathen for what they did against the temple and people of the Lord.

"Against the land of Israel, when it was desolate." The ten tribes long before were led into captivity by Shalmaneser, 2 Kings xvii. 5, 6; and when their land was overrun by the heathens, and they carried away, these Ammonites did show hostile minds, then they cried, "Aha;" and not only then, but also,

"Against the house of Judah, when they went into captivity." The "house of Judah went into captivity" by degrees, some with Jehoiakim, some with Jehoiachin, and the residue with Zedekiah; and still when any of them were carried away captive the Ammonites were glad of it, but especially at the last, when all was laid waste, city, temple, land; when Zedekiah and the people were all led into captivity, then they belched out their sarcasms and bitter taunts.

Ver. 4. "I will deliver thee to the men of the east for a possession." The Hebrew is, to the sons of the east. Whom they were, men's thoughts are various. Vatablus makes them the Medes and Persians: some think them to be the Kedarites, who are called "the men of the east," Jer. xlix. 23; others judge them to be the Arabians, which descended from Abraham by Keturah, and were sent eastward, Gen. xxv. 6: but there is no sound reason why we should not conceive them to be the Babylonians, who were not fully north from them, but north-east. And therefore, as they were called sometimes a wind out of the north, Ezek. i. 4, so at other times, a wind out of the east, or an east wind, chap. xvii. 10; xix. 12; and when Nebuchadnezzar began his military expedition, his eye was upon Rabbath of the Ammonites, as well as Jerusalem of the Jews, Ezek. xxi. 21, 22; he used diversion to take him off from his indifferency between both, which the Lord by his overruling providence ordered so, as, first, to bring him to Jerusalem, and five years after, unto Rabbath, which he took, subduing the whole country, as Josephus relates. And when the Babylonians had spoiled the Ammonites, and left their country desolate, it is affirmed that the Arabians, who were shepherds, came and possessed the same.

"And they shall set their palaces in thee, and make their dwellings in thee." When countries are conquered, the conquerors are careful to keep them in subjection unto them; and therefore place such in them as they may confide in, who build them "palaces," dwelling-places, and strong holds, to secure themselves and the country, and so cut them off from hopes of recovering their liberty. The word for "palaces" is, טירה which is, a castle, or building, having its compass. Palaces, castles, and great houses, are much in compass; or because they are built with squared stones, set equally, and in order: the greater had their "palaces," and the meaner sort their tents, or "dwellings."

"They shall eat thy fruit." Whatever "fruit" thy land bears, they shall have the benefit thereof. Their land was very fruitful, as may appear from 2 Sam. xvii. 27—29; it was near Canaan, the place Lot had chosen, and his children possessed for many years; so pleasant and fruitful, that had not God forbade the Jews to meddle with it, Deut. ii. 19, they would have had it in their possession: now strangers should possess and "eat" the fruit of it.

"They shall drink thy milk." In those eastern and hot countries they were wont to "drink milk." Judg. v. 25, Jael gave Sisera milk to drink. And these Ammonites having much pasture, and many cattle, abounded in "milk," by which great gain came in unto them; whereupon they are called, milk-eaters, by Lavater; milk-drinkers, by Sanctius. Their land flowed with milk and honey, and now their enemies should "eat" the one, and "drink" the other. The Septuagint renders the word חלב milk, fatness; strangers should eat and drink the fat and sweet, they should possess their land and wealth.

Ver. 5. "And I will make Rabbath a stable for camels." Rabbath was the head city of the Ammonites, so called because of its greatness and populousness. There was another Rabbah, or Rabbath, among the Moabites; for distinction's sake, therefore, this was called "Rabbath of the children of Ammon." Deut. iii. 11; it endured a long siege by Joab, 2 Sam. xii.; in after times it was named Philadelphia, by Ptolemaeus Philadelphus. This great city was taken by Nebuchadnezzar, and made "a stable for camels:" it had been a palace for princes, and was called "the royal city, the city of waters," 2 Sam. xii. 26, 27; and it was made a "stable," and that for "camels," which drank the waters thereof. "Camels" are creatures made to carry burdens, they will carry six hundred, seven hundred, yea, ten hundred weight; they kneel down to take their burdens, and being sufficiently loaded, they will admit no more; they cannot endure the cold, they are content with little meat, and will travel four days without water; they, being weary in journeying, are not put on by blows, but by their keepers going before them and singing. The Hebrew word is, גמל, gamal, whence our English word camel. This creature is patient of labour, and repays with advantage his master for keeping.

"And the Ammonites a couching-place for flocks." By a metonymy of the adjunct, Ammonites are put for their country: that should be for a bed of the flock, or resting-place of the sheep and goats; for צאן signifies, a flock of sheep and goats. The cities and towns of the Ammonites should be so wasted, that grass should grow there, cattle feed and lie down there.

"And ye shall know that I am the Lord." Now you blaspheme, saying, I was weak, and could not deliver the Jews out of the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, or malicious, and would not; but you shall know that I am a powerful and just God, who dealt so with them, and you also, for your sins.

Ver. 6. "Because thou hast clapped thine hands." He had mentioned their sin before, ver. 3, and here he sets it out more fully, and that in the several degrees of it. 1. They "clapped their hands:" this gesture, chap. vi. 11, noted grief: here it imports gladness, they clapped their hands for joy that the temple was burnt, and the Jews rooted out of their land. Job xxvii. 23, "Men shall clap their hands at him." When God should destroy the wicked man, then others should rejoice at it, and manifest their joy by clapping of hands; and when God did execute his wrath upon Jerusalem, all that passed by did "clap their hands" at her, Lam. ii. 15.

"And stamped with the feet." This is the second expression of their insulting. This gesture noted grief, chap. vi. 11, but here the contrary. In the Hebrew it is, because thou hast enlarged thyself in foot, that is, stretched out thy foot, and stamped with it. The Septuagint is, hast made a noise with thy feet. Their hands and feet were used in an insulting manner against the Jews in their misery; it is like they skipped and danced for joy, and so made a noise with their feet.

"And rejoiced in heart." Here is a third expression. They were not a little affected, but glad at heart, that Jerusalem was ruined, and the Jews carried away captive: they said, "in heart," Aha! so would we have it. This was as wine unto them, it cheered and enlarged their hearts.

"With all thy despite against the land of Israel." This is a further degree and aggravation of their sin, they insulted, and that with despite: כבול-שאתך in all thy scorn and despite. The word for "despite," is from שאת which is, to thrust a thorn or pointed thing into one to vex. These Ammonites did so contemn, scorn, and despise the Jews in their great sufferings, that they were like thorns and goads in their sides. Avenarius renders the words, in all thy lashing: their scorns and despitings were as so many lashes upon the backs and sides of the Jews; they said, Are these the holy people? is this the holy land? where is your God? why hath he not appeared for you? thus they reproached God's people, "and magnified themselves against their border," Zeph. ii. 8.

Ver. 7. "Behold, therefore I will stretch out my hand upon thee." Thou hast clapped thy hands against me and my people, "therefore I will stretch out my hand upon thee," that is, against thee; it shall be upon thee, to break and destroy thee. I have held in my hand a long time, but now I will stretch it out, and thou shalt feel the power of it. Zeph. i. 4, "I will stretch out mine hand upon Judah, and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and I will cut off the remnant of Baal from this place, and the name of the Chemarims with the priests:" after stretching, followed cutting off: so Ezek. xiv. 9, "I will stretch out my hand upon him, and will destroy him from the midst of my people Israel."

"I will deliver thee for a spoil to the heathen." In the fourth verse it was said, "I will deliver thee to the men of the east," here, "to the heathen." Those men of the east were heathens, whom the Jews hated as uncircumcised, Judg. xv. 18; as dogs, Matt. xv. 25, 26; Christ speaks according to the esteem the Jews had of the gentiles. To them they should be for "a spoil." The word for "spoil" is, לבן which Montanus renders, for meat; but Piscator thinks it put for לבן for a prey, but that is not needful, because the word bag itself signifies meat, a portion; as Dan. i. 5, 8, "the portion of the king's meat," נתבן הבשר God would deliver the Ammonites to be meat unto them, they should feed upon them and what they had, as they had done upon the Jews; they should eat their fruit, and drink their milk.

"And I will cut thee off from the people." Thou art now a nation among others, but I will cause thee to cease from being a nation, either by destroying of thee, or sending thee into captivity, scattering thee amongst the heathens. If thou be a people at all, thou shalt be a people without any head, without a name; thou shalt be removed far from the people thou now borderest upon, and they shall know thee no more, thou and thy name shall both perish: so much the next words import.

"I will cause thee to perish out of the countries:

I will destroy thee." These last phrases do interpret the former. Causing them to perish out of "the countries," is, cutting them off from the people; and, destroying of them, is both. The Hebrew word for "perish" and "destroy" do signify, an utter and total destruction.

Obs. 1. The Lord having contended with his own family, he contends with others. First, he had a controversy with the Jews, and now he enters into controversy with the nations. "Son of man, set thy face against the Ammonites, and prophesy against them." He had formerly set his face against the Jews, and prophesied sad things against them; which being done, he must set his face against others, and prophesy not only dura but durissima, the hardest things against them, even utter destruction. When God's people have drunk of the cup, then it shall be given unto others: Jer. xxv. 15—26, God began with Jerusalem, his own people and family, and then caused the cup of his fury to pass unto all nations and kingdoms. So Isaiah, after he had begun with the Jews, and declared what dreadful judgments God would bring upon them, he turns aside to the nations, and lays the burden of the Lord upon them, and that in nine chapters together, from the beginning of chap. xiii. to the end of chap. xxi. Judgment off begins at God's house, as Amos iii. 2, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities." God would begin with them; Ezek. ix. 6, "Begin at my sanctuary;" but he ends elsewhere: Psal. lxxv. 8, when God's people have drunk the red wine in the cup, the wicked must drink the dregs; the cup passeth from place to place till all be drunk off. Jer. xxv. 29, "Lo, I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished: for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth." Have I begun with mine own city and people, and do you think to go free? no, the sword is commissioned to come unto you; if that have ate the flesh of my sons, and drunk their blood, much more shall it eat your flesh and bones, and drink your blood. If Jerusalem go down, other cities will not stand; if God spare not his own temple, he will not spare Satan's synagogues: when the green trees are cut down that stood in the garden, the dry trees must expect the axe, which stand in the forest.

Obs. 2. That the Lord takes notice what the ways and carriages of nations are towards him and his. "Thou saidst, Aha, against my sanctuary, when it was profaned; and against the land of Israel, when it was desolate." All the secret consultings, plottings, revilings, attempts that are against the worship, ways, and people of God, among heathens, and heathenish spirits, are minded by the Lord: Psal. lxxvi. 7, "His eyes behold the nations," the men of them, their thoughts, words, and ways. When the nations gathered themselves together against Zion, and said, "Let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion," Mic. iv. 11, God then looked upon them, and observed the workings of their hearts, heads, tongues, and hands; yea, their rage and imaginations he animadverts; Psal. ii. 1, "Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?" He observed how insultingly the Babylonians carried it against his people, Jer. i. 11: Psal. cxxxvii. they rejoiced, they laughed, they said, "Sing us one of the songs of Zion;" they, and the rest of Zion's adversaries, mocked at her and her sabbaths. Whatever the nations now do devise, plot, speak, or enterprize against the people of God, he that sits in heaven beholds the same, and laughs them to scorn.

Obs. 3. To laugh at, and insult over, the calamities of others, is a grievous and provoking sin. "Because thou saidst, Aha, against my sanctuary, when it was profaned; and against the land of Israel, when it was desolate; and against the house of Judah, when they went into captivity; behold, therefore I will deliver thee to men of the east for a possession," &c. Because the Ammonites insulted, clapped their hands, stamped with their feet, were heartily glad at the sufferings of the Jews, and vented their spite against them, therefore God was exasperated, so as to threaten the Ammonites' ruin, and utter extirpation. They were the neighbours bordering upon them, they were their confederates, in league with the king of Egypt, as the Jews were; they were their half brethren, descending from Lot; and upon these accounts should have sympathized with the Jews, wept with those that wept, Rom. xii. 15; been sensible of their great adversities, Heb. xiii. 3; but they insulted over them, mocked at them, were spiteful against them, and added coals to the fire, weight to their burdens, and more chains to their bonds. It is not only an uncharitable, but also an inhuman, an unnatural, thing to insult, make sport, and domineer at the miseries of others. When there be wars in a land, fires in cities, shipwrecks at sea, robberies of houses, inundations of waters, and many suffer grievous things by such judgments of God, should we rejoice thereat, mock, and make ourselves merry? Surely, if we do so, we offend, we provoke the Lord. Prov. xvii. 5, "He that is glad at calamities shall not be unpunished;" the Hebrew is, shall not be innocent; God will deal with him as a person deeply guilty: he that makes others' calamities the object of his gladness, stirs up God to be the Author of his destruction. Shimei was glad at the expulsion of David by his son Absalom, yea, mocked at, and cursed him, 2 Sam. xvi. 7, 8; he made David's misery the matter of his mirth; but this kindled such a fire in the breast of the Lord, that it made him return his wickedness upon his head, 1 Kings ii. 44, and cut him off from the land of the living. It is an argument of a malicious heart, of an embittered spirit, to insult over the miseries of others, and mock at their calamities; yea, it is an evidence of a wicked man that doth so; such are Ammonites and Babylonians. Job xxxi. 29, "If I rejoiced at the destruction of him that hated me, or lifted up myself when evil found him." Job professes he did not make the misery of his enemies matter of music, he had a better principle within than to put him on to such a wickedness. So David, though the abjects and base ones rejoiced in his adversity, yet he durst not do so; but when they were sick, he put on sackcloth, he sympathized with them, he humbled his soul with fasting, and prayed for them, Psal. xxxv. 13—15. Of such a spirit was Solomon, who gives wholesome counsel; Prov. xxiv. 17, "Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth, and let not thine heart be glad when he stumbleth:" he that rejoiceth at the misery of his enemy, will be sad at his good; and both are evil. Some, the greater evils befall their enemies, the more they rejoice; if they fall into sin, reproach, or bitter affliction, they are much gladdened at it; but thou that dost so, hast not only stumbled, but art fallen, both into sin, and into the displeasure of God, for ver. 18, is a reason why men should not triumph in the troubles and afflictions of others, lest the Lord see it, and it displease him, and he turn away his wrath from him; thy so doing displeases the Lord, and may cause him to turn away his afflicting hand from thine enemy, and to turn it against thee. In these times this sin is too much in practice, nations and persons rejoicing in the miseries of one another. But we should further consider,

(1.) That if others be under the heavy strokes of God to-day, we may be to-morrow, and therefore should not feast ourselves upon others' calamities. Eccles. ix. 2, "All things come alike to all; there is one event to the righteous and to the wicked:" what befalls thine enemy one day, whom thou thinkest the worst that lives, may befall thee the next day, though thou be the best man that lives; therefore "boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth;" it may bring forth as much woe and evil to thee, as the former day did to thine enemy or neighbour.

(2.) That we deserve as sad things as any others feel. Are not we sinners, and such sinners as make the times perilous? 2 Tim. iii. 1—5, are not we lovers of ourselves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy? &c. If we be so, why should not we fear lest the judgments of God should overtake us, and arrest us, as they have done others. Lam. iii. 22, "It is of the Lord's mercies," saith Jeremiah, "that we are not consumed:" he puts in himself; and it was not single mercy, but mercies, all God's mercies, were at work to keep them alive. We should wonder we are spared, being such sinners as we are, rather than rejoice in the miseries of others, who may be more righteous than ourselves.

(3.) The end of God's laying his hand upon others; it is not that we should rejoice, clap our hands, dance and insult over them that are miserable, but it is to awaken us, and excite us unto repentance. Luke xiii. when God, by his providence, brings sudden and sad strokes upon men, it is that others should consider and repent: the death of the Galileans, and those upon whom the tower of Siloam fell, was for that end; therefore saith Christ, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." The miseries of Scotland, Ireland, by the sword, and of the Netherlands by waters, is not that men should rejoice, but sympathize with them, and repent: if others suffer, and we be spared, that is the goodness of God to us, and his goodness therein should lead us to repentance.

(4.) The rule of Christ is otherwise: Matt. v. 44, "I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you:" we must not rejoice at their miseries, but love them, and manifest our love by blessing them, doing them good, and praying for them.

Obs. 4. For the sins of the people, God lays nations waste, and disposes of them to whom he please. The sins of the Ammonites caused God to cut them off, to destroy them and their name, and to deliver them for a spoil to the heathen, and their country to the men of the east for a possession: Psal. cvii. 33, 34, "He turneth rivers into a wilderness, and the watersprings into dry ground; a fruitful land into barrenness," or saltness, "for the wickedness of them that dwell therein." He is the Governor among the nations, Psal. xxii. 28, and when they do wickedly, he can break them with his rod of iron, cut them off with his battle-axe, and give their countries to whom he pleases. He set Jeremiah over the nations and kingdoms, to root out, pull down, and destroy, Jer. i. 10; which he did in a prophetic way, chap. xxvii. many lands are reckoned up there; and, ver. 6, saith God, "Now have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon." They were wicked, proud, idolatrous, oppressive, and insulted against God's people; and the Lord brake them in pieces, and gave them to the men of the east. God, that made the earth, gives it to whom it seems meet unto him, ver. 5.

Obs. 5. Cities and places which are honourable among men, for their sins, God pours contempt upon, and puts them into base conditions. Rabbath, that was a royal city, he makes "a stable for camels." Isa. xiii. 19—21. "Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. Wild beasts of the desert shall lie there; and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures: owls shall dwell there, and satyrs shall dance there:" for satyrs, the Chaldee saith, dragons; Jerom, devils. So spiritual Babylon, Rev. xviii. 2, "It is fallen, it is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird." Rome, that was so famous, is, or shall be, a base, contemptible place, a dungeon for devils, a prison for foul spirits, a cage for the worst of birds. Have not the palaces of prelates and their cathedrals been made stables for horses in our days, and prisons for malefactors?

Ver. 8—11. Thus saith the Lord God; Because that Moab and Seir do say, Behold, the house of Judah is like unto all the heathen; therefore, behold, I will open the side of Moab from the cities, from his cities which are on his frontiers, the glory of the country, Beth-jeshimoth, Baal-meon, and Kiriathaim, unto the men of the east with the Ammonites, and will give them in possession, that the Ammonites may not be remembered among the nations. And I will execute judgments upon Moab; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

In these verses you have our prophet denouncing judgments against the Moabites. Where comes to be considered,

I. Their sin, ver. 8.

II. The judgments themselves, ver. 9, 10.

III. The end of those judgments, ver. 11.

Ver. 8. "Because that Moab." The Moabites were brethren to the Ammonites, descending from Lot and his eldest daughter, Gen. xix. 37, as the Ammonites did from him and his youngest: they abode not in the ways and worship of the true God long, but fell to idolatry, Judg. x. 8, were bitter enemies unto the Jews. Balak, that hired Balaam to curse them, was king of these Moabites, Numb. xxii. 4; they were men of might, Exod. xv. 15; and had the Jews under eighteen years in the days of Eglon, another of their kings, Judg. iii. 14; whom Ehud slew, and after him ten thousand of the Moabites, all men of valour, ver. 21, 22, 29. They infested the Jews much, and oft were there wars between them and the Jews: see 1 Sam. xiv. 47; 2 Sam. viii. 2; 2 Kings iii. 7; 2 Chron. xx. 10, 11. In their land Moses died and was buried, Deut. xxxiv. 5, 6; from them descended virtuous Ruth, chap. i. 4; of whom also Christ came, Matt. i. 5.

"And Seir." Seir was a part of Edom: Gen. xxxii. 3, "The land of Seir, the country of Edom," or field of Edom. It was a mountainous part of Edom; Gen. xiv. 6, it is called "mount Seir," and that from "Seir" the Horite prince of the country, as Bonfrerius observes, from Gen. xxxvi. 20. The Horites, or Horims, were driven out by Esau, Deut. ii. 22; so that he and his posterity possessed it, having that name before. Esau was "Seir," a hairy rough man, and that place was mountainous and rough where he sat down.

"The house of Judah is like unto all the heathen." The Jews, said they, have stood upon it that their God was the only true God, better and mightier than all the gods of the nations; that they were a people so dear to him that he would defend them and their city, having his temple, his worship, his prophets, Isa. iv. 5; xxxi. 5; but we see their prophets are liars, they are deluded with vain confidences, and their God hath forsaken them; he hath not dealt better by them than our gods have done by us; he hath exposed, yea, delivered them into the hands of their bloody and barbarous enemies: so that Judah is like unto all the heathen, who have not met with worse usage from the Babylonians than the Jews themselves have. Thus Moab blasphemed, and magnified himself against the Lord, deriding Israel, and skipping for joy, Jer. xlviii. 26, 27.

Ver. 9. "I will open the side of Moab from the cities," &c. The word for "side" is, תָּהָר which signifies, a shoulder; and metaphorically, the "side," or strength, of any thing. Here by "side" is meant, the strong cities of Moab, the frontier towns, which were as the shoulders and sides to the country; these God would "open," he would break their ribs and shoulders, and make way into the heart and bowels of their country, Jer. xlviii. 25, "The horn of Moab is cut off, and his arm is broken:" Moab's horns and arms were his frontier towns, castles, and forts, he had to keep out the enemy, but the Lord would break these by the Chaldean, and let him into their land.

"The glory of the country." The Hebrew for "glory" is כְּבוֹד from נָבָה to swell, to be lifted up; because those things, which are our glory and ornament, usually do puff us up, and make us to swell. The cities here mentioned were the glory of the Moabites.

"Beth-jeshimoth." This city was near Jordan, in the plain of Moab, between which and Abel-shittim the Israelites pitched their last tents before they entered into Canaan, Numb. xxxii. 49; it was part of Reuben's inheritance at first, Josh. xiii. 20; and signifies, the house of solitariness.

"Baal-meon." This was another city belonging unto them. It is mentioned Numb. xxxii. 38; 1 Chron. v. 8. The Septuagint renders it, upon the fountain: Eusebius saith, it was a great village, nigh a mountain of hot waters.

"Kiriathaim." It was in the tribe of Reuben, Josh. xiii. 19; formerly possessed with giants, Gen. xiv. 5; rebuilt or beautified by the children of Reuben, Numb. xxxii. 37; and after the ten tribes were carried away, who had driven out the Amorites, the Moabites repossessed it, being formerly expelled thence by the Amorites. The word signifies, meetings, or two cities, because two cities met together in it.

Ver. 10. "Unto the men of the east with the Ammonites," &c. God would make way through Moab's chief cities for the Babylonians, who were "men of the east," that they should come in, and take their country in possession. The Hebrew for, "with the Ammonites," is, against the sons of Ammon. God would so deal with the Moabites as he had done with the Ammonites; "the men of the east" should come and take possession of both their countries.

"That the Ammonites may not be remembered among the nations." God would so spoil and waste the nations of the Moabites and Ammonites, that not only themselves should perish, but the memory of them.

Ver. 11. "And I will execute judgments upon Moab." They think I am a God like the gods of the nations, but they shall find my hand so heavy upon them, be so broken and ruined, that they shall know I am far different from all the gods of the heathen.

Obs. 1. Nations are like one another in sin and wickedness. The Ammonites insulted over, and scoffed at, the Jews in the day of their affliction, and so did Moab and Seir. "The house of Judah is like unto all the heathen;" Moab reproacheth, and Ammon reviles them, Zeph. ii. 8. Jerusalem was "great among the nations, and princess among the provinces," Lam. i. 1; but they all were glad of her ruin, and laughed at her suffering, Lam. ii. 15, 16.

Obs. 2. The world, and men of it, judge untowardly of the Lord and his people. What said Moab and Seir? "Behold, the house of Judah is like unto all the heathen;" their God is as our gods, and his people are as we are, they have no more privilege than others. Heathens have heathenish thoughts of God himself, and those who are his. Isa. xxxvi. 18—20, "Beware, lest Hezekiah persuade you, saying, The Lord will deliver us. Hath any of the gods of the nations delivered his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria? Where are the gods of Hamath and Arphad? where are the gods of Sepharvaim? and have they delivered Samaria out of my hand? Who are they among all the gods of these lands, that have delivered their land out of my hand, that the Lord should deliver Jerusalem out of my hand?" Here you see what the thoughts of Rabshakeh, Sennacherib, and his army were, concerning the God of Israel; that he was nothing differing from the gods of the nations; that he was no more able to deliver Jerusalem out of their hands, than the idol gods were to deliver the nations out of them; that the Jews should presently become like other people. You have it more fully in 2 Chron. xxxiii. 14, "Who was there among all the gods of those nations that my fathers utterly destroyed, that could deliver his people out of mine hand, that your God should be able to deliver out of mine hand?" No god of any nation, against whom my fathers and myself did ever draw the sword, was able to withstand them or me, and so to protect the people. And what! do you Jews think your God greater and wiser, better, more able to do for you? you deceive yourselves; I am come against you, and you must fall into my hands, and become like the nations.

Obs. 3. Heathens' reproaching God and his people, makes way for sad judgments upon them, ushers in certain destruction. Because Moab and Seir said, "the house of Judah is like unto all the heathen," which was a reproaching of God and his people, "Therefore, behold, I will open the side of Moab;" I will break his ribs, his strong holds, and let in a potent enemy to destroy him and his. When men blaspheme the name of God, and are inhuman towards his people, albeit they be heathens, God is so offended at it, that he will severely deal with them. Zeph. ii. 8—10, "I have heard the reproach of Moab, and the revilings of the children of Ammon, &c. Therefore as I live, saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Surely Moab shall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrah, even the breeding of nettles, and salt-pits, and a perpetual desolation: this shall they have for their pride, because they have reproached and magnified themselves against the people of the Lord of hosts." Moab and Ammon were near unto Sodom and Gomorrah, they could not be ignorant of God's dealings with them, and because, in their pride, they reproached God and his people, they should be made like unto them; their judgment should have something extraordinary in it; God's curse should be upon them, they should breed nettles and salt-pits, that is, be fruitless and useless, yea, and that for ever. When Nabash the Ammonite would not make a covenant with the men of Jabesh-gilead, unless he might thrust out their right eyes, and lay it for a reproach upon all Israel, see what the issue was, for intending to reproach God's people, and himself in them: 1 Sam. xi. God stirred up the spirits of Saul and the people, so that they, fighting with the Ammonites, slew them, and scattered them, "so that two of them were not left together," ver. 11. It is ill to have a reproaching desire towards God's people, and far worse to do it. If God do not bring some open judgment upon such, he will secretly consume them. Isa. li. 7, 8, "Fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be ye afraid of their revilings. For the moth shall eat them up like a garment, and the worm shall eat them like wool." Moths and worms are close, hidden things, and do secretly eat into garments and wool, whereby they are altogether marred; so God hath secret and invisible moths and worms, plagues and judgments, to devour those that reproach his people, him, and his ways. If God be severe against heathens doing it, will he spare christians doing such evil?

Obs. 4. When God is wroth with a nation, strong holds and garrisons will not secure and protect them. Moab had frontier towns, and those manned with men of might, but they kept not out the judgments of God; he opened the side of Moab, he brake in upon them, notwithstanding their forts, castles, garrisons, and their great strength. Moab is notable for strong forts and strong men, Jer. xlviii. 17, 18, 25, 41; but how strong soever their cities, their fortifications, their men were, they could not preserve Moab: Isa. xxv. 10, "Moab shall be trodden down under him, even as straw is trodden down for the dunghill;" all Moab's strength was no more unto the Lord than straw. Straw is a weak thing, yea, among the weakest of things, the foot of a child can tread that down; look, then, how easily the foot of a child or man treads down straw, so easily would the foot of God tread down all the strength of Moab. So for Nineveh, the Lord shook down her strong holds as easily as ripe figs are shaken off the fig-tree, Nahum iii. 12. As there is no counsel against the Lord, Prov. xxi. 30, so there is no force or fort can stand out against him: if he give out the command, strong holds are destroyed, Isa. xxiii. 11; if he be angry, they are thrown down, Lam. ii. 2. It is lawful to have strong holds, but sinful and vain to trust in them; that makes what was once profitable to become prejudicial.

Obs. 5. Cities, forts, and strong holds, do adorn and beautify the places where they are. Moab's cities and frontier towns were the glory of the country. Adullam, a city belonging to Judah, Josh. xv. 35, near which was the cave David hid himself in when he fled from Saul, 1 Sam. xxii. 1, is called "the glory of Israel," Micah i. 15. Piscator interprets it of Jerusalem, and makes that "the glory of Israel;" he shall come to Adullam, even to the glory of Israel. Be the words meant of Adullam or Jerusalem, they were the "glory of Israel." Babylon, Isa. xiv. 4, is styled "the golden city;" what an ornament was that unto the province or place where it was! so Tyrus, Isa. xxiii. 8, is named "the crowning city;" it was as great an honour to the country where it was, as a crown to a king's head. In Canaan were "great and goodly cities," Deut. vi. 10; in Midian were cities and goodly castles, Numb. xxxi. 10; and these were the ornaments and glory of those places.

Obs. 6. Strong holds, cities, nations, are the Lord's, and he gives them to whom he will. As he gave the Ammonites', so the Moabites' country unto the men of the east, and that for a possession. Ezek. xxix. 19, "Behold, I will give the land of Egypt unto Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon." What had the Lord to do with Egypt? was it not Pharaoh's? had he any right to dispose of it to another king? Yes, he had more right to it than Pharaoh himself; Jer. x. 7, he is the "King of nations," and may take from one and give to another at his pleasure. He took the kingdom out of Rehoboam's hands and gave it unto Jeroboam, even ten tribes, 1 Kings xi. 35; he took the land of Canaan from others, and gave it unto Abraham and his seed, Gen. xiii. 12—15; afterward he took it from them, and gave it, with the great city thereof, into the hands of the Babylonians, Jer. xxxii. 3; and with it every strong hold, Hab. i. 10; and after seventy years gave it again unto the Jews.

Ver. 12—14. Thus saith the Lord God; Because that Edom hath dealt against the house of Judah by taking vengeance, and hath greatly offended, and revenged himself upon them; therefore thus saith the Lord God; I will also stretch out mine hand upon Edom, and will cut off man and beast from it; and I will make it desolate from Teman; and they of Dedan shall fall by the sword. And I will lay my vengeance upon Edom by the hand of my people Israel: and they shall do in Edom according to mine anger and according to my fury; and they shall know my vengeance, saith the Lord God.

These verses contain a prophecy against the Edomites, who are the third sort of enemies to the Jews mentioned in this chapter. Here likewise, as before, you have,

I. Their sin, ver. 12.

II. Their judgments, ver. 13.

III. The efficient and instrumental causes, ver. 14.

IV. The end of those judgments, ver. 14.

Ver. 12. "Because that Edom hath dealt against the house of Judah." By "Edom" are meant the Edomites or Idumeans, who descended from Esau, who, Gen. xxxvi. 8, 9, is called "Edom," and the "father of the Edomites;" which name he had either from his red skin and hair, Gen. xxv. 25, or rather from his selling his birthright for red pottage; ver. 30. Make me to eat, הוּוּ הָאָדָם הָאָדָם of that red, that red: he was cruel and profane; not unlike unto him were his posterity, the Edomites, who ever bare ill will to the house of Jacob. When the Jews came out of Egypt, Moses sent to the king of Edom to let them have passage through their country, but he refused, and came out in hostile manner against them, though they were his brethren, Numb. xx. 14, 18, 30; it was Doeg, an Edomite, that fell upon the priests, and slew them, 1 Sam. xxii. 19. That the Edomites' unkindness might not lie upon the spirits of the Jews, and beget ill blood in them, the Lord made a law, that they should "not abhor an Edomite," because they were their brethren, Deut. xxiii. 7; he took care that there might be brotherly love between them, but there was very little.

"Edom hath dealt against the house of Judah by taking vengeance." What cause the Edomites had to deal revengefully with the Jews, we must inquire. They being borderers upon the Jews, Josh. xv. 1, and full of enmity against them, did many times vex and prejudice them; whereupon when Saul was king, he fought against them, as being their common enemies with others, 1 Sam. xiv. 47; and David slew all their males, lying upon them six months with his army, 1 Kings xi. 15, 16, and made them tributary, putting garrisons in all parts of their country, 2 Sam. viii. 14. After this, in Jehoram's days, they revolted, and made themselves a king, and hereupon were smitten by Jehoram and his forces, 2 Kings viii. 20, 21; Amaziah also, in his days, slew ten thousand of them, 2 Kings xiv. 7; and other ten thousand did the children of Judah carry away captive, and threw them off the top of a rock, and broke them in pieces, 2 Chron. xxv. 11, 12. These things, together with that ancient grudge they had against them for Jacob's getting the blessing and birthright from Esau, their father, made them splenetic, and to seek revenge; and therefore, when they had any opportunity, they used violence, and shed innocent blood, Joel iii. 19. And when the Babylonians came against the Jews, carried them away captive, the Edomites rejoiced at it, encouraged them against the Jews, and said of Jerusalem, "Raise it, raise it, even to the foundation thereof," Psal. cxxxvii. 7. They were as the Babylonians, Obad. ver. 11, "Thou wast as one of them;" look what spirit was in a Babylonian, the same was in an Edomite; did they speak proudly? so did the Edomites, ver. 12; did they enter the gates of Jerusalem, and lay hands on the prey? so did the Edomites, ver. 13; did they cut off many? so did the Edomites, they cut off those that did escape, and delivered up those that remained in the day of distress, ver. 14; thus they dealt "against the house of Judah by taking vengeance." The Hebrew for "taking vengeance," is, in revenging a revenge; Edom was greedy of revenge, and set upon it; so much the doubling of the word imports.

"And hath greatly offended, and revenged himself upon them." In the Hebrew it is, they offended in offending; that is, they "greatly offended:" עָוָה signifies, to do wickedly, shamefully, and also, to make desolate, Ezek. vi. 6, because abominable sins do bring desolation. Junius renders the words thus, and do make themselves guilty for ever; they so offended, as that there was no pardon, no mercy for them. Piscator, they contracted great guilt; their revenging themselves upon the Jews made them exceeding guilty.

1. The Jews were their brethren, Obad. 10; Amos i. 11.

2. They were their neighbours, Idumea and Judea bordered upon one another, Mark iii. 8.

3. They were confederates with the Jews, Jer. xxvii. 3, an Edomitish ambassador was at Jerusalem, who, together with the ambassadors of the other kings there mentioned, were strengthening themselves with Zedekiah against Nebuchadnezzar; see Obad. 7.

They, therefore, to revenge themselves for former wrongs done them upon the Jews, and that in the day of their calamity, this made their sin exceeding sinful.

Ver. 13. "I will also stretch out mine hand upon Edom." In ver. 7, the Lord had said that he would stretch out his hand upon Ammon; that is, he would severely punish it; so now, also, he would "stretch it out upon Edom," and make it exemplary by his judgments; he would "stretch out his hand," not to help, but to destroy "Edom."

"I will cut off man and beast from it." It was a populous country, and abounded much in cattle, but God would cut them all off; Isa. xxxiv. 6, he would make "a great slaughter in the land of Idumea," his sword should eat the fat, and drink the blood, of lambs, goats, and rams.

"And I will make it desolate from Teman." Teman was a principal city in Idumea; Jer. xlix. 7, "Concerning Edom, thus saith the Lord of hosts; Is wisdom no more in Teman? is counsel perished from the prudent? is their wisdom vanished?" Jerom makes it to be in Edom, and intimates to us that the people of "Teman" were wise, learned, and understanding. The inhabitants hereof were called "Temanites," 1 Chron. i. 45, and so all that dwell thereabouts. In Job you read of "Eliphaz the Temanite," Job xv. 1; xlii. 7, 9; he was of this city, so called from Teman the son of Eliphaz, which Eliphaz was the eldest son of Esau, Gen. xxxvi. 15. Jerom tells us, that the Hebrews call all the south region Theman, and therefore both he and the Septuagint sometimes do render it, the south. From this city, even to Dedan, should all be laid desolate.

"They of Dedan shall fall by the sword." "Dedan" was another city of note in the opposite part of the country to Teman, or a part of Idumea; so called from Dedan that descended from Cush, Gen. x. 6, 7; or that Dedan who was from Jokshan, 1 Chron. i. 32: it was a rich and merchandizing place or city, Ezek. xxvii. 15: the men and merchants of it God threatened to cut off by the sword.

Ver. 14. "And I will lay my vengeance upon Edom." The word for "vengeance" is, נָקָמָה in the Septuagint, ἐκδίκησις, which, in 2 Thess. i. 8, is rendered "vengeance," which is a wrathful retribution of evil, as Leigh saith in his Critica Sacra, or a punishing of sinners unto destruction: it is peculiar to the Lord; see Deut. xxxii. 35; Rom. xii. 19. The meaning here is, that God would punish Edom so as Edom should be destroyed.

"By the hand of my people Israel." The word "hand" is taken by some interpreters for the Babylonians, by whose "hand" and power the Jews were smitten and broken; then God would stir up to be avenged on the Edomites, for their unbrotherly dealings with the Jews. It is true, they were shortly after subdued by the Babylonians, for God had promised to give Edom and other nations unto Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. xxvii. 3, 6: but notwithstanding this were so, that which I find in the prophecy of Obadiah, ver. 18, "The house of Jacob shall be a fire, and the house of Joseph a flame, and the house of Esau for stubble, and they shall kindle in them, and devour them: and there shall not be any remaining of the house of Esau;" this prophecy enforceth me to understand by "hand" here, the "hand" of the Jews, and not of the Babylonians. God would bring back the Jews again from their captivity, and by them plague the Edomites, waste and consume them by their hands, as stubble by a fire; which was done in the time of the Maccabees, 2 Mac. Vide Joseph. l. x. 15-23; there you shall find that 13 Antiq. c. 17. Judas Maccabaeus slew of the Edomites forty thousand. It was prophesied long before, that Edom and Seir should be possessed by the Jews, Numb. xxiv. 18.

"They shall do in Edom according to mine anger and according to my fury." "Mine anger" and "my fury" is great against the Edomites, and whatever thoughts Edomites or Jews have in them, judgments shall be executed upon the one by the other, according to "mine anger," not their anger; according to "my fury," not their fury.

"And they shall know my vengeance." They shall have experience thereof, they shall feel the weight of my "vengeance," and acknowledge it to be very heavy. The Jews had it laid upon them before, and the weight of it brake them in pieces, at which they sported themselves; now by their hand it should be laid upon the Edomites, and they should know and acknowledge that the God of Israel was another kind of God than the gods of the nations.

Obs. 1. That bearing grudges in the mind, and seeking revenge thereupon, doth highly displease the Lord, and put under much guilt. Edom had former unkindnesses in mind, and acted revengefully when opportunity served; by this he contracted great guilt, he greatly offended. Men ought to forgive one another, and not bag up malice in their hearts: Lev. xix. 18, revenge is flatly against the command; ver. 19, it is against the light of nature, which teaches us to do as we would be done unto; it is thrusting God out of his office, and putting ourselves into his place; Heb. x. 30, and these things bring us under dreadful guilt, and make us great offenders. Though revenge be sweet, yet it will be bitterness in the end; therefore let us learn that needful and unpractised lesson, "Owe nothing to any man, but to love one another," Rom. xiii. 8; owe them no hatred, Lev. xix. 18; no grudges, James v. 9; no bitterness, nor evil words, Eph. iv. 31; but owe love, much love, fervent love, constant love, yea fruitful love, one unto another.

Obs. 2. Bitter and malicious practices of brethren against brethren, especially in their misery, cause God to bring in severe and consuming judgments. The Edomites dealt bitterly and maliciously against the house of Judah, and therefore the Lord stretched out his hand upon Edom, cut off man and beast from it, and made it like a wilderness from Teman to Dedan. Their unbrotherly, their enemy-like carriage to the Jews in their distress, was their undoing; see Amos i. 11, 12; and take what Obadiah gives you, ver. 10, "For thy violence against thy brother Jacob shame shall cover thee, and thou shalt be cut off for ever." The papists in Ireland, those Edomites, how bitter, how cruel and bloody, were they against the house of Jacob, all the protestants! and hath not their own doings covered them with shame, and caused them to be cut off for ever? The Edomites in this land, and those in Scotland, how unbrotherly did they deal with us in our low estate! how did they insult over us, speak proudly, and lay their hands upon our substance! and these dealings of theirs have caused the Lord to bring sharp and consumptive judgments upon them.

Obs. 3. When sore judgments and destructive punishments do come upon nations, it is God that doth bring them, whosoever be the executioners of them. In this chapter God takes it off upon himself, "I will lay my vengeance upon Edom;" and ten times before: "I will deliver Ammon, ver. 4; "I will make Rabbath a stable for camels," ver. 5; "I will stretch out mine hand, I will cut thee off, I will cause thee to perish, I will destroy thee," ver. 7; "I will open the side of Moab," ver. 9; "I will execute judgments," ver. 11; "I will stretch out my hand, I will make it desolate," ver. 13; and thrice more in the chapter afterwards. Men are backward to eye God; when judgments come, they will not see his hand: the hands of men they see and feel, and thereupon fret, rage, meditate revenge, disquiet themselves, plot mischief, and attempt changes; but did they see God's hand laying vengeance upon them, they would see also how justly he had done it, even for their sins, and so humble themselves, be quiet, submit, and accept the punishment of their iniquities. God hath laid his vengeance upon nations near us, and farther off; they do not, they will not see the Lord, or his hand, but they shall see, and be ashamed for their envy at his people: whatever vengeance is upon any nation, it is the Lord's vengeance, not man's.

Obs. 4. It is God's method to plague and punish the wrongers by the wronged. The Edomites dealt wretchedly, cruelly, against the house of Judah, they were the wrongers, the oppressors; and what saith God? "I will lay my vengeance upon Edom by the hand of my people Israel;" they were the wronged. The Edomites thought the Jews should never be able to get up again, or trouble them, but God had his time to make them instruments to plague and punish those who had entreated them so ill: Obad. 21, the Lord caused "saviours to come up on mount Zion to judge the mount of Esau;" after the Babylonish captivity, the house of Jacob grew strong, became terrible as fire, and burnt the Edomites as stubble and straw: those they had despised and insulted over, at last they suffered by.

Obs. 5. When God employs men to be instruments of executing his judgments, they are carried forth so far as he pleaseth. "They shall do in Edom according to mine anger and according to my fury:" God had conceived great anger against them, had much fury to let out, therefore they should destroy man and beast, make it desolate from one end or side of the country to the other.

Obs. 6. The vengeance of God is an awakening and distinguishing thing. "They shall know my vengeance;" that I am a God of infinite power, most holy and just, differing from all the gods of the nations.

Ver. 15—17. Thus saith the Lord God; Because the Philistines have dealt by revenge, and have taken vengeance with a despiteful heart, to destroy it for the old hatred; therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will stretch out mine hand upon the Philistines, and I will cut off the Cherethims, and destroy the remnant of the sea coasts. And I will execute great vengeance upon them with furious rebukes; and they shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall lay my vengeance upon them.

These verses are a prophecy against the Philistines: where you may take notice of,

- I. Their sin; they were revengeful, ver. 15.
- II. Their punishment; cutting off, destruction, ver. 16.
- III. The manner of God's punishing them; ver. 17, "with furious rebukes."
- IV. The end of his punishments; ver. 17, "they shall know that I am the Lord."

Ver. 15. "The Philistines." They came out of the joins of Casulim, Mizraim, and Ham, Gen. x. 6, 13, 14. Their country was Palestina, which was west of Judea, and bordering upon the sea; it had five great cities in it, Ashdod, Gaza, Askelon, Gath, and Ekron, 1 Sam. vi. 17, each of which had its lord, Josh. xiii. 3. The Septuagint calls them ἀλλόφρονα, men of another stock, race, nothing allied to the Jews. They owned not the God of Israel, but had other gods, Judg. x. 6. Dagon was a chief god of theirs, Judg. xvi. 23; they had a house of gods, 1 Chron. x. 10; poor and petty gods, that were confined to and comprehended in a house. These Philistines were men of war; they had the Jews under their power eighteen years together, Judg. x. 7, 8; yea, forty years together, Judg. xiii. 1. In Samuel's days, they slew thirty thousand footmen at once, and took the ark of God, 1 Sam. iv. 11; they slew Saul and his three sons in another battle, whereupon they came to possess many cities of the Israelites, 1 Sam. xxxi. They were the greatest enemies the Jews had, and more frequent wars were between them and the Jews than any other.

"Have dealt by revenge." The Hebrew is, for that thou hast had to do in revenge, which is an act of an ulcerous mind, repaying evil for evil. The word נקמה revenge, hath affinity with קם kam, to rise up. The revenger riseth up against him who hath wronged him, be the injury real or in imagination, and satisfieth himself for the same. The Philistines, as they had oft conquered and kept under the Jews, so they had oft been conquered and held under by the Jews. Samson in his days plagued and slew many of them, Judg. xiv. xv. xvi. So in Samuel's and Jonathan's times, they suffered much, 1 Sam. vii. 13, and chap. xiv.; but David, 2 Sam. v. viii. xxi. was the great champion that subdued them. Hezekiah also smote them, 2 Kings xviii. 8; and Uziah brake down the walls of their strong cities, and built cities among the Philistines, 2 Chron. xxvi. 6. These acts of the Jews lodged in their hearts, rankled, begat malicious thoughts in them, and made them from generation to generation to meditate revenge; and having an opportunity, upon the Babylonians coming to besiege Jerusalem, they fell in with them, furnished them with men, ammunition, and what they could, to destroy the Jews.

"And have taken vengeance with a despiteful heart." The words in the original run thus, and have revenged a revenge with contempt in the mind: they contemned and despised them in their hearts, minds, and were glad they had an opportunity to be revenged on them. Piscator reads the words, they did from their heart take vengeance on Jerusalem, by depopulating it: they were very spiteful against them, and used them with the greatest scorn and spitefulness they could. Matt. v. 44, "Pray for them which despitefully use you;" the word for "despitefully use" is, ἐπιτιμάω, from ἄργος, Mars, bellum, war, because where there are despiteful actions, there is a hostile and warlike insulting over others, and seeking their harm, yea, off their ruin.

"To destroy it for the old hatred." Montanus turns the Hebrew thus, to destroy through the enmity of the age; it is like they had great enmity against the Jews at that time; but in the margin he hath it, inimicitias perpetuis, the Philistines had perpetual enmity against them, and upon all occasions manifested it. Œcolampadius, to destroy the eternal hatreds which were between them: the Philistines now made account so to destroy the Jews, as that they should never be troubled or harmed by them more. Our translation is good, which saith, "the old hatred." They hated the Jews from the beginning; Gen. xxvi. 18, the Philistines stopped the wells Abraham had digged, and contended with Isaac when his servants digged new ones; so that he named one Esek, the other Sitnah, that is, Contention and Hatred, ver. 20, 21; and after, the Jews obtaining many victories over them, their hatred increased; and especially for David's slaying their Goliath, 1 Sam. xvii. burning their images, 2 Sam. v. 21, and killing their four giants, 2 Sam. xxi. and making them tributaries. They knew that the Jews and Jerusalem had plagued them many years, and now out of that old hatred they bare to it and them, they would destroy both.

Ver. 16. "I will stretch out mine hand upon the Philistines." Of stretching out the hand, the 7th and 13th verses gave occasion to speak. God had forborne them notwithstanding all their enmity and evil doings against the Jews, but now he would appear and punish them, his hand should bring destruction upon them.

"I will cut off the Cherethims." They were a people dwelling near the sea coast in Palestina, warlike and fierce; they had been subdued by David, and served him, 2 Sam. viii. 18; xv. 18; xx. 7. It is conceived they were David's guard. Some derive their name from כרת excindere, because they were men of might, able to cut off and destroy. Symmachus and Theodotion render the word "Che-rethims," destroyers. Whatever they were, God here threatens their ruin; and so in Zeph. ii. 5, "Woe unto the inhabitants of the sea coast, the nation of the Cherethites!"

"And destroy the remnant of the sea coast." Those that dwelt upon the coast of the Mediterranean sea. In the Hebrew it is, the remnant of the haven of the sea, that is, the Philistines, whose bounds were the sea.

Ver. 17. "And I will execute great vengeance upon them." In the 11th verse the Lord said he would "execute judgments upon Moab;" in the 14th verse, he would "lay vengeance upon Edom;" and here, he "will execute great vengeance upon" the Philistines and Cherethims. The Hebrew is, great vengeance; they are such as do destroy, and are without mercy.

"With furious rebukes." In the Hebrew it is, with rebukes of fury. God would lay aside all mercy and pity, he would not only be angry, but wrathful, hot, fiery. המה which is fury, a calore dicitur; for both יהם and המה from one of which it comes, signify to grow hot; and fury is nothing else but feror ire, the heat and height of anger; and in such a mood would God rebuke them; they should not have verbal rebukes, but real rebukes.

Obs. 1. Enmity once bred between nations, dieth not away, but groweth up, and vents itself upon all occasions. The Philistines took the actions done by the Jews against them so ill, that they hated them, grew in their hatred, and showed their hatefulness of them whenever they had opportunity. In the 15th verse there are several gradations: (1.) They hated the Jews. (2.) Their hatred continued, they would not lay it down, but let it proceed from generation to generation; it was "old hatred," such as had been in their fathers, grandfathers, great grandfathers, and their predecessors many hundred years. (3.) It was not a secret hatred, but such as put them upon "revenge," and brake out in action. (4.) Such as was not content with a few revengeful actions, but carried them on to trade in such actions; they "dealt by revenge," it was their constant practice. (5.) Their heart was in the same, they were given to it, set upon it. (6.) Their hatred was joined with despite, they did insult and domineer over the Jews in their affliction. And, (7.) Their end was the destroying and rooting out of the Jewish nation; they took "vengeance with a despiteful heart, to destroy it for the old hatred." They neighbouring upon the Jews, did oft infest them. In Ahaz's days they invaded the south of Judah, took "Beth-shemesh, and Ajalon, and Gederoth, and Shoho with the villages thereof, and Timnah with the villages thereof, Gimzo also and the villages thereof; and dwelt there," 2 Chron. xxviii. 18. Their hatred to the Jews was implacable and immortal. When enmity began once between Judah and Israel, it lasted from age to age: "There was war between Jeroboam and Rehoboam all their days," 1 Kings xiv. 30; so for Asa and Baasha, there was nothing between them but acts of hatred and hostility, 1 Kings xv. 32.

Obs. 2. Those that hate, oppose, and evil entreat the people of God, he will be revenged on, and that severely. The Philistines dealt despitefully and revengefully with the Jews, and therefore the Lord would cut them off, "execute great vengeance upon them," and that "with furious rebukes." God's people are dear unto him, he that touches them touches the apple of God's eye, Zech. ii. 8: because the Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, dealt injuriously with the Jews, therefore God laid his vengeance upon them, cut them off, and rooted them out. The Egyptians tyrannized over them in their minority, and God drowned them in the bottom of the Red sea for it. Sooner or later God met with and plagued all the nations round about the Jews, who dealt unkindly and despitefully with them. The Babylonians were called of God to punish the Jews for their wickedness, but because they carried it bloodily and insultingly against the people of God, Jer. l. 11, therefore the Lord destroyed Babylon and took "vengeance on her," ver. 15, even "vengeance of his temple," ver. 28. God is now at this time revenging the wrongs of his people, done by antichrist and the antichristian party.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Ver. 1—6. And it came to pass in the eleventh year, in the first day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, because that Tyrus hath said against Jerusalem, Aha, she is broken that was the gates of the people: she is turned unto me: I shall be replenished, now she is laid waste: therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Tyrus, and will cause many nations to come up against thee, as the sea causeth his waves to come up. And they shall destroy the walls of Tyrus, and break down her towers: I will also scrape her dust from her, and make her like the top of a rock. It shall be a place for the spreading of nets in the midst of the sea: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God: and it shall become a spoil to the nations. And her daughters which are in the field shall be slain by the sword; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

EZEKIEL having prophesied against the Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, and Philistines in the former chapter, here he proceeds in prophesying against the Tyrians, foretelling their destruction. In the chapter we have,

I. The time when this prophecy was, ver. 1.

II. The sin of the Tyrians, which caused God here to threaten their destruction, ver. 2.

III. Their destruction, and by whom, with the events thereof, in the rest of the chapter.

IV. The end of God's dealing thus with them, ver. 6.

Ver. 1. "In the eleventh year, the first day of the month." It is evident what year Ezekiel had this prophecy given in, viz. in the eleventh year of Zedekiah's reign, and Jehoiachin's captivity, both run upon the same account; but for the month it is controverted. Some make it to be the fourth month of the said year, nine days before the city was broken up, Jer. lii. 5—7, which is not mentioned hence by the prophet, because it was such a black and sad month unto the Jews: but if this were a sufficient reason, why did Jeremiah mention it? and why is it expressed 2 Kings xxv. 3? Others make it to be the fifth month, which was the first month after Jerusalem was taken. Between the ninth day of the fourth month and the first day of the fifth month, there being twenty days, the tidings of Jerusalem's ruin came to the Tyrians, who thereupon insulted, and said, "she is broken," ver. 2; which was a great affliction to the surviving Jews, oppressed with miseries, and going into captivity, and would be no less to those who were formerly in Babylon, when they should hear of it.

Note hence, That there are remarkable times when God gives in a word to his servants. When Jerusalem was taken, broken up, and burnt, when heathens insulted over the poor Jews, then "the word of the Lord" came to the prophet, then he must prophesy against their enemies, which was some matter of comfort unto them in their great and extreme sufferings.

Ver. 2. "Because that Tyrus hath said against Jerusalem." The first mention of Tyre in holy writ, is Josh. xix. 29, where it is placed within the lot of Asher, and not in the tribe of Naphtali, as Jerom and Ensebius affirm. And though it were given to Asher, yet that tribe never had possession of it. In Hebrew it is called Tzur, or Tzor, (which signifies a strait, a rock,) because it was built upon a rock. The Greeks, who could not well pronounce tzaddi, turned that into tau, whence it was called Tur, and so Tyrus. This city was very ancient; Isaiah tells you the antiquity of it; it was "of ancient days," chap. xxiii. 7. Dionysius Alexandrinus called it, The ancient city. And Pliny Mus. in Josh. xix. calls it, The mother of most ancient cities. It was built above four hundred years before the temple, and more, though Josephus saith it was but two hundred and forty years. It was no part of the land of Canaan, but a strong city, in an island seven hundred paces distant from the continent; Junius saith, about one hundred. Hiram, who loved David, and furnished Solomon with cedars for building the temple, was king thereof, 1 Kings v. It was a famous mart town, first taken by Nebuchadnezzar, and after by Alexander, who made it of an island, a peninsula. Tyrus here is put for the Tyrians.

"Aha, she is broken that was the gates of the people." Here was the sin of the Tyrians, they cried, "Aha," when Jerusalem was taken and ruined by the Babylonians, and so insulted over them in their afflicted estate; they said, "she is broken that was the gates of the people." Jerusalem was a city that had many gates, Jer. xvii. 19; whether twelve or more, it matters not: by these gates which it had on every side people of all parts entered into it; so that the confluence of people to Jerusalem, partly for worship, and partly for trading, was very great; she was "full of people, great among the nations, and princess among the provinces," Lam. i. 1. And therefore, because people of all nations had free ingress into her, and egress out of her gates, she is called "the gates of the people;" by "gates" also is noted strength, power, and so Jerusalem was the "gates of the people." The sense is this, Jerusalem hath had all nations flocking thither, crowding in at her gates, but now her strong gates are broken, she is desolate, no foot shall come thither to worship or trade any more.

"She is turned unto me." Now Tyrus shall be Jerusalem, my gates shall be the gates of the people, all that flocked thither will come unto me; I shall now have the great trading and commerce with nations which Jerusalem had. Tyrus was a rich city, had great trading, Isa. xxiii. 3; yet rejoiced in the ruin of Jerusalem, because her merchandizing and wealth would be increased hereby.

"I shall be replenished." My gates, my streets, my shops, my houses, my harbours, my places for worship, shall be filled all of them, and that as much as ever Jerusalem's were; now the people and wealth of all nations will come flowing in to me, so that my greatness, riches, and glory, will equalize, if not exceed, Jerusalem's.

"Now she is laid waste." The Hebrew is, הַרְבֵּה מִן הַרְבַּח to dry up. Now all her streams and springs are dried, now she is like the channel of a river without water or fish, now the pressing in of people at her gates is ceased, now her merchants fail her, now her wealth, strength, and glory are laid in the dust, now she is dry, desolate, and waste.

Ver. 3. "Behold, I am against thee, O Tyrus." This was sad news for Tyrus; to have God declare himself against her, was more than if all nations had done it. The Hebrew is, I am above thee; thou hast lifted up thyself against Jerusalem, and above other cities, but I am above and against thee; I, that am the great God of heaven and earth, that shake the foundations of the world, that have all nations at my command, behold, I am above thee, I am coming against thee.

"And will cause many nations to come up against thee." Nebuchadnezzar had divers nations and provinces under his command. God would order it so, that he should bring an army made up of those nations against Tyrus: what cruelty and violence was wanting in one nation, should be made up in another.

"As the sea causeth his waves to come up." The waves come up thick when the wind blows, they rise, they roar, they rage, they break the ships in pieces; so when God should breathe out a word of command to the nations, they should come like waves of the sea, raging, threatening, and ruining all. Armies and forces are likened to the sea, great waters, and their waves, which roar and destroy. Jer. l. 42; li. 42. there Cyrus his great army is called a sea roaring, and covering Babylon with her waves.

Ver. 4. "And they shall destroy the walls of Tyrus." Cities and towns of note, especially upon the sea coast, use to be well walled; such was Tyrus, being upon a rock in the sea, it had strong walls; but they should be destroyed, and the towers thereof broken down.

"I will also scrape her dust from her, and make her like the top of a rock." God would so destroy Tyrus, that no monument of her shall remain, there shall not be any piece of a house, tower, or wall, not one stone left upon another; I will raze her foundation, and that dust which comes by so doing I will take away, there shall be nothing visible but "the top of a rock;" such as that place and rock was before Tyrus was built, such should it be again. God would exceedingly, yea, utterly deface that city. The word for "scrape" is from סָחָה sacha, to sweep or pare off dirt from the pavement. Septuagint is, ἀκμῆσω, I will fan her dust from her.

Ver. 5. "It shall be a place for the spreading of nets in the midst of the sea." It shall serve for no other use but the nets of fishermen; when they have done their fishing in the sea, they shall come thither, and spread their nets there for drying and mending; where now are pleasant gardens, orchards, walks, stately palaces and buildings, where none but merchants and men of quality come, even there shall poor fishermen come, and spread their nets.

"For I have spoken it, saith the Lord God." You think this impossible, that a city upon a rock in the sea, strongly built, strongly walled and towered, that hath stood many hundred years, should be brought to nothing, and made as a plain or flat for fishermen to spread their nets on; but "I have spoken it, saith the Lord," and I am a God of truth, and able to make good my word.

"It shall become a spoil to the nations." It hath great store of merchants' goods, of ware, and wealth; it is a rich city, and shall be for a prey to the nations; they shall come, take, and carry away all that is in it.

Ver. 6. "And her daughters which are in the field," &c. Tyrus had many towns and cities upon the land under her command, and these are here called her "daughters in the field:" Solomon gave Hiram, in his days, twenty cities in the land of Galilee, for the gold, cedars, and fir trees he furnished him with, 1 Kings ix. 11; and it is without dispute that he, being king of Tyre, had other towns and cities belonging to him, all which are called "daughters," Tyrus being the metropolis and chief city. Great cities had towns belonging to them, 1 Chron. vii. 28, 29; 2 Chron. xxviii. 18; and these were called "daughters," Jer. xlix. 2, 3; Lam. iii. 51; Ezek. xvi. 46, 48, 49, 53, 55. If we take "daughters" here for the women of Tyre, widows, wives, and maids, who walked out into the fields, Lavater will join issue with us. Understand it of which you will, it is certain both were destroyed by the judgments of God.

Obs. 1. That when God's people are severely dealt with by the Lord for their sins, others do impiously and inhumanly scoff at and insult over them. When Jerusalem was sacked by the Babylonians, the Tyrians cried, "Aha, she is broken!" so the Ammonites, chap. xxv. 3, they had their "Aha" against the sanctuary, and land of Israel: so Ezek. xxxvi. 2, the enemy said, "Aha," against the Jews. Nature teacheth men to sympathize with those who are in misery, not to multiply their miseries by scoffs and mocks; but the nations showed themselves impious and unnatural in dealing so with the Jews. The like may God's people expect now from the world; if they meet with breaking for their sins, the men of the world will say, "Aha," so would we have it; others' mourning is their music, others' tears are their wine.

Obs. 2. That merchandizing cities, through their envy and covetousness, are glad at the ruin of other cities, expecting to enrich themselves thereby. Tyrus was a city of merchants, Isa. xxiii. 11, had great trading, was rich, yet she envied Jerusalem, saying, "she is the gates of the people," she hath the great concourse of all sorts from all nations entering into her, and merchandizing with her; but now "she is broken, she is turned unto me;" all that traded with and enriched her, will come to me, and I shall be replenished: thus she manifested her covetousness, and joy of being enriched by the breaking of Jerusalem. When a city flourishes, and hath great trading, other cities envy them, and if mischief befall them, they are glad, gaping then to be made by their miseries: this is the disposition of merchants and merchandizing places, they look too much at themselves, and so they may gain, it matters not who are losers: let Jerusalem go down, so Tyrus may go up. To rejoice in the ruins of others is wretched, but to rejoice therein that we may be enriched, is accursed. Some are glad when their neighbours' houses are on fire; when they break, they think thereby they shall be made, have the greater trading, be replenished, &c. Let tradesmen and merchants look to it; this was the sin of Tyrus, and did not a little displease the Lord.

Obs. 3. Rejoicing in, and desire to be enriched by, the harms of others, provokes God, so as to bring destruction upon cities and citizens. The Tyrians did so, therefore saith God, "Behold, I am against thee, O Tyrus, and will cause many nations to come up against thee. And they shall destroy thy walls, thy towers, thy daughters, and thou shalt be a spoil unto them." To insult over others in their miseries, and to make a prey of them through covetousness, are dangerous sins; God looks we should pity and help men suffering, by our prayers, counsels, estates; not that we should add to their afflictions, and make their furnace hotter; such doings heat God's fury, and cause it to break out into destruction: upon this account the Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, and Philistines, were destroyed. Let us then not sport ourselves at the sufferings of others, nor expect raising from their ruins. "Covetousness is the root of all evil;" it emptied Tyre of its wealth and citizens, yea, helped on its utter desolation.

Obs. 4. The Lord hath the command of nations, and calls them forth when and to what service he pleases. "I will cause many nations to come up against thee." He is "King of nations," Jer. x. 7; "Governor among the nations," Psal. xxii. 28; and if he call, they come; Isa. v. 26, he will "lift up an ensign to the nations," he will "hiss unto them," and "behold, they shall come with speed;" and let the Lord make known his mind by word or sign, by any acts of his providence, and the nations come presently, and are ready to do what he will, to assault cities, even Jerusalem, Rabbah, Tyre, or Babylon itself: Jer. l. 9, "I will raise and cause to come up against Babylon an assembly of great nations from the north country; and they shall set themselves in array against her." God hath the command of great nations, and can cause them to come out of their countries, and do him service, where he please. Let us then fear this God, who hath such command, and say, "Who would not fear thee, O King of nations? for to thee doth it appertain."

Ver. 7—14. For thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will bring upon Tyrus Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, a king of kings, from the north, with horses, and with chariots, and with horsemen, and companies, and much people. He shall slay with the sword thy daughters in the field: and he shall make a fort against thee, and cast a mound against thee, and lift up the buckler against thee. And he shall set engines of war against thy walls, and with his axes he shall break down thy towers. By reason of the abundance of his horses their dust shall cover thee: thy walls shall shake at the noise of the horsemen, and of the wheels, and of the chariots, when he shall enter into thy gates, as men enter into a city wherein is made a breach. With the hoofs of his horses shall he tread down all thy streets: he shall slay thy people by the sword, and thy strong garrisons shall go down to the ground. And they shall make a spoil of thy riches, and make a prey of thy merchandise: and they shall break down thy walls, and destroy thy pleasant houses: and they shall lay thy stones and thy timber and thy dust in the midst of the water. And I will cause the noise of thy songs to cease; and the sound of thy harps shall be no more heard. And I will make thee like the top of a rock: thou shalt be a place to spread nets upon; thou shalt be built no more: for I the Lord have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

In these verses is set out,

I. What instrument the Lord will use in this great work of destroying Tyre, and that is, Nebuchadrezzar, with his forces, ver. 7.

II. A narration of his doings, ver. 8—12.

III. The events following thereupon, ver. 13, 14.

Ver. 7. "I will bring upon Tyrus Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon." This name, "Nebuchadrezzar," we had not in our prophet before; most often it is written, Nebuchadnezzar, yet it is thirty-one times in Jeremiah and Ezekiel "Nebuchadrezzar."

It is a compound name of Nebo chad and netzar or retzar, which are proper and simple Chaldee names, serving to distinguish the Chaldee king from the Assyrian: Nebo, according to his account, is one, chad, twenty-four, and netzar, seven. Nebuchadnezzar some make to signify, the bewailing of that judgment, which is a pressure;

Nebuchadrezzar, the mourning of the generation of straitening; he was a man that did oppress and straiten the nations much, and made them to mourn. This man was "king of Babylon," and not only so, but "king of kings," that is, either the chiefest of all kings, or one that had many kings under him; he was a universal monarch, Dan. ii. 37, 38; and, as appears by Jer. lii. 32, left many kings under the power of Evil-merodach, who succeeded him.

Ver. 8. "He shall make a fort against thee, and cast a mound against thee." He shall besiege thee, and use all warlike instruments to batter and break thee. This undertaking of Nebuchadrezzar was very difficult. Tyrus was so situated and fortified, that it was thought impregnable, and had not Nebuchadrezzar been a man exceeding resolute and obstinate in his designs, he had fainted in this business, for

Usher's Annals, p. 133. the siege lasted thirteen years, as Junius observes out of Josephus, and he out of Berosus, Philostratus, and other Phœnician writers; Ithobalus then reigning there. Hence Ezekiel, chap. xxix. 18, saith, that "Nebuchadrezzar caused his army to serve a great service against Tyre:" for an army to lie thirteen years before a city on a rock in the sea, was a "great service," which he and his army endured, and went through.

Ver. 9. "He shall set engines of war against thy walls." The Hebrew is, מרי קטלי the blow of his slings, or battering-rams, shall he give against thy walls; the words properly sound thus, the smiting of her adversary. The walls being over-against these engines, they were their adversaries, and them they did smite and batter.

Ver. 10. "By reason of the abundance of his horses their dust shall cover thee." The "horses" employed in the service were so numerous, that they raised great clouds of "dust," which fell upon their habitations, orchards, and gardens, like snow, and covered them.

"Thy walls shall shake at the noise of the horsemen," &c. Such should be the rattling and "noise" of horses and chariots, that the earth, and things founded upon it, should "shake;" or such fear should the inhabitants be stricken withal, that they should apprehend all to be tottering and shaken.

"As men enter into a city wherein is made a breach." Hebrew, according to the entrance of a city which is broken up. When the walls of a city were broken down, there is great shouting, and men enter with great noise, triumphing, and tumult, which makes the earth to ring, and fills all with trembling.

Ver. 11. "Thy strong garrisons shall go down to the ground." The Hebrew for "strong garrisons" is, מזבזת עון the statues of thy strength. Tyrus being upon a rock in the sea, it is probable had many arches and pillars to support it. The Septuagint is, the subsistence or underpropping of thy strength, or, whatever thou hast gotten to bear thee up. Some by mazeboth, statues, lead us to their tutelar gods, Hercules and Apollo, whose statues, saith Pradus, the Tyrians kept bound with chains. The Vulgate hath it, thy noble statues; that is, those statues which were erected for those men who had done great and heroic exploits: their idol gods, their statues, should be thrown down to the earth, and whatever they had considerable in the city.

Rabbi David renders the words, the towers of thy strength, or strong towers, which suits with our translation; "thy strong garrisons," even those wherein the Tyrians did much confide, should be levelled with the ground.

Ver. 12. "They shall make a spoil of thy riches," &c. They should take and carry away all that was profitable and portable; and as for other things, they should break them down, and throw them into the sea; their walls, houses of desire, the stones, timber, and dust of the city, should be thrown into the waters. Such should be the ruin of this strong and famous city, that the dust of it should not remain.

Ver. 13. "I will cause the noise of thy songs to cease," &c. "and the sound of thy harps," &c. The Tyrians, being a rich people, were jovial and merry; Ezek. xxviii. 13, they had their tabrets and pipes, their "harps" and "songs;" they so abounded in mirth and music, that their city was called the "joyous city;" Isa. xxiii. 7, "Is this your joyous city?" they were given to delights and sensuality. God would cause their mirth to cease; Jer. xxv. 10, he would take away the "voice of mirth," the "voice of gladness," &c.: God would turn their mirth into mourning, their "songs" into howlings; they should be for a long season in a darksome and suffering condition.

Ver. 14. "Thou shalt be built no more." These words we must not take simply and absolutely, for then they will contradict Isa. xxiii. 15, 16, where it is foretold, that after seventy years Tyre should be again, and sing. The mind, then, of the words is this, "Thou shalt be built no more" to be the metropolis of a kingdom; or, "Thou shalt be built no more" with that strength and glory thou wast before: or, "Thou shalt be built no more" to enjoy the same name, for that city built afterwards in the same place was called Palatyrus; or, "Thou shalt be built no more," that is, for a long time: the word נָוָה notes a jubilee, or long time.

Obs. 1. Things difficult and impossible in the apprehensions of men, are accomplished by the Lord. Tyrus was a strong city, upon a rock in the sea, had strong walls, towers, garrisons, endured a siege of thirteen years, yet was taken and levelled with the ground, which to men seemed incredible and impossible: therefore let not princes, merchants, citizens, confide in their strong holds, abundance of wealth, or any human foundation.

Obs. 2. The Lord makes places of renown contemptible, and subjects them to vulgar and inconsiderable uses. Tyrus was a famous city, the mart of nations, her merchants were princes, her traffickers the honourable of the earth, Isa. xxiii. 3, 8; and God made her like the top of a rock, a place for fishermen to spread nets upon.

Obs. 3. Wealthy cities are usually given to mirth and sensual delights, which God will make to cease. Tyrus was rich, and she had her songs, music, and sinful delights, which God made in time to cease.

Ver. 15—21. Thus the Lord God to Tyrus; Shall not the isles shake at the sound of thy fall, when the wounded cry, when the slaughter is made in the midst of thee? Then all the princes of the sea shall come down from their thrones, and lay away their robes, and put off their brodered garments: they shall clothe themselves with trembling; they shall sit upon the ground, and shall tremble at every moment, and be astonished at thee. And they shall take up a lamentation for thee, and say to thee, How art thou destroyed, that wast inhabited of seafaring men, the renowned city, which wast strong in the sea, she and her inhabitants, which cause their terror to be on all that haunt it! Now shall the isles tremble in the day of thy fall; yea, the isles that are in the sea shall be troubled at thy departure. For thus saith the Lord God; When I shall make thee a desolate city, like the cities that are not inhabited; when I shall bring up the deep upon thee, and great waters shall cover thee; when I shall bring thee down with them that descend into the pit, with the people of old time, and shall set thee in the low parts of the earth, in places desolate of old, with them that go down to the pit, that thou be not inhabited; and I shall set glory in the land of the living; I will make thee a terror, and thou shalt be no more: though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou never be found again, saith the Lord God.

In these verses the prophet proceeds in laying down events and consequences of Tyrus' destruction, As,

I. The shaking and trembling of the islanders, ver. 15, 16, 18, 21.

II. Their mourning and "lamentation" for Tyrus, ver. 17.

III. Desolateness of the place, ver. 19.

IV. Oblivion; she should be forgotten, ver. 20, 21; so destroyed, as not to be found.

"Shall not the isles shake at the sound of thy fall." They look to thee as impregnable, being fortified by art and nature beyond all other cities and places, but when they shall hear of thy fall, they shall tremble, fearing that ruin will be their portion if the enemy shall besiege and assault them. "Shall not the isles shake?" it is an interrogation, which imports they will shake, and shake greatly.

"When the wounded cry, when the slaughter is made in the midst of thee?" When great cities are taken, oft many are slain, and many are sorely wounded; and when the men in the neighbour islands should hear of their sufferings, cries, and fall of the city, they should be troubled, and stand amazed. The Hebrew for "slaughter" is double, כָּהַרַג כָּהַרַג in slaughtering with a slaughter: the "slaughter" was great.

Ver. 16. "Then all the princes of the sea shall come down from their thrones." Tyrus was upon the Mediterranean sea, and that had many islands. Lavater tells us of eight, viz. Rhodes, Cyprus, Crete, Sicily, Melita, Sardinia, Samos, Chius; and others are mentioned, Acts xxvii. In some of these were princes, and they should bewail the fall of Tyrus: or, these were the principal islands of the sea, and had many principal mariners which sailed from port to port, and were as princes and commanders of that sea; both they, and the governors of the islands, shall be straitened and affected with the condition of Tyre; there was wont to be great trading between them and Tyrus, which now should cease.

"And lay away their robes." The Hebrew for "their robes" is, melechem, מַעֲלָמַת by the Septuagint is rendered sometimes, ποδήρης, a coat, Exod. xxviii. 4; sometimes, ὑποδήρης, Exod. xxxix. 22; sometimes, ἐπιδήρης, 2 Sam. xiii. 18; sometimes, ἄπλοισι, 1 Sam. xv. 27; sometimes, ἑσθῶν, Job ii. 12; sometimes, ἱμάτιον, Job i. 20; sometimes, χιτῶν, Isa. lxi. 10; and here, μῦτρα; however the Septuagint express it by various words, it signifies such a garment as men of quality did wear.

"And put off their broidered garments." In the Hebrew it is, their garments of broidery. רִקְמָה

broidery, was spoken of, Ezek. xvi. 10; these they should "put off;" שָׁטַט which is the word for putting off, notes, a forcible putting off; they should, through anger and grief, pull off their rich coats with a violence, and throw them aside, when the news of Tyrus' ruin came unto them.

"They shall clothe themselves with trembling." They shall be greatly afraid, "trembling" shall take hold of them; they shall tremble and tremble; the word is in the plural number, tremblings, from הָרַד which signifies open and visible "trembling." The downfall and desolation of Tyre, that strong place, should fill them with such astonishment and fear, as they should openly tremble, or be clothed with tremblings, that is, put on such garments as testify grief and fear.

"They shall sit upon the ground." They that sat in the throne a little before, shall sit on the "ground." Sitting on the ground implies, a sad and troubled condition: Job ii. 13, Job and his friends, in the time of their sorrows and trouble, "sat upon the ground:" so Isa. xlvii. 1, Babylon is called to sit on the ground, that is, to a mourning condition, for the judgments which should come upon her: so the evils which came upon Jerusalem made her to "sit upon the ground." Isa. iii. 26, and her elders, Lam. ii. 10.

"And shall tremble every moment." They should have a continual fear upon them, lest Nebuchadrezzar should come, and deal by them as he had done by Tyrus, if that could not resist him; much less could they. The word for "every moment" is, לירִימִן; a "moment" is a little fragment of time, and it may here note the moment past, as thus, they shall tremble for the moment, the sudden surprise and ruin of Tyrus; or the moment to come, they shall tremble from moment to moment, fearing there will be such a moment for them.

"And be astonished at thee." When they shall hear that thy walls and strong garrisons are broken down, that thy pleasant houses, stones, and timber are laid in the water, that thou art made like the top of a rock, they will be "astonished at thee," at thy desolation.

Ver. 17. "And they shall take up a lamentation for thee." When great judgments and changes fell out, many who were concerned therein did not only grieve, but took up "lamentations," and made a formal business thereof: Jer. xxxi. 15, so Rachel lamented for her children; so Ezekiel for the princes of Israel, Ezek. xix. 1, 14; so the kings of the earth for Babylon, Rev. xviii. 9, 10; and so the princes of the sea took up a "lamentation" for Tyrus.

"How art thou destroyed!" How hast thou perished! so is the original. It is a question full of admiration; they wondered that such a strong city, seated in the sea, that had stood so long inviolable, should now be destroyed. It is a question full of lamentation; "How art thou destroyed?" Oh it grieves us at the heart, and troubles our souls, that thou art thrown down, and laid in the water; we cannot believe it was by an ordinary power that thou art destroyed.

"That wast inhabited by seafaring men." Here is one argument which made the princes of the sea to say, "How art thou destroyed?" we wonder at it, we mourn for it, but cannot tell how it should be, seeing thou hadst a multitude of seamen from all parts, who were able to fetch in provisions upon all occasions to relieve thee, and sufficient to have kept out any enemy from entering into thee. The Hebrew here is, יִשְׁבְּתוּ יָמֵינוּ inhabited by the seas, that is, by merchants and mariners, which dwelt in other sea towns, and came thither by the seas, to sojourn and trade.

"The renowned city." This was a second argument which begat astonishment and grief in them for the destruction of Tyre, she was a "renowned city." In Isa. xxiii. she is called the joyous, the crowning, the merchant city, and here, the "renowned city," העיר הנקראת the city most praiseworthy: being a city of merchants, and these princes, and her traffickers "the honourable of the earth," Isa. xxiii. 8, she must needs be "renowned," and of great fame abroad; which made her friends wonder at her ruin, and mourn that she should be a place for fishermen, and spreading of nets.

"Which wast strong in the sea." Tyrus was a city upon a rock in the sea, the waters compassed it about, and made it an island, so that it was hard to come at; the waters, the rock, the walls, were choice protections to it, so that the "princes of the sea" thought it inaccessible, and if attempted, yet impregnable: and this made them to say, "How art thou destroyed?"

"She and her inhabitants, which cause their terror on all that haunt it!" Tyrus was so seated and fortified, that she was dreadful to all that knew her, to all the islands far and near. She was rich in shipping, furnished with all things needful for a naval expedition, and had the command of the seas, which caused "the princes of the sea" to wonder at, and greatly to lament for, her unexpected ruin.

Ver. 18. "Now shall the isles tremble in the day of thy fall." When some great tower or house is blown up by powder, or falls by an earthquake, it shakes all the houses and parts adjacent. So should the fall of Tyre be, it should make all the islands and islanders to "tremble" openly and visibly; for so הָרָר is interpreted by Kirker.

"Yea, the isles that are in the sea shall be troubled at thy departure." The word for "troubled" is from כָּלַל which is, to be stricken with sudden fear and trouble: when they hear of thy departure, or going out, that thou art laid waste and become no city, they shall immediately be "troubled" and perplexed, fearing their own desolations and deaths, or captivities.

Ver. 19. "When I shall make thee a desolate city, like the cities that are not inhabited." A city without people is like a field without cattle, corn, or grass, a very wilderness, solitary and dangerous, by reason of serpents and wild beasts which lurk in it. Cities broken down, and uninhabited, are no better: such would the Lord make Tyrus.

"When I shall bring up the deep upon thee, and great waters shall cover thee." In ver. 3 he had said, he would cause "many nations" to come up against Tyrus, that was, a mighty army of Nebuchadnezzar's, which here he calls תְּהוֹמֹת "the deep," and הַיַּם הַרְבִּיבִים many or "great waters." Great armies are like waters of the sea, which, breaking into countries, cities, and towns, do multiply their calamities, and lay them desolate.

Ver. 20. "When I shall bring thee down with them that descend into the pit." By "pit" is meant the grave: Psal. xxviii. 1, "Like them that go down into the pit:" that is, like them which die, and go down into the grave. בֵּיִר signifies a "pit," a prison, a grave. Tyrus should become like one dead and buried.

"With the people of old time." The Hebrew is, אֶל-עַם-עוֹלָם to the people of old time. God had caused many by the flood, many by the sword, formerly to descend into the grave, and so should the Tyrians. The Vulgate translation is, to the everlasting people, that is, to those that lie from generation to generation in the dust, and must lie there till the day of judgment: to those that "sleep a perpetual sleep," as the phrase is, Jer. li. 57. That place in Lam. iii. 6, "He hath set me in dark places, as they that be dead of old," gives light unto this: those that were dead long ago, lie in the dark, are unseen, unknown, forgotten; and Tyrus, with her people, should be like unto them.

"And shall set thee in the low parts of the earth, in places desolate of old." Thou shalt be made like cities that were ruined long ago, and have no vestiges of them remaining: now thou art high, seen far at sea and land, but thou shalt shortly come down, and be as deep under water and earth as thou art now above them.

"And I shall set glory in the land of the living." "The land of the living" was Canaan, which is frequently so called by David: as, Psal. xxvii. 13; lii. 5; cxvi. 9; cxlii. 5; by Isaiah, chap. xxxviii. 11; liii. 8; by Jeremiah, chap. xi. 19; and by Ezekiel here it was so called, because there "the living God" was known and worshipped, Psal. xlii. 2, with Psal. lxxvi. 1, 2; because there were the living oracles, Acts vii. 38, the living waters, and wells of salvation, Isa. xlii. 3; because there were the living saints, and only there. In other lands, though the people had wealth, honour, greatness, natural excellences, yet as to God they were dead, but in Canaan they were quickened and made alive.

For the setting glory therein, understand it of restoring Canaan, or Judea, unto its former condition. Tyrus, thou judgest Canaan now a land desolate, without temple, cities, people; and thinkest it shall for ever be so, but thy glory shall down, descend into the pit; and "I will set glory in the land of the living" again; Jerusalem shall live, and be glorious, but Tyrus shall die, and be ignominious. By "glory," Piscator understands the people, who, being carried into captivity, the Tyrians and heathens thought should never return; but God would bring them back, being his glory, into that land whereby they should enjoy the lively oracles, drink the living waters, and have the special presence and protection of the living God.

Ver. 21. "I will make thee a terror." The Hebrew is, terrors. Thou shalt be matter of terror to every island near or far off; when they shall hear of thy downfall, it shall terrify them. The word for "terror" may be rendered, consumption, being from בָּלָה to wax old, to consume: I will so consume thee as that thy consumption shall be terrible to all others.

"Thou shalt be no more: though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou never be found again." Thou shalt be so demolished, as that a stone upon a stone shall not be left in thee; thou shalt be brought to a nothingness, how bushy and strong soever thou art now; and when thou shalt be sought, and inquired after, thou shalt not be found by this generation. The Hebrew is thus, thou shalt not be found any more for ever, that is, for a long time, so לְעוֹלָם is oft used; as, Exod. xxi. 6; Psal. lxxxix. 1; Prov. xxix. 14; and so here, for ever, is not absolute, but, for a long time. After seventy years Tyrus was built again, or Palatyrus, near unto that place, but not by the Tyrians, who were either all slain, or carried so away captive, that they perished in their captivity; it was built by strangers.

Obs. 1. God, by his destructive judgments upon strong cities and great states being sinful, makes others to tremble that were secure. "Shall not the isles shake at the sound of thy fall, when the wounded cry, when the slaughter is made in the midst of thee?" God's destroying of Tyrus should awaken and affright all the isles and islanders who were secure, and laughed at the attempt of Nebuchadnezzar against Tyrus; they thought it impossible that ever he should take it, but, being taken and ruined, shaking seized upon them. When the sound of God's judgments come to men's ears, they startle them, and trouble them: Ezek. xxx. 4, "The sword shall come upon Egypt," that is, wars shall lay waste the Egyptians, and "great pain shall be in Ethiopia," their fear shall be such as shall pain and torment them: and, ver. 8, 9, God would set a fire in Egypt, destroy all their helpers, and then messengers should go forth from him in ships, to make the careless Ethiopian afraid. God destroys wicked cities, states, and people, that he may beget fear in others, who were careless. When the Lord drowned the Egyptians in the Red sea, it caused the nations to fear, Exod. xv. 14; when Sihon, king of Heshbon, and Og, king of Bashan, they and their people, were destroyed by Joshua and the Jews, then Balak and the Moabites were sore afraid, Numb. xxii. 2, 3; when God brought destruction upon Babylon, it made all hands faint, all hearts melt, they were as full of fears and pains as a woman in travail, Isa. xlii. 6—8.

Obs. 2. There is that dreadful in the judgments of God, as will drive the greatest out of their thrones and glory, make them tremble continually, put on sackcloth, and lie in the dust. "Then all the princes of the sea," be they never so great, so stout, "shall come down from their thrones, lay away their robes, and put off their brodered garments," &c. When Tyrus her streets were trodden down with the hoofs of Nebuchadnezzar's horses, her people slain, her strong garrisons thrown down to the ground, her riches become a prey to the enemy, her stones, timber, and dust laid in the water, then should fear seize upon these princes: the dreadful apprehended in that judgment of God should make them forget themselves, their glory, and greatness, and to sit upon the ground trembling, and fearing their own destruction from day to day. God's judgments make great changes; those that sat in the morning like princes in their thrones, commanding at sea and land, in a little time sit on the ground trembling. When the Syrians besieged Samaria, and the famine increased amongst them, it made Jehoram the king to fear, and wear sackcloth next his flesh, 2 Kings vi. 30; and did not Ben-hadad, the king of Syria, and all his men of might, fearing the noise of chariots, horses, and a great host, fear, flee for their lives, and throw away their garments? 2 Kings vii. 6, 7, 15. When the hand of God was stretched out for the Israelites, and against the Egyptians, the dukes of Edom were amazed, and the mighty men of Moab trembled, Exod. xv. 15. When Saul beheld the army of the Philistines, "he was afraid, and his heart greatly trembled." 1 Sam. xxviii. 5. When God brought the destroyer of the gentiles, viz. Nebuchadnezzar, to execute his judgments upon Judea and Jerusalem, then did the heart of king and princes perish, then they laid aside their robes, girded themselves with sackcloth, lamented, and howled, Jer. iv. 7—9.

Obs. 3. That great cities have their periods, they abide not for ever. As they have a time to come into the world, so a time to go out of it; as they have a time to get up on high, so a time to descend low. Tyrus had her day to fall, her day of departure, ver. 18; she descended into the pit with the people of old time, ver. 20. Jerusalem, formerly called Jebus, 1 Chron. xi. 4, and Salem, Gen. xiv. 18; as it had its time for building, so its day for burning, Jer. lii. 12, 13. The like end had Jericho, a walled and strong city, Josh. vi. 24. Babylon had its time to begin, Gen. xi. 8, and its time to cease, Isa. xiv. 4. So Damascus stood long, but at last it became a ruinous heap, Isa. xvii. 1. You may read of Nineveh's raising, Gen. x. 11, and of her desolation, Nah. iii. 7; Zeph. ii. 13. Hence we may see the instability of human things. Learn not to trust in strong holds, neither think it any great privilege to be citizens of such perishing cities, but labour to be citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, which is the city prepared of God, and hath foundations which shall never be razed, Heb. i. 10, 16.

Obs. 4. God's people are dear unto him, they are glorious, and the glory of a land. That which is the glory of any is dear unto them: God's people are his glory, Isa. iv. 5; Zech. ii. 8; in both those places God's people are called his "glory." They bear his image, 2 Cor. iii. 18; they show forth his praises, 1 Peter ii. 9; they worship him in the spirit, Phil. iii. 3: they are formed for himself, Isa. xliiii. 21; they are his vineyard, his pleasant plant, Isa. v. 1, 7; his jewels, Mal. iii. 17; his peculiar treasure, Exod. xix. 5; his pleasant portion, Jer. xii. 10; his spouse, Ezek. xvi. 8; they are near unto God, Psal. cxlviii. 14; anointed ones, Psal. cv. 15; trees of righteousness, Isa. lxi. 3; a congregation of saints, Psal. lxxxix. 5. They have the law of God in their hearts and keep the same, Isa. li. 7, so that they are dear unto him, and his glory; and not only so, but the glory of a land. Joseph and the Jews were the glory of Egypt; Dan. vii. they were the glory of Babylon; and the godly ones were the glory of Zion, Isa. vi. 13, "The holy seed shall be the substance thereof." Saints, a "holy seed," is the substance and glory of any nation. Let men take heed how they wrong them, for in so doing they wrong the glory of God, and the glory of the land.

Obs. 5. There is a difference of lands in the world, all are not alike. There is "the land of the living." Canaan differed from all other lands; there dwelt the living God, there were the living waters, the ordinances and means of grace and salvation, which other lands had not. That land once flowed with spiritual milk and honey, and was the "glory of all lands," chap. xx. 6: Egypt, Chaldea, and the other lands round about, were as dry and dead lands unto that; they had gods in them, but they were idol gods; they had worship, but it was false worship; they had waters, but they were bitter waters, such as God's people could not drink, they killed those that drank of them. Where God's name is recorded, his ordinances set up in purity and power, he worshipped in spirit and truth, there is life, and "the land of the living." David judged himself even among the dead, when he was shut out from the people, presence, worship, and ordinances of God; Psal. lxxxiv. 2, his soul fainted, and he was almost gone. Most lands are lauds of darkness, dryness, and death, they have neither the light nor waters of life in them. Let us bless God that we are in the land of the living.

Obs. 6. God's people may be deprived of their privileges and comforts for a season, but he will in due time restore them to the enjoyment of the same. "I shall set glory in the land of the living." God's glory, his people, were in Babylon, but he would not lose nor leave his glory there, he brought them back again, and "set them in the land of the living," he gave them another temple, all those ordinances and privileges they had before: Isa. xli. 13, "I will place salvation in Zion for Israel my glory."

CHAPTER XXVII.

Ver. 1—6. The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying, Now, thou son of man, take up a lamentation for Tyrus; and say unto Tyrus, O thou that art situate at the entry of the sea, which art a merchant of the people for many isles, Thus saith the Lord God; O Tyrus, thou hast said, I am of perfect beauty. Thy borders are in the midst of the seas, thy builders have perfected thy beauty. They have made all thy ship boards of fir trees of Senir: they have taken cedars from Lebanon to make masts for thee. Of the oaks of Bashan have they made thine oars; the company of the Ashurites have made thy benches of ivory, brought out of the isles of Chittim.

In this chapter the prophet is commanded to take up a "lamentation for Tyrus;" wherein is set out,

I. The dignity, glory, and excellency of Tyrus, ver. 2-25.

II. The irrecoverable fall and destruction thereof, ver. 26, to the end.

Ver. 1. "The word of the Lord came again unto me." The Hebrew is, and there hath been the word of Jehovah to me, the word of him who is being, hath had being, in me. God is essence, or being unchangeable, and such is his "word," which shows the certainty of the "word." He had twice before received the "word" to prophesy against the nations, and now again he is put on by the same, God commissioning him thereunto.

Ver. 2. "Take up a lamentation for Tyrus." The word אָרַם to take up, signifies, to take up that which is heavy, burdensome, and lamentations are such things; the Lord would have the prophet sensible of the great misery coming upon Tyrus, and to bewail the same. Jeremiah bewailed the condition of Jerusalem when destruction was coming upon it, Jer. iv. 19; ix. i. God would not have prophets give out judgments and threatenings with bitter spirits, not when they are against heathens, Tyrians; he would have his servants to compassionate others.

Ver. 3. "Say unto Tyrus, O thou that art situate at the entry of the sea." Here he begins to set out the dignity of "Tyrus;" which first he doth, from her situation, she was seated at the "entry of the sea;" she was not only upon a rock, and so eminent for sight, but by the "sea," yea, "the entry of the sea," and so was commodious for trading. The Hebrew for "entry" is, בְּנֵי־יָם entries, or ports, from בָּא to come in; Tyrus was famous for ports, so that ships might come in, and ride there safely, and go out again at pleasure. It was in an island, and islands have many ports, or harbours.

"Which art a merchant of the people for many isles." Tyrus did merchandize with the isles far and near, she did send out to them, and they brought in to her, what commodities were merchantable. She was a merchant city, Isa. xxiii. 8; the merchants of Zidon traded with her, ver. 2. The Hebrew is, to many isles: the people prepared many vendible commodities, which the isles took off their hands, so that hereby her wealth was greatly increased, and her merchants like princes, Isa. xxiii. 8; and this was another dignity of Tyrus.

"Thou hast said, I am of perfect beauty." כִּלְיָת of universal beauty; I am so built that I want nothing to add unto my beauty, it is "perfect." What God said of Zion, Psal. l. 2, that she "was the perfection of beauty," the same said Tyrus of herself, which was her sin. That she was neatly and strongly built was her glory, but that she was proud hereof was her sin and shame; for who can say, "I am of perfect beauty," but the Lord?

Ver. 4. "Thy borders are in the midst of the seas." Some cities border upon hills, valleys, woods, others; but Tyrus had no such "borders," her "borders" were in the midst, or, as the Hebrew is, in the heart of the seas. None could come to her by land, being half a mile, or seven hundred paces, from the continent; but Alexander, in his time, made a passage into Tyrus, by filling up the sea. This was the glory of Tyrus, that she was compassed about with the seas, and sat as a virgin city, and queen regent in the deeps.

"Thy builders have perfected thy beauty." Who were the "builders" of Tyrus we find not in Scripture, but Adrichomius, following Berosus and the traditions of the ancients, tells us, that one Tyrus, the seventh of Japheth's sons, built it a little after the flood, and that from him it was called Tyrus. This seems very probable, because it was before Joshua's days, as appears Josh. xix. 29. But whether he or the Sidonians built it, is not clear; but whoever were the "builders," they were masters of architecture, and nothing was left undone which tended to the ornament and strength of the city. The Sidonians were men of skill, artists in hewing and building, 1 Kings v. 6.

Ver. 5. "They have made all thy ship boards of fir trees of Senir." Having showed the dignity of Tyrus from the situation, structure, and trading, now he comes to set it out from the shipping of it. The Tyrians abounded in ships, and are thought to be the first authors of navigation. Pliny saith, the Phœnicians were famous for the invention of the navigatory and military art; and Tibullus saith, that Tyrus first committed a ship to sea, Lib. l. E. leg. 7, primo ratem ventis credere docta Tyrus. Tyrus was the metropolis of Phœnicia.

"Thy ship boards." לִיָּה is a table, or plank, and כָּל-לִיָּהֵי is, all the planks on both sides of the ships: there must be thick and strong planks to make a ship. Some render the word, seats, whereon rowers sit in ships, boats, or galleys.

"Of fir trees of Senir." The word בְּרִישֵׁי for "fir trees," some render it, cedars; but, 1 Kings v. 8; Isa. xxxvii. 24, "fir trees" and cedars have distinct names; אֲרָז is, a cedar, and berosh, the "fir tree," which is a tree tall and strong, therefore great men are likened unto it; Nahum ii. 3, "The fir trees shall be terribly shaken," that is, the men in place and honour. Planks of fir, it is observed, are smooth, will cleave close together, and so were counted then fittest for shipping. These "fir trees" were taken from Senir, a mount, which had many names; Deut. iii. 9, Moses called it Hermon; the Sidonians, Shirion, or Syrian; the Amorites, Shenir; others, Hor; and some, Sion; Stephanus, in Onomast. interprets it, dormiens lucerna; the Chaldee calls it, the snow mount, because the snow used to continue upon it; our prophet here makes it a mount of "fir trees."

"They have taken cedars from Lebanon." This mountain is partly in Canaan, and partly in Syria, or Phœnicia. Solomon sent to Hiram to hew him cedar trees out of Lebanon, that was, from that part of the mount which runs along in Syria and Phœnicia. Some make it a mount in Syria, so high, that in the midst of the summer it preserves the snow on the top of it, which is fetched thence to Tyrus, and made use of to cool their summer cups, and sold to others for the same purpose.

It is called "Lebanon," the learned conceive, because of its snowy whiteness; לבן in Hebrew, is white, thence "Lebanon;" Jer. xviii. 14, "Can a man leave the snow of Lebanon?" It abounded with "cedars," which are strong, durable, and tall; Ezek. xvii. 22, they are said to be "high;" and men in high places are compared to high "cedars," exposed to winds, storms, shakings, and ruin more than others; by reason of their tallness and strength, they were the fitter for shipping.

“To make masts for thee.” The mast is the tree in the ship, which bears up the sails. In Greek, ισος, ab ισανθαι, because it stands upright in the ship. Hesychius calls it, τὸ ὀρθὸν ξύλον τῆς νεώς, the right or straight wood of the ship.

Ver. 6. “Of the oaks of Bashan.” “Bashan” was a land beyond Jordan, which bred mighty men, and was called “the land of giants,” Deut. iii. 13. Og was king thereof, whose bedstead of iron was nine cubits in length, and four in breadth, ver. 11; this country was large, and fell partly to Manasseh, ver. 14, and partly to Gad, 1 Chron. v. 11, 16; it was a rich soil, and fruitful; the lambs and rams of it are set out in Scripture with an emphasis, Deut. xxxii. 14, “the breed of Bashan,” it bred lusty, strong, and fat cattle; hence great ones, and rich men, are likened to the “bulls of Bashan,” Psal. xxii. 12; to “kine of Bashan,” Amos iv. 1; the mighty ones and princes of the earth are called “fatlings of Bashan,” Ezek. xxxix. 18. This land, as it bred men and beasts of strength and stature, so trees likewise, especially oaks, which are set out by way of distinction from others, as, “oaks of Bashan,” Isa. ii. 13; by which strong and great men are set out, Zech. xi. 2. The Hebrew for “oaks” is אֵילִים which some have rendered, pine trees, some, chestnut trees, some, fir trees, but most, “oaks;” for Bashan was a woody country, and did abound with “oaks;” and allon signifies, an “oak,” Josh. xxiv. 26; Isa. vi. 13, callonim, as “oaks.”

“Have they made thine oars.” The Tyrians made their ships so, that when the wind served not, or not sufficiently, they might row with “oars,” and so make more the speed upon occasions. Their “oars” were made of choice oak, which was firm and lasting: משיטים oars, it is from שָׂט which signifies, to go forward, to impel; the “oars” helped on the motion of the ship, and served to row her in, where winds would not suffer.

“The company of the Ashurites have made thy benches of ivory.” In the Hebrew it is אֲשֻׁרִים בַּת the daughter of the Assyrians. Vatablus hath it, the congregation of the Assyrians, which he interprets thus; The best Assyrian artists have made thy “benches of ivory.” The Septuagint hath it, dark houses. Others have differing conjectures about the words, which in the original stand thus; They have made thee benches of ivory, the daughter of Ashurim, that is, the daughter of tradings, or goings. To this purpose Junius and Piscator interpret the words; one hath it, ex ebore tritissimo, the other, ex ebore bene attrito, of ivory well worn, or trodden. And thus doth Buxtorfius render the words אֲשֻׁרִים בַּת-אֲשֻׁרִים ebur, filius or filia gressuum, i. e. gressibus tritum. The word ashur signifies, going, treading; and Pliny saith, that ivory which hath been long in the earth, and much trodden upon, is the only ivory. The word for “ivory” is, shen, a tooth, which by a synecdoche is put for the tooth or teeth of elephants, whereof ivory is made. Some call them the elephant’s horns, because they are large and like unto horns. These teeth, or horns, they shed every ten years, and being shed, they hide them, and lay them up.

Martinius in Theophrastus and Pliny speak of ebur fossile, ivory digged out of the earth, white and black, which may be the teeth, or horns, of the elephant, hid in the earth, and trodden into it.

Of “ivory” the Tyrians made them, “benches.” The word for “benches” is, קִישׁ which signifies, a board, a table, or plank, that which may be joined to other things, and may be rendered, the decks or hatches, but because their ships had “oars,” it is like there were seats or “benches.”

“Brought out of the isles of Chittim.” In the word is mention of the land of Chittim, Isa. xxiii. 1; the coast of Chittim, Numb. xxiv. 24; the ships of Chittim, Dan. xi. 30; and here, of the “isles of Chittim.” Some make it Italy; the Vulgate hath it, of the isles of Italy. Melancthon thinks it to be Macedonia. Bonfrerius saith, Cyprus was first so called, and after, this name Chittim was given to other islands, as Italy, Greece. A Lapide names Cyprus, Crete, Sicily, the islands of Apulia, and Italy, which he comprehends under the “isles of Chittim.” They were so called from Chittim, one of the sons of Javan, who descended from Japheth, the son of Noah, Gen. x. 4, 5, and he, with his brethren, divided the isles of the gentiles, after their tongues and families.

Obs. 1. The men of the world are wise, choosing the fittest places for their own advantage and interest. Tyrus was situate at the entry of the sea, was a merchant of the people for many isles; the Tyrians seated themselves where they might have great trading at sea, and access unto them from all parts, and so grow great and rich. The Canaanites dwelt by the sea, and coast of Jordan, Numb. xiii. 29, places fit for exportation and importation. Babylon was seated upon many waters, Jer. li. 13, the great river Euphrates ran through it, by means whereof it grew rich; for it follows, “abundant in treasures.” Those cities or towns that are built upon rivers navigable, and sea coasts, where are ports commodious for shipping, they draw the wealth unto them, and abound in treasure. Let us learn so much of the men of the world, to be wise for our spiritual interest, and seat ourselves near the waters of the sanctuary, that so, trading with God and Christ, we may abound with spiritual treasure.

Obs. 2. Outward excellences lift up men’s hearts, begot vain confidences, and cause them to boast. Tyrus was built upon a rock, situate at the entry of the sea, did merchandize with many isles, whereby she got the riches and rarities of other places, and hereupon she swelled, and said, “I am of perfect beauty,” I want nothing conducing to essence or ornament, to being or well-being, I and mine are complete every way. Great cities, which have outward advantages of enriching themselves, are full of pride, confidence, and sinful boastings. Babylon was a great and rich city, and, Isa. xlvii. 7, she said, “I shall be a lady,” or mighty woman, “for ever:” she took upon her the name of God; ver. 8, “I am, and none else beside me; I shall not sit as a widow;” I am the golden, the beautiful, the strong city, none is comparable unto me, none is able to deal with me, to deprive me of my glory, wealth, greatness, and make me desolate, and sit mourning like a widow: these were the confidences and boastings of Babylon. The like you may read of Rome, which is spiritual Babylon; Rev. xviii. 7, “She said in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow;” I have great command and power, I obey none, nations and kings are under me; I am no widow like other cities, I abound with delicacies and delights; in this condition shall I continue, I shall see no sorrow. This is the great wickedness of cities enriched by God, that they forget him, and glory in external excellences.

Obs. 3. No situation, strength, or outward advantage can secure proud cities. Tyrus’ borders were in the heart of the seas, she was compassed about with great waters, judged by all to be impregnable; but God’s design was to ruin Tyrus for her pride, and he found out a way and means to do it. Let cities be built where they will, in the deeps, on rocky mountains, wheresoever, if they glory in their strength, beauty, situation, God can bring destruction upon them; nothing shall hinder in nature or art. "He will work, and who shall let it?" Isa. xliii. 13: he will work, and what shall let it? not seas, not rocks, not walls, not strong towers, not multitude of ships. Babylon's many waters could not secure her, when the Lord had a device to destroy her: her pride and insolency caused him to dry up her waters, and make her heaps, Jer. li. 36, 37.

Obs. 4. Artists will put forth themselves to the utmost to show their skill. "Thy builders have perfected thy beauty;" they concealed not their art; what skill soever they had in architecture, they strove to manifest the same.

Ver. 7. Fine linen with broided work from Egypt was that which thou spreadest forth to be thy sail; blue and purple from the isles of Elishah was that which covered thee.

Having spoken of the substantials, he comes now to the ornament of Tyrus' shipping, viz. their sails.

"Fine linen with broided work from Egypt." Egypt abounded with flax, which was very "fine," white, and precious, whereof the Egyptians made "fine linen," which, for the excellency and distinction's sake, was called the "fine linen of Egypt," Prov. vii. 16; which was so fine, that divers interpreters have rendered the word שש silk; it was such as, Philostratus saith, was lawful only for noblemen to wear.

Notwithstanding this linen was so fine, they did embroider it, which as it made it more strong, so far more costly. The Hebrew, ברקמה is from רקם to picturize by the needle, and rochem is, such an artist as can draw the form and figures of things in divers colours. Linen of Egypt embroidered with the forms and figures of several things had the Tyrians to make sailing for their ships.

"Which thou spreadest forth to be thy sail." The word for "sail" is, סע which some derive from סע to elevate, for sails are on high. Others, from סע which is, to set up a banner, to which the soldiers gather; and to the sail, when it is hoisted up, as to the banner of the ship, the winds gather.

"Blue and purple." These might be rich colourings, which they used to beautify and adorn their ships with, or to colour their sails with. In Jer. x. 9, it is said, "blue and purple is their clothing;" their idols were clothed with cloth of those colours; and so here, it is probable they might cover their heads with "blue and purple" cloths to keep off the heat, or deck and cover their ships with cloths so coloured.

"From the isles of Elishah." In Gen. x. 4, 5, Elishah the son of Javan was one of them that divided the isles of the gentiles, and those isles he had were honoured with his name. Theodoret makes them to be the islands of Greece; Jerom, the islands in the Ionian sea. Junius makes Elishah to be author of the Æolians, who were of note for purple. Tyrus had much purple of its own, yet being a mart town, from all places where it was, both
vid. Jun. Nolos in Gen. x. 4.

that and other rich commodities were brought unto Tyre.
Obs. 1. The wisdom of God in bestowing several mercies upon several places. No one place hath all his blessings, and hardly any place but hath some distinct blessing. In ver. 5—7, you may see that Senir had fir trees, Lebanon had cedars, Bashan had oaks, the isles of Chittim had ivory, Egypt fine linen, the isles of Elishah blue and purple. All these places had distinct mercies, and Tyrus was beholden to them all. The Scripture speaks of God's assigning distinct mercies to divers places, as balm and myrrh to Gilead, Gen. xxxvii. 25; gold to Ophir, 1 Kings ix. 28; brass to Tibhath and Chun, 1 Chron. xviii. 8; vines to Sibmah, Jer. xlviii. 32; and wines to Lebanon, Hos. xiv. 7: which sets out the manifold wisdom of God, making way thereby for the merchandizing of nations, civilizing of men by commerce, communicating of intelligence, providences, the truth, and gospel of Christ. The Indies have sweet spices, silks, cotton, indigo, cochineal. Constantinople, Smyrna, the Mediterranean islands, and other parts have their commodities. Norway, and those parts, have something peculiar. Our nation hath lead, tin, fullers' earth, wools, and cloths, for which foreigners have been beholden to us.

Obs. 2. Proud spirits spare no cost to satisfy their humours and lusts. The men of Tyrus were rich and proud, they built ships, and beautified them with costly materials; their ship-boards were of fir trees of Senir, their masts were of cedars from Lebanon, their oars were of oaks of Bashan, their benches, holds, or decks, were of ivory, out of the isles of Chittim; their sails were of fine linen from Egypt, and that embroidered; they coloured and covered their ships with blue and purple from the isles of Elishah. Men's lusts are costly things, to gratify them, they will lavish out gold and silver. When sea towns are fattened with the wealth of sea and land, they become proud; and pride, in whomsoever it is, is expensive. Where God gives in great supplies, great means, they are seldom laid out for the honour of that God, but frequently, both among heathens and God's people, are laid out to maintain state, pride, some wretched, some base lust or other. So Jerusalem being enriched with God's blessings, and trading from all parts, Ezek. xxvi. 2, being "the gates of the people," she made of her jewels, gold, and silver, idols, covering them with broided garments, Ezek. xvi. 17, 18.

Ver. 8, 9. The inhabitants of Zidon and Arvad were thy mariners: thy wise men. O Tyrus, that were in thee, were thy pilots. The ancients of Gobaal and the wise men thereof were in thee thy calkers: all the ships of the sea with their mariners were in thee to occupy thy merchandise.

Having spoken of the materials, fabric, and rich ornaments of Tyrus' shipping, in these two verses he treats of the officers and persons employed therein, and multitude of traffickers with Tyrus.

Ver. 8. "The inhabitants of Zidon and Arvad." Zidon was a famous city of Phœnicia, saith Jerom and Eusebius; it was more north than Tyrus, in the north-west of Canaan, at the utmost borders thereof. It was built either by Sidon, the first-born of Canaan, Gen. x. 15, 19, or by the Sidonians, who descending from him, built it in honour to his name. It was a great city, Josh. xix. 28, assigned unto the tribe of Asher; but the inhabitants thereof were not driven out by that tribe, Judg. i. 31. It was more ancient than Tyrus. Strabo makes it two hundred furlongs from Tyre; Bonfrerius, some five or six miles.

Arvad or Arad; the Vulgate reads it, Aradii, the Aradians were thy mariners. It was not Arad, a city in the south, Numb. xxi. 1; for the men thereof were no mariners, it being an inland city. The Hebrew is, Arvad, which Ocolampadius takes to be Damascus. Jerom makes it an island, and so doth Vilalpandus, and that not far from Zidon; but Junius makes it rather, a town in the sea, seven furlongs long, and two hundred paces from the continent. And Pliny tells us, that the Tyrians, Zidonians, and Aradians dwelt near together, and were very skilful in navigation, especially the Zidonians and Arvadites. Of these were their mariners.

“Thy wise men, O Tyrus, that were in thee, were thy pilots.” The Tyrians took mariners from other places, but set men of their own over them, such as were wise and fit for that employment: inferior places they called strangers to; the honourable, and places of trust, they reserved for their own. The Tyrians were wise and skilful in sea affairs; 1 Kings ix. 27, Hiram’s shipmen were such as had knowledge of the sea: they knew the several parts, what rocks and sands were in the way to them; they knew how to steer the ship in all winds and weathers, and to order all in the ship for the best advantage: such were their pilots. The word for “pilot” is, חבל, chabel, which signifies the master, captain, or governor of the ship, which Cœcolampadius derives from חבל funis, because by them the sails of the ship are extended or contracted at the pleasure of the pilot or governor; but rather it is from חבל parturire, like one in travail, who hath many fears and sorrows before she bring forth, so hath the pilot or master of the ship.

Ver. 9. “The ancients of Gebal, and the wise men thereof.” Gebal was a province or city in Syria, or Syrophœnicia, near unto Zidon; the men thereof confederated with others against the people of God, Psal. lxxxiii. 7. These Gebalites were men skilful in hewing of stones, 1 Kings v. 18, that is, “stone-squarers.” The Hebrew is, גבלי, the Giblites, or Gebalites; they, with others, were the hewers of the stones and timber wherewith the temple was built. Among these also were ancient wise and able men for building and calking of ships.

“Were in thee thy calkers.” The Hebrew is, מחוקי בורק which Montanus renders, strengthening thy clefts, or ruptures; in the margin you have it, stoppers of chinks. Calkers are those that drive in the okum in the clefts, chinks, or distances between the planks of the ship, and then with pitch, rosin, and oil, doth pay the same, that so no water may enter.

“All the ships of the sea with their mariners were in thee to occupy thy merchandise.” Ships from all places and parts came to Tyrus, bringing in their commodities thither, and carrying out what Tyrus afforded, glass, purple, and other commodities. The Hebrew word for “ships” is, אניות, being the plural number, from אני which sometimes is rendered, a navy, as 1 Kings x. 11, 22; ix. 26, 27; but mostly, a ship, as Prov. xxx. 19; Jonah i. 3, 4, 5; Isa. xxxiii. 21. A ship is a hollow vessel, made to swim or sail upon the waters, and carry burdens. Which Plantus calls a wooden horse; Lucretius, the chariot of the winds; August. a sea waggon. Ships are at sea, what carts, chariots, or waggons, are at land; and as those are drawn by horses, so are they driven on by winds and sails; the word אני being from אנה to impel. It is the wind which causeth the ship to move.

The word for “mariners,” in ver. 8, is שיטים and in this 9th verse it is מלחים; the first is from שט to move, go up and down from place to place, and so mariners do, carrying the ship from port to port; the latter word is from מלח salt, quasi, salt-men, because they row and sail in the salt sea.

“To occupy thy merchandise.” The Hebrew is, to negotiate thy negotiation, or, to buy thy buying; thou hast played the merchant in buying divers commodities, and merchants come to thee to fetch away those commodities. Vatablus his sense of the words is so, to take off thy wares.

Ver. 10, 11. They of Persia and of Lud and of Phut were in thine army, thy men of war: they hanged the shield and helmet in thee: they set forth thy comeliness. The men of Arrad with thine army were upon thy walls round about, and the Gammadims were in thy towers: they hanged their shields upon thy walls round about; they have made thy beauty perfect.

Having spoken of their gallant shipping, their pilots, mariners, calkers, and naval affairs, here he comes to the military; they had considerable forces, from other parts, and of their own, both which are touched in these two verses.

“They of Persia.” The Persians were good soldiers; Cyrus the Persian conquered the Chaldeans, and set up the Persian empire. Ammianus saith of the Persians, they are expert in warlike affairs. The Hebrew for “Persia” is, פרס, which signifies, to divide; to this Daniel alludes, chap. v. 28, “Peres; Thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians.” But the name of Persia was before, and upon another account, from one Perseus a king.

“And of Lud.” In the 10th of Genesis there is mention of Ludim the son of Mizraim and Ham, ver. 13, and of Lud the son of Shem, ver. 22. Of the first it is conceived came the Lubims in Africa, who were enemies to the Jews, 2 Chron. xii. 3. Of the second the Lydians, a people in Asia, who were skilful archers, as appears, Jer. xlv. 9; and Jerom saith, they were counted the strongest among the nations.

“And of Phut.” Phut was one of the sons of Ham, Gen. x. 6, from whom both posterity and country were so named. Ezek. xxxviii. 5, Phut is translated Libya, and Jer. xlv. 9, Libyans; and the Greek Scholiast here turns Phut, Libyas, the Libyans; so the Vulgate; and these were famous warriors, and therefore hired to be defenders of the city of Tyre. Those joined with their own men, made up their army, fighting for them at sea, when occasion was, and constantly guarding their city. The word for “war” is מלחמה to eat, and to fight, because wars do eat up men, and their estates; hence the sword is said to devour, and that from one end of the land to the other, Jer. xii. 12; and to be drunk with blood, Jer. xlv. 10. War is bloody, consuming, and devouring.

“They hanged the shield and helmet in thee.” The Hebrew for “shield” is, סוּח, to protect, because it protects and defends him that bears it. The Lord said to Abraham, Gen. xv. 1, אני מן רך, I am a shield to thee, that is, I, that am the great God, am thy Protector. Hence great men, who ought to protect the people, the places, and cities they dwell in, are called מגיני ארץ “the shields of the earth,” Psal. xlvii. 9.

The word for “helmet” in Hebrew is, כִּיכֵב Greek, περικεφαλαία, that piece of armour which covers the head. Of old they made helmets of the skins of beasts, afterwards of metals, as brass, iron, silver.

In time of peace, they hanged up their shields and helmets where they might be seen, that so both strangers and others might see they were well provided for wars upon all occasions, or rather, it was to set forth their glory and greatness. It is like they had some public armoury, where their arms were laid up. The Jews stored up theirs in the house of God, 2 Chron. xxiii. 9.

“They set forth thy comeliness.” This added much to the beauty and glory of Tyrus, that it had strong men in it, who were expert warriors, and store of arms hung up orderly. Solomon tells you an armoury is very comely, where there hang shields and bucklers of mighty men, Cant. iv. 4; such hangings become an armoury, as well as tapestry or arras do any room.

Ver. 11. “The men of Arvad with thine army were upon thy walls round about.” Of the Arvadites was touched before; they, with the Tyrians, and those they had hired for military services, kept watch upon the walls of Tyrus continually. Though it were a strong city, seated upon a rock, in the midst of the seas, yet they thought it wisdom to have a watch on all sides, not knowing but enemies might come by sea, and do them mischief. These Tyrians trusted not only to their walls, a lifeless strength, but had watches of their soldiers, which were living strengths.

“The Gammadims were in thy towers.” There is some dispute among interpreters, who these Gammadims were. The Vulgate renders the word, pigmies, and so doth Shindler, whom authors affirm to be a people of three cubits or spans in stature; but it is impossible the Tyrians should employ such, who had sought the strongest and skilfullest of men in other nations, to be an ornament and defence unto them; what glory was it, to have such dwarfs among their valiant men? Some make them to seem pigmies, and little ones, because they were in high towers; this savours more of fancy than of truth; why should not the Tyrians have stout men in their towers, as well as on their walls? The Chaldee reads it, Cappadocians; the Septuagint, φύλακες, keepers; and Jerom, though he renders the word pigmies, yet he adds, quasi bellatores, ἀπὸ τῆς πυγμῆς, a lueta et certamine, because they were forward to fight, and were notable fist-fighters. “Gammadim” is from gomed, a cubit, which occasioned many to think them to be cubit men; but gomed may note the arm, wherein man’s strength lies, and hence they are called, viri brachiales, quod brachio potentes et robusti

essent, because they were men of their arms. And Junius calls them, men of arms and strength, fit to defend what they undertook. Doubtless they were men of stature and strength; otherwise what should they have done with shields, they would have been burdensome to little and weak men. Quistorpius saith, these Gammadims were a warlike people, not inferior to the Persians, Lydians, or Arvadians, so called from a region of that name. A Lapidè conceives, “Gammadim” may be from עָמַד stare, and so these Gammadims to be standing soldiers, a standing garrison in the towers of Tyrus.

“They hanged their shields upon thy walls round about.” The word for “shields” differs from that in the former verse, there it is, magen, and here it is, שֵׁלֶט shélet, whence our English word shield comes; it is from שָׁטַט to rule, because those who used shields were like men of power, and enabled to encounter their enemies.

“They have made thy beauty perfect.” The Vulgate is, they have filled up thy beauty; the Zidonians, Arvadians, Gebalites, Persians, Lydians, Libyans, Gammadims, every one added something, which made up the beauty of Tyrus. You may confine it to their shipping and arms.

Obs. 1. That even amongst heathens were wise and experienced men. Zidon, Arvad, Tyrus, Gebal, were heathenish, yet had they their wise men, and ancients, זְקֵנִים וְחֲכָמִים All wisdom and experience were not shut up in Judea; the Lord gave gifts unto heathens, so that many of them excelled in wisdom, and had great skill in natural and human things. The word chaacan imports knowledge and wisdom, in divine and human things. Heathens fell short in the first, but went beyond most in the second. Solomon acknowledged, that there was none among the Jews that had such skill in hewing of timber as the Sidonians, 1 Kings v. 6, and you may read how skilful a Tyrian was, 2 Chron. ii. 14; he was ish chaacan, ver. 13. it is a “cunning man” in our translation, but rather it should be, a man of wisdom, a man of skill, he was so skilful, as to find out any thing put unto him. There were “wise men” in the nations, Jer. x. 7; Edom had hers, Obad. 8; so Babylon, Dan. v. 7; Egypt had the like, Exod. vii. 11; and Tyre and Zidon had not only wise men, but those who were “very wise,” Zech. ix. 2.

Obs. 2. Matters of importance are to be committed to men of wisdom and experience. Tyrus put her naval affairs in the hands of wise men and ancient; she would not trust young, raw, unexpert men to be her mariners, pilots, or calkers; she looked not to kindred, friends, and relations, as states now do; but unto those who were fit and able, wise and experienced in the affairs they were to be employed in. Wisdom directs, Eccles. x. 10; wisdom builds up and establisheth, Prov. xxiv. 3.

Obs. 3. Wise states, as they will make use of foreigners to advance their affairs and secure themselves, so especially they will promote their own unto the principal places. “Thy wise men, O Tyrus, that were in thee, were thy pilots;” Zidonians and Arvadites were her mariners, the Gebalites her calkers, but Tyrians themselves were her pilots. So Persians, Lydians, and Phutians were in the army of Tyrus, but they were not the commanders thereof. Tyrus was careful, and showed her great wisdom in placing men of her own, those who were natives, in the chief places of her navy and of her army.

When strangers are set in chief places, it discontent the natives, causes envy, grudgings, and animosities, so that those under them oft plot against them, and so the work they are in is made unsuccessful. Solomon set his own people over the work, 1 Kings v. 16; and Pharaoh set Egyptians over the Jews and Jewish officers, Exod. i. 11; v. 14.

Obs. 4. The glory of a state and city is made up of and set out by external things. Ships, soldiers, shields, helmets, they made up the beauty of Tyrus, they made it perfect, they became her, and set forth her comeliness. Such comeliness, such beauty, have heathenish states and cities; but there is another beauty, another comeliness, which would far exceed these, and make states and cities very glorious, viz. true doctrine, pure worship, holiness of life, execution of justice, and provision for the poor; these things would make the beauty of a city perfect, and set forth the comeliness thereof unto the life. Zion, that had these things in her, was “the perfection of beauty.”

Ver. 12. Tarshish was thy merchant by reason of the multitude of all kind of riches; with silver, iron, tin, and lead, they traded in thy fairs.

The glory of Tyrus, being pencilled out from its structure, navy, and militia, now the prophet proceeds to amplify the same from the great merchandizing it had. Isaiah tells you, chap. xxiii. 3, that Tyrus was a “mart of nations;” and Lavater saith, it was as a market or fair for the whole world, which was an exceeding great honour unto Tyrus. This amplification extends unto the 25th verse, and in the several verses are set out the divers sorts of merchants, and their wares.

"Tarshish was thy merchant." This word "Tarshish" hath greatly perplexed interpreters, and their thoughts about it are various. Jerom in most places, and many others that follow him, make it to be the sea, some the Mediterranean, others the ocean; but this Munster likes not, because, as the othersons of Javan divided the isles of the gentiles, and gave their names unto them, so it is probable that Tarshish, being his son, did the like, Gen. x. 4, 5; besides, Psal. lxxii. 10, mention is made of "the kings of Tarshish," which imports it was land, and not sea. In this place the Septuagint hath καρχηδώνιοι; Jerom and the Vulgate, Carthaginenses, the Carthaginians, so that they all understand by Tarshish, Carthage. So Mariana likewise, who saith, that Tunis being near Carthage, was called in the Arabic tongue Tharsis, which he hath from Leo Africanus; and in these two places, Isa. xxiii. 1, Ezek. xxxviii. 13, the Septuagint hath Carthage, and the Carthaginians. Pliny makes it a colony of

Lib. 5. c. 19.
Q. Curt. l. 4.

Tyrus; and Curtius saith, the Tyrians built Carthage, and were honoured by the Carthaginians, parentum loco. Some make Tarshish here to be Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, that which Jonah fled unto, Jonah i. 3; the city whereof Paul the apostle was, Acts xxi. 39; but this Boetius, in his Sacred Animadversions, likes not, because Tarsus was not a sea, but an inland town; and he cites Pliny for proof of it, saying that the river Cydnus doth divide Tarsus far from the sea; and moreover, Cilicia had not such metals as here are mentioned. Others therefore make this Tarshish to be Tartessus, a sea town in Spain, which abounded with these metals here mentioned, viz. silver, iron, tin, and lead, which were brought to Tartessus; but whatever probabilities are alleged for this opinion, the prophet Isaiah confounds them all, when he saith, chap. xxiii. 10, that Tyrus was the daughter of Tarshish. Tyrus was very ancient, yet not so ancient as Tarshish, which was some Mediterranean island, with the city thereof, so named from Tarshish the son of Javan, Gen. x. 4, 5. How then can either Carthage or Tartessus be Tarshish, when they were daughters of Tyrus? as Pliny, l. 5. c. 19, and Sanctius, upon Isa. ii. 16, do affirm; and though both of them were ancient, yet must they not compare with Tyrus or Tarshish for antiquity.

The men of Tarshish, what island, city, or place soever it was, they came to Tyrus, and merchandized with her. The word for "merchant" is, כָּהֵן, socher, from sachar, to go from place to place, in a trading way, transporting commodities, which is the work of merchants; they themselves, or by their factors, do cause goods to be carried from port to port, and transported beyond sea. Either Tarshish had such mines as yielded the metals spoken of in the verse, or they were brought into it, and so transported by the merchants thereof to Tyrus.

"With silver, iron, tin, and lead." Ceseph is the word for "silver," which comes from כֶּסֶף to desire; for silver is that which all men covet and desire, yet are not satisfied therewith. So strongly are some carried out in their desires after it, that they venture limbs and life for it, yea, pierce themselves through with many eares, and drown their souls in perdition, 1 Tim. vi. 9, 10.

ברזל is "iron;" bertz is a Chaldee word, signifying transfigere, perforare, from whence it may be derived, because iron is that which pierceth through, and fastens things together; it is of great use, and could not well be wanted in any state. It is frequently put in Scripture for that which is made of iron: as 2 Kings vi. 5, 6, that which is called the "axe," in Hebrew is iron; and Psal. cv. 18, "He was laid in iron," that is, in chains made of iron; so Psal. cvii. 10, "Being bound in affliction and iron," that is, in fetters or chains; therefore metaphorically it notes hard things.

Schalz. Exerc.

"Tin," that is, בריל from ברל which is, to separate, because it is separated not only from silver in the fire, but other drossy materials; some call it white lead. Our pewter hath much of it mingled with it.

"Lead," the Hebrew is, עופרת ophereth, from עפר dust, because it hath much earthiness in it, not because it is fetched out of the dust of the earth, so are other metals which are more noble.

"They traded in thy fairs." The Hebrew runs thus, they have given in these to thy aid: fairs are aids and helps to places where they are kept. Others read for "fairs," in thy leavings they have traded, in the place where all things are left for sale and exchange; the word עוֹנֵן עוֹנֵיִם notes the place whither wares are brought and left, from עוֹב asab, to leave, and also, to help.

Ver. 13. Javan, Tubal, and Meshech, they were thy merchants: they traded the persons of men and vessels of brass in thy market.

Javan was the son of Japheth, Gen. x. 2, from whom came the Ionians, afterwards called the Grecians. Dan. viii. 21, "The rough goat is" כֹּלֶךְ "the king of Grecia;" and the Septuagint here hath it, ἡ Ἑλλάς, which is Greece: Joel iii. 6, יוֹנִים is rendered Ἑλληες, by the Septuagint, and Grecians, by our translators.

"Tubal." Tubal was the son of Japheth also, Gen. x. 2; and as Junius, in his notes upon the place, observes, from him came the Iberians and Albanians. The Iberians were a people in Asia, near the Caspian and Euxine seas, and the Albanians were their neighbours, between Colehis and Armenia. Some expositors do tell us, there were the occidental Iberians, as well as oriental, and by them they understand the Spaniards, who were so called from the river Iber; and they make Tubal the father and founder of Spain, the first city whereof they affirm to be called Thubal. Vid. Vitulp.

"Meshech." Some make him, being the son of Japheth, Gen. x. 2, the father of the Muscovites; others, of the Cappadocians, who formerly were called Meschines, or Meschates. Josephus, in his first book of Antiquities, cap. 7, which is of nations deriving their names from the authors, saith, Meselch was the author of them called Meschates, who were lately named Cappadocians; for they show even at this day a token of their ancient name, to wit, the city of Masaca.

"They were thy merchants." The word for "merchant" here, differs from that in the precedent verse, it is, רֹכֵל rochel, which properly is a merchant dealing in grocery, spicery, and sweet things; in 1 Kings x. 15, they are called "spice merchants," harocelim. There are two words more in the verse for "merchants;" tor, תֹּר because they search into the nature of things; and כָּהֵן because they send their goods up and down from place to place; but rochel is used for those that merchandize in other things, as follows.

"They traded the persons of men." The Hebrew is, בְּנַפְשׁ אָדָם in the soul, or souls of men. So the Septuagint, ἐν ψυχαῖς ἀθρώπων. The Vulgate is, slaves. Junius and Piscator read it, they traded in men, either they brought men to Tyrus to sell them there, or brought men in to Tyrus to carry elsewhere. This was a frequent practice among heathens, to buy and sell men. If it be thought lawful to sell those who are taken in war, from whom the conqueror might take their lives, what warrant there is to buy and sell other men like beasts in a market, I see not. The Scholiast saith, God here doth accuse their great injustice, who sold men by force. The merchants that dealt with the whore of Babylon, they traded, Rev. xviii. 13, in the bodies, so is the word "slaves" in the original, "and souls of men." They traded in the soul of man, that is, saith Vilalpandus, with the great hazard of their lives; according to that, Lam. v. 9, "We gat our bread" בנפשנו that is, with the hazard of our soul, or life, "because of the sword of the wilderness."

"And vessels of brass in thy market." All kind of brazen vessels were brought thither, and sold into other parts. The word for "market" is, מקרב from קרב to mingle, because in markets there are mixtures of all things; in Tyrus were men, brass, lead, tin, iron, silver, and a multitude of other things to be had.

Ver. 14. They of the house of Togarmah traded in thy fairs with horses and horsemen and mules.

Togarmah was the son of Gomer, the son of Japheth, Gen. x. 2, 3; and the Chaldee paraphrast makes his country Germany. The Jews understand by the Thogarmians, the Turks, and by Togarma, Turkey. Others by "the house of Togarmah" mean the Phrygians, who abounded in horses and horsemen, which were skilful in horsemanship. What "house," that is, people, or nation, soever they were, they possessed the northern parts, Ezek. xxxviii. 6.

"Horses, horsemen, and mules." חסוים notes common horses; פראסים pharasim, horses for war; פרדים swift horses, such as kings and princes used, saith A Lapide: but parash is a horseman, because he urges on the horse with spurs, 2 Chron. i. 14; and pered is a mule, from פדר to separate, because the generation of mules is differing from other beasts.

Ver. 15. The men of Dedan were thy merchants; many isles were the merchandise of thine hand: they brought thee for a present horns of ivory and ebony.

"Dedan" was a city in Idumea, belonging to the posterity of Esau, Jer. xlix. 8; of it see what was said chap. xxv. 13: those in that city, who were merchants, did merchandize with Tyrus.

"Many isles were the merchandise of thine hand." Isles in the ocean, or Mediterranean sea. Sanctius thinks they could not be the Mediterranean islands, because they yielded not such commodities as are here spoken of. They brought their wares into Tyrus, bargaining with her merchants and inhabitants, which bargains were confirmed by striking hands: or, by the "merchandise of thine hand," may be understood, their bringing wares to her hand, and taking wares off from her hand.

"They brought thee for a present horns of ivory and ebony." Elephants have no horns; but because their teeth grow something like horns, therefore they are called horns, and "horns of ivory," for that the ivory is made of those teeth or horns.

The Hebrew word for "ebony" is, הובנים hobnīm, which some have interpreted, peacocks; but the word for peacocks is, תבנים Kings x. 22. Ebony is black, solid, and shining wood, so heavy, that it swims not in water, but sinks even like a stone.

Eben in Hebrew is a stone, and ebony differs not much from it. India is the parent of it.

"For a present," not that they gave the Tyrians their ivory and ebony, but presented them for sale unto them. Therefore Piscator reads the words thus, With horns of ivory and with ebony they have made or rendered thy price; they have given thee these for other commodities.

Ver. 16. Syria was thy merchant by reason of the multitude of the wares of thy making: they occupied in thy fairs with emeralds, purple, and broidered work, and fine linen, and coral, and agate.

The word for "Syria" in Hebrew is, ארם Gen. x. 22. Aram was the son of Shem, and from him came the Aramites, or Armenians, who possessed Armenia, so called from Aram, which signifies high, and in Armenia it is conceived was the highest part of the earth; Gen. viii. 4, the ark first rested upon the mountains of Ararat, which were in Armenia. Vilalpandus tells us, that from שר Sar, a province therein, it afterward was called Syria. Josephus, Antiq. l. i. c. 7, saith, of Aram came Vid. Martini, in the Aramaeans, whom the Greeks call- verb. Syrus. the Syrians. These Syrians were the merchants of Tyrus; but whether the Syrians of Damascus, 2 Sam. viii. 5, or the Syrians of Beth-rehob, or those of Zoba, 2 Sam. x. 6, or the Syrians of Padan-aram, Gen. xxv. 20, or all of them, is uncertain.

"By reason of the multitude of the wares of thy making." In the Hebrew it is, for the multitude of thy works. Tyrus had many artists, which made and multiplied wares for other parts. She employed her people, who filled her with artificial things.

"They occupied in thy fairs with emeralds." The word for "emerald" is, נכר which Rabbi David saith is a kind of precious stone, of black colour. Jerom and Santes make it a carbuncle, and so the French, and Vatablus. Others, the smaragd emerald, or green stone, with which colour the eyes are greatly pleased and delighted.

"Purple, and broidered work, and fine linen." These were rich commodities which the Syrians traded in. Of these before.

"Coral." This grows in the sea; whilst it is under the water it is green, being got above the water, it becomes red: it is called the tree-stone, or stony-tree, because it brancheth out like a tree. The Hebrew, ראזית is from ראס to elevate or raise up, and so doth coral spring up out of the rock or sea.

"Agate." The margin is, chrysopraxe, a carbuncle, a pearl, a crystal, and here, an agate, which is a stone well known. It had its name from Achates, a river in Sicilia, in which, or near to which, it was first found, but afterwards in other places.

Ver. 17. Judah, and the land of Israel, they were thy merchants: they traded in thy market wheat of Minnith, and Pannag, and honey, and oil, and balm.

The posterity of Judah, and the inhabitants of Canaan, they abounding with wheat, honey, oil, and balm, exported them to Tyrus; for Tyrus was victualled by Judea, Acts xii. 20; and Hiram king of Tyre had twenty thousand measures of wheat, and twenty measures of oil, yearly from Solomon, for his household, 1 Kings v. 11; what then had all his people from the merchants of the Jews!

"Wheat of Minnith." חבתי מנת quasi הנטה

from הַנֵּץ to bring forth, to thrust out, because the wheat thrusts itself out of the hose or stalk, and appears above the same. Canaan was erez chittah, "a land of wheat and barley, a land of oil-olive and honey," Deut. viii. 8. Minnith was some principal place in it for wheat; it is mentioned only in Judg. xi. 33, and here.

"Pannag." Some translate it, balsam, some, a fig, but Aquilla, Symmachus, and Theodotion do make it a place, as Minnith, which yielded choice wheat. Junius and Piscator call it Phœnicia; and so Buxtorfius.

"Balm." Some render it rosin, which is a humour or juice flowing out of certain trees; but "balm" it is rendered here, and Gen. xxxvii. 35; Jer. viii. 22; xlvi. 11; li. 8; which is the principal of oils, or liquids, that flow out of trees, quasi בַּעַל־שֵׁן the lord or king of oils.

Ver. 18. Damascus was thy merchant in the multitude of the wares of thy making, for the multitude of all riches; in the wine of Helbon, and white wool.

Damascus was a famous city of Syria, rather than Phœnicia, which Julian called, the eye of the east, between Libanus and mount Hermon. Isaiah tells us it was the "head of Syria," chap. vii. 8, that is, the head or principal city thereof: merchants came from thence to Tyrus, and traded in her wares, and Tyrians went to Damascus, and traded in hers.

"For the multitude of all riches." Tyrus abounded with the riches of sea and land, having commodities fitting for all places.

"In the wine of Helbon." חֶלְבוֹן chelbon, signifies milk, or fatness, and metaphorically, it signifies the best of any thing; and here it is conceived to be the name of a place in Syria, where Buxtorf, in grew choice grapes, of which the best wine was made, wine as pleasant as milk, if not like unto milk in colour. verbo Halab.

"And white wool." The Septuagint and Jerom have it, wool from Miletus, a city in the borders of Ionia and Caria, but the Hebrew word is, צֶהַר which is, whiteness, so that the words are, wool of whiteness. In the eastern parts are arbores luniferae, trees that bear wool or cotton, which is very white, and sheep that bear wool of whiteness, or white wool. The word tzchar hath affinity with צָהָר tzahar, which signifies light, and all light hath a whiteness and brightness in it.

Ver. 19. Dan also and Javan going to and fro occupied in thy fairs: bright iron, cassia, and calamus, were in thy market.

"Dan," the posterity of the patriarch Dan, who inhabited the city Dan near Jordan, both which had their names from him, Josh. xix. 47. That city Dan in Christ's time was called Caesarea Philippi; and in Jerom's, Panceas: from hence, being some thirty-five miles from Tyrus, came the Danites to trade with the Tyrians.

"Javan going to and fro." Of "Javan" before, ver. 13. The word for "going to and fro," מַעְזָל Meuzzal, some make the name of a place. Meuzzal, "from Uzal," so Aquila, as if the Danites and Grecians did bring commodities from Uzal to Tyrus; but meuzel is a participle from עָזַל ezal, which is, to go, to move. Vatablus turns it, ragabunda, for the Greeks, being covetous, did sail and move to all places for gain.

"Bright iron." The Hebrew is, iron made, de-fecated from all the dross, and made pure, or made into bars or plates.

"Cassia." It is a kind of a sweet cane, or shrub; in Hebrew, קָרְיָה from קָרַר to bow with the head, or top; so this cassia grows with the top inclining or bowing; it is mentioned only here, and in Exod. xxx. 24, where it is reckoned among the "principal spices" for the holy anointing. The word for "cassia" in Psal. xlv. 8, is, קָצִיעָה from קָצַע to shave, unbarb; for cassia is an odoriferous ^{Vir. Plin. Natur. Hist. l. 12. c. 19.} shrub, whose bark shaved off is very useful.

"Calamus." It is a kind of sweet reed, or cane, full of knots, growing in India. Isa. xliiii. 24, it is called "sweet cane," and Jer. vi. 20, "sweet cane from a far country," which was India, saith Jerom. Of it, and other spices, was made the ^{Malden. m. locum.} incense.

Ver. 20. Dedan was thy merchant in precious clothes for chariots.

The Hebrew for "precious clothes" is, כְּנֵי חֶפֶז garments of ingenuity, or liberty; such garments as noble and free men used for their horses and chariots. Men of quality adorn their horses and chariots with rich and precious ornaments, rich saddles, trappings, and coverings.

Ver. 21. Arabia, and all the princes of Kedar, they occupied with thee in lambs, and rams, and goats: in these were they thy merchants.

The Arabians dealt much in sheep and goats, they brought thousands of them to Jehoshaphat, 2 Chron. xvii. 11. Arabia Petraea and Deserta bred multitudes of them.

"The princes of Kedar." Kedar, saith Jerom, is a region in the wilderness of the Saracens, so named from Kedar the son of Ishmael, Gen. xxv. 13; in it was a city also of that name, which had divers princes. The Kedarites and Arabians, as they were not far from one another, so not far from Tyrus, because such cattle could not be driven far: in these they traded with the Tyrians.

"In these were they thy merchants." The Hebrew is, the merchants of thy hand, that is, merchants near at hand: they were near, and always ready to furnish them with lambs, rams, and goats.

Ver. 22. The merchants of Sheba and Raamah, they were thy merchants: they occupied in thy fairs with chief of all spices, and with all precious stones, and gold.

In Gen. x. 7, we read of Seba with samech, and Seba with shin; this Seba with shin was the son of Raamah, who inhabited the upper tract, coast, or part of Arabia Felix, and from him that region was named Sheba; the other Seba, with samech, was the son of Cush, and nephew of Ham, who possessed that region in Ethiopia, called from him Saba, of which Isaiah speaks, chap. xliiii. 3, "I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba," or Saba, "for thee." You have them both Psal. lxxii. 10, "The kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts;" the first is with the letter shin; the second with samech. The queen that came to Solomon, was of Sheba, not Seba, or Saba; Sheba, in Arabia the Happy, abounded with those things she presented unto him.

"Raamah." Some make this word an epithet of the former, The merchants of Sheba, even Raamah; or thus, The merchants of Sheba, even thunder, or thunderers; for רָעָה or רָעָה signifies thunder; Job xxxix. 19, "Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?" speaking of the horse; Hast thou made him terrible? The Sabeans were the disturbers of all things. But I rather conceive, with Junius, it was some place in Arabia the Happy, near unto Sheba; it is more probable the father and the son pitched in those parts which were near one another.

"With chief of all spices, and with all precious stones, and gold." Arabia Felix did abound with choice spices; Jer. vi. 20, incense came from Sheba; and not only incense, but gold, Isa. lx. 6; the queen of Sheba she brought spices, much gold, and precious stones unto Solomon, 1 Kings x. 2.

Ver. 23. Haran, and Canneh, and Eden, the merchants of Sheba, Asshur, and Chilmad, were thy merchants.

Haran, or Charran, was a city in Mesopotamia, where Abraham some time dwelt, Gen. xi. 31; Acts vii. 4. Canneh is no where mentioned but in this place, and it is thought to be some city or region nigh to Haran; Junius makes it the same with Calneh, Gen. x. 10. Eden is spoken of 2 Kings xix. 12, and Isa. xxxvii. 12, where it is said to be in The-lasar. Vilalpandus makes Eden to be a most pleasant region in Syria; others, in Mesopotamia; Junius, in Chaldea.

"Sheba." Some make this Sheba the same with the former. Junius and Piscator difference it from the former, placing it in Arabia Deserta, and think it that Sheba Job speaks of, chap. vi. 19, "The companies of Sheba waited for them."

"Asshur." He was the son of Shem, Gen. x. 22; of him came the Assyrians, who were a scourge and plague to the Jews, Isa. x. 5.

"Chilmad." It is from lamad, to teach, and the words may be read thus, The merchants of Sheba and Asshur, being versed and skilled in thy wares and affairs, they were thy merchants; but it is more suitable to look at "Chilmad" as the proper name of a place. It is by the learned made a province of the Medes, between Assyria and Parthia.

Ver. 24. These were thy merchants in all sorts of things, in blue clothes, and brodered work, and in chests of rich apparel, bound with cords, and made of cedar, among thy merchandise.

The men of Sheba, Asshur, and Chilmad, they brought the commodities here mentioned unto Tyrus, and sold them in her markets.

"In all sorts of things." The Hebrew is, במכללים, Vulgate, in perfectionibus; it is from כלל to perfect, and notes variety and multitude of perfect wares, such as were no ways faulty.

"In blue clothes." בגלובי תכלת saith Montanus, in the wrappings of hyacinth; Symmachus, in precious coverings. The word galom is a cloak or covering, in which a man doth wrap and cover himself.

"In chests of rich apparel, bound with cords." בגניי in the cases, or chests; גני is that in which gold, silver, clothes, and desirable things are laid up in: they put up rich apparel in clothes, and bound them with cords, yea, with cords of silk, saith Vilalpandus.

The word for "rich apparel" is, בגדיים only in this place, and it notes precious, desirable garments. The Septuagint turns it, θησαυρούς εκλεκτούς, choice treasures.

"Made of cedar." Cedars are well scented, durable, but brittle, of them they made chests for their precious things.

Ver. 25. The ships of Tarshish did sing of thee in thy market: and thou wast replenished, and made very glorious in the midst of the seas.

The ships of Tarshish were thy princes, so Montanus; and others, they were the chief of all the ships which came to thee. The Hebrew is, sharothajick, which the Hebrews derive from שר to play the prince; but ours, from שר shur, to sing; and so, the merchants, or men of Tarshish, that came and traded with thee, they did magnify thee and thy wares, they praised thee above all places, and thy wares above all wares.

"Thou wast replenished, and made very glorious." Thou wast filled with the wares and commodities of all the islands and nations near and far off, so that nothing was wanting in thee, and hereupon thou becamest famous abroad; thou hadst all precious and rare things; whatever was the glory and excellency of other places, was brought to thee, being in the heart of the sea; so it is in the original.

Obs. 1. That merchandizing is ancient and lawful. Tyrus was of great antiquity, Isa. xxiii. 7, and the "mart of nations," ver. 3. In Jacob's days there were Midianitish merchants, Gen. xxxvii. 28; in Abraham's time there were such, Gen. xxiii. 16. Neither is the calling of merchants unlawful, though Chrysostom be against it. He saith, Christ cast the buyers and sellers out of the temple, signifying that a merchant can hardly or never please God, and therefore no christian ought to be a merchant; or if he will, let him be thrown out of the church of God. He cites that in Psal. lxx. 16, according to the Vulgate, Because I have not known merchandizing, I shall enter into the powers of the Lord; (but this is otherwise in the original, in our translation being in Psal. lxxi. 15, 16;) and he gives his reason hereof, because merchandise can hardly be exercised without lying and perjury. This is a hard sentence against them. It is much to be feared that many of them are covetous, deal in bad wares, corrupt those which are good by mixtures of worse with them, set prices too high, do lie, swear, and forswear themselves, in their much dealings; yet all these do not make merchandizing unlawful. Prov. xxxi. 24, the virtuous woman sold her fine linen and girdles unto the merchant; had merchandise been unlawful she would not have done it. Let merchants take heed of covetousness and the evils which are incident to buying and selling, do in all their tradings, with domestics or foreigners, as they would be done unto, and so their calling will not only be warrantable, but of singular advantage unto commonwealths and cities.

Obs. 2. Great trading makes places rich and famous. Tyrus had merchants from all parts, and they brought in all sorts of precious commodities, so that she was replenished and glorious; she was full of wealth, and famous in all parts. Babylon had trading with many nations, and she abounded in treasures, Jer. li. 13. When Jerusalem was the gates of the people, when all nations came in to her, then she abounded in wealth and fame.

Obs. 3. True happiness lies not in the abundance of outward things. Tyrus had what the world could afford; men of wisdom, skill, and strength; choice helmets and shields, horses, horsemen, and mules; horns of ivory and ebony, gold, silver, precious stones, emeralds, agates, coral; the choicest wheat, honey, oil, and balm; she had precious clothes, rich apparel, the multitude of all riches in her; yet heathenish, and near unto destruction: Isa. xxiii. 11, "The Lord hath given a commandment against the merchant city, to destroy the strong holds thereof." Outward things make not happy, Psal. cxliv. 15.

Ver. 26—36. Thy rowers have brought thee into great waters: the east wind hath broken thee in the midst of the seas. Thy riches, and thy fairs, thy merchandise, thy mariners, and thy pilots, thy ealkers, and the occupiers of thy merchandise, and all thy men of war, that are in thee, and in all thy company which is in the midst of thee, shall fall into the midst of the seas in the day of thy ruin. The suburbs shall shake at the sound of the cry of thy pilots. And all that handle the oar, the mariners, and all the pilots of the sea, shall come down from their ships, they shall stand upon the land; and shall cause their voice to be heard against thee, and shall cry bitterly, and shall cast up dust upon their heads, they shall wallow themselves in the ashes: and they shall make themselves utterly bald for thee, and gird them with sackcloth, and they shall weep for thee with bitterness of heart and bitter wailing. And in their wailing they shall take up a lamentation for thee, and lament over thee, saying, What city is like Tyrus, like the destroyed in the midst of the sea? When thy wares went forth out of the seas, thou filledst many people; thou didst enrich the kings of the earth with the multitude of thy riches and of thy merchandise. In the time when thou shalt be broken by the seas in the depths of the waters thy merchandise and all thy company in the midst of thee shall fall. All the inhabitants of the isles shall be astonished at thee, and their kings shall be sore afraid, they shall be troubled in their countenance. The merchants among the people shall hiss at thee; thou shalt be a terror, and never shalt be any more.

Having shown the great wealth and dignity of Tyrus, here the prophet comes to the second general part of the chapter, viz. to show the irrecoverable fall of Tyrus.

In these words we have,

I. The destruction itself of Tyrus.

II. The effects and events that follow.

1. This destruction of Tyrus is set out,

1. By way of metaphor, or similitude, which is implied in ver. 26. Tyrus is likened unto a ship at sea, that suffers by the winds and waters, and so perisheth, being laden with rich commodities.

2. From the moving cause thereof, viz. her "rowers," ver. 26.

3. The instrument or means, "the east wind."

II. The effects.

1. Loss of all, ver. 27, 34.

2. The mourning of pilots and mariners, ver. 28—33, with the manner thereof.

3. The influence it had upon foreigners; astonishment, fear, trouble, it produced in some, ver. 35, and hissing in others, ver. 36.

Ver. 26. "Thy rowers have brought thee," &c. This verse is wholly metaphorical. By "rowers" are meant the great men that ruled and governed Tyrus, who were to the city as rowers to a ship. They by their pride, wicked counsels, and wretched lives, caused God to bring a long siege upon her, and ruin at last, which are called "great waters."

"The east wind hath broken thee." That was Nebuchadnezzar, who came with a great army from the east, besieged, took, and ruined Tyre; he dealt with that metaphorical ship, as a rough east wind doth with a ship at sea, breaks it, and sinks it.

Ver. 27. "Shall all fall into the midst of the sea." &c. The Hebrew is, the heart of the sea; all the wealth, greatness, and glory of Tyrus should be drowned in the sea.

Ver. 28. "The suburbs shall shake." The word for "suburbs" is, מַגְרִישָׁי and migrash, saith Pag-nine, is a village out of the city. "By suburbs" here, you understand all the villages and colonies belonging unto Tyre. When the pilots, the prince, and governors thereof, should cry for the ruin of it, then should all the towns, villages, colonies, which were under her command, be troubled and shake for fear.

Obs. 1. Nothing human can protect a sinful city and people from the judgments of God. Tyrus was as strong a place as the world had; her walls, towers, ships, wise, strong men, could not do it. Tyrus was as rich a place as any under heaven, she had a multitude of all riches; yet these kept her not from being brought into great waters. What power or art of man can keep off the wind from a ship, when it is at sea? It is not in the power of all the seamen or mariners in the world to do it; neither can any number of men, or all men, keep off a judgment of God when it is coming upon a sinful place. Let us not confide in human things.

Obs. 2. The ruin of cities and states is chiefly from the princes and governors in the same. "Thy rowers," they who sit in the chief places, they "have brought thee into great waters;" they brought war, famine, desolation upon Tyrus. Zedekiah and his nobles breaking with Nebuchadnezzar, brought Judea and Jerusalem into great waters. Pharaoh's sin brought all the plagues upon Egypt. When governors are wilful, covetous, weak, ignorant, careless, given to their lusts and pleasures, they may quickly overthrow all. Rehoboam's folly caused that rent in Israel, which never was made up again. It was Ahab's sin that brought Judah into deep waters; 2 Chron. xxviii. 19, "The Lord brought Judah low because of Ahaz king of Israel; for he made Judah naked, and transgressed sore against the Lord."

Obs. 3. That cities and states grown rich and renowned, have their periods. Tyrus was replenished with the rarities of the world, she had all excellent things in her, and was very glorious; but what became of her, and all she had? were not her riches, her glory, laid in the seas in the day of her ruin? ver. 27. She had her days for rising, and a day for her ruin. All the glory, bravery, and wealth of this great, strong, and beautiful city, was on a sudden, in a day, buried in the deep sea.

Obs. 4. When the Lord brings his judgments upon sinful cities and states, when he makes great changes in them, or utterly ruins them, then some lament, and some laugh. When Tyrus was besieged, stormed, taken, and ruined, then the rowers, mariners, and pilots, cried, wept, and wailed bitterly, lamenting her destruction: then the merchants laughed and hissed at her. When Jerusalem was taken, burnt, and nothing left but rubbish and ashes, then Jeremiah and many others lamented greatly for the ruin thereof; and then the Ammonites, Moabites, and Edomites, laughed thereat, as you may see, Ezek. xxv. Such is the condition of human affairs, and corruption of human nature, that what is matter of mourning and humiliation to one, becomes matter of rejoicing and insulting to another; but Wisdom hath said, "He that is glad at calamities shall not be unpunished," Prov. xvii. 5.

Obs. 5. The righteous God doth sometimes recompense sinners in the same way they have sinned. Tyrus laughed at the destruction of Jerusalem, Ezek.

xxvi. 2; and here, in this chapter, ver. 36, "The merchants among the people shall hiss at thee." Hissing, as it sometimes notes astonishment, so sometimes gladness and insulting; Lam. ii. 15, 16, "All that pass by clap their hands at thee; they wag their heads, and hiss, and say, This is the day we looked for," &c. At first these merchants might be astonished at the tidings of Tyrus her ruin, and after rejoice, clap their hands, and hiss at her. Agag by his sword had made women childless, and by Samuel's sword his mother was made childless, 1 Sam. xv. 33.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Ver. 1—10. The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying, Son of man, say unto the prince of Tyrus, Thus saith the Lord God; Because thine heart is lifted up, and thou hast said, I am a god, I sit in the seat of God, in the midst of the seas; yet thou art a man, and not God, though thou set thine heart as the heart of God: behold, thou art wiser than Daniel; there is no secret that they can hide from thee: with thy wisdom and with thine understanding thou hast gotten thee riches, and hast gotten gold and silver into thy treasures: by thy great wisdom and by thy traffick hast thou increased thy riches, and thine heart is lifted up because of thy riches: therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because thou hast set thine heart as the heart of God; behold, therefore I will bring strangers upon thee, the terrible of the nations: and they shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom, and they shall defile thy brightness. They shall bring thee down to the pit, and thou shalt die the deaths of them that are slain in the midst of the seas. Wilt thou yet say before him that slayeth thee, I am God? but thou shalt be a man, and no God, in the hand of him that slayeth thee. Thou shalt die the deaths of the uncircumcised by the hand of strangers: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

In this chapter you have these general parts.

I. A prophecy against the king of Tyre, in these ten verses.

II. A lamentation for him, and the spoiling of his glory, from the 11th verse to the 19th.

III. A prophecy against Zidon, from the 20th verse to the 23rd.

IV. A prophecy of mercy unto the people of God, from the 24th to the end.

1. In the prophecy against the king of Tyrus, you have,

1. The authority of the prophecy, in ver. 1.

2. The sin that brought destruction upon him, which was his pride, ver. 2, occasioned from his seat, his wisdom, ver. 3, 4, and his wealth, ver. 4, 5.

3. The instruments the Lord would use in his destruction; and they were strangers, ver. 7; the manner of whose dealings with him is set out in ver. 8—10.

Ver. 1. "The word of the Lord came again," &c. Being to speak unto the king of Tyrus, he mentions his commission, that the Lord spake to him, and sent him, one greater than the king himself. Hereby the prophet made way for himself and his message to have the better entertainment; had he come of his own head, delivered things from his own spirit, he had rendered himself contemptible: what he had to declare unto the king, and against him, was not human, but revelation from the Lord.

Ver. 2. "Son of man." The "son of man" must utter the words of God. Heavenly treasure is put in earthen vessels, and makes them honourable. Ezekiel, though he were the "son of man," yet herein he was the servant of God. He sent him, and put his own words in his mouth, full of majesty, and to be believed, notwithstanding his meanness and frailty. This "son of man," is made a son of thunder against a proud and haughty prince.

"Say unto the prince of Tyrus." Some of the fathers do make this prince of Tyrus to be the devil; but they were much mistaken in so conceiving, for here are many things which are incompetent to him, especially what is said in ver. 7, 8. The words are to be taken literally of Ethbahal, or Ithobalus, who was at that time prince of Tyrus, unto whom this prophecy was directed, being in his glory and height; whereas Satan was cast out, and cast down into greater misery than here is mentioned, long before.

"Thus saith the Lord God." Prophets, being subject to the same infirmities and passions as others, are little regarded in the world, especially by princes. Ezekiel therefore must not speak his own words, but say, "Thus saith the Lord God." The Hebrew, Adonai Jehovah, are very significant words: Jehovah imports God's being, and giving being unto all things; Adonai, his supporting all in their beings, for it is from אדני a pillar, or foundation. Thus saith he, who hath his being of himself, and hath given being to heaven and earth, and all creatures therein, that upholds all by his power, even thee thyself, O prince of Tyrus; thus saith he unto thee.

"Because thine heart is lifted up." By "heart" understand not that little part of flesh in man wherein is the seat of life, but the thoughts, counsels, reasonings, designs, wisdom, workings, and contrivances of the heart: so "heart" is oft to be taken in Scripture; and it is lifted up, when it is carried out after high and great things. Psal. cxxxix. 1, "Lord, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty: neither do I exercise myself in great matters, or in things too high for me." Here you may see what it is to have the heart lifted up, or to be haughty; it is נבה in both places, and it is to have aspiring thoughts, to mind high things, to be designing and reaching after them, to have a high conceit of oneself, as this prince of Tyre had, who thought himself above the condition of mortal men; and so the counsels, reasonings, designs, and workings of his heart, were to become a god, and he blushed not to say it.

"Thou hast said, I am a god." Not, thou hast thought so, which had been too much, but, thou hast said it. The word אגיד sometimes notes purposing, determining, as in 2 Chron. ii. 1, "Solomon determined to build an house:" he said, that is, he purposed in himself to do it; but here it is more than purposing and determining, the prince of Tyrus "said," he spake it out, what he thought in his heart he uttered with his lips. "I am a god," El ani, I am the strong one, I give being to this city and state, I uphold the same, on me they all depend, from me they have counsel, comfort, and protection; I do what I list, my power extends far and near; I open the door and ports for all the isles and nations to trade with thee, O Tyrus, and I can prohibit them at my pleasure: I have filled thee with the riches and rarities of all the nations, I have done great things, I am beyond others, mighty and powerful, a god, and worthy of such honour as becomes the gods.

"I sit in the seat of God, in the midst of the seas." As God is in the heavens, which are inaccessible, none being able to come thither, to wrong or harm him; so am I in Tyrus, seated upon a rock, in the heart or "midst of the seas;" none can come at me to dome prejudice, I am without fear, I am in "the seat of God," not subject to the malice or power of any mortal whatsoever; all the merchants bring presents unto and adore me; I have power, wealth, honour, and all things glorious and delightful, my seat is no other than the "seat of God." Here was the great pride of this prince, who arrogated to himself a deity, and affected divine honour.

"Yet thou art a man, and not God." The Hebrew is, אתה איש ולא אל thou art of earth, and not of heaven; thou art a weak, sinful man, that canst do nothing for others or thyself; what! thou El, the strong God? no, thou forgettest what thou art; he that is El will break thee in pieces like a potter's vessel, and make thee know "thou art man, and not God," that there is no difference between thee and other men; if they be infirm and feeble things, subject to changes, sorrows, sicknesses, and death, so art thou.

"Though thou set thine heart as the heart of God." Thou hast had such thoughts of thy strength, thy glory, thy wisdom, that thou hast persuaded thyself thou art become a god, another god, or as God. The thoughts of God's heart are, that he is strong, glorious, great, and wise, and thou takest up his thoughts: by "heart," the thoughts, imaginations, and devices of it are meant. This prince of Tyrus dreamed, that he was as fit and able to rule in the seas as God was in heaven, and that his wisdom, strength, and government, made him as honourable and glorious as the Lord's made him, that he was invincible, like God himself.

Obs. 1. The Lord takes notice of men's hearts, in what frame they are. "Thine heart is lifted up." Men cannot look into the heart, being shut up in a house of clay; but the eyes of the Lord pierce through our mud walls, and behold our hearts, and the workings of them. 1 Sam. xvi. 7, "The Lord looketh on the heart:" we look upon actions, faces, outward appearances, but God looks inward, and fixes his eye upon the heart: and so, that he knows what is in the heart, and how it works, he understands all the thoughts thereof, and the imaginations of those thoughts, 1 Chron. xxviii. 9, not only the rude draught, but what imaginations are thereupon. He knows men's minds exactly, and can tell you whose hearts are proud and whose are humble, whose are froward and whose are meek, whose are chaste and whose unchaste.

Obs. 2. Princes and great ones are prone, not only to be proud, but to deify themselves. The prince of Tyrus his heart was lifted up, and he said, "I am a god." This is the height of pride, to make oneself a god, to arrogate that which is due unto the Lord. God had said it, "I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me," Isa. xli. 9; now what pride, what blasphemy was it for this prince to say, "I am a god!" There are two things which God challengeth to himself, "vengeance," Deut. xxxii. 35, and godship, Isa. xli. 8. This prince robbed God of one, making himself God. Sundry of the heathen emperors would either be called or worshipped as gods. Caligula made himself a god, erecting a temple with his image in it, ordaining priests and most costly sacrifices to be offered there to himself. Domitian by a public edict ordained, that in all writings wherein he should be mentioned upon any occasion, he should be called Dominus Deus, Lord God. A mad humour of deifying themselves also invaded Alexander the Great and Julius Cæsar. Such is the frame of antichrist's spirit, 2 Thess. ii. 4, "He as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God."

Obs. 3. Haughtiness and pride of spirit, do precede and presage the destruction of men. This prince was near unto utter ruin, and before it his heart was lifted up; he said, "I sit in the seat of God," I punish and I spare whom I please; and quickly after he was thrust out of his seat, and made an example of divine vengeance for his pride and presumption. Edom's heart was proud and high, even before the Lord threw her down, Obad 3, 4. The hearts of Samaria's inhabitants were greatly swollen with pride, and tympanized, when the Lord threatened to bring the adversaries of Rezin against them, Isa. ix. 9—11. Herod's pride bred the worms that did devour him. Prov. xvi. 18, "Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall."

Obs. 4. Whatever thoughts and conceits princes or others have of themselves, yet they are but dust and ashes, poor, inconsiderable things in respect of God. "Thou art a man and not God, though thou set thine heart as the heart of God." He was a worthless, despicable thing, notwithstanding he deified himself. Men fancy themselves Elohims, Jehovahs, when they are but Adams, and Enoshes. Jehoiakim made his nest in the cedars, when he was but earth, "a despised broken idol," Jer. xxii. 23, 28, 29. Great men have great thoughts, ranking themselves among the gods of the earth; but, as David expresseth it, "among the gods there is none like unto the Lord," Psal. lxxxvi. 8: they are carthen, proud, foolish, dying gods, Psal. lxxxii. 6, 7; but God is in heaven, holy, wise, ever-living: the greatest and best of the sons of men is no better than a brier or thorn to him, Isa. xxvii. 4; he is "a consuming fire," and what is a brier or thorn to such a fire! In Isa. xxxi. 3, it is said, "the Egyptians are men, and not God:" they had high thoughts of themselves, and the Jews had higher; they looked at them, and not at the Lord; they thought every Egyptian was El, a strong God; but the Egyptians were Adams, not El, men, and not God; the highest of them, their Pharaohs, were men, worms, grasshoppers, nothings, to that God they neglected, and that they should know, when he should stretch out his hand. God's thoughts and men's do differ exceedingly, they think themselves somebodies, as Simon Magus did, Acts viii. 9, gods as the prince of Tyrus here did; but, Psal. lxxii. 9, "Men of high degree are a lie," not lying, but a lie; and you know a lie is that which hath no truth in it, no substance, no weight: they think themselves solid, substantial, massy pieces; but they deceive themselves, and others, not God, who tells them they are a lie, false, vain, and empty things. And not only some men, but even all men are so in his eye; Isa. xl. 17, "All nations before him are as nothing; and they are counted to him less than nothing, and vanity." That all are as nothing before him who is infinite, easily will be granted; but that they are less than nothing in his account, this seems strange and questionable. How can all the nations be less than nothing? the sense is, they are extremely inconsiderable. The words in the original are rendered thus by Montanus, They are viewed by him as nothing and vanity; for nothing and emptiness they are reputed or accounted to him, or he reckons them as a thing of nought, and vain.

Ver. 3. "Behold, thou art wiser than Daniel." The Tyrians were wise men, Zech. ix. 2; Ezek. xxvii. 8; 2 Chron. ii. 14; and it is probable their kings were wise, well seen into sea, military, and political affairs; and that the prince of Tyre, here spoken of, was one of the wisest of them, but puffed up with a conceit of more wisdom than he had; therefore here the Lord, in an ironical way, as expositors conceive, gives him a check, saying, "Behold, thou art wiser than Daniel;" thou makest thyself a god, as if thou knewest all things, which Daniel did not. The Septuagint reads the words by way of interrogation, Art thou wiser than Daniel? The words by some are taken by way of concession, Thou sayest thou sittest in the seat of God, and hast a heart as the heart of God; be it so; behold, then, thou art wiser than Daniel; he knew some secrets, thou knowest all. Daniel was very wise, he would not defile himself with the king's meat or wine, Dan. i. 8; he revealed and interpreted the king's dreams, chap. ii. and iv.; he read and interpreted the writings upon the wall, which none of the wise men could do, chap. v.; he had an excellent spirit in him, and was chief president over the one hundred and twenty princes that were set over the whole kingdom; and when the two other presidents, and all the rest of the princes, envied him, and sought occasion against him, he had carried things so wisely and well, that they could find no occasion against him, chap. vi. Daniel had natural, political, and spiritual wisdom, insomuch that it grew into a proverb, "wiser than Daniel." His wisdom was great, dispersed far, and known to the eastern and other parts of the world, and even to Tyrus, which had trading from all parts; and because the prince of it was so wise in his own conceit, the Lord gives him a notable twitch here, "Behold, thou art wiser than Daniel."

"There is no secret that they can hide from thee." Thou art so possessed with opinion of thy wisdom, that thou conceivest nothing can be kept secret or hid from thee. The Hebrew word for "secret" is, סֵתֵר sathum, which signifies a thing shut up; and what is so, is secret and hidden from others: as Dan. viii. 26, "Shut up the vision, for it is for many days." The vision being sealed and "shut up," it was not knowable for a season, men could not tell what was therein, it was hid from them. But this prince of Tyre took upon him to know secrets, and things shut up from the vulgar, and wise also. In the original, the words stand thus, every hidden thing they do not hide from thee; here an active is put for a passive verb, and carries this sense, Every hidden thing is not hid from thee, thou art so wise as that thou piercest into secrets, dark and deep things; thou art a God, and what can men hide, or what can be hidden from thee? The words are spoken ironically, or according to the opinion men had of him.

Obs. 1. Wisdom makes men honourable and famous. Daniel was wise, and his wisdom begat such a high esteem of him, that it became a proverb, "wiser than Daniel." Nebuchadnezzar honoured Daniel much, when he acknowledged Daniel's wisdom to be ten times better than the wisdom of all the astrologers and magicians that were in his realm, Dan. i. 20; but God honoured him more, when he made his wisdom exemplary, and proverbial throughout the world. Wisdom is from God, a "principal thing," Prov. iv. 7; it makes men of an "excellent spirit," Dan. v. 12; Prov. xvii. 27, directing to do like unto God; hence it is, that men endued with it are honourable and renowned. David was wise, and his wisdom is recorded in holy writ for his honour; 1 Sam. xviii. 5, 15, 30, he behaved himself wisely, very wisely, "more wisely than all the servants of Saul;" the widow of Tekoah compared his wisdom to the "wisdom of an angel," 2 Sam. xiv. 20. Solomon was wise, yea, "wiser than all men, than Ethan the Ezrabite, and Heman, and Chalcol, and Darda;" these were wise men, and honoured for their wisdom, but Solomon above them all; his wisdom spread into all courts, and unto all kings of the earth, 1 Kings iv. 31, 34. This made Solomon to say, "The wise shall inherit glory," Prov. iii. 35: a son of wisdom is an heir to glory; he shall not have flitting glory, but fixed, such glory as shall be his inheritance.

Obs. 2. Men know not what themselves are. "Thou art wiser than Daniel." Thou thinkest thyself to be very wise, whereas thou art ignorant, and foolish, and dost manifest it to the full. The irony in the words speaks this out unto us; for an irony is a trope, putting one contrary for another: here wisdom is mentioned, and by it the prince's foolishness is declared; it was so in him, to think himself a God, that he knew every secret; he did not know himself, that is a hard lesson. The apostle tells us, 1 Cor. viii. 2, that "if any man," be he prince, or of what condition soever, "thinketh that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know." When men conceit they know something, this puffs them up, makes them despise and neglect others, and they know nothing rightly; for right knowledge of things would make men humble, and direct them to use their talents to the good of others, the glory of the giver, considering they must give account thereof ere long. The doctrine of self-knowledge is out of practice; men study to know other men, other countries, what news, but are strangers to themselves. Hazael knew not himself; when the prophet told him what strange things he should do, he was conceited that such cruelty could not harbour in his nature, 2 Kings viii. 12, 13. The Pharisee knew not himself, when he justified himself so above the publican, Luke xviii. 11. It is the common evil of the world, that men do not know themselves, what in truth they are. Laodicea knew not herself; she said she was rich, increased with goods, and wanted nothing, she knew not that she was wretched, poor, blind, and naked.

Obs. 3. That ironical speeches are not unwarrantable. "Thou art wiser than Daniel;" thou knowest all secrets. They have some tartness in them, yet are frequently used in the word, both by God himself, and his holy servants.

(1.) By God himself. Gen. iii. 22, "Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil." God had made man after his own image, but he, by believing Satan, telling him he should be as God, knowing good and evil, if he ate of the forbidden fruit, lost that image; and here God upbraids him for it, "Behold, Adam is become as one of us." The meaning is, he is now altogether unlike us, he is deduced by the serpent, and become abominable like the serpent himself: in this expression God laughed him to scorn for his folly. In Judg. x. you have another ironical passage of the Lord's; it is ver. 14, "Go and cry unto the gods which ye have chosen, let them deliver you in the time of your tribulation." Here God cuts them to the quick for their wickedness, idolatry, and blindness: You have been weary of me, better gods have you spied out, chosen, and served, gods that can do great things for you; why come you to me in your straits? go, get you to your new gods; let them, who have had your worship, arise, appear, act for, and deliver you. Such is that of Christ, Mark vii. 9, "Full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition." Did they well to reject God's commands and set up men's traditions? no, they did exceeding ill in it, and that is the mind of Christ; when he saith, "full well," he speaks ironically, and intimates they did extremely evil, most wickedly.

(2.) By men, that were precious in the sight of God. Micaiah being demanded of Ahab, whether he should go up to Ramoth-gilead to battle, said, "Go, and prosper; for the Lord shall deliver it into the hand of the king," 2 Kings xxii. 15. Take the words as they seem to sense, it here is good encouragement, but so they contradict ver. 17, and 28; they are therefore a bitter irony, or sarcasm: All your prophets encourage you to go, and you expect the same from me; well, go, and prosper; his meaning is, go, and perish, that is the spirit and true sense of the words. Job xii. 2, "No doubt but ye are the people, and wisdom shall die with you." Job's friends thought him a silly man compared to them, no better than a beast, chap. xi. 12; but here he hits them home for it: No doubt you are the only people in the world for wit and wisdom, you are the only knowing and all-knowing men, and when you die, there will be a death of all wisdom, the world left in a sad case, having not a wise man in it. Job, by a holy irony, batters the conceit they had of their own wisdom.

Ver. 4. "With thy wisdom and with thine understanding," &c. The king of Tyrus was expert in civil affairs, and by that skill he had therein, he got unto himself much wealth. The Spirit of God calls the cunning and craft he had in worldly affairs, "wisdom and understanding." It cannot be meant of spiritual wisdom, for, Prov. iii. 13, that makes blessed, and this prince was under the curse and judgments of God. He was worldly wise, and set his wisdom on work to get riches.

"Thou hast gotten thee riches." The Hebrew is, thou hast made to thyself riches. The word for "riches" is, כֶּסֶף which the Septuagint renders, ἐνάμαρ, power; the Vulgate, strength; and ours, "riches;" for "riches," to rich men's apprehensions, do add strength and power to them. This king made himself rich, and so strong and powerful by his riches. He had all sorts of riches, chap. xxvii.

"And hast gotten gold and silver into thy treasures." The Hebrew for "treasure" is, אוֹצָר, otzar, from אָצַר to gather together, to lay up, and it notes both the treasure, and the place where the treasure is laid up; and so it may do here: the king of Tyre had gotten gold and silver into his treasures, that is, among his other treasures he had them, or, they were in his treasury.

Ver. 5. "By thy great wisdom and by thy traffick hast thou," &c. Thou art very wise in thy own opinion, and thou art grown exceeding rich by thy trading and merchandizing with other nations, but thou attributest all to thine own wisdom and industry, nothing is given unto me, no mention is made of me. This king was a great merchant, did mightily increase in wealth, was reputed wise, but was really foolish, as the next words declare.

"Thine heart is lifted up because of thy riches." He had a mountain of wealth, and that made his heart mountainous, his riches puffed him up; he should have been the more humble, having much to answer for, but he was the more haughty, confident, secure, and fearless of danger; he thought, being so rich and great as he was, that he could do any thing, yea, all things.

Obs. 1. That by skill and industry men grow wealthy. The prince of Tyre had insight into trading, which he employed, and so made himself rich. Solomon tells you, Prov. x. 4, that "the hand of the diligent maketh rich:" there is much in diligence to advance a man's estate, especially when diligence and skill go together, when a diligent hand is ordered by a wise head; if there be actings without skill, little will be produced, if skill without acting, nothing comes thereof; where these go together, often they bring in great wealth. Some besides their skill, use craft and cunning, and so suddenly get great estates.

Obs. 2. Great men are prone to covetousness, and lay out themselves to get wealth. "Thou," even the prince of Tyre, "hast gotten thee riches; by thy traffick hast thou increased thy riches." He was covetous, and traded with the isles and nations to feed his covetous humour. Princes are forbidden to multiply gold and silver to themselves, Deut. xvii. 17; they may lose the hearts of their people by it, yea, they may lose themselves also thereby; but this prince made it his work to increase wealth, which is the practice of most princes and people in the world. Men's corrupt natures and carnal wisdom carry them unto it: Prov. xxiii. 4, "Labour not to be rich; cease from thine own wisdom." Men's wisdom puts them on to be rich, it heartens them thereunto, but it is such wisdom as the Scripture condemns. The Arabian proverb is, Justice and covetousness dwell not together: a just man covets not what is another's, but a covetous man will have the prey wherever he finds it, and violate bounds to satisfy his lusts. Ahab's sickness was not cured, till he had eaten Naboth's vineyard and drunk his blood.

There is a story among the Arabians, of one that had the world presented to him in the shape of an old woman, whom he asked, how many husbands she had? she said, innumerable. The party asked what was become of them? she said, she had killed them all. Then it was replied by the party, I wonder that other men are so foolish, that, seeing how thou hast used thy former husbands, they should still be in love with thee.

Obs. 3. Prosperity makes men proud and insolent. "Thine heart is lifted up because of thy riches:" they begat great thoughts in him, and swelled his heart above his brethren. It is hard to keep the heart low in prosperity. It is a common saying, and too true, As rises my good, so rises my blood. Beggars having gotten estates, account themselves princes; and princes being rich, think themselves gods. When Amaziah prospered in his war against the Edomites, his heart was lifted up, and being but a thistle, he accounted himself a cedar, 2 Chron. xxv.: prosperity begets cedarish spirits. Hos. xiii. 6, "They were filled, and their heart was exalted;" when they had plenty, then they grew proud, and forgot God. There is an aptness in men to dote upon the creature, when they have much, and to magnify themselves. This Agur knew when he prayed that God would not give him riches, lest he should be full and deny God. Men are ready to attribute their riches to their wisdom, industry, favour of their friends, &c.: hereby they exclude and deny God, they allow him no hand, no interest therein; they say, Who is the Lord, that we should be thankful unto him? we are not beholden at all to him, or very little; and thus they deny and belie the Lord too, as the word cathash signifies. You that prosper in this world, take heed to your hearts, lest being drunk with this wine, you discover your nakedness.

Ver. 6, 7. "Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because thou hast set thine heart as the heart of God; behold, therefore I will bring strangers upon thee." Here the Lord tells the prince of Tyrus what he must look for at his hands for his sins, especially his pride; because he magnified himself, and would be as God, therefore he must expect destruction.

"Because thou hast set thine heart as the heart of God." The Hebrew is, hast given thine heart as the heart of God: Thou hast given liberty to thy heart, to think high and great things; yea, to think thyself equal with God. He thought the infinite, glorious, great God, had not other thoughts in him, or vaster than himself, and this was setting his heart as the heart of God.

"I will bring strangers upon thee." That is, Nebuchadnezzar, with his forces gathered up out of several provinces, Ezek. xxvi. 7; they were men of a strange language, of strange manners, and out of strange countries, they were strangers to the Tyrians.

"The terrible of the nations." The word for "terrible" is, ארצה aritze, which Montanus renders, the strong; the Vulgate, the most mighty; Vatablus, the tyrants of the nations; Septuagint saith, λοιποίς, pestilent men, that should be as a plague or pestilence is to a town or country; ours, the "terrible;" ארץ aratz signifies, through power to be formidable to others; so should the Chaldeans be to the Tyrians.

"They shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom." By "beauty of wisdom," understand whatever beautiful things the prince had gotten by his wisdom, as beautiful shipping, beautiful army, beautiful treasure and riches, a beautiful city, a beautiful throne, &c. The Chaldeans should come, and destroy all the beauty of his wisdom, all that by his policy and craft he had gotten. Or thus; Thou thinkest by thy counsels, art, and devices, to prevent the taking of the city, and thyself, which couldst thou do, it would make thy wisdom beautiful and glorious; but they shall draw their swords, and prevail against all thy counsels, machinations, plots, and attempts to secure the city and thyself.

"They shall defile thy brightness." Thou art now in a glorious kingdom, and shinest upon thy seat and throne, all the isles and nations behold thy splendour; but the Chaldeans shall come and cut thee off, and "defile thy brightness" with thine own blood; they shall take away thy kingly dignity and life also.

Ver. 8. "They shall bring thee down to the pit." The word for "pit" is, בור which signifies corruption, and also a pit, or grave, because that is the place of corruption; men in their graves do see corruption, they turn to dust. It is a proverbial speech, noting death: Prov. xxviii. 17. "A man that doeth violence to the blood of any person shall flee to the pit," that is, be cut off, and thrown into the grave; so here, the strangers should cut off the prince of Tyrus, and cause him to perish.

"Thou shalt die the deaths of them that are slain in the midst of the seas." Thou art in a city upon a rock, well walled, fortified, and manned, thou thinkest thyself secure, invincible; but thou shalt be like those who are slain at sea, and thrown overboard, or sunk into the depths thereof. For kings to be slain by foreigners is dishonourable; when slain, not to be buried as kings, is a greater dishonour; to be cast out, and drowned as common men, is a height of dishonour.

Ver. 9. "Wilt thou yet say before him that slayeth thee, I am God?" Thou hast said that thou art a god; but when the enemy shall be before thy gates, when he shall seize upon thee, and be ready to thrust thee through, what wilt thou then say? wilt thou say thou art a God? no, thou wilt show thyself a man, thou wilt be full of fears, and at thy wit's end.

"Thou shalt be a man, and no God, in the hand of him that slayeth thee." Then shall the vanity of thy thoughts appear, thou shalt see thyself a man, and not God: thou hast thought thyself Él, the strong, powerful, and stable God, but thou shalt find thyself Adam, weakness, misery, instability.

Ver. 10. "Thou shalt die the deaths of the uncircumcised." These words may be taken two ways: either, thou shalt die by the hand of those that are uncircumcised; thou shalt not have the honour to die by the hand of the Jews, who by circumcision are distinguished from all other, thou shalt die by Chaldeans, a profane and barbarous people: or, thou shalt die the death of the uncircumcised, that is, thou shalt so die, as to perish soul and body for ever; thou hast exalted thyself to be a god, and thou shalt be cast into hell. The nations who were uncircumcised were without God, without Christ, Eph. ii. 12, and so perished.

"For I have spoken it, saith the Lord God." Thou mayst contemn this prophecy, and think there is nothing in it; but know, it is not the voice of man, like thyself, but the voice of God, who will fulfil it, and make thee know that thou art man, and not God, that thou hast sinned greatly in comparing thyself with God.

Obs. 1. Haughtiness and pride of spirit provokes God to deal severely with men. "Because thou hast set thine heart as the heart of God, therefore will I bring strangers upon thee, the terrible of the nations." God stirred up, led out, the most terrible of the Babylonians to punish the prince of Tyrus for his pride and insolency. Theudas boasted himself to be somebody, drew followers after him; but he and they were all slain by the just judgment of God, Acts v. 36. Zeba and Zalmunna said, "Let us take to ourselves the houses of God in possession," Psal. lxxxiii. 12; they had aspiring spirits, but the Lord cut them off by the hand of Gideon, Judg. viii. 21. Proud spirits the Lord will meet with, and break in pieces; he hath said it, Isa. ii. 11, "The lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down." Let those that have much, look to it that they be not lifted up, lest they fall, be broken, and rise no more.

Obs. 2. That which is the glory and delight of men, is subject to spoil and profanation. "They shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom, and they shall defile thy brightness." They laid all the glory of Tyrus, and of the prince thereof, in the dust: there was beauty and brightness in the court, in the city, in the navy, in the armoury, in the treasury; but when the Chaldean came, he spoiled, he stained all: it was not the wisdom of the Tyrian, nor the beauty or brightness of the things, that could keep off the enemies from plundering and profaning; they minded not beauty or brightness, wisdom, real or pretended, but they lay all waste, cut off the prince, and make a beautiful glorious city as a heap of rubbish, or as nothing.

Obs. 3. Approachings of death will make men know themselves. When this prince of Tyrus should be in the hand of his enemies, and at death's door, then he should see that he was no God, but a poor, miserable, mortal man; when death comes, and strikes upon our walls, then we understand ourselves. Psal. ix. 20, "Put them in fear, O Lord; that the nations may know themselves to be but men." When nations prosper, have all things as heart desires, they judge themselves more than men, they are petty gods; but let the Lord send in some sore judgments, that carry death in their foreheads, then the nations will know themselves to be but men; that is, sorry, fading, perishing things: though death shut all men's eyes, yet the approach of death opens them oft to see more of themselves than ever before.

Obs. 4. That wicked princes and others, however they may flourish in the world for a season, yet their ends will be miserable. "Thou shalt die the deaths of the uncircumcised;" a temporal death here, eternal death hereafter, therefore envy not great ones, who flourish here in the world for a season, and after go down to the pit, where they shall suffer sufficiently for their demerit.

Ver. 11—15. Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, take up a lamentation upon the king of Tyrus, and say unto him, Thus saith the Lord God; Thou sealest up the sum, full of wisdom, and perfect in beauty. Thou hast been in Eden the garden of God; every precious stone was thy covering, the sardius, topaz, and the diamond, the beryl, the onyx, and the jasper, the sapphire, the emerald, and the carbuncle, and gold: the workmanship of thy tabrets and of thy pipes was prepared in thee in the day that thou wast created. Thou art the anointed cherub that covereth; and I have set thee so: thou wast upon the holy mountain of God; thou hast walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire. Thou wast perfect in thy ways from the day that thou wast created, till iniquity was found in thee.

Here begins the second general part of the chapter, viz. a lamentation for the prince of Tyrus, and the corrupting of his glory. Besides the lamentation, and authority of it, in ver. 11, 12, you have,

1. The state of this prince, set out from his power, wisdom, wealth, delights, and greatness, ver. 12—15.

2. The cause that his state and glory were destroyed, ver. 15.

Ver. 12. "Take up a lamentation upon the king of Tyrus." In chap. xxvii. 2, the Lord bade him "take up a lamentation for Tyrus;" and here he bids him take up one for "the king of Tyrus," bewail his condition, for he should suffer as well as the city; and though he were a heathen king, yet the Lord would have him to be lamented, the prophet must weep over him.

"Thou sealest up the sum." The Hebrew is, תִּסְגֹּר אֶת־הַסּוּמָה which Montanus renders, Tu sigillam dispositionem: Septuagint, ὁ ἀποσφραγίζουσα διουσίωσας; the Vulgate, Tu signaculum similitudinis. Ours is, "Thou sealest up the sum:" thou having power over all the commodities to be carried out or brought in, sayest how much and how little shall be exported and imported. "Thou sealest up the sum," thou puttest the last hand to the business, and dost complete it; thus some expositors interpret the words. Others, considering tachnith is from tachan, to weigh, to measure, and notes a thing measured, according to all its dimensions, they make the sense this; Thou art an absolute and complete king, whatever is wanting in others is found in thee; "thou sealest up the sum;" others want wisdom, riches, power, friends, thou hast all that conduceth to the greatness and happiness of a prince. When bags have all the money in them they should have, and writings all things inscribed which should be there, then they are sealed; so this king, in his own conceit, or apprehension of others, had all a king should have, and therefore the seal is set upon him; "thou sealest up the sum," thou art εἰκὼν βασιλείης, a picture and pattern for all kings.

"Full of wisdom." This prince seemed very wise, having his head filled with cunning, and skill in naval, mercatory, and political affairs. When princes know a little in any thing, they are applauded and magnified for knowing men, but if they have got some deeper insight into things than others, then they are deified.

"Perfect in beauty." This perfection of beauty lay in his buildings, shipping, riches, laws, government, soldiery, court, &c. in all which appeared much beauty and glory. The 27th chapter sets out the beauty and glory of Tyrus, which was also the king's.

Ver. 13. "Thou hast been in Eden the garden of God." Gen. ii. 8, it is said, "God planted a garden eastward in Eden." This Eden was a region in Mesopotamia, or Babylonia, which was a most pleasant place. The word "Eden" signifies delight, and pleasantness. In it God made a garden, which is a place enclosed, separated from what is common; a garden, is from גן to protect, or compass about, because it is fenced in, and so protected from violence and spoil. This garden being planted by God in so pleasant a place as Eden was, exceeded it far, and was such a paradise as never eye saw since. Pleasant and delightful places are likened unto the same, and called Edens, and the gardens of God, Gen. xiii. 18; Joel ii. 3; Ezek. xxxvi. 35. So Tyre, though situate upon a rock, was by the art and industry of man made an Eden, as "the garden of God," very pleasant and delightful: the prince of it was in a paradise, wherein he had all things desirable.

"Every precious stone was thy covering." The merchants of Syria, of Sheba, and Raamah, brought precious stones of all sorts unto Tyrus, chap. xxvii. 16, 22; the chief whereof were set in his crown, canopies, tents, garments, beds, hangings, and other utensils. Princes spare not for cost; if any stone be more precious than others, they will have them, and beautify themselves and theirs with the same.

"The sardius." In Hebrew אדם adam, from אדם which signifieth, to be red, for it is of a fleshy or blood colour. It is called "sardius," because the best of them are found in Sardinia. This stone was the first in the breastplate of Aaron, Exod. xxviii. 17. The Chaldee calls it, samkan, which Shindler interprets, the ruby, or "sardius." The Romans of old used this stone, being hard and firm, for seals. Much virtue is attributed to this stone, as, to drive away fear, to make confident, to preserve from witchery and poisoning, &c.

"Topaz." The Hebrew word is, פידה pitdah, which the Septuagint renders, τοπάζιον, and so it is called, Rev. xxi. 20. This stone for colour is of a greenish yellow, or yellowish green, such a colour as is in fern, yellow and green together. Some make two sorts of them, one very green and clear, called prasioides, another like pure gold, called chrysopteros. It is the greatest of all precious stones, saith Pliny, and it is so named a "topaz," from Plin. l. 57. c. 3.

Topazon, an island in the Red sea; yet there were topazes from other places: Job xxviii. 19, "The topaz of Ethiopia shall not equal it;" though those topazes were very precious, yet not comparable to wisdom. The "topaz" is commended for that virtue it hath to stop eruptions of blood, to restrain passion and wanton lusts, to help against melancholy, deliriums, phrenzies, falling sickness, and sudden death.

"And the diamond." יהלם which some render, the jasper; others better, the adamant, or "diamond," for jahalon is from הלם contondere, to break in pieces: the "adamant" is of that hardness, that it breaks all other precious stones, and continues unbroken itself. In Arabic it is, diamah, from דום dim, to abide, because of its durability. It is not so clear as the crystal, but sparkles and sends forth fiery or bright beams, like the sun. Philosophers say the diamond is of great use against poisons and enchantments, that it prevents madness, vain fears, and scarings in the sleep; it pacifies fury and enmity between parties, and maintains love in the nearest relations; at its presence, the loadstone loseth its attractive virtue.

"The beryl." Some have it the hyacinth, some the chrysolite. The Hebrew is, תְּרִישִׁי which is the sea-beryl, because it resembles the greenness of the sea. Of this stone was spoken, chap. i. ver. 16. Some make it to be of a bluish colour. There are several kinds of them, the best are of a sea-green colour. Watery eyes, sighing, liver-griefs, dulness, are helped by the virtue of this stone; it is beneficial to the brain.

"The onyx." It is a precious stone, like the nail of a man's hand for whiteness. The Hebrew is שָׁהוּם shoham, translated sometimes a sardonyx, sometimes an "onyx," but Rucus makes a difference between them. The Septuagint is very uncertain in the translation of this word shoham, the onyx, as you may see in De Dieu, upon Exod. xxviii, p. 76, and in Martinus, on the word "onyx."

"The jasper." The Hebrew being יַסְפֵּה demonstrates no other stone can be admitted here but only the jasper, which is a stone of much worth and glory: Rev. iv. 3, the glory of God and Christ upon the throne in heaven is likened therunto: as also the light and glory of the new Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. 11; yea, they were jasper stones which made the first foundation in the walls thereof, ver. 19. Isidore calls it the green gem, or precious stone. There are many kinds of jaspers, green, blue, airy, white, ruddy, purple, spotted. Onkelus turns the word jaspeh, in Exod. xxviii. pantree; and Jonathan, in this place of Ezekiel, pantherin, a panthera bestia, because the jasper is spotted like the panther. The green Indian jasper is the chiefest of them all.

Lib 37. c. 9. Pliny affirms he saw a jasper so great, that it weighed eleven ounces. They are preservative against all poisons, dropsies, fevers, restrain blood and sweat, and refresh the eyes with their greenness.

"The sapphire." Of the sapphire was largely spoken, chap. i. 26. Its colour is like the heavens, azure, or blue, and transparent. There are some sapphires white, others blue, these are the males, the other females, saith Bætius, in his second book Of Gems. The best of this kind of stones come from the Medes. The virtue of this stone is much; it is a friend to chastity, it is powerful against anger, envy, deceitfulness, sadness; it is good against poisons, ruptures, &c.

"The emerald." נֶפֶךְ in Hebrew. Montanus makes it the carbuncle; Shindler, the smaragd; others, the chrysoprase; and so it is termed here in the margin; and so in chap. xxvii. 16, the margin is, chrysoprase. It is for colour a golden green, like a leek, inclining to yellow green. The best sort of emeralds, or chrysoprases, are those which have golden drops or spots on them. The true beauty and glory of these stones is seen only in the dark. They are comfortable to weak eyes, refresh the heart.

"The carbuncle." It is a precious stone, so called from the shining of it. The name of it in Hebrew is, בִּרְקָה from בָּרַק which signifies, lightning, shining. De Dieu saith it is a stone that shines like lightning. Some would have it to be the smaragd, but Mercer and Shindler judge bareketh to be the carbuncle; and so Danaeus, who saith, the smaragd doth not resemble the brightness of lightning, but the carbuncle, and at midnight, like the sun, it enlightens dark places near unto it. In Chaldee it is called בִּרְקָן barkan, which by a transposition of letters is קִרְבָּן carban, whence carbunculus. Of all flaming gems, it is counted the chief, and called "carbuncle," being like a burning coal: some call it, approtus, because no fire will hurt it. Those who write of it say, it comprehends the virtues of all other precious stones.

"And gold." The Hebrew for "gold" is, זָהָב zahab, or zahaf, which hath affinity with צָהָב tzahab, which signifies, yellow; and it is called, aurum ab aura, as Isidore observes, because it is shining, or pure, as the air; and zahaf metaphorically is put for that which is pure, shining. Job xxxvii. 22, "Fair weather cometh out of the north." The Hebrew is, zahaf, gold comes out of the north; the meaning is, clear and pure air, like gold, comes out of that part of the world. So, Zech. iv. 12, the golden pipes are said to empty gold, for so is the original. The meaning is, oil which is pure, and in colour and brightness like gold.

"The workmanship of thy tabrets and of thy pipes was prepared in thee in the day that thou wast created." In the day of his birth, or of his being made king, there was great rejoicing, all instruments of music were used; "tabrets" and "pipes" being put for all the rest by a synecdoche. The Tyrians delighted in music, chap. xxvi. 13, and upon such occasions, as the birth and coronation of princes, they greatly rejoiced, and made use of their choicest instruments.

"The workmanship of thy tabrets." The word for workmanship is מְלָאכֶת mela'keth; mela'chah signifies, saith Kirker, any thing that is for the service or use of man, whether arts, cattle, or any thing gotten by industry. Here it notes, that artifice was in their "tabrets and pipes;" they were curiously made and wrought, they were not common ones, but the choicest the art of man could produce.

"And of thy pipes." The Vulgate reads the words thus, thy holes, which Maldonate and some others do interpret "pipes," because they are full of holes; for קָבִים the Hebrew for "pipes," is from קָבַ to bore through, and "pipes" are so.

"Was prepared in thee." How they were "prepared" in the king is hard to conceive: Piscator renders it, with thee, or, before thee, at the time of thy creation.

"In the day that thou wast created." Creation is proper to God, and is the production of an entity, or creature, out of nothing, as Gen. i. 1; and sometimes it is called creating, when of pre-existent matter a thing is made new, that it was not before, as man out of the earth; Gen. ii. 7, with Gen. i. 27, he is said to be "created;" and metaphorically it is applied to men, when they are made that which they were not; those who make them so are said to create, and those made so, to be "created;" hence, when men are raised by others, they are called their creatures.

Obs. 1. When men have natural or acquired excellences beyond others, and abuse them, it is matter of mourning. "Take up a lamentation upon the king of Tyrus;" he had more wisdom, beauty, blessing, prosperity, and abundance, than others, but he abused all; his heart was lift up, he honoured not God with what he had, and therefore Ezekiel must lament: so chap. xix. 1, he must lament for the princes of Israel, who abused their power, places, parts, and blessings they had.

Obs. 2. Choice accomplishments, with outward glory and greatness, are no arguments of God's grace, or God's special favour towards men. Heathens, and the worst of men, have had these; the prince of Tyrus, who blasphemously said he was a god, he sealed up the sun; he was a complete prince, he had choice endowments, he was full of wisdom, perfect in beauty, he had outward glory and greatness as much as any, he was seated in a paradise, he glistened with pearls and precious stones, he had as choice music as was to be had: yet notwithstanding all these, he was a wretched man, under the curse of God, and was to die the death of the uncircumcised. What vanity is it, therefore, to pride ourselves in any human excellences, to set our hearts upon, or confide in, any outward glory or greatness!

Ver. 14. "Thou art the anointed chernub." Here the prince of Tyrus is compared unto an angel. Angels in Scripture are called "cherubims," Gen. iii. 24. The resemblances between him and them take in these particulars:

1. They are full of knowledge and wisdom, 2 Sam. xiv. 20; and it is said of this king, that he was full of wisdom.

2. They are beautiful and glorious creatures; Luke ix. 26, Christ shall come in the "glory of the angels;" so this king was perfect in beauty, and full of glory, being adorned with such precious stones as he was.

3. They are highly exalted above others, having great power and command; see Dan. x. 13, 20; 2 Kings xix. 35; they are called "principalities and powers," Eph. iii. 10: so this king was exalted above others, he had great power and command, so that he was dreadful, as the cherubims that kept the way into Paradise.

"Anointed." The cherubims above the ark, or mercy-seat, were anointed with oil, Exod. xxx. 26; to which here may be an allusion, "thou art the anointed cherub," or, thou thinkest thyself so: or it may be spoken in reference to the kings of Israel and high priest, who were anointed, and so had many prerogatives thereupon; and this man, being made king of Tyrus, had great privileges and prerogatives.

"That covereth." The cherubims had wings which covered the ark, Exod. xxv. 20; and this king had wings of power, stretched out at sea and land, to cover and protect his people. Kirker. The Hebrew word is, הכסוך from כסך which is, to hide by covering over; a hen hides her chickens by putting her wings over them: it notes also, to protect; when things are covered, they are protected.

"I have set thee so." Thou wast made king, hadst great honour, privileges, and power, thou wast above others; and how camest thou to all this? It was not by any other than myself, "I have set thee so." The Hebrew is, I have given thee, that is, into such dignity and greatness.

"Thou wast upon the holy mountain of God." Some refer this to Hiram furnishing Solomon with materials to build the temple; but this sense of the words is in nowise entertainable, for Hiram was dead long before, and here the prophet speaks of one that was then to be destroyed. Piscator senses the words thus, Thou hast been so gorgeously attired, as if thou wert the high priest of my people, when he is in his robes. Others make this sense, Thou wast as one upon the holy mountain of God. Tyrus is likened to mount Zion, the king to a cherub in the temple, thereupon it is called the "holy mountain," by way of resemblance; or because Tyre belonged to the tribe of Asher, it was within their lot, Josh. xix. 24, 29, and therefore belonging to God's people; and being on the borders of Canaan, it might be called "holy." If any should question whether Tyrus were on a mountain, know, that in the Scripture, cities, for their high buildings and strong defences, are called "mountains." though they be not on mountains; as, Jer. li. 25, "Behold, I am against thee, O destroying mountain;" it is spoken of Babylon, which was not upon a mountain, but in a plain, upon many waters, ver. 13. So Tyrus, for its high buildings, strong walls, and defences, may be called a "mountain;" but Tyrus was upon a rock, which was high above the waters, if not above the rest of the earth. Some tell us Tyrus was upon a great mountain, and things which are great, and goodly to see unto, are said to be the Lord's.

"Thou hast walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire." What these "stones of fire" are, hath exercised the heads of men to find out. Some make them the angels, who, Heb. i. 7, are called "a flame of fire;" some will have them to be the two tables of stone given at mount Sinai in fire; some assert them to be the people of the Jews, who for their holiness, zeal, and love, are called "stones of fire;" some tell you they were the precious stones in the temple at Jerusalem, or the common stones gilded over; others by these understand men of excellent parts, spirits, and abilities, with whom the king of Tyre conversed. But these have overlooked the truth lying near at hand, for these "stones of fire" are the precious stones mentioned in the former verse, and are so called for their shining and glistening like fire, especially the carbuncles and diamonds, which sparkle, and seem to cast out fire. Sanctius saith, he walked in the midst of the stones of fire, because his royal palace shined with such stones as might well be called "stones of fire." The Jews at this time were not so holy as to be called or counted "stones of fire," they "committed adultery with stones and stocks," Jer. iii. 9; and were "stones of darkness," Job xxviii. 3, rather than "stones of fire."

Ver. 15. "Thou wast perfect in thy ways." The Septuagint hath the words thus, ὁ ἀμωμος ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις σου, thou wast faultless, or spotless, in thy days; thou didst keep thyself free from those pollutions which kings usually are defiled with. The Hebrew is, thou wast perfect in thy ways; not in a moral sense, as if he were without sin, but in a political sense; he prospered in what he did, in his naval, military, court, and state affairs; he was successful, he wanted nothing pertaining to kingly greatness, he had all things which might make him complete and glorious.

"From the day that thou wast created." From the time of making thee king. In the day he was "created," all sorts of music were used then, ver. 13; and from that time he had all things conducive to royal greatness.

"Till iniquity was found in thee." There were some sins in this prince which were very provoking.

1. His insulting at the destruction of Jerusalem, which you have, chap. xxvi. 2, "Tyre hath said, Aha, she is broken that was the gates of the people." Tyrus, that was, the king of Tyrus, and the people, they insulted over the Jews in their misery.

2. His excessive pride in making himself a god, or as God. These were iniquities, and whilst he was free from them, he prospered, his actions were commendable; but when these sprung up, and were discovered, then the Lord threatened him with destruction, and hastened his ruin. The words are spoken of God, after the manner of men; as men search and find out things, so God is here said to do; his finding out is making known things.

Obs. 1. Princes, and men in supreme power, are honourable; they are cherubs, or cherubims, next unto God; in whose word they have many honourable titles given them. They are called "shields,"

Hos. iv. 18, the word for "rulers" is, shields, in the Hebrew; and "shields of the earth," Psal. xlvii. 9; they protect the state where they live. Ezek. xvii. 3, they are named eagles and cedars. Psal. lxxxii. 6, they are termed gods, and children of the Most High; God owns them for his children, and calls them gods, which is a height of honour.

Obs. 2. That kings and potentates have their places, privileges, and power, that they may be protectors of the people. "Thou art the anointed cherub that covereth;" he was on the throne, that he might spread his wings of protection over his subjects, both at sea and land. Magistrates should be as hens to the chickens, as fathers to their children; they are called not only fathers, but "nursing fathers," Isa. xlix. 23; the word in Hebrew is, גִּזְמָנִים thy nursers or nourishers, and notes faithful nursing; they should make it their business to preserve and provide for their people, as nurses do for their nurse child, seeing daily that it be kept from dangers and want nothing. Such a nursing father was David; Psal. lxxviii. 72, "He fed them according to the integrity of his heart, and guided them by the skilfulness of his hands;" David's heart and hands were at work for the good of the people. Such a nursing father was Moses, whom the Lord would have to carry the people in his bosom, as a nursing father beareth the sucking child, Numb. xi. 12. God would have kings, princes, magistrates, to deal tenderly with the people; they should be as cherubs unto them, spreading the wings of protection and justice over them, and when they do otherwise, he is wroth with them. Zeph. iii. 1—3; Micah iii. 1—4, when instead of fathers they are lions, instead of angels they are devils, to the people, God is sorely displeas'd, and will destroy them.

Obs. 3. That princes are exalted by God, and depend upon him. "I have set thee;" so it is God that raises them, and clothes them with honour and majesty. Prov. viii. 15, 16, "By me kings reign, and princes decree justice. By me princes rule, and nobles, even all the judges of the earth." Here is mention of kings, princes, nobles, judges; what power soever any or all of these have, the highest or subordinate, they have from God, who is the fountain of all power as well as of being; he is Lord of heaven and earth, he is chief Governor among angels and men, Psal. xxii. 28; and he sets up in Tyrus, and in Babylon, in Egypt, and in Jerusalem, whom he pleases. They should consider who sets them up, on whom they depend, and serve him with fear, ruling for the Lord; which, because they do not, they grow proud, insolent, tyrannical; and therefore the same hand that set them up throws them down, Dan. ii. 21.

Obs. 4. God minds the places where princes dwell, and the pomp they live in. "Thou wast upon the holy mountain of God; thou hast walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire;" thine habitation hath been in a strong, fortified city, thou hast lived in great state and glory, having thy palace glistening with carbuncles and other precious stones. 1 Kings xxii. 39, God took notice of the "ivory house" which Ahab built for his state. Solomon's house, throne, overlaid with the best gold, his pomp and state, God observed, and caused to be recorded, 1 Kings x. 7; and because great ones pride themselves in their seats and palaces, God threatens to smite their winter houses and their summer houses, and tells them that their ivory houses shall perish, and their great houses have an end, Amos iii. 15.

Obs. 5. Princes and states are prosperous and successful in their undertakings, whilst they are free from iniquities. "Thou wast perfect in thy ways from the day thou wast created, till iniquity was found;" so long as thou didst keep thyself from unjust and wicked acts, thou didst speed well in all thy enterprises at sea and land. The Lord blesses heathen kings, while they do just things. It is righteousness exalts a nation, even any nation, Prov. xiv. 3, 4. David told Solomon what was the way for him and his kingdom to prosper; 1 Chron. xxii. 13, he must fulfil the statutes and judgments of the Lord; and then he should prosper in all that he did, and whithersoever he turned himself, 1 Kings ii. 3. Hezekiah was free from iniquities, unjust and cruel acts; and hear what the Spirit of the Lord saith of him, 2 Chron. xxxii. 30, "He prospered in all his works."

Obs. 6. Great and grievous sins may be in princes and states undiscovered, but the Lord will search them out, and make them known. "Till iniquity was found in thee." The prince of Tyrus his sin was secret, and hidden from the world, kept within doors, in his own chamber, palace, city, or territories; but the Lord found it out, and made discovery of it to the prophet, and the prophet to the world. The great ones of Judah thought themselves innocent, yet God found the blood of innocents upon their skirts, and he found it not by secret search, by digging, that is, by taking much pains to find it out, but so soon as he came he spied it upon their skirts, and made it known, Jer. ii. 34. Men plot mischief, do works of darkness, and think they shall not be seen, Isa. xxix. 15; but the Lord sees, will find it out, and bring it into the light. David sinned in secret, but the Lord saw it, and proclaimed it to the world.

Obs. 7. Wickedness blasts prosperous princes and flourishing states. "Thou wast perfect in thy ways, till iniquity was found in thee;" that caused all to wither: his exalting himself to be as God, his insulting over others in their misery, and his unjust actions, caused the Lord to threaten and bring desolation. Iniquity is the canker and plague of prosperity; many princes and states, which were fat and flourishing, have been made lean thereby. Jeroboam's iniquities lost him five hundred thousand men at once, 2 Chron. xiii. 8, 9, 17. When iniquity was found in Zedekiah, breaking with Nebuchadnezzar, and relying upon the king of Egypt, what said the Lord? "Shall he prosper? shall he escape that doth such things?" Ezek. xvii. 15; no, he shall never prosper more. It is said of Jotham that he became mighty, he prospered greatly; and what was the cause? 2 Chron. xxvii. 6, it was because he "prepared his ways before the Lord," or established them before him; he looked to it that he did nothing but what God commanded and approved, he would not defile his heart or hands with iniquity, therefore he grew mighty, and left a flourishing kingdom. But when Ahaz his son came to it, who did wickedly, you may see how the Syrians, Israelites, Edomites, and Tilgath-pilneser, did waste and consume his kingdom, 2 Chron. xxviii. Would princes, rulers, states, cities, families, persons, prosper, let them take heed of wickedness, and remember Malachi iv. 1, "The day cometh that shall burn like an oven; and all the proud, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, and leave them neither root nor branch."

Ver. 16—19. By the multitude of thy merchandise they have filled the midst of thee with violence, and thou hast sinned: therefore I will cast thee as profane out of the mountain of God: and I will destroy thee. O covering cherub, from the midst of the stones of fire. Thine heart was lifted up because of thy beauty, thou hast corrupted thy wisdom by reason of thy brightness: I will cast thee to the ground, I will lay thee before kings, that they may behold thee. Thou hast defiled thy sanctuaries by the multitude of thine iniquities, by the iniquity of thy traffick; therefore will I bring forth a fire from the midst of thee, it shall devour thee, and I will bring thee to ashes upon the earth in the sight of all them that behold thee. All they that know thee among the people shall be astonished at thee: thou shalt be a terror, and never shalt thou be any more.

In these verses you have,

1. The king's sins; which are,
1. Injustice, or violence, ver. 16.
2. Pride, or vain confidence, ver. 17.
3. Profaneness, ver. 18.

II. God's judgments, or punishments of him for his sins; which are,

1. Casting out, and destruction, ver. 16.
2. Casting down, and making exemplary, ver. 17.
3. Burning, and that to ashes, ver. 18.

III. The events of God's so dealing with him; and they are,

1. Astonishment.
2. Terror, ver. 19.

Ver. 16. "By the multitude of thy merchandise." Tyrus was a city of the greatest merchandizing, as appears, chap. xxvii.: and the king of Tyre himself was of the merchants' company, Isa. xxiii. 8, and countenanced their trading greatly. This drew merchants from all places thither; they brought in commodities, and carried out commodities, and there was great trafficking between the Tyrians and them; and what followed thereupon?

"They have filled the midst of thee with violence." The Hebrew word for "violence" is, חמס chomas, which notes, that wrong which is a violation of justice. These merchants, seeking themselves, minded not what was just and equal, but made a prey of one another, and so filled the city with injustice, iniquity, and "violence." The Septuagint is, ἀνομία, that is, with illegality, transgression, unrighteousness.

"And thou hast sinned." Thou, who shouldst have looked to it that no unjust things should have been done in the city, that there should have been no violence, even "thou hast sinned," either by doing as other merchants did, or by being lift up by the abundance of those things thyself and citizens possessed; or rather, thou hast sinned, in suffering those who have done violence to go unpunished, thou hast connived at them, and so given them encouragement to their wickedness. The word chota signifies, to err from the way, scope, mark; he should have had justice in his eye, and neither have done unjust things himself, nor have suffered his citizens to have done them.

"Therefore I will cast thee, as profane, out of the mountain of God." The Hebrew is, I will profane thee from the mountain of God. Some understand the words thus, I will blot out the memory of thee from Jerusalem, and from amongst my people; but it is better to understand it of his own city and kingdom, out of which God would cast him. He was an "anointed cherub," set up by God in great honour and dignity, ver. 14; but he not doing answerable to his place, God would pull the crown from his head, take away all his power and greatness, and profane him; that is, make him as a common person, or cast him out as "profane," as one that hath profaned the place of majesty. Of the "mountain of God" you heard in ver. 14, where this king was said to be "upon the holy mountain of God."

"And I will destroy thee, O covering cherub." The word for destroying is, אבד abad, which notes an utter destruction, and God would utterly destroy this king for not protecting his people from violence and wrongs. He was an angel for place and power over others, and should have covered them with the wings of protection and justice.

"From the midst of the stones of fire." "The stones of fire" were those precious stones himself and palace were adorned with, all so called because of their glistering and lightening, of which before, ver. 14.

Ver. 17. "Thine heart was lifted up because of thy beauty." In ver. 5, it is said, "Thine heart is lifted up because of thy riches," and here, "because of thy beauty;" he was rich, great, honourable, strong in men, ammunition, shipping, and fortifications, all which had a glory, a "beauty," and that lifted up his heart, made him swell with pride, and think himself more than a man, to imagine that he was a petty god.

"Thou hast corrupted thy wisdom by reason of thy brightness." This king was in repute for "wisdom," ver. 5, 12, by which he attained to great wealth and glory, which here is expressed by "brightness" (for glory is a bright and shining thing). The glory, beauty, and brightness of his condition begat such pride in his spirit, that his wisdom was corrupted, and lost, as the Vulgate reads it; his pride did obscure his understanding, and disfigure his "wisdom." True "wisdom" consists in the knowledge of a man's self, and carrying it humbly when he is highest; but he knew not himself, that would be as God, and make all bow unto him.

"I will cast thee to the ground." Thou art in great glory and honour, eminent and renowned, lifted up above other princes, sitting, as thou fanciest, in the seat of God; but I will strip thee of all thy glory and greatness, bring thee down from thy height, and "cast thee to the ground;" it imports violent and extreme misery.

"I will lay thee before kings, that they may behold thee." I will make thee a public example to the kings of the world; thou shalt be so debased, cast down, and trampled upon, that kings shall mind, and wonder at thy condition, be terrified, and acknowledge the just hand of God upon thee for thy wickedness. The Septuagint is, ἐναντίον βασιλέων ἔδοκα σε παραδειγματισθῆναι, I have given thee, or will give thee, to be an example before kings.

Ver. 18. "Thou hast defiled thy sanctuaries by the multitude of thine iniquities, by the iniquity of thy traffick." By "sanctuaries," or sanctification, some here take to be meant the king's virtues; others, his oaths and covenants: but his royal palace and city, or the palaces where he and his people did worship, and that religion they had, chiefly are intended. Their traffic was great, and the iniquities adhering thereunto were great, as deceit, covetousness, pride, injustice, violence; by which the palace, city, and sacaries, were defiled, and the religion they had, whatever it was. Piscator makes the "sanctuaries" to the king's palaces only, which for their magnificence were answerable to the temple at Jerusalem, and the king, by his iniquities, had given cause to God to bring in the Chaldeans to defile and destroy them. This sense and the former stand well together; for, being formerly defiled with sin, it was just with God to defile them with blood, and utterly to destroy them.

"Therefore will I bring forth a fire from the midst of thee, and it shall devour thee." That Tyre was consumed by fire is probable, if not, it is to be considered what is meant by "fire." Some make it to be the plotting of his own citizens to destroy him; discontented ones should flee to the king of Babylon, besieging the city, and betray him; others make this "fire" to be the judgment of God upon Tyre: she sinned, and the king also, in a special manner, and God from those sins would cause punishment to spring up, which should consume them and him, as a fire kindling in a house eats it up, and consumes it.

"And I will bring thee to ashes upon the earth." These words do hint unto us, that the judgment of God upon Tyrus, after it was taken by Nebuchadnezzar, was "fire." What they could not spoil by their axes, and other warlike instruments, that they set fire unto, and so turned into "ashes" the stately and goodly buildings thereof, the glorious palaces of the king, were made ashes; fire is a consumptive, transforming thing, and so are God's judgments. Of, if we take the words not in a literal, but a metaphorical, sense, "ashes" note a contemptible and base condition: Job xxx. 19, "He hath cast me into the mire, and I am become like dust and ashes;" when Job was stripped of all his honour and glory, set upon the dunghill, then he was as dust and ashes.

"In the sight of all them that behold thee." The word, to "behold," is, רָאָה which notes not only seeing with the eye, but with the mind also: Jer. ii. 31, "O generation, see ye the word of the Lord;" that is, hear, consider, understand; they could not see it with the eye. And here, not only those that saw with their bodily eyes, but those that heard of it, even the isles which were afar off, are included.

Ver. 19. "All they that know thee among the people shall be astonished at thee." All thy subjects, and all foreigners with whom thou hast traded, and have heard of thy wisdom, beauty, glory, greatness, they shall be astonished at thee; they shall wonder to see thee, the "anointed cherub," brought to so low and despicable a condition. Some conceive, that, as they were astonished at the destruction of Tyrus, and the prince thereof, so they were glad, hissed, and mocked thereat; but, chap. xxvi. 16, 17, they should be astonished, and take up a "lamentation."

"Thou shalt be a terror." In the Hebrew it is, thou hast been terrors, בְּלִיָּהוּת הָיִיתָ thou, with thy power, greatness, majesty, art, was become terrible unto others. The Septuagint is, ἀπόλαυα ἐγεννη, thou hast been destruction. Our translation suits well enough with the Hebrew, which oft puts a preter tense for the future; and so the sense is, All those that see to what a desolate condition thou art brought unto, shall be terrified. Chap. xxvi. 21; xxvii. 36, you have this word terror.

"Never shalt thou be any more." Thou shalt never be king more, nor Tyrus ever be built more in such state as formerly it was, nor any king or form of a kingdom be ever seen therein more; for Junius tells us it was upon the re-building of it made a commonwealth. These words we had formerly, chap. xxvi. 21; xxvii. 36.

Obs. 1. That in much trading there is much sin. "By the multitude of thy merchandise they have filled the midst of thee with violence;" the merchants of Tyrus were covetous, fraudulent, unjust, violent, speaking unlawful words, and doing unlawful things, and that so commonly, as that they filled the city and palace with the guilt thereof. Prov. x. 19, "In the multitude of words there wants not sin;" that is, there is much sin, many of them are sinful; so in much trading and merchandising there wants not sin, it abounds; sinful thoughts, desires, idle, evil, false, flattering, lying words, adhere to them that are busied therein, and many unjust, yea, oppressing acts are done by them. In heart they have exercised with covetous practices, and many of them do love the wages of iniquity, as Balaam did, 2 Pet. ii. 15; and, like Judas, purchase fields with the reward of iniquity, Acts i. 18. In mart towns, where there is much trading, there is much sinning, much lying, swearing, whoring, drunkenness; merchants bring the vices of their countries, as well as the wares and commodities thereof, and it may be questioned whether the vices brought in do not more harm than all the commodities do good.

Obs. 2. God takes notice of men in place, whether they connive at, or punish, sin. The merchants filled the city and palace of the king with injustice, violence, and all manner of wickedness, and he punished them not, but connived at them; and so, besides his great neglect, which was very evil, he contracted the guilt of their sins upon himself. Governors are sent by God, saith Peter, 1 Epist. ii. 14, "for the punishment of evil-doers, and for the praise of them that do well;" being sent of God, and set up by him, as this prince of Tyre was, ver. 14, God looks after them, observes strictly how they act, whether they encourage men that do well, and punish such as do evil; if they do not, the Lord will charge their sin upon them: "Thou hast sinned, thou hast filled all with violence." Not to punish sin, is to encourage men in sin, and so rulers bring a world of guilt upon themselves; they must answer for the sins of the people, when they prevent not, nor punish, what they might.

Obs. 3. Doing of unjust things, and non-execution of justice, undo the princes and rulers of the earth, they cause God to thrust them out of their thrones and kingdoms, and to lay their glory and greatness in the dust. "Thou hast sinned," that is, done unjustly, and neglected justice, "therefore I will cast thee as profane out of the mountain of God; I will destroy thee, O covering cherub, from the midst of the stones of fire." Nebuchadnezzar and his army were the instruments to do this, but God was the chief agent; "I will cast thee out, I will destroy thee;" and it was for his wicked acts, and want of doing justice. When princes do just things, punish evil-doers, countenance them that do well, then they establish themselves in the mountain of God, in their thrones and greatness; but when they fail therein, they undermine themselves, and hasten their own ruin. The Arabians say, Justice is the sinews and strength of a kingdom; injustice, then, must be the dissolution of it. Psal. lxxxix. 14, justice and judgment are the establishment of God's throne; it is "habitation" in your books, but the margin hath it, establishment; and the word מְנוּחָה signifies, a basis, or foundation. Justice upholds the very throne of God; should he not execute justice, or do unjust things, his throne would shake, his glory and greatness come down. Would rulers and great ones be established in their places, let them keep justice and judgment, and do wrong to none. Saul spared Agag, when he should have hewed him to pieces, 1 Sam. xv.; he caused to be slain eighty-five priests of the Lord, 1 Sam. xxii.; and shortly after, for his unjust acts, and want of doing justice, he was thrust out of his throne, cast out as a profane prince from the mountain of God, and destroyed from being a covering cherub, and from all his glory and greatness.

Obs. 4. The abundance and glory of outward things occasions men to forget God and themselves. "Thine heart was lifted up because of thy beauty;" he had abundance of all things, and they, with the glory and beauty of them, swelled his heart, made him proud, forget God, the Giver of them, and himself, who was to give account for them. It is hard to keep the heart in a right frame, when we are compassed about with creature plenty, glory, and beauty; pride, disdain, and violence, are the brats and bastards of plenty. It is harder for princes, or any, to regulate their spirits in prosperity than in adversity. A man under pressures is seldom puffed up with pride, overcome with lust, drowned in covetousness, overtaken with surfeiting and drunkenness, or tickled with worldly glory; all which, and many other evils, are incident to them that dwell in the midst of abundance: see Dent. xxxi. 10; viii. 10—14. In their fulness, men forget and forsake God, when, in their adversity, they seek and sue unto him: Hos. v. 15, "In their affliction they will seek me early," or, diligently. Manasseh, in his greatness and fulness, forsook God and his worship, did violent acts; but when he was in fetters in Babylon, and in affliction, then he besought the Lord his God, and humbled himself greatly, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 12; his heart was lifted up before, but now humbled, and that greatly. Affliction pricks the bladders prosperity hath blown up, and filled with pride.

Obs. 5. Men's priding themselves in an outward glory, doth prejudice them in a greater excellency. "Thou hast corrupted thy wisdom, because of thy brightness:" his wisdom was of a higher nature than all his greatness and glory, than his shipping, soldiers, buildings, precious stones, and whatever other external excellences were in Tyrus, but by his pride in these he marred that. Sin is the smoke of the soul; and what smoke is to the eye of the body, that sin is to the understanding, which being darkened, men's wisdom is corrupted. If there be a drop of ink, or poison, in milk or wine, they are corrupted; so if sin, especially pride, be found in a man, his wisdom is corrupted, and he will think, speak, and do corruptly. Prov. xi. 2, "When pride cometh, then cometh shame: but with the lowly is wisdom." When men are puffed up with their parts and enjoyments, then cometh shame: then they will carry themselves so, as others will be ashamed of them, their wisdom is corrupted, and they do foolishly; but when men are low and humble, they are wise, and do things commendable: true, sound, uncorrupted wisdom dwells with the lowly, and is a stranger to the proud.

One saith, upon these words of our prophet, That all proud men are fools, their pride hath darkened their foolish hearts. Let us take heed of priding ourselves in any externals or internals, thereby we shall corrupt our glory; let us be lowly, so shall we have wisdom unspotted, humble, so God will give us more grace, James iv. 6.

Obs. 6. The end of God's dreadful judgments upon sinners is, that they may be examples and warning-pieces unto others. "I will cast thee to the ground, I will lay thee before kings, that they may behold thee," and so take heed of thy ways and practices. God is terrible unto kings, he cuts them off, and makes them exemplary unto others: they are oft blasphemous, proud, unjust, violent, tyrannical; and God, by the thunder of his power, cuts them down, and by their fall sets them up to be lights unto others, that they read not in their steps, lest they come to their ends. Pharaoh is drowned in the sea; the princes of the people hung up before the sun; Herod is eaten up with vermin; the king of Ai hanged on a tree, Josh. viii. 29; Adoni-zedec and other kings, their necks were made footstools to the Jews, Josh. x. 24; Agag was hewn in pieces, 1 Sam. xv. 33; Joash was slain in his bed, 2 Chron. xxiv. 25; Jehoram was so smitten with sickness, that his bowels fell out, 2 Chron. xxi. 19; Zedekiah had his eyes put out, was bound in fetters, and carried to Babylon Jer. lii. 11, and made a prisoner all his days; the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah were roasted in the fire, and burnt to ashes. And why were these things done to kings? that they might be examples to others, both kings and people: 1 Cor. x. 11, "All these things happened unto them for ensamples: and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come:" had they not been written, they would have been forgotten; but God in his great wisdom would have them "written," that all that read or hear of them may be admonished by them, and learn to avoid those sins they were guilty of, lest they partake of the same or parallel judgments.

Examples in holy Scripture are used divers ways.

(1.) For arguments in prayer, as Psal. lxxxiii. 9—11.

(2.) As matter to strengthen our faith, Deut. iii. 21, 22; Isa. li. 9, 10.

(3.) As precedents for God to proceed by, Jer. vii. 12, 14; Ezek. xx. 36.

(4.) As motives to repentance, and turning unto God, Luke xiii. 1—5; Amos iv. 11.

(5.) For cautions and admonitions unto us, that we do not commit such things as they did, 2 Pet. ii. 6.

Such an example did God make the king of Tyrus; he was a sea mark to direct kings and others who sit at the stern, that they sail not that way he did, lest they suffer shipwreck. Thus God makes men serviceable after their death, who were sinful and mischievous in their lifetime.

Obs. 7. Sinful practices defile men's chiefest excellences and glories, and expose them to defilement. "Thou hast defiled thy sanctuaries by the iniquity of thy traffic:" covetousness, lying, deceit, violence, pride, luxury, and such like sins, attended their trading, and these sins defiled the city, the court, the crown, their temples, their worship, and whatever was precious unto them. Sin is of a spreading nature, defiling us, and all we have, yea, exposing all to ruin and destruction; see Ezek. v. 11; vii. 24. The Jews defiled God's sanctuary with sin, therefore God would expose them to be defiled by heathens.

Obs. 8. Men's own sins do breed their woes, bring them into contemptible conditions, and to utter destruction. This prince's sins kindled the fire of God's indignation in the midst of his city, palace, and sanctuaries, and such a fire as devoured him, and brought him to ashes. Wood breeds the worms which eat it up, garments the moths which consume them. Men by their follies contract those distempers and diseases which rend them from the land of the living, and enfranchise them among the dead. It is the sin of a nation that tears out the bowels of it, and lays all the pleasant things therein waste. It is princes' sins which shake the crown from their heads; their injustice, tyranny, covetousness, profaneness, throw them out of their thrones, lead them with scorn, and cause the Lord to pour his indignation upon them. There is no nation, city, or family, roasted in the fire of divine, dreadful judgments, but themselves do bring the same upon themselves. Israel destroyed herself, Hos. xiii. 9; that was, by her calves and idolatrous worship. Ireland hath destroyed itself by her treachery and bloody doings; and search into it, you shall find that Scotland hath destroyed itself by its own iniquities: so Worcester, by its own acts, hath brought woes upon itself, &c. Many are brought to ashes at this time, to bondage, base and contemptible conditions, because they fed upon ashes, made lies their refuge, doing dishonourable things: Isa. xxvi. 11, "The fire of their enemies shall devour them;" their sins were the material fire that they brought, &c.

Obs. 9. God's judgments upon wicked princes and places oft are such, as that they become matter of astonishment and terror to others. "All that know thee among the people shall be astonished at thee: thou shalt be a terror:" whosoever should hear what God had done to Tyrus, and the prince thereof, should be amazed thereat, and tremble, chap. xxvi. 15. "He is terrible to the kings of the earth," Psal. lxxvi. 12, and makes them terrors to others.

Ver. 20—23. Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, set thy face against Zidon, and prophesy against it, and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Zidon; and I will be glorified in the midst of thee: and they shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall have executed judgments in her, and shall be sanctified in her. For I will send into her pestilence, and blood into her streets; and the wounded shall be judged in the midst of her by the sword upon her on every side; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

In these words you have a prophecy against Zidon, which is the third general part of the chapter: the authority of it is in ver. 20, and the prophet's commission in ver. 21; the prophecy itself in ver. 22, 23, where destruction is threatened to Zidon by "pestilence" and "sword," and the ends of God's judgments declared.

Ver. 21. "Set thy face against Zidon." The word for to "set," notes a setting on purpose, not carelessly, but composedly, intensively. Amos ix. 4, "I will set mine eyes upon them for evil, and not for good;" though formerly I have seriously and purposely set myself to do them good, yet now I will with as much seriousness and resolvedness set mine eyes upon them, or against them, for evil. I will look sourly upon them: so the prophet must fix his face upon Zidon, and look severely, suitably to the judgment he had to threaten against it.

"Zidon." Of "Zidon" was spoken, chap. xxvii. 8. It was seated at the foot of mount Libanus, and terminated the bounds of Canaan in the north-west. Justin saith, it was built by the Phœnicians, and called Zidon, from the multitude of fishes that were thereabouts: for they call a fish, zidon. It was a rich and potent city, having its king; for Ethbaal, the father of that wicked woman Jezebel, was king of the Zidonians, 1 Kings xvi. 31; they were idolaters, for Ashtoreth was the goddess of the Zidonians, 1 Kings xi. 5; and Selden judges those four hundred prophets of the groves, which did eat at Jezebel's table, to be the prophets of this goddess. These Zidonians were, for their manners and wickedness, like to the Tyrians, no better than thorns and briars unto the Jews; and hence Ezekiel is commanded to prophesy against them, as Jeremiah was, chap. xxv. 15, 22.

Ver. 22. "Behold, I am against thee." Some read the words thus, Behold, I come to thee; not to show thee kindness, not to protect or comfort thee, but I come to punish, to destroy thee. The words may also be read, Behold, I am above thee, or over thee; thou art strong, wise, wealthy, secure, but I am above thee, and thou canst not escape my hands. But to take the words as here they are, "I am against thee," thou hast me thy enemy; hitherto I have been thy friend, caused thee to grow great and prosper, but now "I am against thee;" it is not men or angels, but I, the Lord of all in heaven and earth, that have the command of all creatures in my hand, that shake the foundations of the earth, and lay waste kingdoms, cities at my pleasure, even "I am against thee."

"And I will be glorified in the midst of thee." Montanus reads the word "glorified" actively, I will glorify myself in the midst of thee; thou hast dishonoured me by thy sins, given mine honour unto idols, but now I will punish thee severely for what thou hast done, and so vindicate my name, make thee know that I am a God differing from thy false gods and goddesses. The Septuagint reads the word passively, ἐνδοξασθήσομαι: so we, and many others, I will be glorified; and the sense is this, I am against Zidon, I will fight her, get the victory over her, by executing my judgments upon her, and so I shall be glorified by all that see my hand upon her. God is glorified when he punisheth evil-doers, and cuts them off: Exod. xiv. 4, "I will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and all his host;" ver. 17, upon his chariots and his horsemen: and how was this done? by drowning them in the midst of the sea, ver. 27, 28: and God is glorified when others take notice of his power, justice, judgments, and praise, and fear him, as it is, Exod. xv. 1, 14. When men do conquer others, all the friends of the conqueror do rejoice, and triumph with him; they go or send to him, as 2 Sam. viii. 10, and give him thanks for what he hath done, which is an honouring of him; and it is no less that his enemies fear him.

"And they shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall have executed judgments in her." The end of God's judgments is, to bring men to a right knowledge of him. When Zidon should receive the punishments due to her sins, then she would know, that is, acknowledge, God to be above all idol gods, that he only was worthy to be feared, adored, praised, and obeyed.

"And shall be sanctified in her." In chap. xx. 41, we had these words, "I will be sanctified in you," where they were opened. They may be taken here actively or passively: I will sanctify myself in her, that is, I will do that in Zidon, execute such judgments in her, as shall declare to all nations that I am a holy God, hating all sin, that my name is holy and reverend; in this sense they are taken actively: passively, thus, Whereas my name hath suffered by the Zidonians, and many have thought me no better than the idol gods, that I take little care of the world, wink at men in their wickedness, and am like unto them; when my judgments are upon Zidon it will be otherwise, then they will have high and honourable thoughts of me, then they will declare me to be a just and righteous God: and so the holy God shall be sanctified in righteousness, as it is Isa. v. 16; that is, made known to be holy for his righteous judgments.

Ver. 23. "For I will send into her pestilence." These are the judgments with which God would visit Zidon. The word for "pestilence" is, דבר which interpreters make to signify, speech, death, and order, as well as the plague, and that to have all these in it; for the plague is a speaking judgment, it speaks out God's severity, it speaks unto us to repent presently. It is a dreadful judgment, few escape that have it, and it hath order in it, for that it goeth from house to house, city to city, and oft sweeps away all.

"And blood into her streets." The Babylonians should besiege Zidon, and after the pestilence had devoured many, they should take the city, slay the citizens, and fill the streets with "blood," dead and wounded bodies.

"And the wounded shall be judged in the midst of her." When towns and cities are besieged, many from within make attempts to raise the siege, or break through, whereupon they come to be wounded, if not slain. So here, many were "wounded" upon such attempts, and after the city was taken, they were judged to death. The Hebrew is, the wounded man shall fall in the midst of her; and so the Septuagint.

“By the sword upon her on every side.” There should neither be any articles or terms of peace offered them, nor any way of escape be left them; the soldiers should compass her about “on every side,” so that whoever attempted to flee and get away, should fall into their hands.

Obs. 1. That great, flourishing, and strong cities may have God their enemy, and so their enemy, as to declare and proclaim war against them. “Son of man, set thy face against Zidon,” tell that great city what the Lord saith, “Behold, I am against thee, O Zidon;” I am coming in a martial way against thee, and will consume thee to ashes.

Obs. 2. God’s aim and end in his judgments, is to make himself known, what a dreadful, just, and holy God he is, and that he may be declared by men to be so. God would destroy Zidon by pestilence and war, that he might be glorified and sanctified in her: she would not give glory to God before: the Lord would therefore fetch his glory out of her by his judgments, and cause others should see the same, to confess him to be a God of power, justice, and holiness. Psal. ix. 16, “The Lord is known by the judgment which he executeth:” there are characters of his power, justice, and holiness in them, that men must needs take notice of them, if they be not atheistical. If others will not fear, praise, worship, adore the Lord, whose hand hath lately been lifted up so eminently, yet let us do it; God must be glorified and sanctified one way or other. Let us therefore say, “Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name?”

Obs. 3. What judgments soever come into or upon cities and persons, it is the Lord that sends them thither, that brings them upon them. “I will send into her pestilence, and blood into her streets.” It is the Lord gives commissions, as to the prophets to prophesy judgments against a city, so to the judgments themselves, to come to and upon them. If in Worcester dead bodies and blood filled the streets, if all houses were plundered, if armies are routed, thousands slain, it is the Lord’s doing. Let none stumble by looking at the instruments, they are the sword in God’s hand, he causes it to wound and to kill.

Ver. 24—26. And there shall be no more a pricking brier unto the house of Israel, nor any grieving thorn of all that are round about them, that despised them; and they shall know that I am the Lord God. Thus saith the Lord God; When I shall have gathered the house of Israel from the people among whom they are scattered, and shall be sanctified in them in the sight of the heathen, then shall they dwell in their land that I have given to my servant Jacob. And they shall dwell safely therein, and shall build houses, and plant vineyards; yea, they shall dwell with confidence, when I have executed judgments upon all those that despise them round about them; and they shall know that I am the Lord their God.

These verses are a prophecy of grace and mercy to the church of God, being the last general part of the chapter; where,

1. You have the things prophesied of; which are,
(1.) Freedom from molestations by enemies, ver. 24.

(2.) Collection of the Jews out of the places they were dispersed into, ver. 25.

(3.) Habitation in the land given to Jacob, ver. 25.

(4.) Safety and prosperity, ver. 26.

2. The time when these things shall be, ver. 26, after judgments executed upon their enemies.

3. The end of this comfortable prophecy, and sweet promises in it, and that is, the knowledge and profession of God, ver. 24, 26.

“There shall be no more a pricking brier.” The word for “brier” in the holy language is, sillon, a thorn, a sting, a brier; and metaphorically, it is put for a thorny man: hence is σλλαίωω, saith Avenarius, which signifies, to scratch a man’s name with ill words. סלק is no where else used but in Ezekiel, chap. ii. 6, and in this place. The Septuagint turn it, σκολοψ, which in 2 Cor. xii. 7, is rendered a “thorn,” and by the Vulgate, an offence.

“Pricking.” נצאר is from נצר which signifieth, to cause grief, to make the heart ache; so do thorns and briars; when they prick a man, they pain and grieve him.

“Unto the house of Israel.” By a synecdoche of the whole for a part, he understands the house of Zidon.

“Nor any grieving thorn.” The word for “thorn” here is, קץ from קץ to be afflicted, to be in straits, because thorns do afflict and straiten men. Some make it, to differ from others in quantity, and to note, a greater thorn, but it signifies any thorn, thistle, or grieving thing. נצאר grieving, is from נצב to make sad; when a man is pricked with a thorn, it makes him sad.

“Of all that are round about them.” These words show who were the briars and thorns, viz. those who dwelt near unto the Jews, on every side, the Tyrians, Sidonians, Philistines, Moabites, Ammonites, Idumeans, and Egyptians. These were subdued by the Chaldeans much about that time Jerusalem was taken, and after their return out of Babylon those nations were brought under by the Maccabees.

“That despised them.” In Hebrew השאטים which is from שאט signifying, to provoke one, by contemning and spoiling of them. It is again in ver. 26, rendered in the margin, that spoil them.

Wicked men are likened to thorns and briars.

1. Thorns and briars are of little worth or use; what serve they for but to make a hedge, stop a gap, or burn in the fire; they are inconsiderable things² and such are wicked men; they are vile, Jer. xv. 19; godly men are precious, but wicked ones are little worth, Prov. x. 20. Isa. x. 17, the Assyrians were thorns and briars, and should be burnt up in a day.

2. They change not their nature; wherever you set or plant them, they continue the same, in the wilderness, garden, or orchard; so wicked men, do what you will to them, they change not, neither can thunder, lightning, sunshine, winter or summer, change the one or the other. Pharaoh was a great brier, no miracles altered him. Saul was transplanted, and made a king, yet honour and favour altered not him. Jeroboam, what sweet promises had he from God himself, 1 Kings xi. 37, 38, but they turned not that thorn into a vine.

3. They pester the earth where they are; they suck away the fat, moisture, and sweetness of it, from better plants, corn, and grass; so wicked men, they pester the earth, they get the chief places of power, honour, they get the lordships and manors: Psal. xii. 8, the vilest of the sons of men are exalted. Abimelech, the bramble, is made king by the Shechemites, and slays his seventy brethren, whose right it was to have had the crown before him; and what a plague he was to the Shechemites, see Judg. ix.

4. They are low things, creeping upon the earth, and inclining towards it; they are not like the oaks and cedars, which mount up to heaven; so wicked men are base, low, earthy, minding the things of this world, they incline unto them, they savour the things of the flesh, and what is suitable to their lusts: such a base brier was the fool in the gospel, and Dives also.

5. They are dangerous things to meddle with, they are pricking and grieving. Numb. xxxiii. 55, the inhabitants remaining were "pricks" in their eyes, and "thorns" in their sides, and vexed them. Nabal was very churlish to David, and not over-kind to Abigail: he was a pricking thorn to the one, and a grieving brier to the other.

Quest. Wherein are wicked men pricking briars and grieving thorns?

Answer. 1. In their tongues; they are often full of prickles, their words are pungent.

(1.) They have calumniating and lying words, Neh. vi. 6; Jer. xviii. 18.

(2.) Scolding words, Neh. iv. 2, 3; the nations scoffed at the Jewish sabbaths, sacrifices, and worship, Lam. i. 7.

(3.) Threatening words, Acts iv. 17; ix. 1.

(4.) Disgracing, undervaluing words. The scribes and Pharisees said of Christ, he was a wine-bibber, a Samaritan, that he had a devil. Tertullus said, Paul was a pestilent fellow, Acts xxiv.

(5.) Provoking words, 2 Chron. xxv. 17; Neh. vi. 2. 2. In their countenances and looks. Wicked men look so big and fiercely oftentimes upon the godly, that they prick and grieve them to the heart. Dan. viii. 23, Antiochus was of a fiery countenance, terrible to look unto. How sourly did Ahab look upon Elijah, when he said, "Art thou he that troubleth Israel?" &c. Wicked men's frowns are sharp thorns in the sides of the godly.

3. In their actions. 2 Pet. ii. 7, 8, Lot's righteous soul was vexed, &c.: Delilah tempted and urged Samson, so that his "soul was vexed unto death," Judg. xvi. 16; see Josh. xxiii. 12, 13; the daughters of Heth were such thorns unto Rebekah, that she was weary of her life, Gen. xxvii. 46; see Psal. xxxvii. 14.

1. Some general observations from hence, that wicked men are thorns.

Obs. 1. Their acquaintance is not desirable. Familiarity with them is dangerous: Prov. xxiv. 1, "Be not envious against evil men, neither desire to be with them:" be they great, honourable, eminent, yet, if wicked, we should neither envy them, nor affect their company: and why? "For their heart studieth destruction, and their lips talk of mischief;" they are the "seed of the serpent," and cannot cordially close with the "seed of the woman:" there is enmity between their seeds. Mic. vii. 4, "The best of them is a brier; the most upright is sharper than a thorn hedge." If the best of them be so, what are the rest? One time or other you will find them so. David chose those for his companions who feared the Lord, Psal. exix. 63.

Obs. 2. Answerable fruit is to be expected from them. Thorns and briars must bring forth fruit suitable to their natures. Some make no difference between men, but will trust wicked ones as soon as godly ones; but they have been, or may be, deceived: for can good fruit grow upon an ill tree? Christ hath taught us otherwise; Matt. vii. 16, "Do men gather grapes of thorns?" &c. he makes it an impossibility; ver. 18, A corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit. Wickedness proceeds from the wicked, it is natural to them to do wickedly, and nothing else: fire comes out of brambles, and devours the cedars of Lebanon, Judg. ix. 15.

Obs. 3. It is rather matter of rejoicing than mourning, when wicked men are cut off, and taken away. They are but thorns and briars, worthless things, emburing the ground, and bearing ill fruit. Prov. xi. 10, "When it goeth well with the righteous, the city rejoiceth: and when the wicked perish, there is shouting." Unprofitable, hurtful things are taken away. Husbandsmen and gardeners are glad when the briars and brambles are pulled up from the corn, flowers, and plants among which they grew. The loss of good men is a great loss, as of Josiah, a good king; but the loss of wicked kings is no loss, it is gain to a state, and matter of rejoicing: they are great brambles, and there is much a do to pull them up, but being up and perishing, multitudes shout for joy, who were scratched and oppressed by them.

Obs. 4. Those who are the Lord's deputies and rulers under him, should see to it, that briars and brambles overrun not all the field and vineyard of God. They do grow high, great, spread, and are like to endanger much if they be not dealt with. There are thorns and briars in all places: there are state brambles, city thorns, and church briars: such were in the church of Galatia, which Paul wisheth were cut off, Gal. v. 12, because they scratched and troubled them: and David's resolution was, to thrust away as thorns all the sons of Belial who troubled the state and city of Jerusalem, 2 Sam. xxiii. 6; and Psal. ci. 8, he saith, "I will early destroy all the wicked of the land; that I may cut off all wicked doers from the city of the Lord." Here was a man after God's own heart, that would not suffer pricking thorns and grieving briars.

II. Some more particular observations from the words of the verse.

Obs. 1. The church and people of God live amongst thorns. They dwell in the midst of wicked men; all that were round about them were pricking briars and grieving thorns. The church is a "lily among thorns," Cant. ii. 2. Jerusalem was amidst heathenish nations: Christ and his apostles were among scribes and Pharisees, whose spirits were thorny. Hence take these inferences:

(1.) Then God's people ought to take heed how they walk. Men who live and walk among briars and thorns, had need have their eyes in their heads; they may otherwise be quickly entangled in the briars, and miserably scratched. Matt. x. 16, "Be wise as serpents," &c.: they live among thorns.

(2.) Then it is not strange if God's people be scratched sometimes by wicked men. They will tear and rend their names, states, comforts, peace, privileges, &c. David, Jeremiah, Paul, were sufficiently scratched by such briars and thorns: whose toucheth them, had need be fenced with iron, and the staff of a spear.

(3.) Then see a reason why the people of God cannot carry on the work and things of God with more speed. They dwell amongst thorns, and when thorns are in the way things move slowly. When good seed was sown, the thorns hindered the growth of it; when Joshua went about taking Ai, there was Achan, a great thorn, in the way; when Nehemiah was in the work of the temple, Tobias and Sanballat were thorns in the way. The motions of parliament and army were not so speedy, because they met with great thorns and brambles in their ways.

Obs. 2. The church and people of God shall not always be among briars and thorns. They shall have a time of freedom; "There shall be no more a pricking brier and a grieving thorn." Chap. xxxiv. 28, "They shall no more be a prey to the heathen," &c. This was made good to the Jews in the letter after their return; the nations, which had been thorns to them, the Lord destroyed. This promise refers also to the gospel times, the Lord is making way for it now. When enemies have power, strength, counsel, are active and successful, then they are thorny and grievous; but the Lord is disappointing his church's enemies, and consuming them as briars and thorns, Isa. xxvii. 4.

This is matter of comfort to the church, that although she have been long among briars, thorns, and hath been much offended by them, yea, wounded, yet there is a time she shall be freed from them, it is approaching, and makes haste, Luke xviii. 7, 8. The Israelites were freed from the Egyptians, and Lot from the Sodomites, who were thorns, yea, terrible ones, unto them.

This should draw out our spirits in prayer unto the Lord, to hasten the time, and that he would make good what he hath promised: Isa. lv. 13, "Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree." Let us pray earnestly that God would give us fir trees and myrtle trees, in the room of our briars and thorns; good magistrates and good ministers, instead of those who have been no better than thorns and briars unto us.

Obs. 3. Wicked men have ill thoughts of God's people; they slight them. These briars and thorns, the wicked round about the house of Israel, despised them, and scorned them: Psal. lxxix. 4, "We are become a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and derision to them that are round about us." Wicked men are proud, the ways of God are contrary unto them and their ways; hence they despise his ways, and those who walk in them.

Ver. 25. "Thus saith the Lord God; When I shall have gathered the house of Israel from the people among whom they are scattered," &c. This people of God, the Jews, were scattered into the eastern countries, over several provinces of the king of Babylon, and here the Lord promiseth to gather them out thereof, and to return them to their own land.

"And shall be sanctified in them in the sight of the heathen." Of sanctifying was spoken in ver. 22. The Hebrew is, when I shall sanctify myself, that is, make known myself, by my judgments upon them for their sins, by seventy years' captivity, and cause the heathen to confess that I am a just and righteous God, which will be, when they shall see me gather them up again, and bring them out with a strong hand; then they will say, he hath not utterly cast them off, though he hath severely punished them. The words may be taken passively, as here they are read, when I shall be sanctified in them, or by them; when they shall see me remembering my promises made unto them, and begin to make way for their deliverance, then shall they praise my name, and rejoice in me their God, and tell the heathens, God hath not forgotten them.

Obs. 1. God's people have no fixed, certain habitation in this world, but are subject to scatterings. They were removed out of their land, carried into Babylon; so the church, Acts viii. 1, "was scattered throughout all the regions of Judea and Samaria." Heb. xi. 37, "They wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented."

Obs. 2. Whenever God's people are scattered abroad in the world, he hath a care of them, and will sanctify his name in bringing them into a safe and happy condition. They shall be brought into Canaan, that is, into the church, which Canaan represents. As the Jews were gathered out of Babylon, and the provinces thereof, into their own land, so shall all the elect be brought into the church of God, where is peace, safety, and confidence, where they shall find God a habitation, a vineyard. Isa. xi. 10, "The root of Jesse shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious;" and ver. 12, "He shall set up an ensign," &c. The Lord Christ was a great gatherer; see Luke xi. 23; xiv. 16, 17, 21, 23.

Obs. 3. The end of God's gathering his people out of their scattered condition is, that they may sanctify him, and that he may be sanctified by them. God's power, faithfulness, and goodness, appear in his gathering and bringing them out of enemies' hands, and so way is made for his praise and honour, and that before their enemies.

Ver. 26. "And they shall dwell safely therein, and shall build houses, and plant vineyards; yea, they shall dwell with confidence, when I have executed judgments upon all those," &c. The word for "safely," and "with confidence," is the same, לבטח it noteth, safety, freedom from danger, fear, and inward confidence, boldness. The Septuagint is, εν ἀπειθεί, which is somewhat short of the meaning. Whether this was made good unto them at their return from Babylon is questionable, for they were troubled with Sanballat, Tobias, and Geshem; the workmen had a trowel in one hand, and a sword in the other, Neh. iv. Afterwards Alexander the Great came, and filled all with fears, and they were necessitated to admit him into their city. After this, also, many of them were carried away into Egypt by Ptolemy, the son of Lagus. In the Maccabees' times they had as sharp and miserable wars as ever, and at last were brought under by the Romans. Though sometimes they had quiet rest, as in the days of Ptolemæus Philadelphus, yet they had much trouble, great fears, wars, and ruins. Some, therefore, understand this prophecy of a spiritual restoration by Christ, who, when he came in the flesh, made way for the coming in of all nations, to enjoy perfect peace in himself; according to Gen. xlix. 10, "Unto him shall the gathering of the people be," nations shall flock to him. Hereupon said the Lord Christ, John x. 16, "Other sheep I have, which are not," &c. This restoration began in Christ's days, and shall be perfected at his next coming.

Obs. 4. The Lord will meet with, and cut off, the enemies of his church and people, yea, all of them shall fare alike when I shall have executed my judgments upon those that despise them round about. Those that despise, condemn, and trouble the servants of God, judgments are their portion, they are thorns and briars, and fire shall consume them: see Num. xxiv. 8; Isa. xli. 11, 12.

Obs. 2. When God separates his people from the wicked, and plagues them for their wronging his people, then shall they have glorious times; they shall dwell safely, build houses, plant vineyards, dwell securely, have confidence, &c.

Obs. 3. The Lord's scope in comforting his people with sweet promises, in delivering them from their enemies, and bestowing choice mercies, is, that they should acknowledge, profess him to be their God, and praise him for his goodness to them: "They shall know that I am the Lord their God."

CHAPTER XXIX.

Ver. 1—7. In the tenth year, in the tenth month, in the twelfth day of the month, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, set thy face against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and prophecy against him, and against all Egypt: speak, and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, Pharaoh king of Egypt, the great dragon that lieth in the midst of his rivers, which hath said, My river is mine own, and I have made it for myself. But I will put hooks in thy jaws, and I will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales, and I will bring thee up out of the midst of thy rivers, and all the fish of thy rivers shall stick unto thy scales. And I will leave thee thrown into the wilderness, thee and all the fish of thy rivers: thou shalt fill upon the open fields; thou shalt not be brought together, nor gathered: I have given thee for meat to the beasts of the field and to the fowls of the heaven. And all the inhabitants of Egypt shall know that I am the Lord, because they have been a staff of reed to the house of Israel. When they took hold of thee by thy hand, thou didst break, and rend all their shoulder: and when they leaned upon thee, thou brakest, and madest all their loins to be at a stand.

EZEKIEL having prophesied against the Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, Philistines, Tyrians, and Sidonians, in the four antecedent chapters, in this, and in the three following, he prophesies against the Egyptians. In this chapter take notice,

I. Of an inscription, or preface, ver. 1, 2.

II. Of a commination against the king of Egypt, the land, and people thereof, ver. 2—12.

III. A promise of restoring Egypt again, ver. 13—16.

IV. A prophecy of giving the land of Egypt unto Nebuchadnezzar, ver. 17—20.

V. A promise of mercy to the Jews, ver. 21.

Ver. 1. "In the tenth year, in the tenth month, in the twelfth day of the month." This prophecy was given to Ezekiel in the tenth year of Jehoiachin's captivity, six months and odd days before the final destruction of Jerusalem, Jer. xxxix. 2. In chap. xxvi. our prophet tells you of a prophecy he had in the eleventh year of Jehoiachin's captivity, for he reckons upon that account, Ezek. i. 1, 2; and here he mentions one he had the year before: so that the order of time is not observed, but inverted. The reasons hereof are made by some to be these: 1. Because Tyrus and Zidon were nearer Jerusalem than Egypt was, and therefore the prophet respected the place rather than the time. 2. Because Tyrus and Zidon were to be destroyed before Egypt. 3. Because the prophet had another prophecy concerning Egypt in the seven and twentieth year of the captivity, ver. 17, and therefore thought meet to join them together.

Ver. 2. "Set thy face against Pharaoh king of Egypt." Of setting the face towards or against places or persons, occasion was given to speak, chap. xxviii. 21; xxv. 2; xx. 46; and vi. 2: by this posture he declared whither his prophecy tended. He was far from Egypt, being in Babylon, but looking towards it fixedly was an argument he had something to say concerning it.

"Pharaoh." This was a name common to the kings of Egypt, as Caesar was to the Roman emperors, and signifies a king, in the old Egyptian language, as Josephus saith. Some make it to signify denying him, because Pharaoh denied God. Others interpret it, free, because he was absolute of himself; but rather it was a name of honour, given unto them. In the word you have mention of Pharaoh-nechoh, 2 Kings xxiii. 29, that is, Pharaoh the lame; and of Pharaoh-hophra, Jer. xlv. 30, whom Herodotus calls Apries, and is the Pharaoh here meant.

"Egypt." It is a famous region of Africa, so called either from Ægyptus the son of Belus, or from the blackness of the river Nilus, which formerly was called Sicho, that is, black. The Grecians understanding this, they, in their language, called it αἴθρων, which signifies black, whence in time the land came to be called Egypt. In the Old Testament it is always called the land of Mizraim, from Mizraim the son of Ham; for of this Mizraim came the Egyptians. It is a land very fruitful, the granary of the world. Macrobius gives it this honour, to be the mother of arts: it had famous schools, especially at Alexandria, but abounded with superstition and idolatry. The Egyptians were the first, saith Polydore Virgil, that set up altars, Lib. 1. de Reum Inventione, c. 5. temples, images, and sacrificed to idol gods, and taught strangers to do so.

"Prophecy against him, and against all Egypt." These words show the latitude and extent of his prophecy; it was not to be against the king alone, or his nobles, but against them and all the people. He was to prophesy against great and small.

Obs. 1. The Lord would have men mind the time when he sets his prophets on work, and that punctually. The year, month, and day, are here recorded, when he gave out his word to Ezekiel, that the same might be observed by all it concerned. The Jews trusted much to Egypt, and the kings thereof. The Egyptians were haughty and self-confident. Now God records the time of his commissioning Ezekiel to prophesy against the king of Egypt, and the Egyptians, that the Jews, hearing of their ruin, destined from such a time, they might rely no longer upon them; and that the Egyptians might consider what to do, being in such imminent danger, for their treachery to the Jews, and confidence in what they had.

Obs. 2. That the servants of God must impartially dispense the word committed unto them. "Set thy face against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and prophesy against him, and against all Egypt." He must neither fear nor flatter any, of what condition or rank soever, but declare the mind of God, and denounce his judgments indifferently towards all. When prophets, and the sons of prophets, have to do with great ones, they are apt to be discouraged, and to falter in their work, which they ought not to do, considering God who sends them is greater than the greatest. Jeremiah had something of this nature in him, and therefore see how God rouses him, and steels his spirit; chap. i. 17, 18, "Gird up thy loins, and arise, and speak unto them all that I command thee: be not dismayed at their faces, lest I confound thee before them. For behold, I have made thee this day a defended city, and an iron pillar, and brazen walls against the whole land, against the kings of Judah, against the princes thereof, against the priests thereof, and against the people of the land. And they shall fight against thee." Jeremiah had high and low, all sorts of men, yea all men, against him; yet he must dispense the truth, and all the truth, impartially, not fearing the faces of any, lest he should be confounded.

Ver. 3. "Behold, I am against thee, Pharaoh king of Egypt." The words may be read, Behold, I am above thee: thou art above others, and thinkest none to be above thyself; but I am above thee, and being above thee in power and greatness, "I am against thee" for thy wickedness. 1, that am God, the King of kings, that shake heaven and earth at my pleasure, that tumble down kings from their thrones and seats, "I, even I am against thee."

"The great dragon that lieth in the midst of his rivers." The Hebrew word for "dragon" is, תַּנִּין which, Lam. iv. 3, is rendered, a sea monster; in Job vii. 12, a whale; in Isa. li. 9, a dragon; and so here: it notes monstros and great creatures in the sea or at land, and, according to the subject matter, it is to be understood of the whale, dragon, or crocodile. The Septuagint, Montanus, Vulgate, Vatablus, and our English, have it, dragon. Junius, Piscator, and Lavater, a great whale. Some interpreters make it the crocodile, which is like a dragon or serpent, and lives in the Egyptian fens and waters, chiefly in the river of Nile, and may not unfitly be called the whale or dragon thereof. Pharaoh is likened unto this dragon or crocodile.

1. The crocodile is the chiefest and greatest of all that moved in the Egyptian waters, no fish, no serpent, comparable to it: so Pharaoh was the chiefest and greatest among all the Egyptians.

2. The crocodile is cruel and ravenous, seeking his prey both in the waters and on the land, being armed with sharp claws and teeth; and some of them can swallow an entire heifer, as Sands reports in his Travels: so the Egyptian Pharaohs were cruel and ravenous. Did not Pharaoh command the midwives to kill all the males of the Hebrews at their birth? and when they would not do it, did not he charge his people to drown them? Exod. i.; and did he not seek his prey in the Red sea, when he pursued the Israelites going through it?

3. The crocodile is subtle, and useth cunning ways to get his prey; he will lie as if asleep and dead, with his mouth open, to deceive the birds and passengers. Sometimes also he fills his mouth with water, and spouts it out in the way where beasts and men do pass, that so, it being slippery, they may fall, and become a prey to him. So the Egyptian Pharaohs were subtle, and used much cunning to make a prey of the people, especially the Jews: Exod. i. 10, "Come, let us deal wisely with them;" and how cunning was he in calling forth his magicians, to discredit the miracles of Moses and Aaron! chap. vii. and viii.

"That lieth in the midst of his rivers." The Hebrew for "rivers" is, נַחַל, and notes such as are made by the art and help of man, cut out of some great river for to water the land. In Egypt they had seldom any rain, but cut rivers out of Nilus, by which the land was watered; according to that, Deut. xi. 10, where Canaan is said not to be like Egypt, where they sowed their seed, and watered it with the foot: that is, they digged trenches and little rivers, and so watered Egypt by the help of their feet, but Canaan was watered from heaven. The dragons, or crocodiles, lay lurking in these securely; and so did Pharaoh in his kingdom, which was full of artificial rivers.

"My river is mine own, and I have made it for myself." The words in the Hebrew sound thus, To me is my river, and I have made myself. The Septuagint is, Mine are the rivers, and I have made them; that is, Mine is Nilus, and all the aqueducts, or rivulets, cut out of it: but if we take the words as they are in the original, the sense may be this: To me is my river, it is instead of clouds, rain, heaven, God. I have Nilus, which makes my land as fruitful, comfortable, and beneficial unto me, as all those do the lands of others; if they owe ought to them, I owe as much to Nilus. If we take the words as translated, "My river is mine own," that is, it is so mine that none can take it from me, or hinder me of the benefit of it: here he showed his pride, arrogance, and vain confidence, for God had in a former Pharaoh's time made Nilus useless unto them in Egypt, Gen. xli. 55, when the seven years' famine was, and he could do it again.

Those words, "I have made it for myself," must not be interpreted as if he made Nilus, for that had its being and flowings many hundred years before, and the spring of it lay unfound-out: but the meaning is, I have by my power, wisdom, and industry, made it advantageous to myself and people; I have enriched them and myself thereby, and so furnished and secured my kingdom by means of it, that I shall neither stand in need of nor fear any. Herodotus saith of this king, whom he calls Apries, that it was his usual saying, no God could move him out of his kingdom, he had so established it.

Obs. 1. God is an open and professed enemy unto wicked kings; he proclaims war against them, be they never so great. "Behold, I am against thee, Pharaoh king of Egypt." Few are the kings which abuse not their authority; they lift up themselves, oppress the people, oppose the interest of God, and therefore he is a declared adversary unto them. Jer. xxv. 18-26, you may see what a multitude of kings the Lord sends the cup of fury unto, and draws out the sword against. There was scarcely one good king at that time upon the face of the earth. God was against them all. It is a dreadful thing for any king to have God denounce war against him, he must needs be conquered, and brought to nothing; for God is the Lord of hosts, armed with such power and majesty as that there is no withstanding him: Isa. xl. 23, "He bringeth princes to nothing;" when they are wicked he will not spare them, though they be as great as whales, as cruel as dragons, and as cunning as crocodiles.

Obs. 2. Wicked kings are resemblances of Satan. Pharaoh is here called "the great dragon," and so is Satan: Rev. xii. 9, "The great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan." Dragons are dreadful, subtle, and cruel: so are tyrants, so is the devil. The former Pharaohs were dragons, and so called, Psal. lxxiv. 13; Isa. li. 9; they were enemies to the people of God, so are all wicked kings, so is Satan. What were all the persecuting emperors but dragons? they were lively representations of the devil, that great red dragon; and so are all that tread in their steps.

Obs. 3. Princes abounding with outward things, grow secure, arrogant, and confident. Pharaoh lay as a dragon "in the midst of his rivers," he was secure, fed upon the prey, and said, arrogantly enough, and with too much confidence, "My river is mine own." I have water sufficient in Nilus for the watering of Egypt, I need beg no rain of God: let him give his rain to whom he will; and I am so well fortified by my rivers, that I fear no power to dispossess me thereof; I am happy, and who can make me miserable? Here you have the true picture and character of this Egyptian Pharaoh, and in him of all wicked kings, who in their prosperity forget God, promise much safety to themselves, and trust in an arm of flesh.

Ver. 4. "But I will put hooks in thy jaws." Here begin God's judgments upon this confident king. God would deal with him as men do with some great fish; when the hook is in his jaws, they draw him out of the waters to the dry land, where he dies. So God would, by an occasion, draw Pharaoh out of Egypt into another land, and with him a great army of the Egyptians, where they should all perish. The occasion was this, as Junius relates it, out of Herodotus: Adiciam, or Ariciam, king of the Libyans, had put himself under the protection of the king of Egypt, because the Cyreneans had invaded some part of Libya, and had spoiled king Arierances of his government; hereupon Pharaoh was provoked to lead out an army in Agrum Cyrenaicum, which was the hook God put in his jaws.

The word for "hooks" is, הַמְּוָה from הוה a thorn, and metaphorically a hook, such as men bait to catch fish with. Job xli. 1, "Canst thou draw out Leviathan with an hook?" the whale was too big to be taken with such a hook, though other fishes were not. God had a hook to take and draw out the Egyptian dragon.

"I will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales." Pharaoh being likened unto the crocodile, or sea-dragon, here his princes, nobles, and people are called fish, and likened unto them for their multitude and dispersion into all parts, and aptness to be devoured one by another. These should adhere unto Pharaoh, as the scales do unto a fish. He had called Nilus his river, and it is said here, "the fish of thy river." The word for "scales" is, קַשְׂתָּא from קשה which signifies difficult, and the radical letters are doubled, showing that they so tenaciously cleave together, that it is very hard to pierce them. The scales of Pharaoh were the arms that he bare. 1 Sam. xvii. 5, the "coat of mail" which Goliath had on, was a brigandine, or coat of scales, that is, made like the scales of a fish. Such a one it is probable Pharaoh had on; and all his people in their arms suitable followed him.

"I will bring thee up out of the midst of thy rivers." He thought himself so secure in Egypt, as that no danger, no mischief, could befall him. Egypt is so fenced by nature, having the sea on one side, the vast desert on the other, on the right hand such craggy mountains, and on the left such fens, as that it is judged inaccessible; but however it was in itself, yet God saith here, "I will bring thee up out of the midst of thy rivers." I will draw thee out into thine enemy's land, and there thou shalt fall.

Ver. 5. "And I will leave thee, thrown into the wilderness." The Hebrew is, I will leave thee in the wilderness, שָׁמַר; signifies, to cast off; so to leave, as to have no care of what is left. God would bring this proud, confident king into the Cyrenean wilderness, and there leave him to be a prey unto the enemy; when he and his army were spread over the wilderness, then they should be deserted of God, and left to spoil.

"Thee and all the fish of thy rivers." As a fish drawn out of the water, left upon the land, dies, and becomes a prey, so should the king of Egypt and the Egyptians.

"Thou shalt fall upon the open fields; thou shalt not be brought together, nor gathered." Thine army shall be so beaten, routed, and overthrown, as no one part of it shall be joined to another; there shall be no rallying, no recruiting, no gathering up for burial, but all shall be meat for the beasts of the field and for the fowls of heaven. Some fishes, when they are drawn out of the waters, are taken up, much use is made of them; others are thrown away, Matt. xiii. 48; but here they were so bad, that all should be thrown to the beasts and birds of prey.

Obs. 1. When God is wroth with princes and people, he makes and takes occasions to execute his judgments upon them. Pharaoh and his people had sinned greatly against God, and he stirred up the Cyreneans to invade their neighbour country, the Libyans; whereupon he and his are drawn out to war, and fall thereby. He and his thought to live securely in Egypt, but God had hooks to draw them out, and judgments to inflict upon them being so drawn out. The elder Pharaoh in Moses' days, having greatly provoked God, by detaining the Jews in Egypt, God made an occasion, by dividing the waters of the Red sea, for him to follow them; and then, he and his being in the Red sea, took occasion to be avenged on him, by causing the waters to swallow up him and all his host, Exod. xiv. God drew Zerah, with his huge host of one thousand thousand and three hundred chariots, out of Ethiopia unto Maresbah, which was a city in the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 44, and there he smote the Ethiopians, and overthrew them, 2 Chron. xiv. God made Ramoth in Gilead a hook to draw out wicked Ahab to war against the Syrians, and when he was there, he was slain, and his army wholly routed, 1 Kings xxii. God wants not hooks to draw Leviathans, dragons, and crocodiles, out of their holes, fens, or rivers, nor swords to pierce them when they are drawn out. He had hooks for Hamilton, and the late king of Scots, to draw them into England, and judgments to inflict upon them being come forth, for their iniquities. Let great and small take heed how they offend the Lord; he hath hooks enough, and can make new if he want them, to drag sinners out of their lurking holes, and vials of wrath to pour out upon them being haled out.

Obs. 2. In those actions men do freely, the wise providence of God acts powerfully, and accomplisheth his designs. Pharaoh and his subjects go out freely to war against their enemies, yet God had a hook in their jaws, and drew them to that work. Rehoboam freely refused the counsel of the wise men, and freely followed the counsel of the young men, yet God's hand was in these actions, his hook was in his jaws; 1 Kings xii. 15, "The cause was from the Lord." Rehoboam carried on freely his own design, and God powerfully carried on his, though Rehoboam discerned it not, neither aimed at it. God sent the Assyrians against the hypocritical Jews, he charged him to take the spoil, and tread them down like mire in the streets. He came freely, though God's hook were in his nostrils; he came to do his own will, not God's, that he aimed not at, for he meant not so, his heart did not think so, Isa. x. 6, 7, yet God's providence overruled so, that he did the work of God. This is a great mystery, all wicked men act freely, drive on their own interests, yet God powerfully moves in these actions, brings to pass his own purposes and counsels, and that without sin.

Obs. 3. The counsels and strength of princes and armies come to nothing, where God doth not assist, but desert. "I will leave thee thrown into the wilderness, thee and all the fish of thy rivers; thou shalt fall." Pharaoh was a great dragon, wise and subtle, he had wise counsellors, strong soldiers, a great army; but neither their counsel nor strength stood them in stead; when God had drawn them into the field, he left them, and they fell. Human wisdom and strength can do nothing without God. Saul had a great army, all Israel were gathered together to fight against the Philistines, but did they prevail? no, they fled, and fell down before their enemies; and what was the reason? Saul tells you, 1 Sam. xxviii. 15, "The Lord is departed from me," he is neither with me nor mine army; all Israel can do nothing against uncircumcised Philistines when God had forsaken them. Jeroboam had an army of eight hundred thousand men, mighty men of valour; Abijah meets him with an army of four hundred thousand, even half so many, and slew of Jeroboam's army five hundred thousand. They were strong men on that side, and two to one, yet more fell by a hundred thousand than Abijah's army consisted of. And what was the cause hereof? 2 Chron. xiii. 3, 12, the cause was, God was with them;

"Behold, God himself is with us for our Captain," he guides us, and girds us with strength, said Abijah: Jeroboam by his golden calves had driven God from him. So then, where God is not, there can be no success. 1 Sam. ii. 9, "By strength shall no man prevail;" let men have strong horses, strong arms, strong bodies, strong counsels, strong armies, strong treasures, if they have not El-shaddai, the strong Almighty God with them, all their strengths will prove weakness: we have seen this made good in our days most eminently.

Obs. 4. God in his just judgments brings princes and armies, who confide in an arm of flesh, to open shame and utter ruin. "Thou shalt fall upon the open fields; thou shalt not be brought together, nor gathered;" thou shalt lie unburied, and be meat for beasts and fowls. This Egyptian great dragon, and all the fish of his rivers, were such as God cast out for naught, and gave to be meat to kites, crows, vultures, dogs, swine, and wild beasts; their shame was open, their end was miserable. Pharaoh that entreated the Israelites so cruelly, did not God bring him to open shame, and his great army? did he not drown this dragon, and all who adhered to him, in the deeps? did he not give their carcases to be meat to the sea-dragons and sea-leviathans? Absalom and his army met with shame, scorn, and misery enough, 2 Sam. xviii. Jehoiakim was "buried with the burial of an ass," Jer. xxii. 19; that is, he had no burial, but was cast out, to shame, scorn, and feeding of birds and beasts.

Ver. 6. "And all the inhabitants of Egypt shall know that I am the Lord." In this verse the event of the former judgment upon Pharaoh and his army is laid down, together with the cause thereof. The event is this; the Egyptians shall see, that the counsels and confidences of princes are vain, that they are not masters of designs, to carry them on and make them successful according to their minds and wills, but that the great God of heaven and earth overrules all, blasting or prospering the greatest undertakings at his pleasure; and so shall acknowledge him to be the Lord.

"Because they have been a staff of reed to the house of Israel." Here the cause is rendered of God's so dealing with Pharaoh and his army, viz. because they were unfaithful to the house of Israel, and prejudicial. The word for "staff" is, mishne'eth, from שָׁנָה to lean upon, because men that are weak do lean and rest upon their staves; and metaphorically it is put for stay, hope, confidence: 2 Sam. xxii. 19, "The Lord was my stay," it is mishan, or mishnan, my staff, that is, my stay, my hope, my confidence.

The Jewish state being feeble in its latter days, entered into covenant with the Egyptians, and leaned upon them, as on a staff, for help against its own weakness and others' violence; but Egypt proved "a staff of reed."

The word for "reed" is, קָנָה whence our English word, a cane. Egypt did abound with reeds and canes, especially the banks of Nilus, where it is probable the little ark which contained Moses was laid, for it is said, Exod. ii. 3, "she laid it in the flags by the river's brink;" flags and reeds did grow there. The Egyptians here, and in other places, are compared unto them.

1. Reeds have nothing solid or substantial in them. They are hollow, empty things, or some slight matter in them; if you trust to them they will deceive you. Such were the kings of Egypt and the Egyptians, they had no solidity in them. Isa. xix. 11, "Surely the princes of Zoan are fools, the counsel of the wise counsellors of Pharaoh is become brutish:"

their counsels were not solid, they had no faithfulness in them; they oft promised to help the Jews, but did not, they failed them; Isa. xxx. 2, all the strength of Egypt was but as a shadow, their help was vain, and to no purpose, ver. 7; and it is said, "Pharaoh king of Egypt is but a noise," Jer. xlvi. 17, like a hollow cane without substance. The Jews expected help from Egypt, they leaned upon Pharaoh and his forces as on a staff, but he and they deceived them; so that they complained at last, saying, "Our eyes failed for our vain help; in our watching we have watched for a nation that could not save us," Lam. iv. 17: they earnestly waited for help, they relied wholly upon Egypt, and Egypt did wholly fail them.

2. A reed is a weak thing, and blows this way and that way as the wind blows. Matt. xi. 7, "What went ye out into the wilderness to see? A reed shaken with the wind," an inconstant, weak, flexible thing? John was no such man, but the Egyptians were: Isa. xxxi. 3, "The Egyptians are men, and not God;" they are mutable, uncertain, turning every way for their own advantage; they made leagues with the Jews, held correspondence with them, and at their pleasure violated them again.

3. A reed easily breaks, and when it breaks it endangers those that lean upon it; the splinters and shivers run into the hand and shoulder, ver. 7, and so it not only deceives, but damnifies. Such were the Egyptians, they drew the Jews into sinful leagues with them, and by that means to sinful marriages and sinful worship with them. Lavater tells us that the Egyptians persuaded Zedekiah to break with Nebuchadnezzar, unto whom he was tributary, promising him help to recover former liberty, which Zedekiah attempting, proved ruin to him, and the whole nation; so that the Egyptians were a piercing reed unto them. Rabshakeh knew what the Egyptians were, when he said to Hezekiah, "Behold, thou trustest upon the staff of this bruised reed, even upon Egypt, on which if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it: so is Pharaoh king of Egypt unto all that trust in him," 2 Kings xviii. 21.

Ver. 7. "When they took hold of thee by thy hand." When the Jews looked towards Egypt, and sent their ambassadors thither for help, Ezek. xvii. 7, 15, they took them by the hand, and the Egyptians promised to do great things for them; and they came with an army out of Egypt, to help them against Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. xxxvii. 5, from whom they had solicited the Jews to revolt; but what was the issue? it follows in the next words:

"Thou didst break, and rend all their shoulder." Nebuchadnezzar being before Jerusalem, raised his siege, and hastened to encounter with the Egyptian army, which returning back into Egypt, caused Nebuchadnezzar to return to the siege, which he continued without any further interruption by the Egyptians, till he took and burnt the city, and carried away the Jews to Babylon, Jer. xxxvii. 5, 7, 8: they leaned upon Pharaoh and his army, to secure them against Nebuchadnezzar, but he failed them, and so brake and rent their shoulder; that is, did them much harm, and grieved them exceedingly; as a man that leans upon a staff, and it breaking runs into his flesh, shatters his shoulder-bone in pieces, he is much damnified and grieved.

"And when they leaned upon thee, thou brakest." The Hebrew word for breaking here is, תִּשְׁבֵּר the former, תִּרְצֵץ from רָצַץ which signifies, to shake, bruise, or break, but not altogether. שִׁבַר notes a total breaking, a fragmentation, breaking into pieces. The sense is, the Egyptians did utterly fail and disappoint the Jews, who relied altogether upon them.

“And madest all their loins to be at a stand.” The Septuagint translate the words thus, thou hast broken all their loins. The Vulgate is, thou hast loosened all their loins, thou hast filled them with fears and faintings, and caused their strength to fail. But our translation is according to the Hebrew, if we read the words thus, and madest all their loins to stand; thou hast made them to withdraw their confidence in thee, finding thee a broken staff, and to trust unto their own strength, and stand upon their own legs; they gird up their own loins, look to themselves, and trust no more to thee.

Obs. 1. God by his judgments makes himself known to heathens, and to acknowledge him to be another kind of God than their idol gods. “And all the inhabitants of Egypt shall know that I am the Lord;” that I rule and overrule all actions, and do whatever I please in heaven or earth.

Obs. 2. The ruin of princes and their armies is their sins and wickedness. Pharaoh's pride and perfiduousness caused the Lord to leave and overthrow him and his in the wilderness, to give them to be meat to the beasts of the field and fowls of heaven; he thought no power could overpower him, he was unfaithful to the house of Israel, and deceived them, trusting to him for aid, and because of these things, the Lord poured out vials of wrath upon him. Zedekiah's perfiduousness brought sword and fire upon Jerusalem, blindness, captivity, and chains upon himself.

Obs. 3. It is neither pleasing to God, nor safe for God's people, to rely upon heathens and wicked ones for help in their straits and fears. The house of Israel relied upon the Egyptians, and this pleased not the Lord, neither was safe for them. Isa. xxxi. 1, “Woe to them that go down to Egypt for help; and stay on horses, and trust in chariots, because they are many; and in horsemen, because they are very strong; but they look not unto the Holy One of Israel, neither seek the Lord!” The Jews looked to the strength of Egypt, and not to the strength of God, and therefore a woe is denounced against them; God was provoked thereby, and he would bring evil upon them, and saith, that the helped and helpers should both fall and fail together, ver. 3: yea, he tells the Jews, chap. xxx. 3, that the strength of Pharaoh should be their shame, and their trust in the shadow of Egypt their confusion. When Asa relied on the king of Syria, and not on God, Hanani the prophet told him he had done foolishly, and that thenceforward he should have war, 2 Chron. xvi. 7, 9. God's people should trust in God alone, who is all-sufficient for them, and not in an arm of flesh. Idolaters, profane and wicked ones, are seldom cordial to God's people; how can they help the church of God in earnest, which they hate most heartily? The Egyptians loved not the Jews, and therefore they smarted for seeking their help, and trusting to them for help.

Obs. 4. That those mediums men expect comfort and help from, do oft wound them and prove their ruin. The house of Israel leans upon Pharaoh and the Egyptians for relief and aid against the Babylonians, and what did they? break and rend all their shoulder, and dissolve their loins; they failed them, and this proved the rending of the Jewish shoulder, the breaking of them in pieces, and total dissolving of their kingdom: they were to them as a staff to a weak, infirm man; he leans hard upon it, that suddenly breaks, runs into his arm and shoulder, and so falling down wounded, he rises no more; that he trusted to wounded and ruined him. This falls out oft, that men's confidences are their confusions. The things they trust to and lean upon are thorns unto them. Abaz places his hope in Tilgath-pilneser; when the Edomites invaded Judah, he is sent for, comes, and what then? he “distressed him, but strengthened him not,” 2 Chron. xxviii. 20, he was a staff of reed unto him. Benhadad had great confidence in Hazael, but he proved his ruin, 2 Kings viii. 8, 15, he made a prey of him and his kingdom at once. In Obadiah's prophecy, ver. 7, it is said, “The men of thy bread have laid a wound under thee;” that is, those Edom was familiar with, confided in, looked for much comfort from, even they wounded her, they laid snares and traps for her, they became instruments of her ruin.

Obs. 5. Disappointments by and harms from others, do make men wary, and look to themselves. When the Egyptian reed brake and wounded the Jews, then their loins were made to stand, then they recalled their spirits from the Egyptians, and set themselves to secure themselves against the Babylonish forces. While men trust to others, they are usually negligent in their counsels and actions; but when they see others fail them, and feel they have wounded them, then they muster up their spirits, then they consult, watch, and act more vigorously.

Ver. 8–12. Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will bring a sword upon thee, and cut off man and beast out of thee. And the land of Egypt shall be desolate and waste; and they shall know that I am the Lord: because he hath said, The river is mine, and I have made it. Behold, therefore I am against thee, and against thy rivers, and I will make the land of Egypt utterly waste and desolate, from the tower of Syene even unto the border of Ethiopia. No foot of man shall pass through it, nor foot of beast shall pass through it, neither shall it be inhabited forty years. And I will make the land of Egypt desolate in the midst of the countries that are desolate, and her cities among the cities that are laid waste shall be desolate forty years; and I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will disperse them through the countries.

In these verses you have clearly laid before you these particulars:

I. The judgment God would bring upon Egypt, viz. the sword, ver. 8.

II. The effect or event of this sword; utter devastation, ver. 8, 9, and dispersion, ver. 12.

III. The extent of this devastation, ver. 10.

IV. The duration of the same, ver. 11, 12, which is forty years.

V. One special cause thereof repeated, ver. 9, which is the pride of the king of Egypt.

Ver. 8. “I will bring a sword upon thee.” “Sword” in Scripture imports sometimes power, as Exod. xviii. 4, “God delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh,” saith Moses, that is, from the power of Pharaoh: sometimes great sorrows, as Luke ii. 35, “A sword shall pierce through thine own soul;” that is, the mockings, reproaches, and evil usages Mary and Christ should meet with in the world, should be as a sword in the heart of Mary, and fill her with sorrows; sometimes it is put for the word of God, as Eph. vi. 17, “The sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God.” “Which,” in the grammatical construction, may refer to “spirit;” but then the sense is not so clear, for what then shall be the “sword?” It is better therefore to read those words, ὁ ἔτι, which thing is the word of God. Sometimes for division, as Matt. x. 34, "I came not to send peace, but a sword," that is, division; so Christ expresses it in Luke xii. 51: and sometimes war, and the evils which attend it; so it is to be taken here; God would bring the Babylonian army, Nebuchadnezzar, with all instruments of war, upon Pharaoh and his land.

"And cut off man and beast out of thee." God would deal severely with Egypt, not only man should be cut off, but even the beasts also. They had not sinned, and God did not punish the beasts in destroying of them; but he punished their owners, in depriving them of their beasts, who had made them serve their lusts. Egypt abounded with men and cattle, and the Egyptians being wicked, and given to luxury, God brought that judgment upon them, viz. the sword, which spared neither man nor beast.

Ver. 9. "The land of Egypt shall be desolate and waste." Egypt was a fruitful and pleasant land, flowing with milk and honey, Numb. xvi. 13; but here the Lord threatened to make it "desolate and waste." The Hebrew is, it shall be for a desert, and a reproach; the wars should consume all, cities, villages, men, beasts, so that it should be a reproachful wilderness, stripped of all its glory and ornaments.

"And they shall know that I am the Lord." When I shall have brought in a potent enemy upon them, and laid all waste, then they shall know there is one greater than Pharaoh and the Egyptians, to whom belongs the right of lands and rivers.

"Because he hath said, The river is mine, and I have made it." Here the cause is specified, why the Lord would deal so severely with Egypt; because Pharaoh was so proud and arrogated so much to himself, he challengeth Nilus to be his, and that he by his art and industry had made it so beneficial to all Egypt. These words were spoken to in the 3rd verse.

Ver. 10. "I am against thee, and against thy rivers." In the 3rd verse it is said, "Behold, I am against thee, Pharaoh king of Egypt," and here, "I am against thee, and thy rivers." He was proud of and confident in his rivers, that they would fertilize his land, and secure him from enemies; but God was against him and them, and disappointed his confidences.

"I will make the land of Egypt utterly waste." The Hebrew is, the solitudes of solitariness, or the wastings of waste, that is, exceedingly waste, there shall be nothing considerable left therein, it shall be as a dry wilderness.

"From the tower of Syene even unto the border of Ethiopia." Solinus makes Syene to be in the front of Egypt, between Nilus and the Red sea, but others find it to be in the utmost parts of Egypt southward, five thousand furlongs above Alexandria. Pliny reports, under the tropic of Cancer, Pliny Natur. Histor. l. 2. c. 73. where, at mid-day of the solstice, bodies have no shadows. Sands also, in his Sands' Trav. l. 2. vol. p. 111. Travels, places it above Thebes, and under the tropic of Cancer, affirming that there was a well of marvellous depth in it, which was filled with light at the summer solstice. It is now called Asna. Boniferrius saith, it is a city of Egypt, in the utmost part of Thebais, and in the borders of Ethiopia. In Hebrew the word is, סניא in the Septuagint, Σουην. Therein was a tower, to defend from enemies they bordered upon, or for other uses.

"Even to the border of Ethiopia." These words will not afford good sense so we take Ethiopia as it is commonly taken, for if the desolation were but from Syene to Ethiopia, that was inconsiderable, they being near together, yea, so near that Syene determined them. It is improper to say, England shall be destroyed from Berwick to Scotland. The word in Hebrew for Ethiopia is, צוּט which in sacred Scripture doth not always note Ethiopia in Africa, though frequently it doth; for, Gen. ii. 13, "The name of the second river is Gihon," which there is said to compass "the whole land of Ethiopia," or Cush, this cannot be the African Ethiopia, for Gihon ran not that way: it was the oriental Ethiopia, of which Moses' wife was, Numb. xii. 1, "Miriam and Aaron spake against Moses because of the Ethiopian woman whom he had married;" the Hebrew is, the Cushite; this woman was Zipporah, the daughter of Jethro, the son of Reuel the Midianite, Exod. ii. 15, 18, 21; iii. 1. So then the Midianites were the oriental Cushites, or Ethiopians of Asia. Of this sort it is probable were those Ethiopians that came against Asa; 2 Chron. xiv. 9, Zerah the Ethiopian came with one thousand thousand; it had been too far a journey for so many to have marched out of the African Ethiopia. Tostatus upon the place saith, the Ethiopians dwelt not only in Africa, but in Asia also. Tornecellus and others make this Ethiopia, out of which Zerah came, to be the land of Midian. The word Cush, saith Junius upon the 2nd of Genesis, comprehends the three Arabias, both the Ethiopias, and all the meridian coast. The sense of our prophet is, that all Egypt should be laid waste, even from Syene, in the borders of the African Ethiopia, to Arabia and Midian, which are Cush, viz. the oriental Ethiopia.

Ver. 11. "No foot of man shall pass through it, nor foot of beast shall," &c. By these and such like speeches, great desolation is set forth unto us. We must not take the words so strictly, as if no man or beast should be found or left in Egypt; but it should be so wasted, that trading should cease, there should not be such markets, fairs, and merchandizing in her as was before, men should not mind coming to Egypt, nor have occasion to pass through it, few men or beasts, yet some should be there.

"Neither shall it be inhabited forty years." After the taking of Tyrus by a long siege, Nebuchadnezzar had Egypt given him for that service, which was in the seven and twentieth year of the Jews' captivity, ver. 17; shortly after he made war upon it, spoiled it of man, beast, and all its glory, and so it continued till the Babylonish captivity ceased, which was some forty or three and forty years after. There are different opinions among expositors concerning the beginning of these forty years, and their ending. Vide Junium.

Ver. 12. "In the midst of the countries that are desolate." Nebuchadnezzar made many countries desolate, according to the word of Jeremiah, chap. xxv. 9, and among those, Egypt was one; so the words "in the midst" are to be understood.

"And her cities among the cities that are laid waste." As Egypt was fertile, so populous, and abounded in great cities. Lavater informs us, that in the time of king Amasis, it had twenty thousand cities. How many or how great soever, they were laid waste by the Babylonian army, and that forty years.

"I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations." Where wars come, many are consumed by the sword, some are famished, some devoured by the plague and other diseases; and doubtless, though many Egyptians perished by such means, yet some escaped, and those God scattered, and drove into other countries.

Obs. 1. Wars, and the dismal effects of them, are the just judgments of God upon perfidious princes. Pharaoh had deceived the Jews; they leaned upon him for help, but he was a broken reed unto them: "Therefore, behold, I will bring a sword upon thee," and it shall be sharp, I will "cut off man and beast out of thee." Thou occasionedst my people to be cut off through thy unfaithfulness, and I will cause thee and thine to be cut off through my fury. Wars are dreadful, but they are appointed, sent, and ordered by God, wherever they come.

Obs. 2. Such is the efficacy and severity of God's judgments, as that nothing can stand before them, or secure against them. Egypt had strong cities, great rivers, was well peopled, abounded in horses and chariots, Isa. xxxi. 1; yet the land of Egypt shall be desolate and waste. God's judgments would cut off man and beast, destroy her cities, and in effect dry up her rivers, they should be made useless. Egypt struggled to defend and secure herself, but it availed not. Jer. xlvi. 11, "Go up into Gilead, and take balm, O virgin, the daughter of Egypt: in vain shalt thou use many medicines; for thou shalt not be cured." Egypt was yet a virgin, unconquered, and she is bid to go to Gilead, where the most precious and sovereign balm was, and to take thereof; that is, to use the best means she could find out to prevent her ravishing and destruction; and when she had tried one means and another, many medicines, all were vain, her wound was incurable, she had dealt deceitfully with the Jews, and lift up herself against the Lord, robbing him of his glory, whilst she said, The river is mine, I have made it for myself. God's judgments were of that power, and so severe, as Jerusalem, with all her art and means, could not prevent them, or protect herself from them. Jer. ii. 22, "Though thou wash thee with nitre, and take thee much sope," though thou have many excuses, shifts, pretences for what thou doest, though thou send to Egypt for help, though thou fast and pray, these things shall do thee no good; thine iniquity is marked before me, and my judgments must come, and lay thee waste, yea, utterly waste.

Obs. 3. God's judgments are often universal and sweeping. God would lay Egypt universally waste and desolate, and that from one border to another, from the tower of Syene to Arabia, within which bounds all Egypt was comprehended. Jer. xii. 12, "The spoilers are come upon all high places through the wilderness: for the sword of the Lord shall devour from the one end of the land even to the other end of the land; no flesh shall have peace." The Chaldeans were God's instruments, he put the sword in their hand, which did eat and devour from one extreme part of the land to another; no place so strong, so secret, but the sword found it out, and spared neither things nor persons; the judgment was so universal, that no flesh had peace, that is, none of the Jewish nation, the terror of the sword was every where. Zeph. iii. 6, "I have cut off the nations: their towers are desolate; I made their streets waste, that none passeth by: their cities are destroyed, so that there is no man, that there is no inhabitant." God swept away from the heathens their towers, their streets, their cities, their men, expecting his people would have learned to fear him, received instruction, and prevented a universal judgment at least; ver. 7, "But they rose early, and corrupted all their doings;" as God's mercies had not, so his judgments did not do them good. Therefore he complains thus, Jer. xlv. 7, 8, "Wherefore commit ye this great evil against your souls, to cut off from you man and woman, child and suckling, out of Judah, to leave you none to remain; in that ye provoke me unto wrath with the works of your hands?" they put God upon a universal judgment by their universal wickedness.

Obs. 4. That the times of kingdoms' flourishings, and kingdoms' desolations, are in the hand of God;

he sets the bounds and periods for their prosperity and their adversity. He said, "The land of Egypt shall be desolate;" he put an end to its glory and greatness; he set the time how long it should prosper, and when that time was come, and it brought to desolation, he determined the time how long it should lie in that desolate condition: It shall not be inhabited forty years; the cities of it shall be desolate forty years. Isa. xxiii. 15, Tyre, as it had its time for reigning, so its seventy years for suffering: the same proportion of years the Lord allotted unto the kingdom of Judah, and to divers nations, Jer. xxv. 11; God put an end to their dominion, and determined the time of their subjection, which was seventy years' service unto the king of Babylon. The life and death of states is in the hand of the Lord, to lengthen and shorten at his pleasure. Some states flourish four hundred, some five hundred, some six hundred years, and then they are made desolate for their forty, their seventy years, or more, as seems good unto the Lord; Dan. ii. 21, "He changeth times and seasons," he removeth kings from their glory and greatness, and throws them into obscurity, what time he hath determined for them.

Obs. 5. In time of wars people are driven from their friends, habitations, and countries. When the sword came upon Egypt, the Egyptians were scattered among the nations, and dispersed through the countries; God made use of them abroad, to declare their own misery, and his justice. It is a sad thing to be amongst strangers, whose language is not understood; to be exposed to the scorns, frowns, and harsh usage of enemies; the smoke of one's own country is better than the fire of another. Many in our late wars have met with this great evil, and can experimentally tell you what it is to be driven out of their own country and habitations into foreign ones.

Ver. 13—16. Yet thus saith the Lord God; At the end of forty years will I gather the Egyptians from the people whither they were scattered: and I will bring again the captivity of Egypt, and will cause them to return into the land of Pathros, into the land of their habitation; and they shall be there a base kingdom. It shall be the basest of the kingdoms; neither shall it exalt itself any more above the nations: for I will diminish them, that they shall no more rule over the nations. And it shall be no more the confidence of the house of Israel, which bringeth their iniquity to remembrance, when they shall look after them: but they shall know that I am the Lord God.

These verses are a promise of mercy to the Egyptians: where comes into consideration,

I. The time when this mercy shall be, at the end of the forty years.

II. The mercy itself, which is double:

1. Revocation, ver. 13.

2. Restitution of their kingdom, ver. 14, 15; where the nature of the kingdom is set forth, "it shall be the basest," &c.

III. The end and aim of God in so doing, which is twofold:

1. That Egypt may be no more the confidence of the Jews.

2. Acknowledgment of God, ver. 16.

Ver. 13. "At the end of forty years will I gather the Egyptians." The Egyptians being notorious idolaters, confiding in their own strength, were scattered among the nations, where they wandered, and lived without hope of seeing their own country, and becoming a people or kingdom again; but the Lord out of his abundant goodness, beyond theirs and others' expectation, promiseth, that after forty years expired he would gather them, wherever they were scattered. Forty years he would exercise them with captivity, and those hard things which accompanied the same, but at the end thereof he would show them mercy. This is that which Jeremiah speaks of, chap. xli. 25, 26, "The Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saith; Behold, I will punish the multitude of No," that was a great city in Egypt, afterward called Alexandria, "and Pharaoh, and Egypt, with their gods, and their kings; even Pharaoh, and all them that trust in him;" that was Johanan, and all the Jews who fled into Egypt for safety, contrary to the mind and counsel of Jeremiah, chap. xlii. 19—22; "and I will deliver them into the hand of those that seek their lives, and into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of his servants." Here you have the judgment of God upon Egypt, Egyptians, and the Jews trusting in them; but now what follows? "And afterwards it shall be inhabited, as in the days of old;" after forty years' suffering, Egypt should receive her scattered ones, and become a kingdom again.

Ver. 14. "And I will bring again the captivity of Egypt." Here the abstract is put for the concrete, "captivity" for captives: so you have it Jer. xlviii. 47, "I will bring again the captivity of Moab;" and Ezek. xxxix. 25, "I will bring again the captivity of Jacob;" that is, the captives of Jacob, the captives of Moab, and the captives of Egypt, or Egyptian captives.

"And will cause them to return into the land of Pathros." Maldonate makes Pathros a city, towards the south borders of Egypt, furthest off from Chaldea. Bonfrerius judges it to be that city in Egypt called Babylon. But here it is called, "the land of Pathros," and Jer. xlv. 1, "the country of Pathros," where the Jews which fled into Egypt dwelt; and though it were distinct from Egypt, Isa. xi. 11, for it is said there, God shall recover his people "from Assyria, from Egypt, and from Pathros," yet it was in the land of Egypt; Jer. xlv. 15, the Jews "dwelt in the land of Egypt, in Pathros." Junius conceives this country to be near unto Arabia Petrea; and by Jerom it was reputed formerly to be nemus Arabiae, a wood of Arabia. Pathros, it is most probable, was so called from Pathrusim, the son of Mizraim, Gen. x. 14: as all Egypt was called Mizraim from the father, so might some part be called Pathros from the son, viz. that part which lay between the Red sea and the Mediterranean sea; and as God had carried them out that way, so he would bring them again the same way.

"Into the land of their habitation." The Hebrew for "habitation" is, מכור, the land of thy tradings, where they did buy and sell; for the word is from מכר to sell, and deliver wares to others. Piscator hath the words thus, into the land of their commerce. The Egyptians dealt in fine linen, brodered works, flax, silk, and other rich commodities; now God would bring them into the land of their trading again.

Obs. 1. The goodness and mercy of God extends to heathens, he hath a care of them in their captivity, and after they have suffered his appointed time, he will show kindness to them. The Egyptians, after forty years' scattering, shall be gathered. Isa. xix. 23—25, "In that day shall there be an highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria, and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians. In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land: whom the Lord of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hand, and Israel mine inheritance." The Assyrians, Egyptians, and Israelites, had their days and times of suffering, and God had his days and times of showing mercy to those heathen nations, as well as to Israel. It is, Blessed be Egypt my people, and blessed be Assyria the work of my hands, and blessed be Israel mine inheritance.

Obs. 2. The afflictions of nations and persons may be long, yet not without end; they may suffer seven and seven years, yea, twenty, thirty, forty years together, which is a long time, and then see an end of their sufferings. "At the end of forty years will I gather," &c.; the Egyptians were captives forty years to the king of Babylon. The Israelites were in bondage to the Philistines forty years, Judg. xiii. 1, and then there came an end of their slavery; they, and many other nations, were captives to the king of Babylon seventy years, Jer. xxv. 11, which was a long time to sufferers; but when they were run out, their captivities ended. God sometimes lengthens out the afflictions of people very much, for ends best known unto himself; as Gen. xv. 13, God "said unto Abraham, Know of a surety, that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years:" here was a long season to be afflicted, but then it had an end. Jehoiachin was thirty-seven years a prisoner in Babylon, but in the twelfth month of that year he was set at liberty, Jer. lii. 31. The man in the gospel had been afflicted thirty-eight years with an infirmity, John v. 5, and then he was delivered from it. Though wars, famines, plagues, captivities, diseases, and other afflictions, may be long, yet they are not, they shall not be for ever, they must have an end.

Obs. 3. That God sometimes deals more favourably with heathens than with his own people. "At the end of forty years will I gather the Egyptians;" but it was the end of seventy years before he gathered the Jews out of Babylon: his own people were thirty years, or near upon, longer under the Babylonish yoke than the Egyptians. There was just cause for this; God's people had sinned worse than the heathens, and so provoked him above them. Ezek. v. 6, "Jerusalem hath changed my judgments into wickedness more than the nations, and my statutes more than the countries round about her:" there were no people, near or far off, who did like unto the Jews; they forsook God the fountain of living waters, and trusted in Pharaoh that great dragon, and in his rivers of waters.

Obs. 4. Nothing is too hard for God, or can hinder the fulfilling of his will. The Egyptians were scattered among the nations, here a family and there a family, and that forty years together; so mingled with the people of other countries, that they had well-nigh forgotten Egypt, and had so drunk in the manners and customs of the places where they lived, that they were naturalized thereunto; they were so rooted among the nations, that it seemed impossible to pluck them up, and plant them in their own countries; yet notwithstanding these things, saith God, "I will gather the Egyptians from the people whither they were scattered." It is like the Babylonians and other nations that had them, held them under, and made advantage of their labours, made laws against their flight or departure, and struggled hard to detain them, as they of old in Moses' days did to retain the Jews; but whatever opposition was made or difficulty appeared in the way, God said, "I will bring again the captivity of Egypt." Had they bound them all in fetters, laid them in dungeons, set guards of soldiers to have kept them, all these should not have hindered the reduction of them; for, as Jehoshaphat acknowledged in his prayer, God rules over all the kingdoms of the heathen, and in his hand there is power and might, so that none is able to withstand him, 2 Chron. xx. 6; no king, no counsel, no country, no army, no created power is able to withstand him. The Jews had lain longer in Babylon, and were like dry bones in the grave, without hope, Ezek. xxxvii. 11; but God made good his word, he brought them out with a strong hand, breaking in pieces gates of brass, and cutting in sunder bars of iron.

Obs. 5. It is the same hand, the same God, that drives men out of their countries and comforts, into deep and long afflictions abroad, and brings them back out of the same, to enjoy their countries and comforts. God scattered the Egyptians among the nations, he threw them forty years into captivity; and he brought them out again from the nations, and from their captivity, into the land of Pathros, into the land of their commerce. God led them out, and he brought them in; he afflicted them, and he comforted them; God conducted them outward and inward: as the loss of their country was a great affliction unto them, so the repossessing of it was a greater consolation unto them. God threw the Jews into Babylon, those deep and brackish waters they were so long pickled in, and he brought them out again to the sweet waters of the sanctuary. Long afflictions have comfortable ends; the Jews' seventy years' sufferings ended in everlasting kindnesses, Isa. liv. 8.

"They shall be there a base kingdom." The word for "base" is, בַּסֵּעַ which the Septuagint renders, καταρως, and Montanus, a vile, base, low kingdom. Martinus saith, it should be like a low shrub, that is, little above the earth, such as that kingdom, Ezek. xvii. 6, "of low stature." Some kingdoms are great, high, like cedars of Lebanon and oaks of Bashan. Others are small, like vines and shrubs, that creep upon the earth. Such a kingdom should the Egyptians' be. They were not free, but in subjection to the Babylonians, Persians, Alexander the Great, to Ptolemy, the Romans, who made Egypt a province; after that it was under the Saracens and Turks.

Ver. 15. "It shall be the basest of the kingdoms." Not only shall it be base, as many kingdoms are, especially after wars, but "it shall be the basest of kingdoms;" it should have less power, dignity, and liberty, than other kingdoms.

"Neither shall it exalt itself any more above the nations." It had got power and dominion over other nations, the Pharaohs of Egypt had power over the land of Judea and the kings of Judah, 2 Kings xxiii. 33—35, and other nations; but after this it became an underling, and nothing remarkable is mentioned about it in the word of God. Here God put a band of iron and brass upon this kingdom, to keep it from rising again; it shall not "exalt itself any more above the nations."

"For I will diminish them, that they shall no more rule over the nations." I will make the Egyptians few, and the kingdom little. The Hebrew for "diminish" is, קָטַן to make little, or few in number. When either or both of these are done, there is a diminishing. Their number might increase, yet they be diminished in power, liberty, and dignity; so that other nations should look upon them as contemptible.

Obs. 1. When kingdoms are ruined, brought to utter desolation, and have lain so a long time, God is able to raise them up again. Egypt was made desolate from one end to the other, man and beast cut off; the Egyptians scattered into remote parts; yet what saith the Lord? "They shall be there a kingdom;" Egypt shall be possessed again, inhabited, become a kingdom, after forty years' desolation. God can raise up great structures out of heaps and ruins. When a kingdom is brought to ashes, the Lord can out of those ashes bring forth another. The Lord causeth kingdoms to cease, Hos. i. 4; he plucks them up, Dan. xi. 4; Jer. i. 10. and he plants and builds them up again, Jer. xviii. 9. Judea and Jerusalem lay waste seventy years, and then God returned the Jews from Babylon, built their city, planted their land, made them a people again.

Obs. 2. The wise providence of God in restoring and ordering of kingdoms, mingles judgment with mercy. They should be a kingdom, but a "base kingdom," they should want that dignity, power, and liberty they had formerly. So the kingdom of Judah after Josiah's days was low and base, Ezek. xvii. 6, 14; Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar kept it under. It is from the Lord what condition kingdoms shall be in; they shall be honourable or base, as he pleases.

Obs. 3. Those that lift up themselves above others, shall proportionably be brought down beneath others. Egypt exalted itself above the nations; they were proud, haughty, insolent, but Egypt exceeded them therein; and what came thereof? "It shall be the basest of the kingdoms;" consider what kingdom is basest amongst them all, and Egypt shall be baser than that; as it was the highest in pride, so it should be the lowest through baseness, and most contemptible. The Lord pours out contempt upon kingdoms and kings. Nebuchadnezzar was a son of pride; and did not God drive him out from among men, and make that proud king graze among the beasts? and abase him proportionably to his pride, and cause him to say, "Those that walk in pride he is able to abase?" Dan. iv.: and in his time he will abase all such. He hath abased kingdoms, kings, and potentates in our days, who swelled with pride. The learned Jews tell us what God saith of every man whose spirit is lift up, I and he cannot dwell together in the same world. Buxtorf. Apoth. Hebr.

Ver. 16. "And it shall be no more the confidence of the house of Israel." Whilst Egypt flourished, abounding with men, horses, and chariots, the Jews had an eye unto them, and leaned much upon them, Isa. xxx. 2; xxxi. 1; xxxvi. 6, 9; Ezek. xvii. 15; but the Lord laid it waste, brake the pride of its power, made it base, and kept it in that condition, that the Jews might not confide in it; for when they hung so upon the Egyptians for help, that drew them on to their idolatrous practices, and to break the leagues they had made with others.

"Which bringeth their iniquity to remembrance." The Hebrew is, the remembrancer of iniquity. The Vulgate hath it, teaching iniquity, and so refer it to the Egyptians, who being familiar with the Jews, taught them to do evil: but the words refer to confidence, which brought their iniquity to remembrance, viz. that they should forsake God, trust in an arm of flesh, hearken unto idolaters, &c.

"When they shall look after them." Had the Egyptians been restored to their former glory and power, the Jews would have been looking after them, trusted in, and expected help from them; but being low, base, in subjection to others, they would neither look at them nor lean upon them, but leave them, as men do a broken staff.

Obs. 1. God's own people are apt to confide in an arm of flesh. The house of Israel made Egypt its confidence. Asa relied on the king of Syria, 2 Chron. xvi. 7. The Jews were very prone to this sin; sometimes they trusted in their fenced cities, as Jer. v. 17; sometimes in their land of peace, as Jer. xii. 5; sometimes in their multitudes of men, as Hos. x. 13; sometimes in their own glory and greatness, as Ezek. xvi. 15; sometimes in their privileges, as Jer. vii. 4; sometimes in their own wisdom, Jer. viii. 8; and sometimes in others, as the Assyrians, 2 Chron. xxviii. 16, and the Egyptians, as Ezek. xvii. 15. This showed their trust in God was little, and made him say, Jer. xiii. 25, "Thou hast forgotten me, and trusted in falsehood?" בַּשָּׁקֶר is, a lie; in things that promise help and safety, but cannot make them good, they will deceive you, be a lie and falsehood unto you. This practice of theirs made the Lord to say, Jer. ii. 36, "Why gaddest thou about so much to change thy way? thou also shalt be ashamed of Egypt, as thou wast ashamed of Assyria;" they had formerly trusted to the Assyrians, who, instead of helping, distressed them, 2 Chron. xxviii. 20; and so should the Egyptians, for it follows, "Thou shalt go forth from him, and thine hands upon thine head;" that is, lamenting thy disappointment; "for the Lord hath rejected thy confidences, and thou shalt not prosper in them," that is, thou shalt fail of them, and be undone by them. Let us take heed of bottoming upon any thing beneath the Lord, for, Jer. xvii. 5, a curse is pronounced upon the "man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm," and whose heart departeth from the Lord: his heart is gone from the Lord who trusteth in any creature.

Obs. 2. Creature confidence brings former sins to remembrance. When the house of Israel looked to Egypt for help, that is, trusted in them, then their former iniquity was brought to mind, that occasioned God to remember other sins. When a wife leaves her husband, or a soldier his commander, this reminds them of former miscarriages; and so when God's people leave him for an arm of flesh, this revives the memory of old iniquities. Ezek. xxi. 24, it is said, they made their iniquity to be remembered; and how came that? by discovery of their transgressions; some new sins appeared, and they caused the former to be remembered. New sins are editions of the old; bankrupts, by some later acts, bring former debts into question, and men, by some new later sin, occasion God to bring their former sins into view.

Obs. 3. That the Lord, for the good of his people, brings down proud nations, and keeps them in servile conditions. Egypt lifted up itself above the nations, but God brake it in pieces, made it base, yea, the basest of kingdoms, decreeing it should not be exalted, but abide so; and why? that the house of Israel might not confide any more in it, that their iniquity might not by so doing be brought to remembrance, that they might know the Lord to be above all nations, princes, and powers whatsoever, and trust in him. Here was wonderful goodness in God towards his church and people, that he would keep under Egypt to prevent their sinning and punishing, and to draw them to trust in himself. Had Egypt been set in its former power, glory, and greatness, the eye and heart of the house of Israel would have been looking that way, iniquity been brought to mind, and their confidence taken off from God; now, rather than such things should be, Egypt shall be made base and contemptible, and kept in that condition. There was a time when we confided too much in Scotland; God hath broken that nation in pieces, and will keep it in a low condition, that we may learn not to depend upon nations, but the God of nations.

Ver. 17—20. And it came to pass in the seven and twentieth year, in the first month, in the first day of the month, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon caused his army to serve a great service against Tyrus: every head was made bald, and every shoulder was peeled: yet had he no wages, nor his army, for Tyrus, for the service that he had served against it. Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will give the land of Egypt unto Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon; and he shall take her multitude, and take her spoil, and take her prey; and it shall be the wages for his army. I have given him the land of Egypt for his labour wherewith he served against it, because they wrought for me, saith the Lord God.

These verses comprehend the fourth general part of the chapter, which is a prophecy of giving Egypt unto Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon; wherein is set down,

I. The time of this prophecy, when it was, ver. 17.

II. The cause why God gave Egypt to Nebuchadrezzar, ver. 18, 20.

III. The donation itself, ver. 19, 20. Egypt, and the wealth of it, are given him to pay his army.

"In the seven and twentieth year, in the first month, in the first day of the month." This prophecy was sixteen years and upwards after the former, but being of the same nature, is here conjoined with it, though he had many others between them. It was in the twenty-seventh year of Jehoiachin's captivity, sixteen years after the destruction of Jerusalem, and shortly after the taking of Tyrus. The punctual time is here set down, that so the chronology of things done might be known and observed.

Ver. 18. "Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon caused his army to serve a great service against Tyrus." Tyrus was a strong city upon a rock in the sea, well walled and towered, seven hundred paces from the continent, abounding with ships to supply all things needful, and to secure her by sea, so that in the eye of man it was invincible. Nebuchadrezzar besieged this city with a vast army thirteen years, which Josephus confirms from other historians. Dioclesian, in Joseph. Antiq. l. 10, c. 10, at the end of the chapter. the second book of his Persian history, and Philostratus, in his Phœnician and Indian history, make mention of this king, saying, that he overcame the city of Tyre at the end of thirteen years, at such time as Ithobald reigned over the Tyrians. In this time he filled up that space of the sea which was between the shore and Tyrus with solid materials, so that the soldiers might foot it even to the walls of Tyre, which cost much sweat and labour, and was a great service, besides all the rest of their labour, watchings, and sufferings of heat and cold. To lie so many winters and summers there, doing ordinary and extraordinary things, was a great service, especially their filling up the sea, which the Tyrians laughed at, and thought impossible.

"Every head was made bald." The Hebrew for "bald" is, נִקְרָה from קָרָה to pull off the hairs; and it notes natural baldness as well as accidental, the shedding of the hair, and the plucking off the hair: the soldiers, by continual wearing their head-pieces, did shed and wear off their hairs. Some through sickness, and upon other occasions, might become bald.

"And every shoulder was peeled." By the daily carrying of stones, timber, earth, and other things necessary for the siege and taking of Tyrus, their shoulders were peeled. כָּתַף signifies not only the "shoulder," but the side also; and Piscator renders the words, every side was made naked, their garments were worn out, and their sides bare, worn, and peeled.

"Yet had he no wages, nor his army, for Tyrus." This long siege cost Nebuchadrezzar dear, it exhausted the Babylonish treasury greatly, inasmuch, that had he taken Tyrus, with all the wealth of it, it would hardly have recompensed his vast expenses; but the Tyrians, when they saw themselves in danger, conveyed away by sea their choicest things to Carthage, and neighbouring islands, as Lavater insinuates, and when they could hold their city no longer, threw their remaining substance into the sea, so that when it was taken, Nebuchadrezzar and his army found little or nothing considerable therein; therefore it is here said, "he had no wages, nor his army."

"For the service he had served against it." The king and soldiers having lain thirteen years before Tyrus, which showed their resoluteness, looked for answerable recompence for so long, difficult, dangerous, and expensive service; but because they were disappointed in Tyrus, therefore the Lord thought upon them, and provided for them elsewhere.

Ver. 19. "Behold, I will give the land of Egypt unto Nebuchadrezzar." Egypt was a rich country, abounding with corn, cattle, and wealth of all sorts; this country did the Lord give unto Nebuchadrezzar and his army, for that they had done him service in executing his judgments upon the Tyrians.

"He shall take her multitude." Multitudes of men were worn out and consumed in the long siege of Tyre, and therefore God would give the king of Babylon Egypt's "multitude;" she was populous, and her "multitude" must serve him forty years. The Hebrew word מְרִיבָה signifies, multitude of people, and multitude of riches; Nebuchadrezzar should take both.

"And take her spoil." The Hebrew is, he shall spoil her spoil. "Spoil" is, whatsoever may be removed, taken, or driven away, as corn, cattle, household stuff, garments, jewels, plate, plants, ware, &c. The Babylonian should strip Egypt of all her glory.

"And take her prey." In Hebrew it is, he shall prey her prey. The Septuagint is, he shall captivate her captivity. The words being doubled before, and here, import that Nebuchadrezzar should thoroughly spoil and prey upon Egypt.

"It shall be the wages for his army." Seeing his army had so little in Tyre, it shall have enough in Egypt, nothing here shall be conveyed away, embezzled, or kept from him and his army, the whole wealth of Egypt shall be theirs.

Ver. 20. "For his labour." The word מְלָכָה sometimes signifies, the thing produced by work and labour, as Psal. xvii. 4; but here, and in other places, it notes, the very working and efficiency itself: 2 Chron. xv. 7, "Your work shall be rewarded," that is, your labour and pains.

"Because they wrought for me." They looked at their king, who commanded and carried them forth to that work, not unto Jehovah, the Lord of heaven and earth, who set both him and them on work to execute his judgments threatened against Tyre, and in that they did fulfil them, they are said to work for God. Materially they did serve his purpose and providence in the destruction of Tyre, but formally and intentionally they did serve their own wills and lusts. God had a righteous end, and attained it by Vol. Aquin. 1. 2. them; they had an evil end, and ob- 9. 114. tained it in an ill way; Isa. x. 6, 7, the Assyrian had one meaning, God another, yet he wrought for the Lord.

Obs. 1. That men in misery keep account exactly of their sufferings. Ezekiel was in captivity, and many other Jews, who diligently heeded how the years passed; "In the seven and twentieth year," that was, of the captivity. Ezekiel, and the rest, forgot not how long they had been under the Babylonish yoke: men are best chronologers in adversity.

Obs. 2. When God is upon doing great things, usually he doth make them known unto some of his servants, one way or other. When he was upon destroying Sodom, he made it known unto Abraham, Gen. xviii. 17; when about to destroy Eli's house, he revealed it to Samuel, 1 Sam. iii. 11, 12; the strange things which befell Nebuchadrezzar were revealed to Daniel, chap. iv.; and the Lord showed John things to come, Rev. i. 1; and here, he hides not from Ezekiel that he will give all Egypt to Nebuchadrezzar. This was so frequent of old, that Amos said, "Surely the Lord will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret to his servants the prophets," Amos iii. 7; hardly did God ever any considerable thing, but he gave some hints of it to his servants.

The drowning of the world, the Jews' captivity in Egypt, their coming out of it, their suffering by Nebuchadrezzar, their return out of Babylon, &c. were all hinted and made known to Noah, Abraham, Moses, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and others.

Obs. 3. Princes have power to lead out and employ their subjects against foreigners, when there is cause of warring with them. The king of Babylon caused his army to serve against Tyrus, and before that against Jerusalem; many hundreds of miles did he bring out his army to do him service against the Jews and Tyrians. Had he no particular cause, this was cause enough, that God stirred up his spirit to execute his judgments upon those who had desperately provoked him.

Obs. 4. That heathenish soldiers have undergone very hard things, yea, hazarded their lives to please their heathenish commanders, and all for a temporal reward. Nebuchadrezzar's army served a great service thirteen years together; to lie before a city was hard, their heads were made bald, their shoulders were peeled, they laboured hard, carried heavy burdens, they watched, they suffered heat and cold, and all this for hope of good plunder in Tyrus. If heathens would do and endure so much for their commander, who was an idolater, an enemy to God and his people, how much more should christians do and endure any thing for Christ, their King, and heavenly Commander! If he say, Go, we should go; if, Come, we should come; if, Pluck out your right eye, cut off your right hand, or right foot, we should do so; if he calls us to endure affliction, and suffer hard things, we should not stick at them, no, though it be the jeoparding of our lives, knowing he hath a spiritual and eternal reward for us. Seeing men have done and suffered so much for heathens, how can we do or suffer too much for Christ? Scipio Africanus had three hundred soldiers, who would climb a tower if he bid them, or throw themselves from the top of a tower at his command; what dishonour will it be to Christ, if his soldiers will not do as much at his command as others have done at their lords' commands!

Obs. 5. Armies, with their generals and commanders, may serve long, labour sorely, suffer hard things, and after all these be disappointed of their expectations. Nebuchadrezzar caused his army to serve a great service thirteen years, so that their heads, shoulders, sides, were bald, and peeled; and what then? yet had he no "wages," nor his army; they expected great matters in Tyrus, which was so rich, and full of all sorts of commodities, but found nothing considerable, nothing answering their expectation, or sufficient to recompense their charge and suffering. This undertaking could not be without millions of money; hopes they had, that Tyrus, being now the mart of nations, would repay them with advantage, but Tyrus's wealth was dispersed, and there was no money in cash. Sometimes armies find rich spoil and fat prey in the towns and cities they take, and sometimes they find empty houses.

Obs. 6. Nations, lands, kingdoms, are the Lord's, and he disposes of them to whom he pleases. "Behold, I will give the land of Egypt unto Nebuchadrezzar;" he would take it from Pharaoh, king thereof, and give it to another. Neither did the Lord do any wrong unto Pharaoh, because he was tenant at will, and held upon these terms, to be king while he carried himself well; but he grew proud, insolent, and like a dragon lay in the midst of his rivers, saying, "My river is mine, and I have made it for myself." God therefore took away his kingdom from him, and gave it to the king of Babylon; he looseth the loins of kings, and dismisseth them from their kingdoms. He rejected Saul, 1 Sam. xv. 23, and gave his kingdom to David, chap. xvi. 1, 13; he rent five tribes from Rehoboam, and gave them to Jeroboam, 1 Kings xi. 31; he cast out many kings, and gave their lands to Nebuchadrezzar, Jer. xxvii. 3, 7; and, ver. 5, you may see upon what ground he doth so: "I have made the earth, the man and the beast that are upon the ground, by my great power and by my out-stretched arm, and have given it unto whom it seemed meet unto me. And now I have given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar." He made the earth, he may give it to, and take it from, whom he please; it is his, not ours: no man is owner of the earth, or any part of it, it is the Lord's; therefore if he break in pieces mighty men without number, and sets others in their stead, he wrongs, he oppresses none, Job xxxiv. 24. Let not us be troubled that God hath done such things in our days.

Obs. 7. God, in his holy and wise providence, makes use of heathens, or any instruments, to do his work. Nebuchadrezzar and his army wrought for him, they were his servants, he set them on work, though they knew it not. When armies of heathens do plunder towns, take cities, lay waste kingdoms, they are working for God, they are executing his judgments, though they mind it not; God carries on his work, let instruments be what they will. He can make use of the worst of men, as well as of the best: he can promote his interest by an army of heathens, as well as by an army of christians; and let armies be what they will, good or bad, when they are at work, they work for God. "They wrought for me," saith God. It is good, therefore, not to stick upon the instruments which work, but to look at the hand in which they are, how that directs and regulates them, look at him whose tools, whose servants, they are; this will quiet men's spirits, and keep their tongues within compass.

Obs. 8. The Lord suffers not any, no not heathens and infidels, to labour for him in vain. He gave the land of Egypt, with all the wealth of it, to Nebuchadrezzar and his army, who were the worst of the heathen, Ezek. vii. 24, because they served and wrought for him. God is just, not like those masters, who set men on work and then will give them no wages; whosoever works for God shall have his penny. When the midwives would not destroy the male children of the Jews, but save them alive, because they feared God, he dealt well with them, and gave them houses, Exod. i. 17, 20, 21; he gave them habitations, and blessed their families; they were infidels, yet God rewarded their work. Jehu was wicked, yet because he did the work of the Lord in rooting out Ahab's family, in destroying Baal, with all the priests and temple of Baal, therefore the Lord rewarded him, and that largely: 2 Kings x. 30, "Because thou hast done well in executing that which is right in mine eyes, and hast done unto the house of Ahab according to all that was in mine heart, thy children of the fourth generation shall sit on the throne of Israel;" which was made good in Jehoahaz, Joash, Jeroboam, and Zechariah, who came out of his loins, and reigned after him, 2 Kings xiii. xiv. xv. How should this stir us up to do good, and serve the Lord! if heathens shall not labour for him in vain, much less shall christians, who know how to act from a right principle, in a right manner, and for a right end; if they meet with hardship in his service, he will remember and reward it fully, not with a temporal kingdom, but with an eternal; the land of Egypt shall be given to Babylonians, because the kingdom of heaven shall be given to christians: Luke xii. 32, "Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's pleasure to give you the kingdom." Let us "therefore be steadfast and immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as we know our labour shall not be in vain." A cup of cold water, two mites cast into the treasury, a sigh, a tear, laid out for God and his interest, shall not be forgotten: what Paul told the Hebrews, I may tell you, that God is not unrighteous, to forget your work; men may forget, or reward poorly, but God will not forget, because he cannot be unrighteous, nor reward poorly, because he deals bountifully with his servants, Psal. cxvi. 7.

Obs. 9. Execution of judgment upon proud princes, and wicked people, is pleasing unto God. He set Nebuchadrezzar and his army on work to besiege Tyre, to rase it to the ground, he paid them their wages for it, which convinces that the work was pleasing unto him: when men are at great cost and charges in setting many to work, it is argument they take pleasure in such work: so was it here, the work the Babylonish army did was a pleasure unto God, he gave them all Egypt for that service. God delights as well in executing judgment as in exercising mercy; therefore, Jer. xlviii. 10, he curseth those who should be negligent in, or backward to, the slaughter of the Moabites. God sent the Chaldeans to destroy the Moabites, and his heart was so much in this work, that he would have it done thoroughly; and to quicken up the Chaldeans to it, he pronounces a curse upon them if they should forbear to do it, or not do it to purpose. So that, Jer. l. 25, "The Lord hath opened his armoury, and hath brought forth the weapons of his indignation: for this is the work of the Lord God of hosts in the land of the Chaldeans. Come against her from the utmost border!" these words the Lord speaks concerning the destruction of Babylon, which was a work very pleasing to him; he opened his armoury, brought forth his weapons, called men from all parts to come and take these weapons, and employ them against her. Like some mighty prince the Lord doth here, who when he will war against some strong place, opens his armoury and magazine, bringing forth all his warlike instruments, his ammunition and artillery, he calls his soldiers to take them, saying, Come, this is the work I have called thee to, viz. to storm this castle, to destroy this town, this is the work I take pleasure to see done.

Ver. 21. In that day will I cause the horn of the house of Israel to bud forth, and I will give thou the opening of the mouth in the midst of them ; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

This chapter, according to Juius, ended at the 17th verse, where he begins the thirtieth chapter, but according to our translation, this is the last verse of this chapter, and it is a precious promise of mercy to the house of Israel, and to the prophet. In the words you have,

1. The things promised, which are,
I. Restitution of power to the tribe of Judah, "I will cause the horn," &c.

2. Liberty of prophesying to Ezekiel, "I will give thee the opening of the mouth."

III. The end of his so doing, "They shall know," &c.

III. The time when, "In that day."

Ver. 21. "In that day." When the Egyptians were subdued, and the Babylonish monarchy quieted, and settled in peace, as shortly after Nebuchadrezzar's return from Egypt it was; for he dying, Evil-merodach came to the throne, and then was the "day." "Day" notes not only twelve hours, or, four and twenty, but frequently a short time: as Deut. ix. 1, "Hear, O Israel: Thou art to pass over Jordan this day," that was, shortly, within some few years or months, for they passed not over Jordan till Joshua's days, (when Moses was dead,) and he governed, Josh. iii.; so here, "day" is put for some space of time after the destruction of Egypt.

"Will I cause the horn of the house of Israel to bud forth." "Horn" is proper to a beast, but metaphorically is applied to men, and in holy writ signifies sometimes dignity and glory; as Job xvi. 15, "I defiled my horn in the dust;" whatever made me glorious, honourable, and respected amongst men, that have I laid aside, and counted no more of than the dunghill or dust I sit upon: sometimes kings and kingdoms; as Dan. viii. 21, "The rough goat is the king of Grecia: and the great horn that is between his eyes is the first king," viz. Alexander the Great; and, Psal. cxxxii. 17, "There will I make the horn of David to bud;" the "horn of David" was the kingdom of David: sometimes strength and power; Jer. xlviii. 25, "The horn of Moab is cut off, and his army is broken;" that "horn of Moab" was the strength of Moab; Lam. ii. 3, "He hath cut off in his fierce anger all the horn of Israel," that is, all the strength and power of Israel: sometimes it notes all outward felicity, liberty, and plenty; Psal. cxlviii. 14, "He exalteth the horn of his people," that is, he makes them happy, he gives them freedom, and plenty of all things, and therein exalts their horn: here, all these senses may be taken in. God would make the horn of the house of Israel, that is, the king and kingdom, to rise up again to dignity, strength, and happiness. This was in part made good in the three children, and Daniel, or when Jehoiachin was brought out of prison, and his throne set above the thrones of all the kings who were with him in Babylon, Jer. lii. 31—34; then, doubtless, had the Jews some liberty and privileges granted them, which caused matter of rejoicing: more fully in Zerubbabel, when he brought them out of Babylon: but chiefly in Christ, and the gospel times. This "horn" is budding still, and shall "bud" to the end of the world; the kingdom of Christ shall flourish and grow stronger, as the horns of a beast do yearly.

"I will give thee the opening of the mouth in the midst of them." Ezekiel had been silent and dumb twice before, chap. iii. 24, and xxiv. 27; and here again it is implied; God would give him the "opening of the mouth," or an open mouth. By opening the mouth, we may understand,

1. Freedom of speech. Thou speakest things darkly now, with a trembling voice, but when these prophecies are fulfilled, and the horn of the house of Israel begins to bud, then shalt thou have more freedom of speech, and be troubled no more at the false prophets, which sought to disparage thee.

2. Matter of speaking. When Jehoniah, or Jehoiachin, should have his prison garments changed, and be set above other princes, some freedom granted the Jews, here would be matter for praise and rejoicing.

3. Opportunity of speaking. When an occasion is given unto man to speak, the rabbins call that, the opening of the mouth: thou shalt Grot. in Eph. c. 6. 19. come openly into the assemblies, having matter, freedom, and opportunity to praise me.

"They shall know that I am the Lord." "They" refers not only to the house of Israel, but to the Babylonians also; when they should see the things prophesied of done, then they should acknowledge the Lord. The horn of Israel budded in the midst of the Babylonians, and the prophet's mouth was opened in the midst of them, therefore they should, as well as the Jews, "know that I am the Lord."

Obs. 1. That after the destruction of enemies, God shows mercy to the Jews. Egyptians were no friends to the house of Israel. When Egypt therefore should be spoiled, and brought under the Babylonians, then would he make the horn of Israel to bud; in that day, or after that time, when his justice had fallen upon Egyptians, then his mercy should be extended to Israel. Jer. l. 4, 5, when the Medes and Persians should have laid Babylon waste, and made her land desolate, what then? "In those days, and in that time, saith the Lord, the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together, going and weeping;" that is, for gladness, for the mercy vouchsafed them; "they shall go, and seek the Lord their God. They shall ask the way to Zion with their faces thitherward." When the Babylonians were brought into bondage, then God gave the Jews their liberty; Isa. x. 26, 27, when the Assyrians should be destroyed, then should the Jews be eased of their burdens.

Obs. 2. How low, weak, afflicted soever the church be, God is able to raise it up, to bring it to glory, strength, and to a flourishing condition. The house of Israel was low, and much afflicted, the horn of it weak, and hardly visible; yet God caused the horn thereof to bud. When we look upon some beasts, they have no horns, but in a short time their heads do bud, and bring forth horns, which are their strength: so God in a little time would cause the glory, strength, happiness of his church and people to appear, though at that time they lay in the dust. The church of God looks oftentimes like a dry and dead tree; but his divine influences make it bud, blossom, and flourish: Isa. xxxv. 1, "The desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose," it shall blossom abundantly. When Zion was turned into a wilderness, he made it "like Eden, and her desert like the garden of God," Isa. li. 3; when the church was in the most desolate and hopeless condition, he made it glorious, beautiful, and strong. When the tabernacle of David was quite fallen, nothing but ruins and breaches discernible, what said the Lord? "In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof; and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it." This was done literally, after their return out of Babylon, when the second temple was built, and the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin grew up into one body; but spiritual, in Christ's time, not in the resurrection of his body from the grave, but in bringing in the gentiles after his ascension, to make up all the breaches and ruins which were made in the Jewish state; so it is applied, Acts xv. 16. God that gives being to things that are not, can give more glorious and excellent beings to things that are.

Obs. 3. When God shows kindness to his church, he gives his prophets and servants matter, freedom, and opportunity of speaking, and professing the true faith publicly. When the Lord caused the horn of the house of Israel to bud, when he showed favour to his people, then he gave Ezekiel the opening of the mouth. In the times of enemies' prevailing, prophets are silent, or prophesy faintly; if they have matter to utter, they want freedom, they whisper, mutter, and speak as it were with closed mouth, and oft have not opportunity to do so much; Amos v. 13, they are necessitated to be silent: but when times grow better, and God shines upon his people, then the prophets are full of matter, free to speak, and want not seasons to declare the goodness of God, then they are not afraid or ashamed openly to profess the truth, and to praise the Lord. The opening of the mouth is the gift of God: the illness of the people and times may shut the mouths of prophets, but none can open them but God. Since God began to show mercy to his people in this land, hath he not vouchsafed the opening of the mouth to his prophets? their mouths were shut in the prelates' days, but now there is a great opening; blessed be the Lord for it.

Obs. 4. The end of God's showing kindness to his church, and opening the mouths of his prophets, is, that he may have honour and glory thereby from all sorts. "And they shall know that I am the Lord:" they Babylonians, they Jews, shall acknowledge that I have done these things, and that I am the Lord.

CHAPTER XXX.

Ver. 1—5. The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying, Son of man, prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Howl ye, Woe worth the day! For the day is near, even the day of the Lord is near, a cloudy day; it shall be the time of the heathen. And the sword shall come upon Egypt, and great pain shall be in Ethiopia, when the slain shall fall in Egypt, and they shall take away her multitude, and her foundations shall be broken down. Ethiopia, and Libya, and Lydia, and all the mingled people, and Chub, and the men of the land that is in league, shall fall with them by the sword.

This chapter is a continuance of the former prophecy, and hath two general parts in it.

The 1. is concerning the destruction of Egypt, and those that were confederate with her, to ver. 19.

The 2. is concerning Pharaoh king of Egypt, and Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, from ver. 20 to the end.

In these verses we have,

1. The authority of the prophecy; it is divine, from the Lord, ver. 1, 2.
2. The thing imposed upon Egypt; howling, ver. 2.
3. The reasons thereof, ver. 3—5.

Ver. 1. "The word of the Lord came again unto me." This preface is to many chapters before; it adds weight to the prophecy, making those concerned to mind it more seriously: when the Lord speaketh, "who can but prophesy?" Amos iii. 8; and who can but mind what is prophesied?

Ver. 2. "Son of man, prophesy." The immortal God speaks to a mortal man, honours him with divine revelations; and, that he might not be exalted therewith, he minds him of his meanness and mortality, saying, "Son of man, prophesy." Prophesying was not at the will of man, but when the Spirit moved them to it. 2 Pet. i. 21.

"Thus saith the Lord God." What the prophets gave forth as prophets, was not from their own hearts and heads, some human thing, but it was altogether divine, from Jehovah, Adonai, whose being is of himself, and hath dominion over all: what they and the apostles wrote, was the word of God, and so ought to be esteemed and received, 1 Thess. ii. 13.

"Howl ye." He speaks to the Egyptians and others, upon whom sad judgments were coming; he calls to them to lay to heart, and lament for, the evils which were at hand. The Hebrew שָׁח hath agreement with שָׂח which signifies, to reduce a thing to nothing, because when men do mourn and lament greatly, it wastes and consumes them, so as it well-nigh brings them to nothing.

"Woe worth the day!" The words may be read, Ah the day! "Alas for the day!" as Joel i. 15; or, Oh the woe of the day! an unhappy day, wherein thy cities shall be made heaps, man and beast destroyed, all laid waste and desolate.

Ver. 3. "The day is near, even the day of the Lord is near." "Day" here is put, not for a day in strictness of sense, but for the time wherein those judgments should befall Egypt and other parts; and it is called "the day of the Lord," because of his special manifestation of himself. When God doth, either in mercy or judgment, declare himself emphatically, that is said to be "the day of the Lord:" other days are his days, but such in a special manner. The duplication of the "day" here, is to make the deeper impression both upon the Jews, who rested too much upon Egypt, and also upon the Egyptians, who were secure and feared not: he tells them of the nearness of it, that they may be awakened; and that they might the more fully be awakened, he tells them what kind of day it will be.

"A cloudy day." The Hebrew is, a day of a cloud; there will no sunshine that day, a black, thick, dark cloud will arise that day, and make a terrible tempest. God's judgments are likened unto clouds and rain, for the sadness and terribleness of them: Psal. xi. 6, "He shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest."

"It shall be the time of the heathen." "Heathen" may be taken either for the Babylonians, who should come and conquer Egypt, and then do what they pleased therein, and so it should be their day; or for the Egyptians, and the nations adhering to them, and so it should be their day to be spoiled, and suffer grievous things: it was a time of undoing these, and a time of making the other; God had appointed that time for them both.

Ver. 4. "The sword shall come upon Egypt." The Chaldean army shall come and make war upon the Egyptians, and they shall be under all the miseries and mischiefs which attend war, and they are many.

"And great pain shall be in Ethiopia." The word for "pain" in Hebrew is, מַחְרָה which Montanus renders, shaking: the Septuagint, trouble, or perturbation: the Vulgate, fear: others, great grief, which the word imports; for it is from מָחַ to bring forth, and notes such grief and pain as women have when they are in travail. When the king of Babylon came into Egypt, Ethiopia was in travail.

"When the slain shall fall in Egypt." It were better rendered, when the wounded shall fall. Men slain are fallen, men wounded are ready to fall, or falling. The Hebrew word שָׁרַף signifies one wounded.

“And her foundations shall be broken down.” By “foundations,” cities, towers, forts, castles, any strong holds may be understood. Some make the foundations of Egypt to be their riches, forces, and confederates; but the first sense of the word is more genuine, because he speaks of breaking down, which is proper to the one, and not the other.

Ver. 5. “Ethiopia.” In Hebrew, Chus, so called from Chus, the son of Ham, Gen. x. 6, who first inhabited that part of Africa, and from him the people were called Cussites; from the Grecians it received the name of Ethiopia, which is from αἶθω, to burn, and ἄψ, the countenance, because the heat of the sun there is such, as it scorseth the faces of the people. This country is judged to be as large as Germany, France, and Italy, but not very populous, because of the extreme heat. They circumcise their males and females, baptizing the males forty days, and the females eighty days, after their circumcision; and they rebaptize themselves in lakes and Heylin in his Microcosm. ponds every year on the day called Epiphany, because they conceive that the Lord Christ was baptized by John in Jordan that very day. But whether this was the Ethiopia Nebuchadnezzar should spoil, some question, because it is said, chap. xxix. 10, that Egypt should be made desolate from the tower of Syene unto the border of Ethiopia, that is, to the Asian Ethiopia. Syene was at the front of the African Ethiopia, and whether Nebuchadnezzar entered that Ethiopia, is doubtful: Quistorpius is peremptory in it, and saith, he never passed beyond Syene into it.

“Libya.” In Hebrew, Phut, from Phut the son of Ham, Gen. x. 6; and the inhabitants thereof were at first called Phuthæi, or Phuttians, and afterward Libyans, the country being named Libya, from Lybs, a king of Mauritania, or from Lybs, the south wind, which gently breatheth there, or from Libya, a queen thereof. It is now called Sorra, which signifies, a desert, because it is a country full of sandy Heylin, in Microcosm. deserts; and Varro will have it called Libya, quasi λείπεται τοῦ βίου, because it wants rain. Heretofore all Africa was called Phut, afterwards only the western parts of Africa, as Mauritania and Tingitana, where the kingdom of Fez, or Libya, now is.

“Lydia.” The Hebrew is, Lud, from Lud the son of Shem, Gen. x. 22, as some will have it; or from Ludim, the son of Mizraim, as others affirm. This Lydia was a region of Asia the Less, formerly called Maonia; in it were those famous cities, Philadelphia, Sardis, Pergamus, Thyatira, and Laodicea.

A Lapidè would not have it to be this Heylin, ubi ante. Lydia, because those Lydians were too far off to be helpful to the Egyptians; he therefore makes it to be Lydda, Acts ix. 32, where Peter healed Æneas. This city was in the tribe of Ephraim, near unto Joppa; it was therefore taken by Nebuchadnezzar before, when he took Jerusalem, and made the whole land tributary unto him. The distance of Lydia was not such as to hinder the Egyptians from confederating with them; they were on the one side of the Mediterranean sea, and the Lydians on the other.

“And all the mingled people.” Montanus saith, all the vulgar. The Hebrew is, all the mixed company, that is, those that came from other parts, to serve the Egyptians for pay. When wars are among nations, strangers will flock out of all parts unto them, to be their auxiliaries. Some make them the Arabians.

“Chub.” This word is now where else in holy writ. Symmachus thought it to be Arabia, but interpreters by it understand the Cubæans, and people in the inward Libya, near unto the river Nigris, where Ptolemy, in his Geography, places the city Cuphe.

“The men of the land that is in league.” The Hebrew is, the sons of the land of league. Piscator translates the words thus, those who live in a land confederate, that is, these were confederate with the Egyptians: some put these words upon the nations which had engaged themselves to help the Egyptians: others more probably put them upon Judea, which was the land in league with God, for God promised it to Abraham and his posterity, whereupon the Jews were called the children of the covenant, Acts iii. 25: and the Septuagint here hath it, τῶν υἱῶν τῆς διαθήκης μου, the sons of my testament, or covenant. The Jews were in league with the Egyptians, and after the destruction of Jerusalem, Gedaliah being treacherously slain by Ishmael and others, Johanan carrieth the Jews, the sons of the land in league, into Egypt, where they suffered by Nebuchadnezzar what the Egyptians did, Jer. xliii. xlv; some fell by the sword, some were carried captive.

Obs. 1. After days of mirth come days of sorrow. Egypt had seen many days of prosperity and rejoicing, and now, “Howl ye, Woe worth the day!” her summer was over, and winter coming upon her, black, cloudy, stormy, terrible days were at hand. As there is a change in things, so in times: Eccles. iii. 4, “There is a time to weep, and a time to laugh; a time to mourn, and a time to dance;” these succeed each other, and neither keeps possession long; mirth and jollity is thrust out of doors, after a few days, by its contrary. Babylon had her days of delight; she was given to pleasure, Isa. xlvii. 8; but suddenly there was a change: Jer. li. 8, “Babylon is suddenly fallen and destroyed: howl for her.”

Obs. 2. The approaching of those days, wherein God will visit and punish sinners, is just cause of mourning. “Howl; for the day of the Lord is near, a cloudy day.” The judgments of God were at hand, ready to take hold of the Egyptians, therefore they had sufficient cause to howl. Isa. xliii. 6, “Howl ye; for the day of the Lord is at hand; it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty.” It is spoken of the Babylonians, who thought themselves safe, strong, having subdued most nations; but they must howl, for that the day of the Lord drew near: it should be a day for destruction, and not an ordinary destruction, but as a destruction from the Almighty; it should be such a destruction, as should proclaim to the world that the hand of God was eminently in it. Joel ii. 1, “Let all the inhabitants of the land tremble: for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand;” the time of Nebuchadnezzar’s coming to execute the judgments of God upon Jerusalem and Judea drew nigh, and thereupon the prophet calls upon all the inhabitants of the land to tremble, to repent and mourn. There is great and just cause so to do at such times, because thereby judgments may be averted, delayed, mitigated, or sanctified unto us.

Obs. 3. God hath his times to visit heathens. “It shall be the time of the heathens.” If heathens do God any service, he hath a time to reward them, as he did Nebuchadnezzar, by giving him the spoil of Egypt; if heathens do provoke him by their pride, idolatry, profaneness, oppression of his people, or any other way, he hath his time and day to punish them. Jer. xli. 8—10, “Egypt riseth up like a flood, and his waters are moved like the rivers; and he saith, I will go up, and will cover the earth; I will destroy the city” (that was Carehemish, by the river Euphrates) “and the inhabitants thereof. Come up, ye horses; and rage, ye chariots; and let the mighty men come forth; the Ethiopians and the Libyans, that handle the shield; and the Lydians, that handle and bend the bow. For this is the day of the Lord God of hosts, a day of vengeance, that he may avenge him of his adversaries." The Egyptians, Ethiopians, Libyans, and Lydians, were all heathens, and God had his day to visit them: when they went to Euphrates to fight the Babylonians, he made the Babylonish sword drunk with their blood. Not long after, God had a day for the Babylonians: Jer. l. 27, "Slay all her bullocks; let them go down to the slaughter: woe unto them! for their day is come, the time of their visitation;" the princes, nobles, great ones, who were the bullocks of Babylon, had their day of slaughter.

Obs. 4. Where public judgments come, they are troublesome to neighbour nations. "The sword shall come upon Egypt, and great pain shall be in Ethiopia." The evil of the sword was not confined within the Egyptian borders, it reached to the Ethiopians and others, they were filled with fear, they were in pain, as a woman in travail. When evil borders upon us, some evil or mischief is to be feared from thence; if our neighbour's house be on fire, we may fear some sparks of that fire may fall on ours: the wars of England have made the nations about us to be in pain.

Obs. 5. Wars lay all waste, the sword makes no difference between things or persons. "The sword shall come upon Egypt, and her foundations shall be broken down; and the men of the land that is in league shall fall with them by the sword." As the sword spared no city, towers, castles, so no persons, even those Jews that fled to Egypt for safety should not escape; what Jews, what mingled people it found in Egypt, they all suffered alike, the sword pitied, spared none.

Ver. 6—9. Thus saith the Lord; They also that uphold Egypt shall fall; and the pride of her power shall come down: from the tower of Syene shall they fall in it by the sword, saith the Lord God. And they shall be desolate in the midst of the countries that are desolate, and her cities shall be in the midst of the cities that are wasted. And they shall know that I am the Lord, when I have set a fire in Egypt, and when all her helpers shall be destroyed. In that day shall messengers go forth from me in ships to make the careless Ethiopians afraid, and great pain shall come upon them, as in the day of Egypt: for, lo, it cometh.

In these words is further set forth the destruction of Egypt, with those that were her strength and confederates, as also the events following thereupon.

Ver. 6. "They also that uphold Egypt shall fall." The Hebrew word is, סָבְעוּ which Montanus renders, upholding; the Septuagint, the foundation of Egypt. These upholders, or foundations, were not the titular gods, but the princes, nobles, rulers, and confederates, who, by their power, policy, persons, and estates, did assist the king of Egypt.

"The pride of her power shall come down." Egypt had strong towns, castles, men, and presumed upon, was proud of them; but these should be destroyed, and taken away, so should her pride come down. The Vulgate is, the pride of her empire shall be destroyed; whatever Egypt confided or gloried in, that should be brought low. Egypt was lifted up with her power, and sat like one on the top of a mountain, and God by his judgments would bring her down.

"From the tower of Syene shall they fall in it by the sword." Of the "tower of Syene," or Sevene, was spoken, chap. xxix. 10. The meaning is, That the sword should pass through all Egypt, from one border to another.

Ver. 7. "And they shall be desolate in the midst of the countries that are desolate." This verse is the same with the 12th verse of chap. xxix. Egypt and her cities should be like other lands and cities, which were extremely wasted.

Ver. 8. "When I have set a fire in Egypt." When God brought the Chaldean army into Egypt, there was a fire in it dreadful and consumptive; the wars were terrible, and devoured all things like fire, and it is probable many strong cities and holds were burnt with fire.

"When all her helpers shall be destroyed." Egypt being rich, powerful, and renowned, had many confederates, which here are called "helpers." They should all be vain "helpers," for they should not secure or save themselves.

Ver. 9. "In that day shall messengers go forth from me in ships." In that day when Egypt was conquered, messengers, not Chaldeans, but Egyptians, or some that escaped the sword, fled into Ethiopia to inform them what the Chaldeans had done, and in what ease they left Egypt. They are said to go forth from God, because they went by his counsel and providence, or because they fled from his angry countenance, which appeared in the destruction of Egypt; for the original is, from my face; God sent them to carry tidings of his dreadful judgments to the Ethiopians. They went in ships, בַּיָּם in some vessels that were for speed: the Septuagint is, σπεύδοντες, hastening.

"To make the careless Ethiopians afraid." Nebuchadnezzar passed through the oriental Ethiopia to come to Egypt, and these "Ethiopians" seem to be the African Ethiopians; and when Egypt was spoiled from one border to another, even to Syene, he was near it, his passage lay fair, open, and easy into it: and it is not said that Nebuchadnezzar should not go beyond Syene, but that Egypt should be made desolate from the tower of Syene to Cush, that was the other Ethiopia. The messengers hastened to this southern Ethiopia, (the inhabitants whereof were a secure, careless people,) and assured them the sword had devoured Egypt, and was come to their gates; this struck fear into them. The Hebrew word, to make afraid, is, יָרָא which notes outward trembling, from fear of some sudden evil; such tidings put all Ethiopia into trembling.

"And great pain shall come upon them, as in the day of Egypt." When sad and grievous judgments are upon a place, that is called the "day" of that place; as, the day of Jerusalem: Psal. cxxxvii. 7, "In the day of Jerusalem, the Edomites said, Rise it, raise it, even to the foundations thereof." When Nebuchadnezzar besieged, took, spoiled, and burnt Jerusalem, that was the "day" of it: so here, "in the day of Egypt," that was, when the plagues were upon it, especially when their firstborn were slain, then were they in great pain. When the land was in travail, and when they were all drowned in the Red sea, then great pain was upon all the nations round about: so here, Ethiopia should be in travail, filled with fears and shaking fits, as Egypt and the nations then were.

Obs. 1. When God will visit a nation, it is not their great ones in it, or confederates with it, which can secure it. They that uphold Egypt shall fall; the princes, nobles, counsellors, associates, and who-soever were in league with her, should all feel the hand of God, and be crushed with her. When men de storm a city, it is not her outworks, her walls, her gates, her towers, that can preserve her: and when God will destroy a nation, it is not outward nor inward helps can uphold: no policy, no power, no number can stand it out against God.

Obs. 2. States are not to confide in power, but pride and confidence therein hastens their ruin. Egypt had power, was proud thereof, and confided therein, and the Lord said, "The pride of her power shall come down." Isa. xvi. 6, "We have heard of the pride of Moab; he is very proud, even of his haughtiness and his pride: but his lies shall not be so." He thought himself strong, secure, but his pride and confidence did deceive him; for, ver. 7, "Therefore shall Moab howl for Moab, every one shall howl;" the Moabites amongst themselves should howl, one for and with another: "for the foundations of Kir-hareseth shall ye mourn; surely they are stricken." Kir-hareseth was a chief city for strength, in which they placed much confidence, and to which they fled in their straits; but her foundations were stricken, and their hopes disappointed, and the pride of their power brought down. It is the pride of states and princes which levels them with others: Isa. x. 12, "I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of the king of Assyria, and the glory of his high looks." Sennacherib prided himself in his great army, and presumed he should take Jerusalem, and eat up all the prey thereof; but his high looks were abased, and his confidences his ruin, 2 Kings xix. 35-37.

Obs. 3. God sends dreadful and consumptive judgments upon nations, and makes himself known thereby. "They shall know that I am the Lord, when I have set a fire in Egypt, and when all her helpers shall be destroyed." It is God kindles fires in nations and kingdoms, to consume towns and cities; men, and their habitations, they are all his, and he may do to them what he pleases, having transgressed his laws. By fire and sword did the Lord plead with the Egyptians, laying all waste, and by so doing, made himself known to be a powerful, righteous, and dreadful God.

Obs. 4. In the sorest judgments of God upon men, usually some escape. God threatened Egypt, chap. xxix. 8, that he would "cut off man and beast, and make it utterly waste" from one end to the other, ver. 10; yet here in the 9th verse he saith, "Messengers shall go forth;" some should escape to carry tidings of his severe judgments.

Obs. 5. Those things which seem accidental and casual unto us, are ordered by the wise counsel, power, and providence of God. "In that day shall messengers go forth from me in ships." When all Egypt was in a confusion, some running one way and some another to secure themselves, and some hastening unto ships to tell others what the Chaldeans had done, in the midst of these hurries and disorders, God saw, acted, sent out messengers. They went not, however the appearance was to men, without God's ordering hand; themselves thought of no such thing, nor those they went unto; they dreamed not that they were sent forth of God, that they came from him; it was looked upon as a mere contingency, but God's hand was in it. Things may be contingent to us, they are not so to God.

Obs. 6. Such is the efficacy of God's judgments made known, that they do afflict those who are at a distance from them, and fill the most secure with fears and pains. The Ethiopians were absent from the judgments executed upon the Egyptians, they were secure, careless people; but when the messengers told them their cities were burnt, their men slain, their foundations and helpers destroyed, they were afraid, and great pains came upon them, they were in travail for their lives, liberties, and estates. There is a mighty power in the judgments of God to terrify sinners even at a distance. When Tyrus was destroyed, such was the efficacy of that judgment upon those afar off, that it is said, all the princes of the sea clothed themselves with trembling, Ezek. xxvi. 16: so that we may say of God's judgments, as David, Psal. xc. 11, "Who knoweth the power of thine anger?" who knows what efficacy it is of, and how far it extends?

Obs. 7. Former judgments are not to be forgotten. "As in the day of Egypt." God had visited Egypt many hundreds of years before, and now he minds them of that visitation. So, Isa. ix. 4, God mentions the days of the Midianites, minds them of the great destruction of the Midianites by Gideon, Judg. vii. and viii. God minds the days of men's sinning. Hos. ix. 9, "They have deeply corrupted themselves, as in the days of Gibeah;" and therefore he would visit their sins: and when he hath visited for sins, he would have us remember those visitations; Jer. vii. 12, "Go to Shiloh, and see what I did to it for the wickedness of my people Israel." As we should remember ancient and former mercies, to strengthen our faith, so ancient and former judgments, to quicken our fears.

Ver. 10-12. Thus saith the Lord God; I will also make the multitude of Egypt to cease by the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon. He and his people with him, the terrible of the nations, shall be brought to destroy the land: and they shall draw their swords against Egypt, and fill the land with the slain. And I will make the rivers dry, and sell the land into the hand of the wicked: and I will make the land waste, and all that is therein, by the hand of strangers: I the Lord have spoken it.

These words hold out unto us the efficient and instrumental causes of the forementioned judgments, which are in part repeated.

The efficient cause is God himself, ver. 10, 12.

The instrumental are, Nebuchadrezzar and his people, ver. 10, 11.

The judgments repeated are, the destruction of Egypt and the Egyptians, putting the land into the hands of others, with an addition of drying up the rivers.

Ver. 10. "I will also make the multitude of Egypt to cease." The Hebrew word for "multitude" is רַב, which signifies both multitude and noise, or where there is a multitude there will be a noise. Egypt was populous, and God would diminish the people, they should be slain, and carried away captive, so should both the multitude and noise cease. Increase of people is a blessing, the lessening of them a judgment.

"By the hand of Nebuchadrezzar." "Hand" here notes power, as in 2 Chron. xxi. 10; and Job i. 12, "All that he hath is in thy power," the Hebrew is, in thy hand. Nebuchadrezzar, by his mighty, powerful arm, should come and lay all Egypt waste, and make it like a wilderness. Armies are the hands of princes, by which they do great and dreadful things.

Ver. 11. "The terrible of the nations shall be brought to destroy the land." The word for "terrible" is from רָעַע to deal violently, to terrify, which Piseator renders, the most cruel; the Septuagint, ἀσπί, plagues; and Junius, the most violent; Vatablus calls them, the tyrants of nations; those who were most tyrannical and terrible God brought and set on work to destroy the land. The Chaldeans were a "bitter nation, terrible and dreadful," Hab. i. 6, 7; these words we had chap. xxviii. 7; so terrible they were that they should fill the land with dead bodies. When an army of friends pass through a country no hurt is done; but when an army of tyrants, of strong and terrible enemies, come to spoil, what mischief will they not do!

Ver. 12. "And I will make the rivers dry;" Hebrew, drought. Though the Chaldean army was great, yet not so great as to drink up all the waters of Nilus, which is one of the chiefest rivers in the world. Nilus had many rivulets cut out of it, whereby the land was watered; all those might they stop up with earth and other materials, for their better passage, and so the rivers were made dry. Or by rivers we may understand that benefit which came by them; the Chaldeans should take away all the wealth of Egypt which came by the rivers, and so the rivers were as dry things to the Egyptians. So Maldonate and some others interpret the words; but rather thus, God would send great spoil and desolation into Egypt, whereby the rivers might become useless unto them: or, should we take the words literally, as some expositors are of the mind, viz. that for the great wickedness of the Egyptians God dried up Nilus, and punished them with sore famine, as in the days of Joseph it was, when there were seven years of famine, this sense may be safe: or we may take "rivers" for the people and their power.

"And sell the land into the hand of the wicked." The Lord gives, he doth not sell. The word for selling is, מָכַר which signifies, to give, to deliver, as well as to sell; and the Septuagint saith, ἀποδοσάτω, I will give the land. Those who sell do deliver what they sell into the hands of others; and this is attributed to God metaphorically, for that he disposed of the land of Egypt to others, that is, the Chaldeans, who are called wicked: the Vulgate hath it, into the hands of the worst.

"I will make the land waste, and all that is therein." Egypt was a land abounding with men, horses, chariots, wealth, cities, and all desirable things; but God would make it desolate, and all the fulness of it; so the words are in Hebr. w. for "all that is therein;" it had a fulness of all things, and by the hand of the Chaldeans it was emptied, who in the next words are called "strangers," because they were such to the Egyptians.

"I the Lord have spoken it." These words are a ratification of what is threatened. Ezekiel hath not spoken a vision of his own, or from his own spirit, but what is said is the word of the eternal God; "I the Lord have spoken it," I have determined it shall be so, and nothing shall let it.

Obs. 1. God hath ways to empty lands of their multitude and fulness. Egypt had her multitude of men, of beasts, of cities, of riches, she had her fulness of all things; and God had an army, a multitude of soldiers, to plunder and spoil her, to empty her of all her multitudes and fulness. Jerusalem had its multitudes and fulness, but Nebuchadnezzar emptied her, and made her like an empty vessel, Jer. li. 34. Babylon had her multitudes and fulness of treasure, Jer. li. 13, and God had fanners to fan her, ver. 2, and empty her land; those fanners were the Medes and Persians, who scattered the Babylonians, and made a prey of their treasures.

Obs. 2. When God will execute severe judgments, he makes use of suitable instruments. He intended utter destruction to Egypt, and "the terrible of the nations" were brought to destroy it. Nebuchadnezzar had men out of many nations, and the terrible ones of those nations, by the secret hand of God, were brought to lay Egypt waste. They roared like lions, Isa. v. 29; they were cruel and without mercy, Jer. vi. 23; they hanged princes by their hands, Lam. v. 12; and here, they filled the land with the slain.

Obs. 3. God's designs shall go on whatever lies in the way to hinder. He was resolved upon the destruction of Egypt, the rivers of it lay in the way, so that an army could not get over Nilus, that great river: if gotten over, it could not march and do the work appointed, for the multitude of little rivers which were in the land: shall these hinder the design of God? no; he will dry up the rivers to make way into his designs; the Babylonians shall pass over, and pierce through the whole land. When the Israelites were at the Red sea, that lay as an impediment unto God's design, which was to carry them to Canaan: but did it hinder the same? No; "Speak to the children of Israel, that they go forward." What! go forward and be drowned in the sea? No; because they had not faith to go upon the waters, therefore he divides the waters, and makes a dry path for them through the midst of the deeps, Exod. xiv. There were mountains in the way hindering the building of the temple, but one great mountain above all the rest: Zech. iv. 7, "Who art thou, O great mountain?" Whether it were the Persian monarchy, or Satan and all the enemies of the Jews, God made it a plain before Zerubbabel; and notwithstanding all enemies and opposition, he carried on the work of God. Things may be too hard for men, impossible for them, but nothing is too hard for or impossible to the Lord. He enabled Nebuchadnezzar to take Tyrus, to destroy Egypt; all the rivers thereof shall not hinder it, God will dry them up rather than his design shall fail: Psal. lxxiv. 15, "Thou driedst up mighty rivers." God hath divided seas, plained mountains, and dried up rivers in our days, to make way for his designs; and in due time he will dry up the great river Euphrates to make way for the kings of the east, Rev. xvi. 12.

Obs. 4. All lands are the Lord's, and he may dispose of them to whom he will, even to the wicked. He sold, he gave the land of Egypt into the hands of the Babylonians who were wicked, yea, the worst of men, Ezek. vii. 24. Kingdoms are not such excellent things as we imagine; were they so, they would not be given to God's enemies. That kingdom is of great worth which God gives to his children, Luke xii. 32.

Ver. 13—19. Thus saith the Lord God; I will also destroy the idols, and I will cause their images to cease out of Noph; and there shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt; and I will put a fear in the land of Egypt. And I will make Pathros desolate, and will set fire in Zoan, and will execute judgments in No. And I will pour my fury upon Sin, the strength of Egypt; and I will cut off the multitude of No. And I will set fire in Egypt: Sin shall have great pain, and No shall be rent asunder, and Noph shall have distresses daily. The young men of Aven and of Pi-beseth shall fall by the sword: and these cities shall go into captivity. At Tehaphneches also the day shall be darkened, when I shall break there the yokes of Egypt: and the pomp of her strength shall cease in her: as for her, a cloud shall cover her, and her daughters shall go into captivity. Thus will I execute judgments in Egypt: and they shall know that I am the Lord.

Having formerly threatened destruction to Egypt and her cities in general, the prophet descends now to particulars, in ver. 13—18; and then, in ver. 19, shows what is the end of God in his exercising judgments, viz. that they may know him to be the Lord.

“I will destroy the idols.” Egypt was the most idolatrous land of any, and God would now destroy the idols out of it. The word for idols is, גלילים, which Piscator renders, dung, filth, so the word signifies; and their idols were dunghill, filthy gods, fitter to be trodden under foot by man and beast, than to be worshipped.

“I will cause their images to cease.” אִלִּים images, from אֵל nothing, for an image or idol is a thing of no account, 1 Cor. viii. 4; it cannot profit: therefore, Isa. ii. 20, they shall cast away their idols as useless things, and God would make them to cease.

“Out of Noph.” This “Noph” was a great city in Egypt, very populous, and famous for the pyramids and monuments of kings, who leaving Thebes, made that the royal city: Isa. xix. 13, “The princes of Noph.” Thither many of the Jews fled, Jer. xlv. 1. It was seated on the west side of Nilus over-against Cairo. Though it was once the metropolis of Egypt, now nothing remains but the mere ruins. The Vulgate renders it, Memphis, and so it was commonly called by heathen writers; and Hos. ix. 6, “Memphis shall bury them.” In this city was that idol Apis, in the form of an ox, worshipped; like unto it was the calf the Jews made when Moses was in the mount, and those calves Jeroboam set up at Dan and Bethel.

“And there shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt.” God would so visit Egypt that he would either cut off all the royal blood, not leaving any of the Egyptian race to reign, or, which is more consonant to truth, he would keep Egypt a long time without any prince. He had threatened in the former chapter, ver. 11, 12, that Egypt should be desolate forty years, and that is the time here meant, “there shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt.” Lavater extends these words no more beyond the forty years, saying, that for a long time they had no kings, for after that time the Macedonians, Romans, and Saracens ruled over them.

“And I will put a fear in the land of Egypt.” The Egyptians were like the Ethiopians, a secure, careless people, they trusted in their rivers, their cities, their horse, their foot, their confederates and wealth; therefore God would awaken them, and put a fear into all sorts; they should fear the issue of things, an enemy being at hand, and ready to lay all waste.

Ver. 14. “And I will make Pathros desolate.” Of “Pathros” was spoken chap. xxix. 14. There it is joined with “the land of Pathros;” here it is reckoned amongst cities; and Junius saith it is likely to be that city which afterwards men commonly called, the little city of Hercules, because it was strong, and situate in the front of Egypt for defence of it. When Nebuchadnezzar came into Egypt, he made desolate both Pathros the country, and Pathros the city.

“And will set fire in Zoan.” “Zoan” was a city in Egypt very ancient, built seven years after Hebron, Numb. xiii. 22; a royal city where the princes resided, Isa. xix. 11, to it came princes from Judea for help, Isa. xxx. 4. The Septuagint calls it Tanis; and because it was not far from Nilus, one of the mouths of Nilus was called Ostium Tanieum, or Taniteum. Among authors there is mention of Tanis in Goshen, and Tanis on the other side Nilus, where Memphis was; and because the Jews dwelt in Goshen, I conceive Tanis in Goshen is sometimes meant in Scripture, and not always the other Tanis, or Zoan; as Psal. lxxviii. 12, 43, God did marvelous things and wonders “in the field of Zoan,” or Tanis, that might be that where the Jews inhabited. By “fire” here may be understood fire materially, which consumed Zoan to ashes; or fire metaphorically, God’s vengeance upon it by the sword.

“And will execute judgments in No.” “No” was another great city in Egypt, of which the prophet Nahum speaks thus, chap. iii. 8, “Art thou better than populous No, that was situate among the rivers, that had the waters round about it, whose rampart was the sea, and her wall was from the sea.” The word for “populous” is, נעם which signifies, nourishing. No was the mother and nurse of all Egypt, by reason of her great wealth and traffic, situate amongst the rivers cut out of Nilus. The Septuagint terms it, δισπολις; the Chaldee paraphrast, rabbies, and most expositors make it to be the city which in after-times was called Alexandria. Junius thinks it that city and tract which Ptolemy calls Nenth. This city God did punish, for it was idolatrous, Jer. xlv. 25.

Ver. 15. “I will pour my fury upon Sin, the strength of Egypt.” Exod. xvi. 1, mention is made of “the wilderness of Sin,” which some expositors affirm had its name from this city here called Sin, which afterward obtained the name Pelusium, and was by that mouth of Nilus termed Ostium Pelustorum, over-against Arabia Petraea, and is now called Damiata Castallo Zeiglero; and Suidas names it, clavis Egypti, the key of Egypt, and our prophet, “the strength of Egypt:” it was of grand import to hinder the coming in or going out of ships; so strong it was, that God must pour his fury upon it, else it would not be ruined.

“And I will cut off the multitude of No.” This city “No” had great trading, and idol gods in it, both which drew multitudes of people; but the Lord would cut them off, some by the sword, some by captivity, and some by other judgments.

Ver. 16. “I will set fire in Zoan.” In ver. 14 he said, “I will set fire in Zoan,” and here, “in Egypt.” The Babylonians were firebrands, whom God brought to consume all Egypt and her glory.

“Sin shall have great pain.” The Hebrew is, she shall be in such pain as women in travail are; God would pour his fury upon her, and that would pain her to purpose.

“No shall be rent asunder.” Garments we use to rend in pieces, and weak materials. Cities are weak things when God comes to deal with them, he can rend them asunder; the strongest walls, towers, houses, he can in a moment pull in pieces, as easily as the strongest man can paper or clothes.

“And Noph shall have distresses daily.” “Noph” shall hear of and meet with those things as should put her into continual straits; provisions should fail her, the spirit of her soldiers and inhabitants should fail her, her hope of help from confederates should fail her; so daily she should have distress, and especially when besieged by the enemy.

Ver. 17. “The young men of Aven.” “Aven,” the Septuagint has it, Heliopolis, which is, the city of the sun; and Isa. xix. 18, it is called, עיר הַשֶּׁמֶשׁ the city of the sun, so it is rendered in the margin; and it was so called, because it was the image and temple of the sun. It was sometimes in holy writ called On; Gen. xli. 45, Pharaoh gave Joseph “to wife Asenath, the daughter of Potipherah, priest of On;” of Heliopolis, saith the Septuagint. It was after by the Grecians called Thebe, by the Arabians Bethsemes. The men of this city were accounted the wisest of all the Egyptians; neither their wisdom nor their strength could preserve them from falling by the sword.

“And of Pi-beseth shall fall by the sword.” This city is affirmed to be Bubastis or Bubastus, a city in Egypt, where Diana, whom the Egyptians called Bubastis, had a temple; and there was once a year great solemnity had in honour of Diana. By some it is called Pubastum.

“These cities shall go into captivity.” The inhabitants of them shall be taken and carried away by Nebuchadnezzar and his forces, viz. the citizens of Aven and Pi-beseth.

Ver. 18. “At Tehaphnehes also the day shall be darkened.” Some make this city to be the same with Zoan or Tanis. In Jeremiah it is called “Tahpanhes,” chap. xlv. 1; in it dwelt many of the fugitive Jews: it is thought to be so called from Tahpenes the queen wife of Pharaoh, 1 Kings xi. 19. In Isa. xxx. 4, it is named “Hanes” or Chanes; in Jer. xliii. 7, Tahpanhes, so it is in the Hebrew; and it was a royal city, ver. 9, Pharaoh’s house was there. It is by some expositors said to be Daphnæ or Daphnis, which was in ostio Nilii Pelusiano; of this judgment was Junius in his Notes on Jer. xxx. 4; but in this place he makes Tehaphnehes to be in the remotest part of Egypt southward, above Syene, where Nilus makes an island, called Tacompo, or Caemppo, by Herodotus. Now there should the day be darkened, that is, turned into night, by reason of mourning and sadness; all their mirth should be taken away, fears, sorrows, distresses should come as thick clouds upon them, and darken all.

“When I shall break there the yokes of Egypt.” The Egyptians held them there in great subjection, ruled over them tyrannically, they made them serve like beasts, with yokes on their necks and burdens on their backs. God would set them at liberty, and put yokes upon the Egyptians’ own necks. Junius thinks there were some works or chains in those parts to keep out the Ethiopians from making incursions into Egypt. Lavater reads the words, rectes Ægypti, the bars of Egypt. The people thereupon were put to great taxes and hard services, which were yokes. Some read, the sceptres of Egypt, the word מִצְרַיִם is rendered by some, sceptres: where there are sceptres, power, there will be heavy and burdensome things, such laws, decrees, orders, taxes, services imposed upon the people, as that they may well be called yokes, bonds, bars, lets to their liberty and comfort: these yokes would God break and remove from their necks and backs.

“And the pomp of her strength shall cease in her.” The Hebrew is, the pride of her strength. Egypt had strong cities, strong garrisons, which made her proud, confident. The Septuagint is, the injury or violence of her power and strength; she abused her strength in oppressing others, and God would put an end unto it, he would destroy it, and she should no more glory in her strong holds, or in her multitudes of men.

“As for her, a cloud shall cover her.” Here is a nominative case absolute in the Hebrew, אֲשֶׁר which is rendered, “As for her,” that is, Tehaphnehes, “a cloud shall cover her;” Nebuchadnezzar’s army, which brought a cloud of fears, a cloud of sorrows, a cloud of perplexities, a cloud of reproach. Such a cloud was upon Worcester.

“And her daughters shall go into captivity.” By “daughters” we may understand the women of Tehaphnehes, who properly were the daughters thereof; or, the little towns thereabouts, each were under the protection and power of Tehaphnehes.

and so were her daughters metaphorically. The inhabitants of them should be carried away into Babylon.

Ver. 19. “Thus will I execute judgments in Egypt.” “Egypt” was full of sin, and God filled it with his judgments from one end to the other; he said he would cut off man and beast, break down her foundations, dry up the rivers, lay all waste, fill the land with the slain, send multitudes into captivity; and “thus will I execute judgments in Egypt.”

Obs. 1. Idols and idolatrous worship are so far from benefiting a state, as that they provoke God to ruin them, and the state with them. Egypt had many idols, many images, in most cities they were set up and worshipped; this caused God to destroy them, and Egypt with them. “I will destroy the idols, and will cause their images to cease out of Noph; and I will set fire in Egypt.” Idolatry is a sin which robs God of his glory, and so provokes him to fury, to take vengeance on idols and idolatrous kingdoms. Jer. xlv. 25, “I will punish the multitude of No, and Pharaoh, and Egypt, with their gods, and their kings.” The kings set up their idol gods, they commanded and countenanced the worshipping of them, therefore they should be punished together. Idolatry is very destructive; it was the destruction of the ten tribes, 2 Kings xvii. 7; and you may see how Judah suffered for this sin: 2 Chron. xxviii. 2, Ahaz “made molten images for Baalim,” and burnt incense to idols, but what was the issue thereof? ver. 5, 6, the king of Syria “smote him, and carried away a great multitude of them captives. Pekah also the son of Remaliah slew in Judah one hundred and twenty thousand in one day, which were all valiant men, because they had forsaken the Lord God of their fathers;” they fell to idolatry. Besides the loss of those men, two hundred thousand women, sons, and daughters, were carried away captive, ver. 8. Oh what spoil was Judah brought unto for its abominable idolatry!

Obs. 2. God may and can deprive lands of their princes at his pleasure. “There shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt.” Princes have their patents and power from God: Prov. viii. 16, “By me princes rule, and nobles, even all the judges of the earth.” It is God sets them up, and he may and doth pull them down as he sees cause: he set up Saul, and he rejected him, 1 Sam. xv. 23; he planted Zedekiah, and pulled him up, Ezek. xvii. 8, 9. “He cuts off the spirit of princes; he is terrible to the kings of the earth;” Psal. lxxvi. 12. He cuts them off as suddenly, as easily as the vine-dresser doth branches off the vine; he is terrible unto them, 2 Chron. xxxii. 21, he “sent an angel and cut off all the mighty men of valour, and the leaders and captains in the camp of the king of Assyria:” the angel made terrible work among them in one night. God is King of kings, and in the day of his wrath he strikes through them, and deprives their land of them. He can say to any land, as he did to Egypt, There shall be no more a prince there.

Obs. 3. There is nothing can secure a wicked prince and nation from the judgments of God. Egypt and her king had many cities, strong cities, populous cities, wealthy cities, men of wisdom and might in them, yet these could not keep off the sword and fire: “I will make Pathros desolate, and will set fire in Zoan, and will execute judgments in No, and pour my fury upon Sin; Noph shall have distress, the men of Aven and Pi-beseth shall fall by the sword, and a cloud shall cover Tehaphnehes.” Men might run from one city to another, but God’s judgments would outrun them; if they escaped one judgment, another would overtake them.

Obs. 4. God hath his times to take off the heavy burdens, tributes, and taxes which are laid upon people by oppressing princes and rulers. "When I shall break there the yokes of Egypt." The rulers of Egypt decreed unrighteous things, oppressed the men of Tchapnehes, sucked their blood by hard rates and taxes, burdened them with difficult and dangerous services, and made them groan under their yokes: as they did, so do the princes and rulers of most nations in the world; but as they have their times to make and increase such yokes upon the people, so God hath his time to take them off. Lev. xxvi. 13, "I have broken the bands of your yoke, and made you to go upright." The Jews were under the Egyptian yoke a long time; but at last he brake the lands of the yoke, those laws, decrees, that kept them in Egypt, held them to hard labour, causing them to stoop; and made them free, so that they could go upright. Bondage makes men to bow, but liberty, to go upright. Heavy burdens upon people make them sigh, press them down to the earth, and when they are eased they rejoice and look up. It is God breaks the yokes off, whoever puts them on. Isa. x. 27, "It shall come to pass in that day, that his burden shall be taken away from off thy shoulder, and his yoke from off thy neck, and the yoke shall be destroyed because of the anointing." The king of Assyria's burdens and yokes lay heavy and hard upon the Jewish state; but for Hezekiah's sake, or rather Christ's, who is called "the anointing," he would break the yokes, and take off the burdens.

Obs. 5. God makes some nations exemplary with his judgments. "Thus will I execute judgments in Egypt;" thus, as becomes me, a provoked God; thus, as an idolatrous, profane, guilty nation deserves; thus, as themselves and all nations round about shall know that I am the Lord; they shall see that in my judgments which shall convince them that no hand but mine could do such things, take such strong holds, ruin so many cities, and lay waste such a land as Egypt was. Some lands are theatres of God's severe judgments. We have been made monuments of God's choice mercies, wonderful deliverances. Let us fear the Lord and his goodness, lest he turn our mercies into judgments.

Ver. 20—26. And it came to pass in the eleventh year, in the first month, in the seventh day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, I have broken the arm of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and, lo, it shall not be bound up to be healed, to put a roller to bind it, to make it strong to hold the sword. Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and will break his arms, the strong, and that which was broken; and I will cause the sword to fall out of his hand. And I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will disperse them through the countries. And I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon, and put my sword in his hand; but I will break Pharaoh's arms, and he shall groan before him with the groanings of a deadly wounded man. But I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon, and the arms of Pharaoh shall fall down; and they shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall put my sword into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall stretch it out upon the land of Egypt. And I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and disperse them among the countries; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

These seven verses are the second general part of the chapter, and treat of two great kings, Pharaoh king of Egypt, and Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon. Concerning Pharaoh, two things are threatened against him;

I. Diminution of his power, ver. 21, 22, 24.

II. Dispersion of his people, ver. 23, 26.

Concerning Nebuchadnezzar, he is the instrument God will use, and promiseth to strengthen in doing his work, ver. 24, 25. And both these are illustrated from the chronology of this prophecy.

Ver. 20. "In the eleventh year, in the first month, in the seventh day of the month." That was, in the eleventh year of Jehoiachin's captivity, the first month, and the seventh day, Ezekiel had this prophecy given in; it was three months and two days before the taking of Jerusalem, Jer. lli. 5, 6, for it was taken the eleventh year, the fourth month, and the ninth day. This prophecy, though it be set after that in chap. xxix. 17, yet was sixteen years before it. The penmen of the Scriptures do not exactly observe the order where every thing should come in; among the Psalms you have the 3rd Psalm, which was made at that time when David fled from Absalom, set before the 34th, 51st, 56th, 57th, 59th, 60th, and others, which were made before that, as appears by their titles.

Ver. 21. "I have broken the arm of Pharaoh king of Egypt." By "arm" the forces and power Pharaoh had are intended. Vatablus saith the preter tense is here put for the future tense, "I have broken," that is, I will break; but Pharaoh had his arm broken before, when the Babylonian forces beat him and his army by the river Euphrates in Carchemish, which was in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, Jer. xvi. 2; and at that time he took from him all that he had between Nilus and Euphrates, 2 Kings xxiv. 7; which was the breaking of his arm, and such a breaking as it could not be cured. But notwithstanding this breaking, Pharaoh got up forces again; and when Nebuchadnezzar besieged Jerusalem, he came forth out of Egypt; whereupon Nebuchadnezzar raised his siege, went to meet Pharaoh, and caused him to retreat, Jer. xxxvii. 5, 7, as having a broken arm, and not being able to encounter with him.

"And, lo, it shall not be bound up to be healed," &c. That wound and loss which Pharaoh received by overthrow of his army, he never could cure and recover; neither his own people nor his confederates could set him into his former condition; he is here resembled to a broken arm, which cannot be bound up, or if bound up, not be healed, so as to be useful any more: Pharaoh could never recover his strength and greatness again.

Ver. 22. "Behold, I am against Pharaoh king of Egypt." Here is the cause of Pharaoh's breakings, his not binding up and healing, the Lord was against him; not only the Babylonians and Cyreneans were his enemies, but the Lord himself. When he breaks in pieces, who shall bind up? when he wounds, who shall heal? when he is an enemy, who can stand before him? The Lord makes himself Author of all the judgments which fell upon Pharaoh.

"And will break his arms, the strong, and that which was broken." Pharaoh's arms were, Egypt, and those territories he had from Egypt to Euphrates. His arm was broken already by the Babylonians, as you have it before. One arm yet remained, and that is called a strong one, viz. Egypt with all her strength: this arm God brake by the Cyreneans (against whom Pharaoh led out an army which they overthrew) and the civil wars amongst them: after that victory they were so consumed and weakened, that they had not hearts nor means to defend themselves against Nebuchadnezzar when he invaded them.

“I will cause the sword to fall out of his hand.”

When an arm is broken, the hand is disabled from holding any thing; so Pharaoh having his arms broken, Syria and Egypt, the sword shall fall out of his hand, he should not be able any more to make war; he should neither have forces in the one kingdom or the other to do him service: or thus, if he did get up some forces, and engage with the Babylonians, God would so order things that the Egyptians should be overcome, throw down their arms, cry for quarter, or flee for safety.

Ver. 23. “And I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations.” The Hebrew word for to “scatter” is, פָּרַץ which signifies to be broken and dispersed: he spake before of the breaking Pharaoh’s forces, and now saith they should be scattered, some running one way, some another, some carried into one part of Babylon, some into another.

“And will disperse them.” דָּרַר which is the Hebrew word, signifies to disperse by breaking in pieces, and also by fanning. The Septuagint hath it, ἀνεψύσω, I will fan them; and so Lavater, Piscator, and the Vulgate render the word. God would fan them as chaff out of the land of Egypt, and drive them from country to country, as the wind drives chaff from place to place.

Ver. 24. “And I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon.” מוֹדֵרֵי מוֹדֵרֵי Montanus renders it, I will comfort; Vatablus, I will make strong; Junius and Piscator, I will confirm; the Septuagint, I will harden. The word מוֹדֵרֵי saith Kirker, signifies properly, such a taking hold of a man, as thereby to confirm his spirits, and to strengthen him: God would take hold of Nebuchadnezzar and his forces, so as to add spirit, courage, and strength unto them; he would be on their side, and make them victorious. He was against Pharaoh, brake his arms, weakened him; but he would be with Nebuchadnezzar, uphold him, and make his arms strong.

“And put my sword in his hand.” I will furnish him with all military instruments, and sufficiency of power to execute my judgments upon Egypt, and upon Pharaoh, king thereof. God would make the sword fall out of his hand, but he would put one into Nebuchadnezzar’s hand.

“But I will break Pharaoh’s arms.” Let them be strong and brawny, I will break them, as wood, bones, earthen vessels are wont to be broken: he is proud, confident, and thinks himself able to withstand the king of Babylon, but by him will I break all his forces, and so break them, that “He shall groan before him with the groanings of a deadly wounded man.” The Hebrew runs thus, he shall cry with cries being deadly wounded before him. Piscator, looking to the former words, “I will break Pharaoh’s arms,” renders them thus, that he may groan before him, as a man groans being deadly wounded. When a man is דָּרַר thrust through or deadly wounded, he fetcheth deep sighs and groans; and Pharaoh should be so afflicted with the king of Babylon’s prevailing against him, that he should greatly mourn and groan. קָנַן notes such crying, sighing, groaning, as men make when they are wounded unto death.

Ver. 25. “But I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon, and the arms of Pharaoh shall fall down,” &c. In this verse and the last there is little but what was said before: the prophet repeats the same things, that so he might awaken the Egyptians to consider what dreadful desolations were coming upon them, and beat off the Jews from seeking help at their hands whose destruction was so certainly determined by the Lord.

“And he shall stretch it out upon the land of Egypt.”

This stretching out may either refer to the stroke, as when men will strike strong and deadly strokes, they stretch out their arms that the stroke may be with more force upon the party to be smitten; or it may note the extent of the sword, it should be stretched out upon the whole land of Egypt, wars should consume the whole nation.

Obs. 1. Men in affliction strictly observe how the time passes away, they mind the years, months, and days. Ezekiel was a captive in Babylon, and he kept account of the time; In the eleventh year, the first month, and seventh day of it, that was, of their captivity; he slipped not a day, but observed it, and what fell out; then the word of the Lord came unto him. Afflictions make good chronologers.

Obs. 2. The Lord makes good his word. He had said by the mouth of David, Psal. xxxvii. 17, “The arms of the wicked shall be broken;” and here he saith, “I have broken the arm of Pharaoh king of Egypt;” he was a wicked king, and God broke his arms. Kings who have great forces, great wealth, numerous cities, and strong navies, if they be wicked, they and all they have are no more to God than one single man, whose arms God can easily break; for he hath “a mighty arm,” Psal. lxxxix. 13, and when he makes it bare, then it breaks kings and kingdoms, arms and armies in pieces. It was his arm that brake the Babylonian, Persian, Grecian, and Roman empires, which were all wicked. He brake the arm of Moab, Jer. xlviii. 25. He will break the arm of antichrist, and of all the princes of the earth which help him.

Obs. 3. God sometimes so wounds princes and states, as that their wounds are incurable. “I have broken the arm of Pharaoh, and, lo, it shall not be bound up to be healed;” all the state chirurgeons and physicians could not set the bone again, and heal the wound; much art and industry was used, many plasters applied, but all to no purpose, for God had said, It shall not be healed. Jer. xlvi. 11, “In vain shalt thou use many medicines, for thou shalt not be cured;” it is spoken of this Pharaoh, and the wound he had received. If God deny once to cure the wounds, he makes those wounds prove deadly; not all the balm in Gilead will cure them: not all the wisdom, riches, strength of Egypt, could make Pharaoh whole again. If the Lord himself do not bind up when he breaks, heal where he wounds, nothing but death and dissolution follows.

Obs. 4. It is a dreadful thing to have the Lord declare himself to be an enemy to a king, to a state, to any. “Behold, I am against Pharaoh;” therefore what was broken could not be healed, and what was whole should be broken, he should be more and more disabled: his princes became fools, his wise counsellors brutish, a perverse and seducing spirit was in the midst of them: and Egypt was as women, fearful and weak like women, Isa. xix. 11—16. God being against Pharaoh, all his counsels, enterprises, were blasted, all his forces broken, all his cities made desolate, and all his people consumed or carried into captivity: better he had had all the princes of the world against him than God, for whomsoever he is against must be ruined.

Obs. 5. The flourishing and perishing of kings, kingdoms, and armies, is from the Lord. “I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon, and put my sword in his hand: but I will break Pharaoh’s arms, and they shall fall down.” One of these great kings should prosper, his kingdom flourish, his forces stand and conquer; the other should perish, his kingdom be laid waste, and all his forces broken and scattered. What king, state, or army soever God is with, he will strengthen, uphold; what king, state, or army soever he is against, he will break, ruin, and bring to nothing, whatever their strength, wealth, or counsels are.

Obs. 6. Tyrannical, wicked kings oft come to very sad ends. "He shall groan before him with the groanings of a deadly wounded man." Herodotus saith he was strangled by the Egyptians, which had revolted from him to Amasis. The holy Scripture tells you what ends Adoni-bezek, Athaliah, Jezebel, Ahab, and Sennacherib came unto. Pilate, who put Christ to death, was deposed, banished, and at last slew himself at Lyons in France. Of thirty-two emperors who persecuted the christians, scarce any of them died a natural death; some were poisoned, some killed by the soldiers, some sentenced by the senate, and some slew themselves: Galerius had such a loathsome disease, as that he could not endure the stink of it, but slew himself to avoid it. Vid. Fox's Acts and Mon. vol. 1. p. 40, 41.

Obs. 7. God is the author of wars, he sets one tyrant against another, and gives commission how far they shall proceed. "I will put my sword into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall stretch it out upon the land of Egypt." Nebuchadnezzar was a great tyrant, and God set him upon Pharaoh another great tyrant, and ordered him how far he should go, even over all Egypt. Tyrants cannot stir till God move them: the sword is his; if he will not put it into their hands, they cannot take it up; and when he hath put it into their hands they cannot go one foot further than he hath appointed them.

CHAPTER XXXI.

Ver. 1, 2. And it came to pass in the eleventh year, in the third month, in the first day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, speak unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, and to his multitude; Whom art thou like in thy greatness?

This chapter, as the two former, is a prophecy against the king of Egypt; and in it you have these parts:

- I. The chronology of the prophecy, ver. 1.
- II. The occasion of it, viz. his pride, and confidence in his greatness, ver. 2.
- III. A confirmation of his ruin, set out by an example a majori ad minus, ver. 3—18; wherein is notably described the glory of Assyria, her sin, and fall thereupon.

IV. The application of all to Pharaoh, ver. 18.

Ver. 1. "In the eleventh year, in the third month, in the first day of the month." The prophet had not prophecies given in every month, it was a month and twenty-four days from the last prophecy to this, which was one month and eight or nine days before the destruction of Jerusalem, and in the eleventh year of their captivity, the third month, and first day of the month. The Hebrew for "first day of the month," is, one of the month, an hebraism common in the Scripture; as in Gen. i. 5, "The evening and the morning were" one day, so is the Hebrew, that is, "the first day:" Luke xxiv. 1. μια σαββατα, upon one of the week, that is, "the first day of the week."

Ver. 2. "Speak unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, and to his multitude." Pharaoh was a great king, and had a great multitude of men, horses, and chariots, and conceited himself greater than he was; but how great soever he were in reality or conceit, God orders a prophet to speak to him, and to demand a question of him. The prophet was in Babylon, Pharaoh in Egypt, and how he could speak to him appears not. It is impossible that he should undertake so long a journey as it is from Babylon to Egypt. It is more consonant to truth, that he penned this prophecy, and sent it unto him by one means or other.

"Whom art thou like in thy greatness?" This was the question Ezekiel must propound to him; and it was an upbraiding question, taxing him for his pride, arrogancy, and vain confidences. He had, like most kings, many flatterers, who flattered him into a conceit that he was greater than other kings, yea, so great in power, that he might encounter God himself. The Lord therefore thought meet to take down his spirit by this question, "Whom art thou like in thy greatness?" what! like unto me? thou art so far from that, as that thou art not comparable to some mortal men. What sayest thou to the king of Assyria? art thou greater, art thou stronger than he? no; he went far beyond thee in power, dignity, and greatness, yet for his pride, arrogancy, and confidences in what he had, he was utterly destroyed; and thinkest thou, who art inferior, to stand and avoid the judgments of God when they come? thou deceivest thyself.

Obs. 1. Kings are prone to be lifted up with and confide in their greatness. Pharaoh swelled with his honour and multitude, putting too much confidence therein; chap. xxix. 3, he is called the "great dragon," and he lay secure "in the midst of his rivers," saying, "My river is mine own, and I have made it for myself;" he was proud and confident, thinking none greater than himself. Nebuchadnezzar was lifted up with his greatness, Dan. iv. 30; so was Sennacherib, Isa. xxxvii. 11—13. And not only wicked kings, but good ones have been overtaken with this evil. David numbers the people, and was too proud of and confident in his multitudes, 1 Chron. xxi. Princes have many things to puff up their spirits, but God knows how to bring them down.

Obs. 2. God will have them told of their sins, and taxed for them. Go, speak unto Pharaoh, and say, "Whom art thou like in thy greatness?" Thou proud tyrant, thou shalt fall; though thou be great, strong, there is a greater than thyself, and one stronger than thou art, who hath sent a prophet to tell thee of thy pride and arrogancy, and to foretell thee of thy destruction. Kings are no more to God than the meanest peasants; if they sin they shall hear of it, and smart for it.

Ver. 3—9. Behold, the Assyrian was a cedar in Lebanon with fair branches, and with a shadowing shroud, and of an high stature; and his top was among the thick boughs. The waters made him great, the deep set him up on high with her rivers running round about his plants, and sent out her little rivers unto all the trees of the field. Therefore his height was exalted above all the trees of the field, and his boughs were multiplied, and his branches became long because of the multitude of waters, when he shot forth. All the fowls of heaven made their nests in his boughs, and under his branches did all the beasts of the field bring forth their young, and under his shadow dwelt all great nations. Thus was he fair in his greatness, in the length of his branches: for his root was by great waters. The cedars in the garden of God could not hide him: the fir trees were not like his boughs, and the chestnut trees were not like his branches; nor any tree in the garden of God was like unto him in his beauty. I have made him fair by the multitude of his branches: so that all the trees of Eden, that were in the garden of God, envied him.

In these seven verses is set forth the power of the king of Assyria, who is compared here unto a cedar, which is described,

- I. From its place; it was in Lebanon, ver. 3.
- II. From its beauty; it had fair branches, ver. 3, and was fair in greatness and length, ver. 7.
- III. From the benefit of it; it was a shadowing shroud, fowls, beasts, men were advantaged by it, ver. 3, 6.
- IV. From the height of it; it was very high, ver. 3, higher than all the trees of the field, ver. 5.
- V. From the thickness; it had thick boughs, ver. 3.
- VI. From the cause of all these, viz. the rivers and waters he was planted by, ver. 4, 5, 7.
- VII. From his transcendency above all other trees in the field or garden, ver. 5, 8, 9.

Ver. 3. "Behold, the Assyrian." Some would have Pharaoh and the Egyptians to be understood by "the Assyrian," and produce Isa. lii. 4 for it, where it is said, "My people went down aforetime into Egypt to sojourn there; and the Assyrian oppressed them without cause;" that was, Pharaoh and the Egyptians, saith A Lapidé; but interpreters generally understand Sennacherib, or Nebuchadnezzar, and their people. By "the Assyrian," therefore, here is meant the king of Assyria, whom divers expositors make to be Esar-haddon, the third son of Sennacherib, of whom see Isa. xxxvii. 38. He was king of Assur, Ezra iv. 2, called also "the great and noble Assnapper," ver. 10. He was king of Assyria and Babylonia, saith Usher in his Chronology, p. 107. Lavater makes him only king of Assyria, for he saith, Ben-Merodach, the governor of Babylon, observing that his two brethren who slew their father, viz. Adrammelech and Sharezer, were lying in wait to dispossess Esar-haddon of the kingdom, he made war upon him, overcame him, and so rejoined the Assyrian kingdom to the Babylonian. Whether him, Sennacherib, or Nebuchadnezzar, it was a king of Assyria, who was great and powerful.

"A cedar in Lebanon." That is, as a cedar in Lebanon. Lebanon was a great and large mountain in Canaan, full of cedars; and this king of Assyria is likened unto the chiefest of them.

"With fair branches." These "branches" were not his sons and nobles, but the several provinces which belonged unto the kingdom of Assyria, over which his princes and nobles did reign. Himself was the cedar, these the branches or arms.

"And with a shadowing shroud." The word for "shroud" is, שֵׁרָיִם which Montanus renders, a pruned forest. Buxtorf saith it is, shoots, sprouts, so thick and entangled together, as that they make it shadowy. The Septuagint renders it, thick in the covering; this tree did afford cover and shade to others.

"Of an high stature; his top was among the thick boughs." The king intended Ezek. xvii. 6, was like a vine of low stature; but this king was like a cedar of high stature, glorious, great, and renowned, so high that his top was in the midst of the clouds, like the tree, Dan. iv. 20, "whose height reached unto heaven."

Ver. 4. "The waters made him great." Some trees prosper best in dry places, some by the waterside; the moisture they draw thence makes them to spread and flourish, Psal. i. 3. The tree being here metaphorical, so are the waters. Waters signify sometimes afflictions, Psal. xxxii. 6; sometimes wholesome and good doctrine, Isa. lv. 1; sometimes people, Rev. xvii. 15; here riches, power, victories, and such things by which empires prosper. The Assyrian's wealth, provinces, victories, were as water to his roots, and made him great.

"The deep set him up on high with her rivers running round about his plants." His vast treasure, like a deep not to be drawn dry, raised him to such a height, as waters do a cedar; he did abound with plenty of all things. As plants which have rivers running round about them, do grow and spread, so did the king of Assyria, and his. His riches and greatness were like an ocean, and the provinces, as so many rivers, brought in wealth continually, which supplied them and others.

"And sent out her little rivers unto all the trees of the field." Some commodities, some parts of the Assyrian treasure, were derived to other nations, princes, and people; or, his own subjects had some share with him in his wealth and greatness; all at home, and many abroad, which were the trees of the field, gained by the Assyrian waters.

Ver. 5. "Therefore his height was exalted above all the trees of the field." There were divers trees in the field which were high, many kings and princes who were great, but the Assyrian was the highest, the greatest cedar and monarchy then in the world; his waters exceeded theirs, and they derived moisture from him.

"His boughs were multiplied, and his branches became long." The boughs and branches of this metaphorical tree, were the provinces and countries which belonged to the Assyrian monarchy, which were many, and extended far, even to Media eastward, to Mesopotamia westward, to Armenia Minor northward, and to Susiana southward. "Because of the multitude of waters, when he shot forth." Where there is much water and moisture at the root of a tree, there the branches and boughs do shoot forth faster and further than where it is wanting. The Assyrian having "multitude of waters," viz. treasure, enlarged his empire and borders thereby.

Ver. 6. "All the fowls of heaven made their nests in his boughs." By "fowls of heaven" some understand the nobles and great ones; they built their habitations in his provinces and dominions, which they peaceably enjoyed, as fowls do their nests in the boughs of high trees.

"And under his branches did all the beasts of the field bring forth their young." By "beasts of the field," A Lapidé intends the vulgar and more barbarous sort of people. The sense is, that all kinds of people, noble and ignoble, rich or poor, weak or strong, were in safety and multiplied under his protection, as birds and beasts do in and under a great tree.

In this verse and the former are three words which signify boughs and branches. The first, כִּרְעָה sargnophah, signifies a heap or thicket of boughs. The second is, עֵץ sagniph, which notes a top bough. The third is, פְּאָרָה from פָּאָר to adorn, because boughs are the glory and beautifying of the tree.

"Under his shadow dwelt all great nations." Either they were under his authority or his protection; many great nations were commanded by the Assyrian, and others put themselves under his protection.

Ver. 7. "Thus was he fair in his greatness." The Hebrew is, יָפִים he was a goodly thing in his greatness. The Septuagint, ἐγένετο κάλλος ἐν τῷ ὕψει, he was beauty in his height and greatness; not only beautiful, but beauty; greatness and height make things goodly and fair.

"In the length of his branches." Here is another word for "branches," לְעֵצֵי which is from עָצָה, or because they draw juice from the roots, or because they move upwards, and so the word datch also signifies. The branches of this tree were the provinces, as before, which extended far, and added to the greatness and glory of the tree.

"For his root was by great waters." These words correspond with those in the fourth verse, "the waters made him great." When a tree is fixed in the earth, where there is no want of moisture, it grows, it spreads, it becomes great and lovely; so this king, being planted among great waters, in the midst of much wealth and power, grew, spread, and became fair in his greatness.

Ver. 8. "The cedars in the garden of God could not hide him." The highest "cedars" that were in any garden, or in Paradise itself, did not exceed this cedar, and so obscure the glory of it; but this kingdom, for the wealth, strength, and greatness of it, went beyond all others, and was for admiration.

"The fir trees were not like his boughs." Fir trees are tall and stately, yet none of the fir trees were comparable to the boughs of this tree. The kingdoms of other princes were not like to the provinces of Assyria.

"And the chesnut trees were not like his branches." The chesnut tree is lower than the fir tree, but more branched and spreading; yet none of the chesnut trees did equalize any branch of the Assyrian tree.

"Nor any tree in the garden of God was like unto him in his beauty." The Hebrew is, every tree in the garden of God was not like to him in his beauty; that is, no tree therein, no tree in Paradise, no tree in the whole earth, did equalize this metaphorical Assyrian tree in the bulk, arms, branches, or beauty of it.

Ver. 9. "I have made him fair by the multitude of his branches." A tree is much beautified, that hath abundance of boughs shooting out from it; the more boughs, the more beauty. This tree wanted not for boughs: it had many provinces, and every one added to its beauty.

"So that all the trees of Eden, that were in the garden of God, envied him." When other trees, that is, princes, who were seated in pleasant, rich, and fruitful places, saw how much the king of Assyria exceeded them in power, wealth, glory, and greatness, they envied him.

Obs. 1. It is the Lord who makes kingdoms and kings great, and differences them from others. The Assyrian was a cedar in Lebanon, exceeding all others in beauty, branches, height, and thickness; and how came he to be so? ver. 9, "I have made him fair." Whatever virtue, glory, excellency, inward or outward, any trees, any princes, have, it is all from the Lord. All Solomon's greatness and wisdom was from him, 1 Kings iv. 29—31.

Obs. 2. That as trees have need of moisture and waters to make them grow and flourish, so states and princes have need of money to uphold their greatness; they must have revenues come flowing in like rivers, else they will soon wither. The waters made him great, the deep set him up on high, the rivers ran round about his plants, he had multitude of waters, his root was by great waters; the Assyrian had great means, which maintained his glory and greatness; so Solomon had great means, otherwise he could not have lived at that height he did; see 1 Kings iv. 22, 25, 26—28; x. 14, 21—23.

Obs. 3. Princes, monarchs, states, ought to protect those who are their subjects, and to communicate good unto them. This cedar in Lebanon was a shadowing shroud, "all the fowls of heaven made their nests in his boughs, under his branches did all the beasts of the field bring forth their young, and under his shadow dwelt all great nations." All sorts had protection from the king of Assyria; and not only so, but those waters which watered him were sent out unto all the trees of the field; he hoarded not up his wealth, but it passed up and down for the good of all. Isa. xlix. 23, it is said of the church, "kings shall be thy nursing fathers," thy nourishers; that is, they shall communicate good things unto thee, as a nurse doth milk unto the child; not only doth she protect the child from harm, but see it wants nothing that is good for it.

Obs. 4. Excellency, greatness, transcendency, beget envy. This Assyrian cedar excelled all the cedars in the garden of God, none of the fir trees, chesnut trees, or any other, did equalize him, he outstripped all the trees in bulk, in height, in branches, in beauty; and what then? "all the trees of Eden, that were in the garden of God, envied him." Envy is against superiors, and contempt is of inferiors. When Daniel was made chief of the presidents and princes, then they envied him, and sought occasion to ruin him, Dan. vi. It is a grief springing up from another man's prosperity; power, honour, strength, riches, greatness, are the causes and occasions of it; there is always a malignancy goes along with it, taking pleasure in hurting, though it gain nothing thereby. Envy is most prejudicial to the party it dwells in, for it is "the rottenness of the bones," Prov. xiv. 30; it eats out the marrow and moisture of them, and makes them putrify. Hence say the Buxhart, Florilegium Heb. Hebrews, an envious eye brings a man to the grav.

Ver. 10—17. Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because thou hast lifted up thyself in height, and he hath shot up his top among the thick boughs, and his heart is lifted up in his height; I have therefore delivered him into the hand of the mighty one of the heathen; he shall surely deal with him: I have driven him out for his wickedness. And strangers, the terrible of the nations, have cut him off, and have left him: upon the mountains and in all the valleys his branches are fallen, and his boughs are broken by all the rivers of the land; and all the people of the earth are gone down from his shadow, and have left him. Upon his ruin shall all the fowls of the heaven remain, and all the beasts of the field shall be upon his branches: to the end that none of all the trees by the waters exalt themselves for their height, neither shoot up their top among the thick boughs, neither their trees stand up in their height, all that drink water: for they are all delivered unto death, to the nether parts of the earth, in the midst of the children of men, with them that go down to the pit. Thus saith the Lord God; In the day when he went down to the grave I caused a mourning: I covered the deep for him, and I restrained the floods thereof, and the great waters were stayed: and I caused Lebanon to mourn for him, and all the trees of the field fainted for him. I made the nations to shake at the sound of his fall, when

I cast him down to hell with them that descend into the pit: and all the trees of Eden, the choice and best of Lebanon, all that drink water, shall be comforted in the nether parts of the earth. They also went down into hell with him unto them that be slain with the sword; and they that were his arm, that dwelt under his shadow in the midst of the heathen.

Having set forth the greatness and glory of the king of Assyria, in the former verses, under the allegory of a tree, here he comes to show the cutting down and destruction of this tree, with the causes, events, and end thereof.

Ver. 10. "Because thou hast lifted up thyself in height." These words are an apostrophe to the king of Egypt, as Junius and Piscator observe. Here is a sudden interruption and turning of the speech unto Pharaoh, who was proud and haughty like the Assyrian; God by this gives him a hint to look to himself, and so turns again to the Assyrian.

"And he hath shot up his top among the thick boughs." "He," that is, the king of Assyria, he was grown very high, and so high, that his heart was lifted up in his height; saith Piscator, by reason of his height; his height heightened his spirit, he thought himself to have something divine in him, and fit to be worshipped.

Ver. 11. "I have therefore delivered him into the hand of the mighty one of the heathen." The Hebrew is future, I will deliver him, and so Munster reads it. For the better understanding of these words, we must know that the kingdom of Assyria and Chaldea were distinct. The metropolis of Chaldea was Babylon; the metropolis of the Assyrian was Nineveh; the ten tribes were carried away by the Assyrians, the other two tribes by the Chaldeans. Dissensions arising between these two, God delivered the king of Assyria into the hands of the king of Chaldea, who was Nebuchadnezzar, as expositors say, and is here called "the mighty one of the heathen;" he subdued all Assyria, and made that and Chaldea one empire, and afterwards the people were called sometimes Assyrians, sometimes Babylonians, sometimes Chaldeans. Polanus and others interpret these words of Esar-haddon, who, after Sennacherib, was king of Assyria, Isa. xxxvii. 38; whom God delivered into the hand of Berodach-baladan, or Merodach-baladan, being then king of Babylon, Isa. xxxix. 1; 2 Kings xx. 12, who is here called "the mighty one of the heathen." The Hebrew is, into the hand of the god of the nations, so Montanus renders the words; now whether Berodach-baladan were such a god, or "mighty one of the heathen," is doubted, because he was but praefectus Babyloniae.

"He shall surely deal with him." In Hebrew it is, he shall by doing do with him, that is, he shall without difficulty or delay deal with him, he shall deal with him according to his own mind, do what he list unto him, he shall take away his life and kingdom from him. This and the former word is future, put for preter tenses, which is usual among the Hebrews.

"I have driven him out for his wickedness." The word for, to drive out, is גָּרַשׁ which notes not only a simple ejection, a bare driving out, but a disgraceful one, such a casting or driving out as is with disgrace; as when a wife is divorced, she is judged unworthy of bed, board, or cohabitation: Gen. iii. 24, God drove out the man, that was, with disgrace; and so here, "I have driven him out with disgrace for his wickedness."

Ver. 12. "And strangers, the terrible of the nations, have cut him off, and have left him." Here he shows the ruin and downfall of the cedar which was so high, and extended its boughs so far. "Strangers, the terrible of the nations," that is, the Chaldeans, who were cruel and merciless, Jer. vi. 23; they cut him off, the king of Assyria, and left him, not affording the honour due to a dead king.

"Upon the mountains and in all the valleys his branches are fallen, and his boughs are broken by all the rivers of the land." When great trees are cut or blown down, then the branches or arms are broken and pulled off. When the king of Assyria was slain, his princes, nobles, provinces, and people all suffered with him; some were slain upon the mountains, some upon the valleys, and by the rivers, all the land over there were dead and slain persons.

"And all the people of the earth are gone down from his shadow, and have left him." Those which formerly were his confederates, and depended much upon him for counsel and help, seeing him ruined by the Chaldeans, they fell off and would not assist him; or divers of his own, seeing how things went with him, deserted him.

Ver. 13. "Upon his ruin shall all the fowls of the heaven remain, and all the beasts of the field shall be upon his branches." When a tree is pulled up or cut down, the fruit, leaves, and branches gone, there remains the body, or trunk, deformed and spoiled of its beauty and glory, that is the ruin. So here, the king of Assyria being taken and slain, his crown, glory, and greatness laid in the dust, his dead body was the ruin; and now the fowls of heaven, the nobles and great ones of Chaldea, and all the beasts of the field, the meaner sort, made a prey of him and his; him they scorned and vilified, and what was his they seized upon. Lavater saith, his body lay unburied, that crows, ravens, vultures, and such like flesh-fowls fed upon it.

Ver. 14. "To the end that none of all the trees by the waters exalt themselves for their height, neither shoot up their top," &c. This too sets out the end of God's heavy judgments upon the king of Assyria; that other trees, seeing God's dealings with that high cedar for its pride and loftiness, they might take heed of exalting themselves. Men grown great, are apt to grow proud; trees by the waters, that is, men abounding with wealth, honour, greatness, and such things as may puff up; trees by waters grow high, and men in the midst of great means are in great danger to do so.

"Neither their trees stand up in their height, all that drink water." The margin hath it, or stand upon themselves for their height; and so the sense is plain, that none of the trees should exalt themselves, or stand upon themselves, their own strength, wealth, and greatness, they should not rest in themselves, please themselves. If we take the words as they are in the verse, the sense is much the same, "neither their trees stand up in their height, all that drink water;" that is, let none that have means despise others that are inferior, or let them not "stand up in their height;" it will be but for a season, and they must be cut down.

"For they are all delivered unto death, to the nether parts of the earth, in the midst of the children of men, with them that go down to the pit." All the Assyrians were delivered up to the Chaldeans to be slain by them; or all the princes, nobles, and great ones, they shall die, go down into the earth among the meanest, where no difference will be made; therefore rich ones, great ones, should not exalt themselves above others, or stand upon their height.

Obs. 1. Pride and wickedness cause God to bring dreadful judgments upon kings and their kingdoms. Because the king of Assyria's heart was lifted up in his height, therefore God delivered him into the hand of a mighty enemy, and drove him out for his wickedness. When princes are in the seat of honour, have great means coming in, then they look big, begin to deify themselves, to do what they list, not minding him who exalted them, but confiding in their own strength, power, and greatness, which makes way for their speedy ruin. Solomon tells us that a man shall not be established by wickedness, Prov. xiii. 13. Kings, by their wicked policies and practices, cannot establish themselves, their wickedness overthrows them, their pride provokes God against them, Dan. iv. 25. It is good for kings and others to be humble in the midst of their enjoyments, and the greater abundance that they do possess, to carry it still the more humbly; for he that is of an humble mind is worthy of honour, and hath God dwelling with him.

Obs. 2. God hath instruments for the doing of his work, whatever it be, and such instruments as will do it to purpose. He had an Assyrian cedar to cut down, which was very great, whose top was in the clouds, whose boughs extended very far, in whose branches the fowls did make their nests, and under whose shadow dwelt all great nations; and now who shall dare to meddle with this cedar? Yes, the Lord had one that durst attempt and do it, he had a mighty one of the heathens, a god of the nations, into whose hand he delivered the great cedar, and he in doing did unto him all the mind of God, he cut him down and laid him low. Let trees be deeply rooted, grown exceeding great and high, yet God hath hewers to hew down such trees, Dan. iv. 14.

Obs. 3. When great trees are cut down, many other trees suffer with them; when kings fall, they break and undo many. When the king of Assyria was cut off, his nobles and great ones, yea, all sorts, suffered by him. "Upon the mountains and in all the valleys his branches are fallen, his boughs are broken, and all the people of the earth are gone down from his shadow;" all his provinces, princes, people, met with hard things. When Zedekiah was taken and carried away captive, did not the princes, nobles, and people suffer grievous things? see 2 Kings xxv.; Jer. liii. In our days we have seen many suffer by the fall of the king.

Obs. 4. Neither princes, nobles, nor other people, can tell who shall enjoy their wealth. The king of Assyria had great revenues, the Assyrians were well watered, a rich people; but who got all their wealth? the Chaldeans, strangers, the terrible of the nations: "Upon his ruin shall all the fowls of the heaven remain, and all the beasts of the field shall be upon his branches." Little did the Assyrians dream that the Chaldeans should have their jewels, gold, silver, plate, linen, habitations, and lands. Many hoard and heap up for their enemies. Many men are rich, well fraught, like ships at sea, but whose hands their wealth may fall into they know not. David calls it a vanity, and it is a deep, excessive vanity, that men disquiet themselves in heaping up riches, and cannot tell who shall gather them, Psal. xxxix. 6; whether their children or strangers, friends or foes. Solomon was vexed to think he must leave all he had got or done he knew not to whom, whether a wise man or a fool, Eccles. ii. 18, 19.

Obs. 5. God doth therefore destroy kings and kingdoms, that rich ones, great ones, and all sorts, may take heed of their sins, pride, wickedness, and self-confidence. God cuts off the great cedar, the king of Assyria, "to the end that none of all the trees by the waters exalt themselves for their height," nor stand upon themselves for their height; let them not slight other trees which are not by the waters, that are not so bulky, branchy, and leafy, as themselves, nor conceit that their wealth and greatness will always last.

Ver. 15. "In the day when he went down to the grave I caused a mourning." The word for "grave" is, קבר which, among other things, signifies the state of the dead; as, Gen. xxxvii. 35, saith Jacob, "I will go down into the grave unto my son." By "grave" he meant, not hell, nor the grave in a proper sense, for he was persuaded some wild beasts had devoured him, but the state of the dead: and so here, when this high cedar was cut down, when the king of Assyria was slain, and "went down to the grave," that is, the state of the dead, "I caused a mourning;" then there was a sad change, trading ceased, barrenness came upon all the land, the towns and cities were not frequented.

"I covered the deep for him, and I restrained the floods thereof, and the great waters were stayed." If we take the words literally, the sense is, The sea and rivers seemed to mourn the destruction and fall of this cedar; and so, if you take the deep floods and waters for his riches, abundance, and great revenues, they seemed now to put on sackcloth; their lord and master being dead, now there was no more flowing of those waters. The deep, the rivers and waters, had contributed to the greatness of the cedar, and they were affected with his fall.

"I caused Lebanon to mourn for him." In the third verse the Assyrian was called "a cedar in Lebanon," and when this cedar fell, he made the rest of the trees in Lebanon to put on black; the word is, אָפַק which signifies, to make dark, obscure, black: all the trees in the Assyrian empire, or in that part of Lebanon which belonged thereunto, I caused to be affected with the fall of this cedar.

"And all the trees of the field fainted for him." All other kings, saith Makdonate: not only kings, but all sorts, were involved in this common calamity; they were so sensible of their sufferings thereby, that they fainted. The word for fainting is, עָפַף which signifies, to cover for grief, and metaphorically, to faint; when grief is great, then it causeth fainting.

Ver. 16. "I made the nations to shake at the sound of his fall." When high and great trees fall they make a great noise; and so did this king when he fell, his own subjects and other nations were much troubled at his fall.

"When I cast him down to hell with them that descend into the pit." In ver. 15, it is said, "he went down to the grave," or hell; and here, that God "cast him down to hell;" it is the same word: God brought him from his height to the state of the dead, he made him like those that were in the pit.

"And all the trees of Eden, the choice and best of Lebanon, all that drink water, shall be comforted in the nether parts of the earth." Those kings and others which were gone before into the pit he speaks of as living and watered trees; when they should see this great cedar cut down and brought into the same condition with themselves, they should be comforted in that state they were in; that is the common condition of great and small. The Hebrew for "choice and best of Lebanon," is, the election and goodness of Lebanon.

Ver. 17. "They also went down into hell with him unto them that be slain with the sword." Those trees before mentioned, their condition was like theirs who were slain with the sword; and so was this Assyrian, he was cut off from all his glory and greatness, and laid amongst the slain.

"And they that were his arm, that dwelt under his shadow in the midst of the heathen." His princes, nobles, counsellors, soldiers, and confederates, these suffered with him, and had some comfort that they had him with them in the grave, or in hell. The Septuagint for those words, "were his arm," read, καὶ τὸ σπέρμα αὐτοῦ, and his seed, his posterity and friends, were cut off with him.

Obs. 1. The greatest princes and powers in the world have their day to leave their greatness, and go down to the dust. "In the day when he went down to the grave." The king of Assyria had his day to come down from all his height and glory, and to lie among the slain. Some die natural, some violent, deaths; be they great or small, die they must: "It is appointed unto men once to die," Heb. ix. 27. And as some have their day to grow high and great in the world, so their day to descend into the grave, and be no more in the eye of God than a stinking carcase.

Obs. 2. When great monarchs and princes are cut off, the Lord fills all with mourning, fainting, and shaking. When the Assyrian went down to the grave, the Lord caused a mourning, made changes and alterations at sea and land; he made Lebanon to put on black, the trees of the field to faint, and nations to quake at the sound of his fall. So was it when the king of Tyrus was destroyed, Ezek. xxvi. 15, 16; xxvii. 35. When the gods of the earth are slain, and die like men, the earth and all other creatures have a kind of sense thereof, and are affected at changes.

Obs. 3. When great oppressors and tyrants fall, it affords some kind of comfort to the dead. "All the trees of Eden, the choice and best of Lebanon, all that drink water, shall be comforted in the nether parts of the earth," &c. You have this livelily set forth, Isa. xiv. 9, 10, "Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming; it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth; it hath raised up from their thrones all the kings of the nations. All they shall speak and say unto thee, Art thou also become weak as we? art thou become like unto us?" Whether this was senacherib, Nebuchadnezzar, or Belshazzar, it matters not; whoever he was, he was a great tyrannical prince, and when he fell, the dead rejoiced at it, and comforted themselves that he was become like unto them.

Ver. 18. To whom art thou thus like in glory and in greatness among the trees of Eden? yet shalt thou be brought down with the trees of Eden unto the nether parts of the earth: thou shalt lie in the midst of the uncircumcised with them that be slain by the sword. This is Pharaoh and all his multitude, saith the Lord God.

This verse is the application of the former example unto Pharaoh. The protasis was from the 3rd verse hither, and in this 18th is the apodosis. The same question is put here to Pharaoh which was in the 2nd verse, "To whom art thou like in glory and in greatness among the trees of Eden?" Look about, Pharaoh, thou seest that thou art not like to the Assyrian in Lebanon. Well, who among the trees of Eden art thou like for glory and greatness? it may be thou equallest some of them: be it so, yet thou must be brought down with them to the nether parts of the earth, to the grave, or to hell; thou that art like them in sinning, must be like them in suffering.

"Thou shalt lie in the midst of the uncircumcised." In chap. xxviii. 10, it was said of the prince of Tyrus, "Thou shalt die the death of the uncircumcised;"

that was, without any hope of eternal life; and here it is said of Pharaoh, "Thou shalt lie in the midst of those that are uncircumcised;" that is, he should lie in a hopeless and perishing condition of soul and body for ever, as those did who were not in covenant with God.

"This is Pharaoh and all his multitude, saith the Lord God." This is his condition, and the condition of his princes, nobles, and people; whatsoever thoughts he or they may have of themselves, this must be their end.

Obs. God teaches men, by the examples of others, what they must look for. Here, by the Assyrian cedar, the Egyptian Pharaoh is taught what to expect; he being like the Assyrian in his sins, had no cause but to conclude that Assyrian judgments would befall him. What! was he, for his pride and wickedness, driven out, destroyed, brought down to the grave, hell, and an everlasting suffering? so must I, my ways being the same with his; like sins call for like judgments. As the Assyrian was set out for the instruction of Pharaoh, so God sets up Pharaoh for the instruction of all princes and people to the end of the world: "This is Pharaoh and all his multitude."

CHAPTER XXXII.

Ver. 1—10. And it came to pass in the twelfth year, in the twelfth month, in the first day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, take up a lamentation for Pharaoh king of Egypt, and say unto him, Thou art like a young lion of the nations, and thou art as a whale in the seas: and thou camest forth with thy rivers, and troubledst the waters with thy feet, and fouledst their rivers. Thus saith the Lord God; I will therefore spread out my net over thee with a company of many people; and they shall bring thee up in my net. Then will I leave thee upon the land, I will cast thee forth upon the open field, and will cause all the fowls of the heaven to remain upon thee, and I will fill the beasts of the whole earth with thee. And I will lay thy flesh upon the mountains, and fill the valleys with thy height. I will also water with thy blood the land wherein thou swimmest, even to the mountains; and the rivers shall be full of thee. And when I shall put thee out, I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark; I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light. All the bright lights of heaven will I make dark over thee, and set darkness upon thy land, saith the Lord God. I will also vex the hearts of many people, when I shall bring thy destruction among the nations, into the countries which thou hast not known. Yea, I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings shall be horribly afraid for thee, when I shall brandish my sword before them; and they shall tremble at every moment, every man for his own life, in the day of thy fall.

This chapter is of the nature of the three former, and contains in it two prophecies, both of them against Pharaoh and the Egyptians.

I. Is, from the beginning to the 17th verse.

II. From the 17th to the end of the chapter.

In the first of these we have,

1. The time of the prophecy, ver. 1.

2. The tyranny and cruelty of Pharaoh, ver. 2, set out by way of lamentation.

3. God's judgments against him, declared in an allegorical way, ver. 3—6.

4. The events thereupon; which are,

(1.) Darkness, ver. 7, 8.

(2.) Vexation, ver. 9.

(3.) Astonishment, fear, and trembling.

Ver. 1. "And it came to pass in the twelfth year, in the twelfth month, in the first day of the month." This was not in the time of Zedekiah, who reigned but eleven years: it was in the twelfth year of Jehoiachin's captivity, the twelfth month, and first day, not long after the taking of Jerusalem, and burning it with fire. The Lord gave out this prophecy then, that the Jews might be taken off from trusting in the Egyptians, having cause sufficient to believe that Ezekiel's prophecies against them should be made good, as well as Jeremiah's against themselves, for it was the same Spirit which breathed in them both; and that they might reap some comfort after their sufferings, in considering God would deal so roundly with the Egyptians, who had deceived them.

Ver. 2. "Take up a lamentation for Pharaoh king of Egypt." Take up a lamentable prophecy, declare what sad things are coming upon Pharaoh. Whether the prophet were to lament for the destruction of Pharaoh and the Egyptians is questionable, for he and they had oppressed others, deceived the Jews, and these judgments of God coming upon them for their wickedness, were just and righteous, and so matter of rejoicing; yet, because he was to utter dreadful and lamentable things, rejoicing became him not, but he was to be affected suitably to the matter delivered.

"Thou art like a young lion of the nations." Wherein tyrannical kings and princes are like unto young lions, hath been showed in chap. xix. The meaning of these words is, that look what a lion is among the beasts of the fields and woods, viz. terrible and cruel, the same was Pharaoh among the nations. Young lions are fierce, and devour their prey with greediness; so are young tyrants.

"And thou art as a whale in the seas." In chap. xxix. 3, Pharaoh is called תנינ as the dragon, or crocodile; here, תנינ as the whale. It is tannin in both places, and signifies a dragon, whale, or sea-monster: and such as a whale is in the seas, viz. troublesome, dreadful, and devouring, such was Pharaoh on the deep: a lion at land, a whale at sea. His dominion was large, and wherever it was, he minded the prey.

"And thou camest forth with thy rivers." The Septuagint has it, εξεπαρξες εν τοις ποταμοις αυ. which the Vulgate following, renders ventilabas cornu in fluminibus tuis, thou didst horn it in thy rivers: the whale spouts waters so out at her nostrils, that falling, it makes a kind of horn; and Pharaoh, digging or cutting rivers out of Nilus, they were winding like a horn. Those who are for this sense derive תנינ in the text from תנינ which is, to strike with the horn; others derive the word tagach from תנינ which is, to come forth, or, cause to come forth; thou didst invite other nations to revolt from Nebuchadnezzar, or thou didst come forth with thy people, and trouble other nations with invasions and wars.

"And troubledst the waters with thy feet, and fouledst their rivers." He troubled all at home, and all abroad: as the whale, or crocodile, troubles the seas and the rivers, and lets not the fish be quiet any where: they mud the rivers, make the waters loil; so did this Egyptian Pharaoh, he was like Nilus, which had troublesome waters. He troubled the waters when he constrained the people to leave their own land, and to go up to Carehemish by Euphrates, Jer. xlvi. 2; and as they went they must needs foul the rivers, make their comforts as dead and useless.

Obs. 1. That times of public calamities are specially to be noted. Ezekiel sets down the year, month, and day when the Lord told him what dreadful things should befall Pharaoh and the Egyptians: "In the twelfth year, the twelfth month, the first day of the month, he must take up a lamentation." God's judgments sometimes are lasting, and the duration of them cannot be known, unless the beginning of them be taken notice of.

Obs. 2. Lamentations for the sins and destructions of others is from the Lord. "Son of man, take up a lamentation for Pharaoh king of Egypt;" the prophet took it not up of himself, but at the command of the Lord: chap. xix. 1, God bid him take up a lamentation for the princes of Israel; chap. xxvii. 2, he is enjoined to take up a lamentation for Tyrus; chap. xxviii. 12, he must take up one for the king of Tyrus. Lamentations for princes and states are at God's appointment; prophets are to bewail the sins and ruins of princes and their kingdoms when God calls them thereunto.

Obs. 3. The evil qualities and manners of men do make them like unto beasts of the field and fish of the sea. "Thou art like a young lion of the nations;" Pharaoh's roaring and ravening, his ferocity and cruelty, made him like a lion. "And thou art as a whale in the seas;" Pharaoh's tumbling up and down, disquieting the people, and making a prey of them as fishes, transformed him into a whale, or sea-monster. Subtle persons are termed foxes, Luke xiii. 32; lascivious persons are like pampered horses, Jer. v. 8; oppressing princes and judges to lions and evening wolves, Zeph. iii. 3: the wicked qualities of men do make them brutish. Solomon tells you, in favour of this truth, that the wickedness of those in the place of judgment made them beasts, Eccles. iii. 16, 18.

Obs. 4. God hath prophets to tell the worst of princes of their wickedness. Pharaoh was a great king, terrible as a lion, dreadful as a whale, yet God had an Ezekiel to send to him, and to tell him of his tyranny and cruelty: Go, say unto Pharaoh, "Thou art as a young lion of the nations, and as a whale in the seas;" God sent him to deal sharply with him, notwithstanding his greatness. Prophets must not spare princes, when sent of God to reprove them.

Obs. 5. Wicked kings are great troublemakers of their own and others' waters. They trouble their own people, their own kingdoms, and others also: "Thou camest forth with thy rivers, and troubledst the waters with thy feet, and fouledst their rivers." Pharaoh was neither quiet in Egypt, nor would let others be quiet: he sent out his ambassadors to other nations, which were as his feet, they troubled the waters, the people, in drawing them into league with Pharaoh, in causing them to raise forces to assist him, and so fouled their rivers, unsettled their peace, troubled their spirits and countries. Whales are not more troublesome to the seas, crocodiles to the rivers of Egypt, lions and wild beasts to the land, than tyrants are to their own kingdoms, and those that are near unto them. Ahab was a troubler of Israel, 1 Kings xviii. 18; and of Judah also, in that he drew Jehoshaphat and his people to join with him to go up to Ramoth-gilead, where it had like to have cost him his life, 2 Chron. xviii. Solomon tells us, "He that is cruel will trouble his own flesh," Prov. xi. 17: tyrants are cruel, and they do trouble their own flesh, their own subjects and people; yea, and the flesh of strangers, they make their own rivers and others' to be muddy.

Ver. 3. "I will therefore spread out my net over thee." These words you had, chap. xvii. 20; xii. 13. A "net" is to catch birds or fish: here God represents the person of a fisherman, and would spread out his net to take this whale. The word for "net" is רֶשֶׁת from יָרַשׁ to possess, retain, because a net keeps what it catcheth; and rete some derive from retinendo, from its holding and retaining. This "net" with which God would catch the whale, must be a great net; and so it was, for it was the Chaldean army, which was great, strong, and sufficient to spread over all the rivers of Egypt.

"With a company of many people." When lions or whales are to be taken, multitudes of people get together; and so here, multitudes of Chaldeans came to take this lion and whale.

"They shall bring thee up in my net." Thou liest in thy rivers and deep waters, thinking thyself safe, without the reach of any, but my net shall be so thrown as to encompass and catch thee, and these Chaldeans shall draw thee up out of thy Nilus, yea, out of thine Egypt.

Ver. 4. "Then will I leave thee upon the land," &c. When this great whale shall be drawn out of his waters and country, God will deal by him as fishermen do by the whale; drawn to the shore, they leave him upon the dry ground in open view, exposed to the fowls of heaven and beasts of the earth; they cut him in pieces, whereof some are carried away, others are thrown here and there: so God dealt with Pharaoh, he brought him to open shame and ruin: he made him and his wealth a prey to all sorts of people. Like unto this verse is that you had, chap. xxix. 5.

Ver. 5. "I will lay thy flesh upon the mountains." Thou, or thy soldiers, being overcome, some of you will flee to the mountains for relief; but even there shall they be destitute of help, they shall be slain on the mountains.

"And fill the valleys with thy height." I will make such a slaughter of thy men, as that they shall fill up the valleys, the bodies shall lie so thick one upon another as to make a height. Munster interprets it of the swelling of the bodies; dead bodies do swell much, and increase height. The Vulgate reads the words thus, I will fill thy hills with the corruption which flows from the dead bodies.

Ver. 6. "I will also water with thy blood the land wherein thou swimmest." When Nilus overflowed, then Egypt was full of water, so that this whale might swim up and down in the same. God would cause such a destruction to be among the Egyptians, that there should be a river of blood, which should water the land. Hereby is set out the great abundance of blood that should be shed in Egypt, the land was made drunk with it.

"Even to the mountains; and the rivers shall be full of thee." Not only the lower places should be filled with the blood of the slain, but it should reach to the mountains, and run into the rivers. Sanctius thinks this not to be verified in Egypt, where were no mountains, but in some other place where the Egyptians were drawn out to fight.

Obs. 1. That because kings keep not within their bounds, but are troublesome to their own people and others, therefore the Lord destroys them and their kingdoms. "Thou camest forth with thy rivers, and troubledst the waters with thy feet, and fouledst their rivers; I will therefore spread out my net over thee." The ruin of princes and states are no casual things, they are effected by the counsel, providence, and power of God, punishing them most justly for their sins.

Obs. 2. God hath his nets to catch whales and great fish in. "I will spread out my net over thee." It is not every net will catch whales and great fish, they will break ordinary nets; but God hath nets to take them, he wants not means to bring the mightiest unto punishment. Pharaoh was a lion, a dragon, a crocodile, a whale, and God had a net in the north, the Babylonish army, which he sent for, and caught this Egyptian whale with. God had a net to catch that old whale and sea-monster, who devoured so many of the Israelites' children; he made a net of the waters, and not only caught Pharaoh, but drowned that whale in the Red sea.

Obs. 3. God designs the place of tyrants' suffering, and divides the spoil of them to whom he pleases. "I will leave thee upon the land, I will cast thee forth upon the open field, and will cause all the fowls of the heaven to remain upon thee, and I will fill the beasts of the whole earth with thee." God drew this whale out of his waters, unto the place where he and all the fish which adhered unto him were slain, and made a spoil to all sorts of people.

Obs. 4. When God is in a way of judgment with wicked princes, sometimes he shows exceeding great severity towards them and theirs. "I will lay thy flesh upon the mountains, and fill the valleys with thy height;" thou and thine shall be slain in all places, no safety in the mountains or valleys. "I will also water with thy blood the land wherein thou swimmest;" their blood should be so shed as to make the land drunk with it.

Ver. 7. "And when I shall put thee out, I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark." Here the prophet comes to show the events of this dreadful and severe judgment of God: "When I shall put thee out," because to show in thine extinction: כָּכָה notes such a putting out, as is of fire or a candle. When God should extinguish Pharaoh's life, then should there be no quiet, peace, joy, safety, but altogether sighing, weeping, complaining, howling, and sad lamentations; so great should be the grief and misery of the Egyptians, that all things should seem dark unto them. In extreme sorrows the sight has failed, and persons think the day to be night, are destitute of counsel, and know not which way to turn them. It is usual in Scripture to set out times of mourning and misery by such expressions as you have here and in the following verse, as Joel iii. 15; Isa. xlii. 10; Mark xiii. 24, 25; Luke xxi. 25; Amos viii. 9.

"I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light." God hath the power over the clouds, and he can call them forth at his pleasure to do him what service he please: he would keep the comfortable beams of the sun and moon from them; they had darkness on every side, the very heavens, sun, moon, and stars, hid their faces from them.

Ver. 8. "All the bright lights of heaven will I make dark over thee." The Hebrew is, All the lights of light; they should have no benefit by these bright and shining lights of heaven. Mourners use to cover their heads and faces, and so the lights of heaven are as darkness unto them; or, they shall seem affected with the sore judgments which are upon thee. The Vulgate is, Omnia luminaria celi murrere faciam super te, I will make all the lights of heaven to mourn over thee.

"And set darkness upon thy land." Darkness is frequently in the word used for affliction and grief, a sad condition; and God would set Egypt, yea, settle it, under darkness, it should be kept in a mourning and miserable condition.

Ver. 9. "I will also vex the hearts of many people." The word for to "vex" is, כָּעַס which signifies not only, to move to anger, but also, to grieve. When the people should hear how Pharaoh, a great king, was conquered, and his kingdom laid utterly waste, this would grieve and vex them; and especially when they consider how great Nebuchadnezzar became hereby, having all Egypt and the adjacent parts under him.

"When I shall bring thy destruction among the nations." The word for "thy destruction" is, שִׁבְרֶךָ thy breaking; for which the Septuagint hath, thy captivity. The nations thought Egypt impossible to be totally broken and ruined, being fortified so with cities, rivers, and the sea. The news of its "destruction" would vex them to the heart.

Ver. 10. "Yea, I will make many people amazed at thee." When God's dealings with Pharaoh, his severe judgments upon him and his, came abroad among the people, they were amazed, not knowing what to think, speak, or do. When strange and dreadful things come suddenly to us, they surprise our judgments, and we are at a stand.

"And their kings shall be horribly afraid for thee." The people should be amazed, and the kings afraid. Chap. xxx. 4. "The sword shall come upon Egypt, and great pain shall be in Ethiopia;" so in Libya, Lydia, and Chub, they and their king should be horribly afraid. The word, to fear, is, פָּחַד which notes great fear, even such fear as makes the hair to stand up; and the word is double here, they shall fear with a fear, be exceedingly afraid, for Nebuchadnezzar's prevailing over Pharaoh. When the great whale is taken, the lesser fishes have cause to fear.

"When I shall brandish my sword before them." The Hebrew is, כְּעֹפֵי הַרְבִּי when I shall cause my sword to fly before them; that is, in military language, "when I shall brandish my sword before them." When Nebuchadnezzar came with his forces to Egypt, at the appointment of God, and subdued it, then he brandished his sword before them.

"And they shall tremble at every moment." These words we had in chap. xxvi. 16, where they were opened. They shall be in a continued fear, trembling from day to day lest Nebuchadnezzar should fall upon them, and bring them to Pharaoh's condition.

"Every man for his own life, in the day of thy fall." When the sword is abroad, men's lives are at stake, and when it hath shed so much blood as to water a land, to fill up valleys, and make it reach to mountains, who would not fear lest his life and blood go next? When a great king and kingdom fall by the sword, it is matter sufficient to make neighbouring kings and kingdoms to fear themselves.

Obs. 1. Great ones are lights in the world, and God extinguisheth those lights at his pleasure. "When I shall put thee out." Princes and great ones are examples which most follow, beacons upon a hill, suns in their orbs, which many admire and follow, though they light them downward towards the pit of darkness: these are such great lights, that men dare not snuff, reprove them, but God extinguisheth them; he lighted them up, and he puts them out.

Obs. 2. When God puts out great lights, breaks the candlesticks they stood in, that is, destroys great kings and their kingdoms, then sad events do follow, then the living and senseless creatures are troubled, heaven and earth affected, those near, and those far off, disquieted. Dreadful judgments have dismal consequences. When God destroyed Pharaoh and his army, laid waste Egypt, then darkness was upon the heavens, sun, moon, and stars, then darkness was upon the land, then the hearts of many were vexed, then kings were horribly afraid, and quaked every moment for fear of their kingdoms and lives. When lions and whales are caught and killed, it makes the other beasts and fish to fear; when the high cedars fall, all the other trees tremble.

Ver. 11—16. For thus saith the Lord God; The sword of the king of Babylon shall come upon thee. By the swords of the mighty will I cause thy multitude to fall, the terrible of the nations, all of them; and they shall spoil the pomp of Egypt, and all the multitude thereof shall be destroyed. I will destroy also all the beasts thereof from beside the great waters; neither shall the foot of man trouble them any more, nor the hoofs of beasts trouble them. Then will I make their waters deep, and cause their rivers to run like oil, saith the Lord God. When I shall make the land of Egypt desolate, and the country shall be destitute of that whereof it was full, when I shall smite all them that dwell therein, then shall they know that I am the Lord. This is the lamentation wherewith they shall lament her; the daughters of the nations shall lament her; they shall lament for her, even for Egypt, and for all her multitude, saith the Lord God.

These verses belong to the first prophecy in this chapter, and they set out,

I. The instruments God used in executing the judgments threatened against Pharaoh and the Egyptians, ver. 11, 12.

II. The facts of these instruments, the king of Babylon and his army, ver. 12, 13.

III. The events following, ver. 14, 15.

IV. The conclusion of the prophecy, ver. 16.

Ver. 11. "The sword of the king of Babylon shall come upon thee." I will stir up and bring the king of Babylon with a great army, who shall come furnished with all military preparations against thee, and cut thee off.

Ver. 12. "By the swords of the mighty will I cause thy multitude to fall." The word for "mighty" is גִּבּוֹר and gibbor signifies properly, a strong and brave soldier, saith Drusius. The Septuagint has it here, γίγαντες, by the sword of the giants; Egypt had multitudes, but they should fall by the power of these mighty and giant-like men.

"The terrible of the nations, all of them." This expression, "the terrible of the nations," we had thrice before, chap. xxviii. 7; xxx. 11; xxxi. 12. Those men who were most barbarous and bloody, tyrannical and pestilential, should be employed in his work. The Septuagint calls them λοιμοί, such as were the plagues of the country, such as went up and down robbing, stealing, and murdering.

"And they shall spoil the pomp of Egypt." There is pomp in titles, pomp in buildings, pomp in feasting and furniture of houses, pomp in apparel, pomp in funerals, pomp in worships, pomp in multitudes of men, horses, and chariots; whatever the Egyptian pomp were, it should be spoiled. Vatablus interprets their pomp to be their dignity, or beautiful things; Munster makes it, their state and greatness; Junius makes it, the excellency of Egypt, that is, kingly majesty, with all the glory and greatness attending the same.

Ver. 13. "I will destroy also all the beasts thereof from beside the great waters." Egypt abounded with cattle, especially horses, which were serviceable for war and other uses; those fed near to the rivers cut out of Nilus to water the land. What beasts soever they were, God, by the Chaldeans, would destroy them, and they should not be any longer nigh the many waters; so is the Hebrew.

"Neither shall the foot of man trouble them any more, nor the hoofs of beasts trouble them." The destruction should be so great, that man and beast should be cut off, as was said, chap. xxix. 8. These oft troubled the waters with their feet and hoofs, the one with digging, the other by trampling in them.

Ver. 14. "Then will I make their waters deep, and cause their rivers to run like oil." Man and beast being taken away, nothing shall trouble the waters, but they shall be quiet, clear, and smooth as oil. The Hebrew word for, to make deep, is, שָׁקַח shakah, to be drowned, to sink, I will cause their waters to go to the bottom; which Piscator interprets of the mud, wherewith they had been troubled, that should sink, and the waters become pure. The Septuagint, I will make quiet their waters. When they are clean and quiet, they run without noise, then they are like oil; the waters of Egypt, and of other nations whom the Egyptians troubled.

Ver. 15. "When I shall make the land of Egypt desolate, and the country shall be destitute." He shows when the waters shall be pure and quiet, even when the land is made desolate; Hebrew is, a desolation; and all carried away with which the countries abounded; Hebrew is, shall be destitute of its fulness.

"When I shall smite all them that dwell therein." All were not smitten by the sword, and destroyed, but some were carried away captives, and that was a smiting.

Ver. 16. "This is the lamentation wherewith they shall lament her." This prophecy which I have delivered, is the lamentation wherewith Egypt shall be lamented; not only I, Ezekiel, must lament for her, but all nations shall do it.

"The daughters of the nations shall lament her: they shall lament for her." The cities and people of the nations, hearing of the dreadful judgments of God upon Egypt, that that populous, strong, and flourishing kingdom is brought to utter ruin and desolation, they shall be affected therewith, and lament her condition.

Obs. 1. God makes use of the king and people of one nation to execute his judgments upon the king and people of another nation. "The sword of the king of Babylon shall come upon thee, and by the swords of the mighty will I cause thy multitude to fall." Kings and their people are at the disposal of God, to call out and employ where and in what service he pleases: he serves himself, fulfils his wills and counsels, by kings and great ones, overthrowing one kingdom by another, laying all their pomp and glory in the dust.

Obs. 2. The sins of kings and people cause God to execute his sore judgments, not only upon themselves, but also upon the brute creatures and things inanimate. God would not only destroy Pharaoh and his multitude, but the beasts, the cities, and all the fulness of the land; in the destruction of these, God punished the owners.

Obs. 3. By the destruction of tyrants and their kingdoms, God quiets nations; they by their power, counsels, or agents, trouble their own kingdoms, and others. "Then will I make their waters deep, and cause their rivers to run like oil: when I shall make the land of Egypt desolate." When Pharaoh and his host were cut off, they should trouble the waters no more at home nor abroad, all should be quiet, peaceable.

Obs. 4. God, in his wise providence, so orders his judgments, that they shall affect others, and be had in remembrance. "This is the lamentation wherewith they shall lament her: the daughters of the nations shall lament her." Destruction of great kings and kingdoms have many things considerable in them; there is much of God's power, justice, and severity in the same, which God will have to be observed and remembered in the world. Chap. xix. 14, when God destroyed the princes of Israel, and laid the land of Judah waste, what then? "This is a lamentation, and shall be for a lamentation."

Ver. 17—23. It came to pass also in the twelfth year, in the fifteenth day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, wail for the multitude of Egypt, and cast them down, even her, and the daughters of the famous nations, unto the nether parts of the earth, with them that go down into the pit. Whom dost thou pass in beauty? go down, and be thou laid with the uncircumcised. They shall fall in the midst of them that are slain by the sword: she is delivered to the sword: draw her and all her multitudes. The strong among the mighty shall speak to him out of the midst of hell with them that help him: they are gone down, they lie uncircumcised, slain by the sword. Asshur is there and all her company: his graves are about him: all of them slain, fallen by the sword: whose graves are set in the sides of the pit, and her company is round about her grave: all of them slain, fallen by the sword, which caused terror in the land of the living.

At this 17th verse begins the second prophecy, and general part of the chapter, in which these things are considerable:

I. The time of this prophecy, ver. 17.

II. The funeral of Egypt, with the solemnity thereof, which is commanded, declared, and confirmed, ver. 18—21, and so on to ver. 31.

III. The conclusion of the prophecy, ver. 31, 32.

Ver. 17. "In the twelfth year, in the fifteenth day of the month." It was in the twelfth year of their captivity, and the fifteenth day of the twelfth month, as it is, ver. 1, fourteen days after the former prophecy, and upon the third sabbath, as Junius observes; then came this prophecy unto Ezekiel.

Ver. 18. "Wail for the multitude of Egypt." The word נָחַם to lament, signifies internal grief. The prophet is bid not to feign a grief, or a funeral complaint, but to be real, to mourn or to prophesy what mourning should be at the funeral of Egypt.

"Cast them down, even her, and the daughters of the famous nations." The prophet was to do this prophetically, as Jeremiah was to root out, pull down, to destroy and cast down, Jer. i. 10. He prophesied such things, and thereupon was said to do them; and so Ezekiel was to prophesy the casting down of Egypt, her king and people, "and the daughters of famous nations," those that did confederate with her, cities or people; and because of this, he is said to "cast them down." It is God's work to cast down, to throw into the grave and pit, but his prophets declaring what shall be, are said to do the same.

"Unto the nether parts of the earth." The Hebrew is, into the land of hell, or into the lowest part of the earth.

Ver. 19. "Whom dost thou pass in beauty?" Egypt, thou thinkest thyself more beautiful than other nations, that thou hast some excellency beyond them: suppose thou hadst, that must not exempt thee from the common condition of nations: but thou hast not any beauty, excellency beyond them, nay, thou art short of them, therefore lay aside such thoughts; they who were more beautiful and pleasant than thyself, they are gone down into the pit; therefore "Go down, and be thou laid with the uncircumcised." Thou must not look for any privilege above other nations; thou mayest conceit thy counterfeit circumcision will advantage thee, but thou art deceived; away down to the grave, and lie with the uncircumcised, thy portion must be with the profane. The word for "be thou laid," signifies, to sleep, also, and may be thus rendered, Sleep with the uncircumcised.

Ver. 20. "They shall fall in the midst of them that are slain by the sword." They that were confederate with thee, and thou with them, shall fall by the Chaldean sword, which hath commission to cut you all off, and to send you to the state of those that formerly were slain by the sword; you think yourself invulnerable, but you shall find the points of the Chaldeans' swords are sharp, and will enter.

"She is delivered to the sword." Egypt, or the multitude of Egypt, is delivered to the sword, appointed to be slain. The Hebrew may be rendered thus, The sword is delivered, or given, viz. into the hand of the Babylonian, to destroy the Egyptian withal.

"Draw her and all her multitudes." "Draw her," Egypt and her people, into the grave: the Babylonians slay her and hers, the sword is in their hand, and then drag them into the pit. But these, and the former words, may be taken otherwise, as, to note out the stately funeral of Egypt. "She is delivered to the sword," or, the sword is laid under her head, or by her side, to show that she was warlike. "Draw her, and all her multitudes;" let her body, Vide Junium. being put into a chariot, be drawn in pomp and state, like unto the bodies of great ones.

Obs. 1. God made known his mind to his prophets by degrees; something they had in one year given out, somewhat in another year; sometimes in one month, sometimes in another, God spake unto them. Here in the twelfth year, the fifteenth day of the month, the word of the Lord came unto Ezekiel: God had appeared to him the first day, and again the fifteenth day.

Obs. 2. There are seasons to mourn in, as well as to rejoice in. "Son of man, wail for the multitude of Egypt." The providence of God doth not act constantly in one way, but it makes changes and alterations, which afford occasion to mourn and to laugh. When God carried the Jews into Babylon, there they hung up their harps and wept, Psal. cxxxvii.; and when he brought them back again, it was with singing, Isa. xlviii. 20.

Obs. 3. That at the appointment of God we may lament for the sins and judgments of God upon the church's enemies, secret or open. The Egyptians were never real friends to the Jews, but were their secret, if not their open enemies; and now, when God's hand was heavy upon them for their sins, the prophet is commanded to wail for them. When the church's enemies suffer, we are to rejoice; but if God calls to mourning for their sufferings, we must do it.

Obs. 4. The greatest in the greatest kingdoms have no cause to glory and lift up themselves above others, seeing they must come to the common condition of all, even to the pit and grave. The king of Egypt, with his princes, nobles, and confederates of famous nations, must come down to the nether parts of the earth. Egypt was a potent, flourishing kingdom, Pharaoh mighty, but "whom dost thou pass in beauty?" thy beauty, glory, strength, wealth, greatness, are nothing, thou must go down and lie with the uncircumcised. In a moment, at the beck of the Lord, kingdoms are made desolate, kings cast into the grave, and all their pomp buried in the dark: let none despise others, and exalt themselves.

Ver. 21. "The strong among the mighty shall speak to him out of the midst of hell." Here, and so on, the prophet, by a figure call'd prosopopeia, represents unto us what entertainment Pharaoh should have among the dead. The tyrants, and great men of the world, that were in the grave, or hell, before, shall speak unto him, and congratulate his coming unto them in a taunting way: What Pharaoh! hast thou, who wert so great and glorious, left the earth? art thou come to us weak and wounded, stripped of all, and art become like us? Thou art welcome to hell, and the condition we tyrants are in; be not troubled, here are many great ones before thee, both of the uncircumcised nations, and also of the circumcised.

"With them that help him." They should speak to him and those who were his helpers. Pharaoh had many helpers to carry on his designs on earth, many confederates, and they should be welcomed to hell also.

"They are gone down, they lie uncircumcised, slain by the sword." The Egyptians they are gone down to the grave, they lie or sleep with the uncircumcised, or are in no better condition than uncircumcised ones are in, being slain with the sword. These words may be understood of other nations.

Ver. 22. "Asshur is there and all her company." Here the prophet begins the enumeration of particular nations, whose kings and people were gone to hell beforehand, and would give entertainment to Pharaoh. The first he mentioned is Asshur; the Assyrian monarch was the most ancient, of great power and extent, and the king thereof was in hell, and all the Assyrian company, all his attendants and followers.

"His graves are about him." The king of Assyria is gone down to the grave, and so are his princes, nobles, and people which were slain by the sword; they are in their graves near unto him, round about him, and these will speak to Pharaoh at his coming into the grave or hell.

Ver. 23. "Whose graves are set in the sides of the pit." The Vulgate reads the words thus, whose graves are in the bottom of the lake; importing that they fell from the height of honour into the depth of misery.

"Which caused terror in the land of the living." When the Assyrians were destroyed by the Chaldean or Babylonish sword, it was dreadful to those that were living; or thus: these Assyrians while they were in the land of the living, they caused terror, they were tyrannical, cruel, and filled all with fear. Some restrain "the land of the living" only to Judea, because there the Jews only worshipped the living God, and those who were right amongst them were to enjoy the living God eternally; but we may take "the land of the living" here in opposition to the state of the dead, and so other lands are included, yea, all where are any living.

Ver. 24, 25. There is Elam and all her multitude round about her grave, all of them slain, fallen by the sword, which are gone down uncircumcised into the nether parts of the earth, which caused their terror in the land of the living; yet have they borne their shame with them that go down to the pit. They have set her a bed in the midst of the slain with all her multitude: her graves are round about him: all of them uncircumcised, slain by the sword: though their terror was caused in the land of the living, yet have they borne their shame with them that go down to the pit: he is put in the midst of them that be slain.

The Elamites were the Persians and Medes, and what he said of Asshur, that he now saith of Elam. The king of the Medes and Persians, with his multitude, who living were terrible unto many, were now in hell ready to give entertainment to Pharaoh who was coming thither. Of Elam you may read Jer. xlix. 34, to the end of the chapter.

Ver. 24. "Yet have they borne their shame with them that go down to the pit." They were tyrannical, and so a terror to others; but they were cut off by the Scythians, saith Polanus, and carried the shame of their tyranny and wickedness with them, or they died ignominiously.

Ver. 25. "They have set her a bed in the midst of the slain with all her multitude." When great ones remove, preparations are made for them whither they remove; so here, even in the grave and hell a bed was provided for Elam. In the bed is darkness and rest; such was the grave, vault, or sepulchre of Elam. In this verse there is an enallagy of genders and numbers.

Ver. 26—28. There is Meshech, Tubal, and all her multitude: her graves are round about him: all of them uncircumcised, slain by the sword, though they caused their terror in the land of the living. And they shall not lie with the mighty that are fallen of the uncircumcised, which are gone down to hell with their weapons of war: and they have laid their swords under their heads, but their iniquities shall be upon their bones, though they were the terror of the mighty in the land of the living. Yea, thou shalt be broken in the midst of the uncircumcised, and shalt lie with them that are slain with the sword.

Here the prophet brings in a third kind of examples, which are Meshech and Tubal.

Ver. 26. "There is Meshech, Tubal, and all her multitude." By "Meshech," some expositors understand the Scythians, others the Cappadocians; and by Tubal, the Iberians and Albanians, which were near together, and both of them in the eastern parts. All these may be understood: for the Scythians passing through Cappadocia, Iberia, and Albania, had many of those countries joining with them, when they brake into Asia, between Pontus and the Caspian sea, and so plagued the Elamites. The kings of these places were not yet slain, and gone down to the pit, though the words import it done, because of the certainty of it; but it was near at hand, and to be effected before the death of Pharaoh, whom they were to speak unto at his coming down to the grave.

"Her graves are round about him," &c. The graves of the men of each country were round about the king of that country; they were people uncircumcised, out of covenant with God, slain by the sword, notwithstanding they were terrible to others.

Ver. 27. "And they shall not lie with the mighty that are fallen of the uncircumcised, which are gone down to hell with their weapons of war." Among the heathens and uncircumcised there were some mighty men which did notable exploits, were famous in their generations, and died honourably in the battle or of their wounds; these had pompous and great funerals, and were buried with their armour; they died honourably, and their honour went with them to the grave, but these should not be reckoned or laid amongst them.

"And they have laid their swords under their heads." When soldiers of note died, the custom was to honour them with laying their swords under their heads, or by their heads; and not only so, but they used to bury them with their arms. Lavater tells us that Giraldus, in a book he hath written of sepulchres and several rites of burying, saith, he saw arms and boots found in old monuments or sepulchres.

"But their iniquities shall be upon their bones." By "iniquities" is meant the punishment of iniquities. Their bones shall be scattered upon the earth for their tyranny and cruelty which they have exercised, and be exposed to the beasts and fowls for a prey; so "their iniquities shall be upon their bones." Or thus; they had their swords and arms go down with them to the grave, instruments of cruelty and blood, signifying that they carried their bloody and tyrannical dispositions with them. "And their iniquities shall be upon their bones." They shall suffer now they are dead and gone a full recompence of reward for all their sins. Or thus; they lived wickedly, and died cowardly, and an ill name shall they leave behind them, cursed shall be their memory.

Ver. 28. "Yea, thou shalt be broken in the midst of the uncircumcised, and shalt lie with them that are slain with the sword." Some interpret this verse of Meshech and Tubal, that they should be broken in pieces, but rather it is the application of the former examples instanced in, viz. Meshech and Tubal, unto Pharaoh. Thou shalt be broken, and become a companion of the uncircumcised, suffering such things as they do; thou shalt be equal to them in punishment, who hast not been behind them in sin.

Ver. 29. There is Edom, her kings, and all her princes, which with their might are laid by them that were slain by the sword: they shall lie with the uncircumcised, and with them that go down to the pit.

Esau the son of Isaac was called Edom, who gave that name to the country called Idumea, which had many kings and princes: they were circumcised, being the posterity of Abraham, but notwithstanding their circumcision, being wicked, they obtained nothing thereby; neither that, nor their might and power, stood them in any stead, but they went down to the pit, and had the portion of uncircumcised ones. Here the prophet answers an objection which the Egyptians might make, which was this: We are circumcised, and in that are like the Jews, a holy people, differing from the nations; and therefore we look for some privilege thereby, and cannot be persuaded that our condition shall be like unto the uncircumcised nations. Yes, saith the prophet, your condition will not differ at all from theirs; for the kings and all the princes of Idumea, who came of the Jewish race, and had circumcision upon better grounds than you had it, they are dead, gone to the grave, and laid among the uncircumcised.

Ver. 30. There be the princes of the north, all of them, and all the Zidonians, which are gone down with the slain; with their terror they are ashamed of their might; and they lie uncircumcised with them that be slain by the sword, and bear their shame with them that go down to the pit.

The word for "princes" in Hebrew is, מְשִׁיבִים men anointed with oil; so kings and princes were. These princes of the north were not the Babylonians, whom God used to execute his pleasure upon Pharaoh and the Egyptians; but the Tyrians, those of Damascus and Syria, together with the Zidonians. The princes of those places were north to Egypt, and being men of might, they were a terror unto others; but their might could not preserve them from death; they were therefore ashamed of their might, and are laid with the uncircumcised in the pit.

Obs. 1. That tyrants in hell are glad when other tyrants like themselves come thither. "The strong among the mighty shall speak to him out of the midst of hell." When some great man comes to court, there is rising, complimenting, and welcoming of him thither; so when great tyrants come to the court of hell, there are those who rejoice at it, and congratulate their coming.

Obs. 2. No human power can defend a man against death, or keep him out of the pit. Princes have the greatest power, yet that prevailed not; the strong and mighty who were terrors to others, were no terrors to death, who came and plucked them out of their armies, thrones, castles, greatness, and sent them down to the dead. "Asshur is there and all her company: there is Elam and all her multitude; there is Meshech, Tubal, and all her multitude; there is Edom, her kings, and all her princes; there be the princes of the north all of them, and all the Zidonians;" none of them all could exempt themselves from that condition: it is not policy, power, or greatness, can do it; for the most wise, most powerful, and most great God hath said, Eccles. viii. 8, "There is no man hath power over the spirit to retain the spirit; neither hath he power in the day of death: and there is no discharge in that war, neither shall wickedness deliver those that are given to it." Kings are strong, but death is stronger than they. Kings may make war with men and conquer, or conclude peace; but it is not so with death; if they send out all their forces, death fears them not, but will slay them every one; if they send men to treat and make a peace, it will not be granted, there is no discharge in that war; death will have the bones and carcases of princes to gnaw upon, as well as the meanest; those that have been terrors, made a great noise in the world, death hath tamed and quieted them.

Obs. 3. The great and most go the wrong way, and have the portion of God's enemies. Kings and princes of countries with their companies and multitudes go to hell, and lie with the uncircumcised. Asshur, Elam, Meshech, Tubal, Edom, with their kings and people, all the princes of the north, with the Zidonians, and those that belonged to them, went thither, and had the reward of the uncircumcised, of such as God owned not for his people, but dealt with as enemies. Some there be that die the death of the righteous, Numb. xxiii. 10, that die in faith, Heb. xi. 13, and in the Lord, Rev. xiv. 13; and these are blessed, their death is precious in the eyes of the Lord, Psal. cxvi. 15; but as for others, they die in their sins, and are accursed.

Obs. 4. Mighty men who have ruffled it in the world, been dreadful unto others, and go down to the grave in pomp, or not, shall afterward bear their shame and sin. The mighty ones of Asshur, of Elam, of Meshech, Tubal, Edom, those of the north, and Zidon, who were a terror in the land of the living, some of them were buried in pomp, they went down to hell with their weapons of war, and they had their swords laid under their heads; others had no funerals, or no pomp at them; but they all did bear their shame, and their iniquities were upon their bones; they lived wickedly, oppressed grievously, played the devils on the earth; they bare their shame, and God punished them for their iniquities. Tyrants are feared and honoured as gods while they live, but being dead, their names do stink, and their torments are terrible, proportioned to the power they have abused, and mischief done by them.

Obs. 5. External privileges profit not princes nor people; unless they be godly, they must perish like those that want those privileges. The Edomites were circumcised, which was a great privilege in Paul's account, Phil. iii. 5, a sign of the covenant between God and his people, Gen. xvii. 11; but because they and their princes were wicked, circumcision profited them not, they were laid with the uncircumcised, they had no more favour from the hand of the Lord than his worst enemies, than those that were out of covenant, and open enemies unto him. Let men take heed how they rest upon their privileges and professions: it is not baptism, being in a church, enjoying of ordinances, having of gifts, high notions, and admirable expressions, will advantage men or women at last; unless they be really godly a thousand such privileges will do them no good: Gal. vi. 15, "In Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature."

Ver. 31, 32. Pharaoh shall see them, and shall be comforted over all his multitude, even Pharaoh and all his army slain by the sword, saith the Lord God. For I have caused my terror in the land of the living; and ye shall be laid in the midst of the uncircumcised with them that are slain with the sword, even Pharaoh and all his multitude, saith the Lord God.

In these two verses is the conclusion of this prophecy, lamentation, or funeral of Pharaoh and the Egyptians; which is the comfort he shall have amongst those mighty men and princes before mentioned; and this is in ver. 31: and then the end of God's judgments upon kings and people, ver. 32.

Ver. 31. "Pharaoh shall see them, and shall be comforted." When Pharaoh shall come to hell or the grave, and see what kings, princes, and multitudes of people are there suffering such things as himself must, this shall comfort him that he hath such companions, and so many. To lose his life, kingdom, and people, were sad things, bitter afflictions; but when he saw others had done so before him, and they as great as himself, this was as a cordial unto him.

"Pharaoh and all his army slain by the sword." Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came shortly after this prophecy against him and the Egyptians, and made a great slaughter amongst them, cutting off man and beast from the land, as was said, chap. xxix. 11.

Ver. 32. "For I have caused my terror in the land of the living." Junius reads the words, when I shall put my terror; Montanus, because I have put my breaking in the land of the living, a preter tense for a future. The sense is this; When I shall cut off Pharaoh and his army by the Babylonish sword, this judgment of mine upon them will cause terror in the nations that are living, they will be afraid of my judgments. Pharaoh made them afraid by his wars, and I shall make them afraid by my judgments.

Obs. 1. The comfort that wicked ones have after death in hell is poor comfort, it is imaginary comfort rather than real. What comfort is it to see many in prison, in torment, suffering proportionable punishment for their iniquities? "Pharaoh shall see them, and shall be comforted;" he shall see the kings of several countries there, the great tyrants of the world, and shall be punished like unto them; his comfort was in conceit, but his punishment in reality. Polanus calls it crudelis solatium, cruel comfort. For a king to be in fire and brimstone with other kings, people to be weeping and gnashing of their teeth with others, is cold and cruel comfort. Many flatter themselves, that if they do go to hell, they shall have companions there, which will be some ease; but it rather will aggravate their misery to hear their dreadful howling and yellings, their cursing one another that ever they knew each other.

Obs. 2. God cuts off kings and nations by his just judgments, that he might strike fear into the living, cause them to cease from sin, and learn righteousness. When Pharaoh and all his army were slain by the sword, then the Lord sent his terror in the land of the living, then the nations far and nigh trembled at the severe judgments of the Lord. Such judgments are awakening things, and call aloud to the inhabitants of the earth to repent and reform their ways.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Ver. 1—6. Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, speak to the children of thy people, and say unto them, When I bring the sword upon a land, if the people of the land take a man of their coasts, and set him for their watchman: if when he seeth the sword come upon the land, he blow the trumpet, and warn the people; then whosoever heareth the sound of the trumpet, and taketh not warning; if the sword come, and take him away, his blood shall be upon his own head. He heard the sound of the trumpet, and took not warning; his blood shall be upon him. But he that taketh warning shall deliver his soul. But if the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come, and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand.

OUR prophet having finished his prophecy against the nations in eight chapters, xxv.—xxxii. which was the second general part of his whole prophecy: comes here again to prophesy unto the Jews, and begins the third general part of his prophecy, which extends to the end of chap. xxxix.

In this chapter are these things laid down:

I. A renovation of the prophet's call to his office, with the description thereof, ver. 1—9.

II. A confirmation of the prophet against the calumnies of the Jews, ver. 10—20.

III. A denunciation of judgment against those that were not smitten at the taking of Jerusalem, ver. 21—29.

IV. A reproof of those that were captives in Babylon for their hypocrisy and covetousness, ver. 30, to the end.

Ver. 1, 2. "Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, speak to the children of thy people." Ezekiel being taken off by the Lord from prophesying to the Jews, chap. xxiv. 27, he was employed two years and upwards in prophesying to other nations, as appears by comparing chap. xxiv. 1, with chap. xxxii. 1; and having done with them, here he is commissioned again to prophesy to the Jews: "Son of man, speak unto thy people;" cease now to speak any more to the nations which are strangers to thee, and speak to thine own people, to the Jews, which are of the same root, stock, and kindred with thyself. The Hebrew is, to the sons of thy people. It is observable God saith not, to the children of my people, or, to the Jews, but, to thy people; God did disown them, they were so stubborn and disobedient that he would not acknowledge them for his. Oft in this prophecy they are called Ezekiel's people, chap. iii. 11; xiii. 17; and four times in this chapter, in ver. 2, 12, 17, 30; in all these verses it is "the children of thy people." When the Jews sinned that grievous sin in making the calf, God disowned them, and said to Moses, "Go, get thee down, for thy people have corrupted themselves," Exod. xxxii. 7. Sin makes breaches between the nearest relations, and causes God to disown his own people, and his own institutions; Isa. i. 14, "Your new moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth."

"When I bring the sword upon a land." By "sword" is meant war, and the evils which do attend it, as chap. vi. 3; xiv. 17; xxix. 8; xxx. 4; xxxii. 11. The Hebrew is thus, A land when I shall bring upon it the sword: here is a nominative case, viz. ארץ put absolute; and Sanctius saith, when a pronoun follows, that nominative must be put in the place and case of the pronoun, as our translation hath done, saying, I will bring a sword (not upon it, but) upon the land. "Land" is not put for Judea, but indefinitely for any land.

"If the people of the land take a man of their coasts, and set him for their watchman." When a land is in danger of being invaded, the people's care is to choose out one or other to set him in some eminent place for a watchman. Montanus and the Vulgate render the word מפקדוּת they take one of the lowest and meanest rank; but קצה notes the border and extreme part of a land, or any other thing. It is better as our translation hath it, "a man of their coasts" or borders, where the enemy was like to make his first approach.

"A watchman." Tzopheth is from צפה which is, accurately to observe, to open the eyes, and fixedly to behold an object, and take special notice thereof; so is a watchman to do. 2 Sam. xiii. 34, "The young man that kept the watch, lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold, there came much people:" he did not barely look, but lifted up his eyes and looked, he made an accurate observation. So 2 Sam. xviii. 24, "The watchman went up to the roof over the gate unto the wall, and lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold a man running alone;" he put forth himself to the utmost to make a discovery, his eyes were intent upon it.

Ver. 3. "If when he seeth the sword come upon the land," &c. This verse sets out the office of the watchman; which is,

I. To look diligently about him, whether there be any danger approaching, any enemy near at hand, coming to invade or make attempts against the land.

2. If so, he is to blow the trumpet presently, and to give warning thereof, stirring up all to procure public safety.

"He blow the trumpet." The Hebrew word to "blow" is, תָּקַע takah, which signifies, to fasten; but when it is joined with the word manus, it notes to strike the hand or strike hands, when with the word שָׁבַר a trumpet, it signifies, to blow; as 2 Sam. ii. 28, "Joab blew a trumpet;" so 1 Sam. xiii. 3, "Saul blew the trumpet;" and Joel ii. 1, "Blow ye the trumpet in Zion." Trumpets of old were made of the horns of beasts, of brass, and silver.

"And warn the people." The blowing of the trumpet was a warning to the people to look to themselves; but this warning was not only by the voice of the trumpet, but also by the voice of the watchman; for having blown the trumpet upon the discovery and approach of an enemy, the watchman was to shift for his life and liberty, by returning to his people, and so to call upon them to provide for public safety. The word in Hebrew for warning is, נָרַח which signifies, to shine, illuminate; and metaphorically, to warn, because when a man is warned, he is instructed, and hath light given in unto him.

Ver. 4. "Then whosoever heareth the sound of the trumpet, and taketh not warning; if the sword come, and take him away." Many are so taken up with the world, that though they hear of danger at hand, yet they will not hear, but venture so long that they are caught, the sword comes and takes them away. The Hebrew is, he that hearing heareth.

"His blood shall be upon his own head." He hath no cause to blame the watchman, he blew the trumpet and warned him, the fault is in himself, that he took not the warning, that he made not haste to secure his own life; he is guilty of his own death, and hath voluntarily brought it upon himself, the whole fault is his own; that is the meaning of this phrase, "his blood shall be upon him," or, upon his own head, which is frequent in Scripture. Josh. ii. 19, "It shall be, that whosoever goeth out of the doors of thy house into the street, his blood shall be upon his head, and we will be guiltless;" that is, he shall be guilty of his own death, not we. 1 Kings ii. 37, "On the day thou goest out, and passest over the brook Kidron, thou shalt surely die; thy blood shall be upon thine own head;" thou shalt be the cause of thine own death, not I, said Solomon to Shimei.

Ver. 5. "He heard the sound of the trumpet, and took not warning; his blood shall be upon him." Here the reason is given why he is guilty of his own death; because he was within the sound of the trumpet, he heard it, that proclaimed the danger was at hand, but he was secure, minding his profit or pleasure, and took not warning.

"But he that taketh warning shall deliver his soul." He that gives heed to the blowing of the trumpet, and presently hastens into the city, or flees for his life, he shall deliver his soul from the hands of the enemies coming, he shall be safe. The word for, to "deliver," is from נָצַח which signifies, to provide for oneself by flight, saith Avenarius; he doth so "deliver his soul," that is, himself, for "soul" here is put by a synecdoche for a man's self.

Ver. 6. "But if the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned." All watchmen are not faithful; some are sleepy and careless, they see not the sword coming; some are perfidious, they see it coming, but blow not the trumpet, they warn not the people; and what then?

"If the sword come, and take away any person from among them." That is, if any man being not warned by the watchman shall be surprised, and cut off, as frequently in such cases it is, his blood will lie upon the watchman. The Hebrew for "any person" is, a soul, if the sword come and take a soul from them.

"He is taken away in his iniquity." He is found in his sin, and is cut off for his sin. Most interpreters render the words, for his iniquity; he was wicked, and for his wickedness justly cut off.

"But his blood will I require at the watchman's hand." Here is the punishment laid down of an unfaithful watchman; through his sleepiness, negligence, or treachery, a soul is taken away, a man is slain by the adversary, who, if the watchman had given warning, might have lived; and therefore, because he did not, he is guilty of the man's blood, and must answer for it, at his hands will God require it.

Ver. 7—9. So thou, O son of man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and warn them from me. When I say unto the wicked, O wicked man, Thou shalt surely die; if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Nevertheless, if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it; if he do not turn from his way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul.

In these words the Lord applies the former simile of a political watchman unto the prophet; "So thou, O son of man," &c.; and these three verses are the same with the 17th, 18th, and 19th verses of the 3rd chapter of this prophecy.

Ver. 7. "I have set thee a watchman." I have given thee to be a watchman unto the house of Israel, that thou shouldst look about, search the Scriptures, find out what is evil, sinful, and what is the punishment due thereunto, what wrath God hath revealed from heaven against all unrighteousness, and tell the people thereof.

"Therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth." Thou must not speak of thine own head, or out of thine own heart, but thou must take all up from me; either what I have given out by Moses and other prophets already, or what I shall give out immediately to thyself. Thus Habakkuk did, chap. ii. 1, "I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and will watch to see what he will say unto me;" he would have the word from God's mouth.

"And warn them from me." Thou must not warn them in thine own name, but in my name, whose prophet thou art, whose words thou hast received, and who hath empowered thee to tell men of their sins and dangers.

Ver. 8. "When I say unto the wicked, O wicked man, thou shalt surely die." Where God says so is hard to find in all the book of God. You have not, "O wicked man, thou shalt surely die;" but in generals there is that which is equivalent; as, "The soul that sins shall die—The wicked shall be turned into hell—Upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest—and, The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all unrighteousness of men." These and such other places are tantamount.

“If thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way.” When the watchman sees a wicked man in a wicked way, as in a way of drunkenness, whoredom, idolatry, oppression, or any profaneness, he is to warn him, and tell him of the danger of his ways; if he, through fear or favour, ingenuity or carelessness, neglect to do it, the danger is great.

“That wicked man shall die in his iniquity.” The wicked man might object and say, Why should I die? I was never warned by the watchman; he saw me daily living in such courses, and had he told me the danger of them, I should have considered my ways and turned from them. This objection is answered: Thou art a wicked man, thou hast lived in iniquity, and now thou shalt die in and for thine iniquity; the light of nature, the dictates of thy conscience, the example of others, might have taught thee to have done otherwise: though the prophet have neglected his duty, thou shalt suffer for thy sins, and he for his.

“His blood will I require at thine hand.” I set thee to be a watchman over him, to observe his ways, to tell him of his sins, to invite and provoke him to repentance by promises of mercy and threatening of my judgments, that so he might have been saved; but because thou wast unfaithful, and didst not thy duty, he is lost, and his blood will I require at thy hands, and recompense it upon thy head.

Ver. 9. “Nevertheless, if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it.” If thou be faithful in thy place, and tell the wicked of his sins, calling upon him to turn from them unto me the living God; if this hath been thy care and practice, thou hast done well.

“He shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul.” Whatever befalls him, death temporal, or death eternal, thou hast freed thyself, and shalt not be responsive for him at all; his blood shall be upon his own head, and not upon thine.

Obs. 1. Wars come not upon any people casually, but by the providence of God. “When I bring the sword upon a land.” It is God calls out the sword, and causeth it to come; he is the Lord of hosts, and commissions armies to make invasions where he please.

Obs. 2. In case of common danger, the people have liberty and power to set up a political officer, for their good and safety. When the sword is coming upon the land, “if the people of the land take a man of their coasts, and set him up for their watchman.” God expects they should do it, and approves of it when done; they do not their duty, unless they do it; they must not stay till those in authority do it, the land may be invaded, many lose their lives upon that account; but it is their privilege, and in their power, presently to appoint a man who may discover danger, and give them notice of it. Every man is a part of the whole, and when that is endangered, every one is to put forth himself to the utmost for security thereof. The safety of the people is the supreme law.

Obs. 3. That in the ecclesiastic state it is God’s prerogative to set up offices and officers. “Son of man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel.” He might not set himself a watchman, nor the people set him to be one. I Cor. xii. 28, “God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.” In the political state, men may make what offices and officers they please; but in the ecclesiastic state it is not so. Man must not meddle; God only is the Author of all offices in the church extraordinary or ordinary, and no man ought to come into any of them without commission and direction from God; true ministers are to be called by the church according to God’s will, and not by the will of a state. The making of ministers is church work, and not state work.

Obs. 4. Those that are called to office by men or God, in state or church, they are watchmen. They must have eyes in their heads. lift up their eyes and look about them most diligently and conscientiously, lest any mischief come to the one or the other. They are to be men of understanding, especially the spiritual watchman, his lips must preserve knowledge, Mal. ii. 7. He is set to watch; sleepiness and drowsiness do not become him; there is great danger therein: Matt. xiii. 25, “While men slept, the enemy came and sowed tares;” whilst the watchman slept, the devil and his instruments took the opportunity and advantage to sow tares, errors, heresies, and damnable doctrines. Isa. lvi. 10, you may see what watchmen the Lord had in Isaiah’s time: “His watchmen are blind; they are all ignorant, they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark; sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber.” The state and church watchmen were such; therefore idolatry, murder, oppression, and profaneness abounded amongst them; they sought themselves and their ease, not the state or church’s good. Watchmen should not be for themselves, but for the public good, enduring any hardship rather than the public should be endangered; they must not shrink at wind or weather, but bear the cold of the night and the heat of the day, watching always. Isa. xxi. 11, “Watchman, what of the night? watchman, what of the night?” The watchman was at his work in the night, as well as in the day.

Obs. 5. God hath a special care of his church and people, being exposed to many dangers. “I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel.” Where watchmen are, dangers are supposed. There are church robbers abroad, that would rob it of the Scriptures, of ordinances, officers, of Christ, and of heaven itself. There are those who would “bring in damnable heresies,” as of old, 2 Pet. ii. 1; yea, the church is apt of itself to breed vipers, Acts xx. 30. Thorns, briars, weeds, nettles, do grow up in God’s gardens. What errors, heresies, blasphemies, are not revived in our days! Are they not grown up to that height and strength, as to threaten and endanger the foundation? If ever the church is as a lily among thorns, as a lamb among wolves and lions that seek to tear in pieces and devour, it is now. Truth goeth with a scratched face every where, and is so scratched and disfigured that many know her not; she hath many enemies, few friends, and cannot dwell quiet in Zion itself; erroneous opinions are ready to assault her in her own house. There is need therefore of watchmen to discover and prevent dangers; and God hath manifested his care of his church and truth, that he hath given watchmen for the preservation of them, and left it upon record that himself is the watchman of his vineyard: Isa. xxvii. 3, “Lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day.” The fire of contention, the floods of iniquity, and winds of strange doctrine, cannot harm God’s vineyard, he is the keeper thereof.

Obs. 6. What gifts or graces soever prophets and men in ecclesiastical places have, they must depend upon God for more, and receive from him before they give out to others. No prophet, no apostle, ever had such a sufficiency of light, knowledge, or grace, as to stand in need of no more. God had set Ezekiel to be a watchman to the house of Israel, he had heard much from God, the Spirit entered into him, he had eaten the roll, and yet he must attend the Lord; “Therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth.”

even therefore because he was God's prophet, he was to hear the word at his mouth; not to trust to what he had, not to give out of his own, but constantly to look unto the Lord, to hearken what he would say, and then what he said to make that known unto others. God's prophets, God's ministers, must speak his words, deliver his message. There is a majesty, an efficacy in his words, which are not in the words of men, Heb. iv. 12. The words of false prophets were chaff, without virtue; but the words of true prophets were wheat, full of virtue, for they were the words of God, Jer. xxiii. 28.

Obs. 7. That as it is the duty of watchmen to foresee danger, so to forewarn the people of it. The state watchman ought to do both, and so the church watchman. The one, when he sees the sword to come, is to blow the trumpet and warn the people, that they secure their lives; the other, when he sees men's lives are wicked, tending to the destruction of their souls, when he sees error, heresies, coming to infect and endanger the souls of men, he is to blow the trumpet of the Lord, and to warn them that they take heed of the one, and desist from the other. Isa. lviii. 1. "Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins." Isaiah was a watchman to the house of Jacob, and he foresaw they were in danger of being ruined and carried into captivity; and what must he do in this case? be silent? no: "Cry aloud," make them to hear, "spare not" thy lungs, thy strength, "lift up thy voice like a trumpet," louder and louder, make all the house of Jacob to hear it; "and show my people their transgressions," present unto them the nature and danger of them, let them not rest or sleep, but tell them of their sins in public, in private, solicit, importune them to cease from their evil ways, and to secure their souls. It is not enough for a spiritual watchman to warn his people once or twice in a year, of the dangerous evils their sins will bring upon them, but he must do it frequently, constantly; this warning must be daily: let the persons be of what rank soever, if they live in ways of wickedness, which may hazard their souls, the watchman must tell them of their sins and danger, admonish them seriously, reprove them sharply, and threaten them with death eternal if they persevere in their ways.

Obs. 8. That prophets, ministers, and watchmen in Zion, are to act in the name and authority of God. "Thou shalt warn them from me." They must let them know that God hath sent them, that they speak from him, not from themselves, not their own words; and this is likeliest to make way for the message they bring, of what kind soever. Here the prophet was to warn them, to tell them of their sins, and the danger of them: and who would not receive an admonition from God, when it comes in his name, backed with his authority: when God in it seeks our good, the freedom of us from death and damnation, the bringing of us unto glory and salvation; and especially when the soul of the watchman lieth at stake for the sinner, if he do not admonish the sinner? Can any sinner be so obstinate as not to consider, relent, and return, when God shall send one in his name unto him, and the prophet shall say, Sir, I come from God unto you, and my life is at stake for you; if I tell you not of your sins, I am a lost man: give me leave therefore to deal plainly with you: you are covetous, unclean, proud, froward, ignorant, unbelieving, having a form of godliness without the power; and unless you take another course, and serve the living God otherwise than you do, you will perish soul and body eternally; but if you will hearken, I will show you the good and right way, the way everlasting, which will make you blessed for ever. When a watchman comes and deals thus with a sinner, hath he cause to be angry? No; he hath cause to fall down, and say, Of a truth God is in you and with you; I thank you for your counsel and reasonable admonitions, and through the grace of God I will improve them, and turn to that God who is so gracious, and would have sinners come to the knowledge of the truth and be saved.

Obs. 9. The Lord knows who are wicked. "When I say to the wicked man." The world calls them wicked who are righteous, and those righteous who are wicked; but it is not so with the Lord, he knows who is a hypocrite, who is covetous, who is a liar, a formalist, an enemy to grace and holiness: "Known unto God are all his works," Acts xv. 18; and he knoweth who are his, 2 Tim. ii. 19, and who are not his. There is not one goat in the world, but the Lord knows him; not a wolf, or lion, but he takes notice of them: he knew the house of Israel better than Ezekiel who dwelt amongst them; whom he said was wicked, was so indeed. It matters not much what the world saith of men: it called Paul a babbler, Acts xvii. 18, a heretic, Acts xxiv. 14, a pestilent fellow, ver. 5; but what said God of him? Acts ix. 15. "He is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel." Job's friends and the devil said Job was a hypocrite; but God said he was a perfect man, fearing God, and eschewing evil, Job i. 1. That men are what God, who cannot lie, who cannot be deceived, pronounces them to be; if he in his word do call a man for a hypocrite, an unbeliever, covetous, proud, &c. he is so.

Obs. 10. The power of life and death is in the hand of the Lord. "When I say unto the wicked, O wicked man, thou shalt surely die." God hath authority over the lives of men, and can pronounce a sentence of death upon them at his pleasure. He commissioned Saul to smite Amalek, to "slay man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass," 1 Sam. xv. 3. When Ahab let Benhadad go, a man that God had appointed to destruction, therefore saith he, "Thy life shall go for his life, and thy people for his people," 1 Kings xx. 42. The power of life and death God challengeth to himself; Deut. xxxii. 39, "I kill, and I make alive: I wound, and I heal; neither is there any that can deliver out of mine hand." By this argument he proves himself to be God, and it is none but God that kills, or gives life. Psal. lxxviii. 20, "Unto God the Lord belong the issues from death." The Hebrew is, לַמֶּת הַחַיִּים, the goings out to death. It is God that turns the key, and lets out the breath; it is he puts a period to the life of the creature. Would any live? let them fear the Lord, and depart from evil; for "the fear of the Lord prolongeth days," Prov. x. 27. Moses uses this argument to persuade them to love, obey, and cleave to the Lord, "He is thy life, and length of thy days," Deut. xxx. 20. Men have their lives from God, and he draws the thread of them out to what length he please; and therefore men should love, fear, obey, and cleave to that God; if they do not, he will cut the thread of their lives asunder: Prov. x. 27, "The years of the wicked shall be shortened;" by one sickness, judgment, or other, their days and years shall be shortened of what they might have been.

Obs. 11. Those watchmen that are unfaithful in their places, and do not tell the people of their sins and danger, their account will be dreadful. "If thou do not speak to warn the wicked from his way, his blood will I require at thy hand." If a political watchman be unfaithful, so that a man perish by the sword without warning, his blood lieth upon the watchman's head; and if the ecclesiastical watchman be unfaithful, and do not warn the wicked, upon what pretence soever, the blood of that wicked man, dying in his sins, will be required of the watchman, it lies upon his head, and he must answer for it: the case of this latter watchman will be more dangerous than of the former; because the one is to answer for the life of a man, the other for the soul of a man, which is of great price. Let lazy, sleepy, perfidious watchmen look to it; they suffer men to perish through their default, and their blood, lives, souls, stand engaged for the same.

Obs. 12. The failing of the watchman will not excuse or privilege the wicked man. "If thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity." Though he be not told that he is in a wrong way, though he pretend ignorance, that will not serve turn, he "shall die in his iniquity," warned or unwarned. The watchman hath not done his duty; what then? must this exempt the wicked man from punishment? No; he hath not done his duty, he should have minded and studied the law of God, walked according to that, and have made it a lamp unto his feet, and a light unto his paths, Psal. exix. 105. But his neglect of his duty, and ignorance, rather will aggravate than extenuate his fault: the law was near unto him, and he might have known what was forbidden, and so have avoided the same.

Obs. 13. Those that regard not the warning of the watchmen, they bring certain destruction upon themselves. "Whosoever heareth the sound of the trumpet, and taketh not warning, his blood shall be upon his own head;" if the enemy cut off that man, he himself is guilty of his own death, not the political watchman. And so in the church state; if the wicked man be warned of his way, and turn not from it, he shall die in his iniquity, his blood lies at his own door, upon his own head, the watchman is free.

Obs. 14. There is great necessity that the watchmen deal faithfully, and tell the people of their danger and sin. Their souls, their blood lie at stake upon it; if they be not faithful, their lives, their souls go for it. Those watchmen that are silent, are cruel, bloody, and soul-murdering men, they murder the souls of the people, and their own souls also: those that speak, that cry aloud, that tell the people thoroughly of their sins, not fearing their frowns, nor respecting their favours, that so, if it be possible, they may save their souls, these are the most faithful watchmen. Many wonder that the spiritual watchmen are so zealous, particular, that they open the nature of sin so much, threaten such terrible judgments of God against sinners, and preach damnation unto them, that they are so frequent in such ways; but cease to wonder, their souls are in jeopardy if they do it not. If a man's whole estate were in hazard if he did not tell such a man that he were a liar, a drunkard, would he forfeit his estate through silence? No; he would tell him of his sins again and again. The watchman's soul lieth at pawn, and he forfeits that if he should not tell sinners of their sins, and warn them to turn from them. Hence was it that Paul said, "Necessity is laid upon me, and woe unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" I Cor. ix. 16; he preached and warned sinners night and day, Acts xx. 31.

Obs. Lastly, That the watchman warning the people, and the people taking warning, they do both secure themselves. If the watchman political or spiritual blow the trumpet, warn the people, he shall deliver his own soul: if the people take warning, they deliver their souls. Safety lies in warning, and in hearkening to warning. Let not the watchmen of God be sleepy or silent, but warn the people constantly, that so they may save themselves and others.

Ver. 10, 11. Therefore, O thou son of man, speak unto the house of Israel; Thus ye speak, saying, If our transgressions and our sins be upon us, and we pine away in them, how should we then live? Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?

Here begins the second general part of the chapter, which is a confirmation of the prophet against those calumnies the Jews made against the truth and justice of God.

The first is in the 10th verse.

The second in the 17th and 20th verses.

The calumny they raised against the truth of God was this: in the 5th verse it is said, he that takes warning when the watchmen gives it, shall deliver his soul; this, said the Jews, had not truth in it; for, chap. xxiv. 23, the prophet had told them they should pine away for their iniquities, therefore there was no hope for them, though they took warning at the watchman's mouth; we are appointed to destruction, and it is in vain to mind what the watchman saith. This is answered in the 11th verse. But to open the words:

Ver. 10. "Therefore, O thou son of man, speak unto the house of Israel." God had set Ezekiel to be a watchman unto the house of Israel, to observe their sins and tell them thereof; and here he commands him to do his duty, "Speak unto the house of Israel," thus. The house of Israel was not now the ten tribes, but the two tribes left of the ten.

"If our transgressions and our sins be upon us." Jerusalem being now taken, or upon the taking, the Jews were more sensible of their sins, and so felt the weight of them in that sad judgment which was upon them, or coming upon them. By "transgressions and sins," not only the guilt, but the punishment of them is meant: they had felt much in the time of Jerusalem's siege, and more now in the taking of it. God visited their iniquities upon their heads.

"And we pine away in them." When God's hand is upon persons for their sins, they consume and moulder away; the pain and anguish they are under melts their fat, eats up their strength, and brings them to skin and bone. מַצֵּי from צָקַק makkak, which is, to grow lean, to become feeble, to be dissolved into corruption.

"How should we then live?" The Jews seeing Jerusalem now in the enemies' hand, and themselves going into captivity, speak despairingly: saying, We are like never to see good day, but must pine away under the judgments that are upon us; how should we then live? It is in vain to warn us, and tell us of repenting and turning to the Lord, we must die in the condition we are in.

Ver. 11. "Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord God." This oath of God hath been spoken of, chap. xvi. 48, and v. 11. It is the oath which God most uses. Life is the most precious of all things, and that God swears by: As sure as I live, or am the living God, it is true which I say; or, let me not be the living God, if I speak false; you think I am a hard Master, that you shall pine away in your sins, and find no mercy, though you should repent and return; you are greatly deceived: "As I live, saith the Lord," &c. He swears not by a truth that was questioned, Numb. xiv. 11; nor by his omnipotency, for that was doubted of, Psal. lxxviii. 19; but by his life, which was never in question.

"I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that," &c. The Septuagint reads the words, ὀ βολομαι, I will not; the Vulgate is, Nolo mortem impij, I am unwilling the wicked should die; Junius, If I delight in the death of the wicked; Vatablus, Piscator, I delight not in the death of the wicked, or, I am not delighted therewith. Montanus hath it, If I shall will in the death of the wicked, for so runs the Hebrew. The word חָפֵז signifies, to desire, love, delight in a thing, as Gen. xxxiv. 19, Shechem delighted in Dinah; he desired her, loved her, and took delight in her. Chophetz notes the highest delight and content that can be taken; Psal. xvi. 3, "In whom is" כל-חפצו "all my delight," that is, my greatest delight. Now here it is said, God hath not pleasure in the death of the wicked. This is not an absolute negative, denying God wholly to have delight in death, or in the death of sinful, wicked man, or of any sinful man; for God took delight in the destruction of Pharaoh and his host in the Red sea, which Moses shows, saying, Exod. xv. 1, "He hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea." God sent Saul to smite Amalek, utterly to destroy him and all his: when Agag was spared, with the best of the sheep and oxen, was he not wroth with him? 1 Sam. xv. 3, 11, 23. When Jehu cut off Ahab's house, what said the Lord? "Because thou hast done well in executing that which is right in mine eyes, and hast done unto the house of Ahab according to all that was in mine heart, thy children of the fourth generation shall sit on the throne of Israel," 2 Kings x. 30. The destruction of Ahab's house was pleasing to God, he commended, he rewarded it. And that God takes no pleasure in the destruction of a sinful, wicked man, is contrary to these texts, Deut. xxviii. 63; Prov. i. 26, 27; Isa. i. 24; Jer. xiv. 12. The words are not to be taken as an absolute negative, but comparatively, thus, I have pleasure in the turning of the wicked from his ways, rather than in his death; or, it is more pleasing to me that a wicked man should turn and live, than that he should continue and die. Such an expression is that in 1 Cor. i. 17, "Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel;" not absolutely not to baptize, but rather to preach than to baptize; he had more pleasure in my preaching than in my baptizing; and so here, Let me not live, if I have so much pleasure in the death of a sinner, as in his turning from his sin.

By "death" here some understand eternal death, and it cannot be otherwise, saith Quistorpius: for he speaks of that death, which may be avoided by repentance and turning to God, but temporal death cannot be avoided, either by the penitent or impenitent. But to him that well considers this place, it will appear that here it is spoken of a temporal and violent death, for, ver. 3, he speaks of the sword coming upon a land. They were at this time either straitly besieged, or newly taken by Nebuchadnezzar's forces, and complained that their sins were upon them, provoking God to destroy them; that they pined away, and there was no hope for them of life, though they should repent them of their iniquities: this God answers unto, and tells them, if they turn from their evil ways, there is hope they shall live, for repentance prevents and removes judgments that are destructive. The Ninevites by their repentance prevented the destruction of themselves and their city; at David's repentance the plague was stayed; Ahab's humbling himself prevented God's bringing the evil in his days. So that it is true of natural death, that cannot be avoided by penitency or impenitency, but a violent death may; a death by sword, by famine, by plague, by wild beasts, may. 2 Chron. vii. 14, "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land." Had he spoken of eternal death, it had been no answer to the Jews' objection. Lavater tells us, that by death is meant evil, and by life, good. Men by their sins bring sad calamities and judgments upon themselves, they cause God to punish them with variety of evils, which he hath no pleasure in, nor they cause to complain of, Lam. iii. 33, 39; he had rather they should turn from their sins and live comfortably.

"But that the wicked turn from his way and live." The word for "wicked" is, רשע which the Septuagint renders, ἀσεβής, the irreligious, lewd, ungodly man: here, "wicked," wicked in opinions, wicked in practice, troublesome to God and man, running the wrong way. The word for "way" signifies a path which leads from place to place, and men walk in it: metaphorically it is applied to the customs, manners, actions, religions, and lives of men, Jer. xvi. 2; Prov. i. 19; xxi. 2. Of this before, chap. xvi. 61. The sense lieth thus, As I live, I delight not in the death of the wicked, but if the wicked turn from his way and live, or shall live, that is, according to what I have prescribed in my word, I shall delight in this: or thus, If he turn from his sinful way, that he may live, and live comfortably, I shall delight in it.

"Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways." Here is an earnest exhortation of them unto repentance, setting out the mercy and goodness of God, who was ready and willing to pardon them, upon their turning from their evil ways. The doubling of the word notes the earnest and real intention of God in it. The sum and substance of the words is to show, that if sinners repent of their former wickedness he will forgive them, and take pleasure in them. "Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways." If ye pine away under my judgments, the fault is yours; you turn not from your idolatries, oppressions, perjuries, and profanations of my sabbaths and ordinances, these are ways of death; but if ye would hearken to my ways, and turn unto them, they are ways of life. Of turning hath been spoken, chap. xiv. 6. The Septuagint is, Turn you by turning, turn thoroughly from your evil ways.

"For why will ye die, O house of Israel?" Ye are the nation I took and brought out of Egypt by a strong hand, Deut. iv. 34; ye are the people that entered into covenant with me, and avouched me to be your God, Dent. xxvi. 17, and I you to be my peculiar people, ver. 18; ye are they upon whom I have bestowed great privileges, holy ordinances, to whom I have showed mercy and truth, Psal. lxxvi. 1, 2; xcviii. 3; ye are the people I have taken most delight in of all people under heaven, whom I have most honoured, done most for, and made the greatest promises unto, Jer. xxxi. 33, 34; xxxiii. 8, 14. Why therefore have you left me and my ways, and fallen into ways of death? why do you wound and stab yourselves? If you have no regard to me, yet pity yourselves; cease from those ways which will be your death. Why will ye die, O house of Israel? Is it not better to live in my ways, than to die in your own?

Obs. 1. The guilt and punishment of sin are heavy and consuming things. "Our transgressions and our sins are upon us, and we pine away in them." Guilt alone is a great burden. "A stone" (saith Solomon, Prov. xxvii. 3) "is heavy, and the sand weighty; but a fool's wrath is heavier than them both;" and guilt is heavier than them all. "A wounded spirit who can bear?" Prov. xviii. 14. What is guilt then with punishment, but a consuming, a devouring thing? When David had sinned, and God's hand was upon him, what saith he? Psal. xxxviii. 3, 4, 8, "There is no soundness in my flesh because of thine anger; neither is there any rest in my bones because of my sin. Mine iniquities are gone over mine head; as an heavy burden, they are too heavy for me. I am feeble and sore broken: I have roared by reason of the disquietness of my heart." God's hand and his own guilt did eat up his spirit, and bring him to the gates of death: this made him to say, Psal. xxxix. 11, "When thou with rebukes dost correct man for iniquity, thou makest his beauty to consume away like a moth." The word for "beauty" notes that which is desirable in man; whatever is desirable, that melts away when God doth visit man for sin. A little touch of a man's hand crusheth the wings and hazards the life of the moth; a little touch of God's hand, where guilt is, crusheth the beauty and strength of man.

Obs. 2. Sinners under sad judgments are apt to despair, yea, to despair. "If our transgressions and our sins be upon us, and we pine away in them, how should we then live?" They had greatly sinned against God, stood it out against his prophets threatening judgments; and now the judgments were come upon them, their hearts sunk within them, and they conclude there is no mercy for them: Our sins are great, God's judgments heavy upon us, he is resolved now upon our destruction, and what course soever we shall take, all is in vain. What these said in Judea, the like said they in Babylon: Ezek. xxxvii. 11, "Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost: we are cut off for our parts." We are like the bones in a grave, that have all the marrow dried out of them; or like a branch of a tree cut off, and all the sap dried out of it; there is no hope we should ever live, go to Jerusalem, and grow there again into a church or state. Not only the wicked, but even a godly man may be in a desponding, yea, a despairing condition, as David himself; Psal. xxxi. 22, "I said in my haste, I am cut off from before thine eyes;" thou wilt never look upon or favour me more. So Asaph, Psal. lxxvii. 7-9, "Will the Lord cast off for ever? will he be favourable no more? is his mercy clean gone for ever? doth his promise fail for evermore? hath he forgotten to be gracious?" &c. What sad expostulations were these of a good man!

Obs. 3. The cavils, objections, and unbelief of sinners, put God unto his oath. "As I live, saith the Lord," it is not so as you fancy. I have told you that if you turn from your evil ways, you shall live; that I have no pleasure in the death of a sinner, Ezek. xviii. 21-23, 27, 28, 31, 32; but ye believe not my word, ye cavil against it, and say, ye shall pine away in your sins, that what course soever ye take, ye shall not live. Men are backward to believe the word of God, and deal worse with God than with man; they will give credit to an honest man upon his word, but not to God; yea, how many do believe the devil's suggestions and delusions, who is the father of lies, and will not believe the word of God! and what a harsh thing is it, that men will not attribute so much to God as to the devil! Eve took the devil's bare word in Paradise, she put not him to his oath: when he said, "Ye shall not die; your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil;" she believed him presently. But men will not take God's bare word, they put him to his oath, "As I live, saith the Lord." It is a great thing for God to speak, but more for him to swear: he that made the world with a word, is not believed upon his word, he must take his oath upon it; so that it stands God in more to be believed in the world, than it did to make the world; his single word sufficed for the one, his oath was required for the other. And here appears the great goodness of God, that for the good of man will please to take an oath. O happy we, for whose sake God swears! O most unhappy we, if we believe not God swearing! Having therefore God's word and oath, let us believe firmly, and stagger no more.

Obs. 4. Sinners, in what condition soever they be, have no cause to despair or despair of mercy, so that they turn from their evil ways. Let them be great sinners, old sinners, sinners under judgments, ready to be destroyed and cut off by the hands of enemies, as these were, yet if they turn from their sins, there is hope of mercy for them. For,

(1.) God takes pleasure rather in their conversion and salvation, than in their death and destruction: "I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live." If a state say to a company of its subjects, who are traitors, and upon traitorous designs, I have no pleasure in your ways which lead unto death, but my pleasure is that you turn from them and live; is not here a large door of hope opened unto them, whatever their treasons be?

(2.) Lest men, being deeply guilty, should suspect the reality of God herein, (for guilt is full of jealousies,) the Lord swears to it, and that by his life, which is the most unquestionable thing of all, for none doubts whether he be the living God; "As I live, saith the Lord, I have no pleasure," &c. So that here is God's word and oath, two sufficient bonds, to secure it.

(3.) Here is God's command and earnest desire of their turning; "Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways." When a man's servant is abroad on some dangerous design, and his master commands him again and again to leave it off, and come home to him; or if the servant be in a deep water, and the master sees he will be drowned if he come not back again, he calls to him, and commands him to return; is not this an argument that he seeks his good, and would have him safe.

(4.) God sets the strongest arguments before them that can be thought of, life and death. If ye go on, there is no hope of mercy, you must die; if you will turn, here is life, ye shall live: here is great mercy. They are not left unto uncertainties, whether they shall have life or no; but life is propounded and offered unto them, and where that is promised there is a wide door of mercy opened. God is troubled at it, that sinners forsake mercy and embrace it not: Why will ye die? Why will ye not turn from your evil ways unto me the living God? Am I so ill a God? Have I dealt so unkindly with you, as that you will not come unto me? testify against me, tell me wherein. Like that in Micah vi. 3, "O my people, what have I done unto thee? and wherein have I wearied thee? testify against me:" if there be any such thing lie in the way, I am ready to remove it.

Obs. 5. The nature of true repentance lieth in turning. "Turn ye, turn ye." God at first made man upright, with his face towards himself; but he sought out inventions, and turned away from God to the creature, which was a madness, to leave a universal, everlasting, and satisfying good, for a particular fading, and an unsatisfying good: this madness is in the hearts of all men, Eccles. ix. 3, till they come to repenting and turning again unto God, and setting him in his right posture to behold the Lord. This turning must be from his evil ways; Turn ye from your evil ways, and from all of them. Ezck. xiv. 6; xviii. 21, 31, else it is no turning; if the heart be towards any one sin, lust, creature, or evil way, it is not turned; his back is towards God and not his face; he prefers a creature, a lust, before God.

Obs. 6. Sinners are the authors of their own destruction. "Why will ye die?" They went on in their idolatry, profaneness, oppressions, pollutions of sabbaths, &c. and so brought judgment upon themselves. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16, 17. "They mocked the messengers of God, despised his word, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy. Therefore he brought upon them the king of the Chaldees, who slew their young men with the sword in the house of the sanctuary, and had no compassion upon young man or maiden," &c. So in Christ's days, he would have kept Jerusalem from destruction, but Jerusalem herself would not, she brought it upon herself, Matt. xxiii. 37. The Corinthians' abuse of the supper brought judgment upon them, 1 Cor. xi. 30; and the false teachers brought swift destruction upon themselves, 2 Pet. ii. 1.

Ver. 12—16. Therefore, thou son of man, say unto the children of thy people, The righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression: as for the wickedness of the wicked, he shall not fall thereby in the day that he turneth from his wickedness; neither shall the righteous be able to live for his righteousness in the day that he sinneth. When I shall say to the righteous, that he shall surely live; if he trust to his own righteousness, and commit iniquity, all his righteousnesses shall not be remembered; but for his iniquity that he hath committed, he shall die for it. Again, when I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; if he turn from his sin, and do that which is lawful and right; if the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, walk in the statutes of life, without committing iniquity; he shall surely live, he shall not die. None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him; he hath done that which is lawful and right; he shall surely live.

These words do explain and confirm what God had said in the 11th verse, and that by way of contraries.

1. He sets a righteous man before them, and bids the prophet tell them, that if a righteous man turn from his righteousness, and become wicked, his righteousness will not benefit him, but his wickedness will bring judgment upon him.

2. He sets a wicked man before them, and bids the prophet tell them, that if he turn from his wickedness, that shall not prejudice him, he shall not fall thereby, but he shall live.

Here is nothing in these verses of God's decrees of life or death, of salvation or condemnation, and men's being under them. It is said, whilst they are righteous they are under the decree of life and salvation, and when they cease from their righteousness they are under the decree of death and condemnation; and so if a man be righteous one day, and wicked another, and that interchangeably all days of his life, he doth daily pass from under one decree to another, forward and backward. I find no foundation in the words for such a conceit; they hold out God's dealings with men here in this world, according to the conditions he finds them in; if they be just and righteous, he will bless them; if they be unjust and wicked, he will punish them; the one shall live comfortably, the other shall be cut off by some judgment: here is nothing pointing at the decrees of God.

Ver. 12. "The righteousness of the righteous." What "righteous" man is here meant the 15th verse informs us, viz. a man legally righteous, such a man as restores the pledge, gives again what he hath robbed, and walks in the statutes of life without committing iniquity: if a wicked man did these things, he was righteous. It is therefore a righteousness of the covenant of works, not the righteousness of faith, here spoken of: a moral, not a gospel righteousness, which the 13th verse is clear for, calling it his "own righteousness."

"Shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression." The word for "transgression" is, פָּשַׁע which signifies sin, presumptuous and wilful sin, rebellion, apostasy. Sometimes it is taken for any sin, or failing, as Lam. i. 22, "Do unto them as thou hast done unto me for all my transgressions." Jeremiah had no great sins against light, he did not rebel against God; his transgressions were such as are the ordinary failings of men. So it is used, Job xiii. 23. And the Septuagint hath it, in the day he shall err. Let him have done never so much good, and continued long in so doing, that shall not deliver him in the day of his erring, transgressing, failing. Had Adam stood many days, months, years, and then ate of the forbidden fruit, all his righteousness would not have delivered him; and so here under the covenant of works, there is no deliverance upon any failing. But rather it notes here some grievous sin and way of wickedness, which exposes unto and hastens God's judgments.

"As for the wickedness of the wicked, he shall not fall thereby in the day that he turneth from his wickedness." Let the wickedness of the wicked be great, of what kind soever, against God and man, idolatry, profaneness, oppression, &c. it shall not bring destruction upon him, make him to fall and perish; when he repents of it, turns from it, and walks in those ways that are contrary thereunto, then his former sins shall not be imputed to him, nor the judgments deserved executed upon him. As the righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him when he sins, so the wickedness of the wicked shall not damnify him when he turns. Here is a nominative case put absolute, "the wickedness of the wicked."

"Neither shall the righteous be able to live for his righteousness in the day that he sinneth." His righteousness shall not uphold him, do him any good, when he falls into sin; his sin will be the death of him, and his righteousness, he cannot live in it, or for it.

Ver. 13. "When I shall say to the righteous, that he shall surely live; if he trust to his own righteousness." Here the case of the righteous man is further amplified and expounded. Let me make him a promise of life, and say, that in living he shall live, (so the Hebrew is.) yet, if he trust to his righteousness and commit sin, he shall not live. When men have a legal righteousness, they are apt to trust in it, to think it makes them acceptable to God, that it will answer justice for their sins, divert wrath, procure favour, and so presume to take liberty, and please the flesh in many things; but their righteousness will not stand them in stead.

"And commit iniquity." Of this, see chap. iii. 20, and xviii. 24, where much hath been said of this expression. The will, affections, and heart are in committing iniquity, it is making a trade of sin; such men are workers of iniquity. Pharisees had a legal righteousness, but they devoured widows' houses, made proselytes, and them twofold more the children of the devil than themselves, Matt. xxiii. 14, 15; these committed iniquity.

"All his righteousness shall not be remembered." That is, none of his righteous deeds shall be so had in remembrance, as to have any acceptance or reward, they shall be laid by and forgotten; instead thereof, he shall have judgment for his wickedness, that shall be remembered and rewarded.

"But for his iniquity that he hath committed, he shall die for it." The reward of his iniquity is death. Either he shall pine away under some stroke of God, which is a lesser kind of death, or he shall be cut off by some judgment, which is a death indeed, a death with a witness.

Ver. 14. "Again, when I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; if he turn from his sin," &c. In this verse and the two following, the case of the wicked man is further explained. As the promise to the righteous was with condition, so the threatening of the wicked is with exception, He shall surely die, unless he repent and turn, and testify the reality of the same, by doing that which is lawful and right; or, as it is in the Hebrew, by doing judgment and justice, by giving unto God and man what is prescribed. Of these words, see chap. xviii. 5.

Ver. 15. "If the wicked restore the pledge." A "pledge" is something pawned for a thing borrowed, the possession whereof for the present is in the hand of the lender, but the right is belonging to the borrower. Chabol is from חבל to bind, because pledges are strong bonds and obligations. Poor people were often necessitated to pawn their garments, beds, cattle, and utensils, which wicked men would keep and make their advantage of, which they ought not to have done, Deut. xxiv. 10—13; therefore it is said here, "If the wicked restore the pledge," if he be merciful to those who are poor and afflicted.

"Give again that he had robbed." Robbers seldom make restitution of what they get by violence. The word שׂוּב signifies, to spoil a man of what is his by open violence, as highway robbers do, and also any violent wresting and forcing men's right out of their hands. Now if the wicked did make restitution of what he had so gotten, and "Walk in the statutes of life, without committing iniquity." The "statutes of life" are the statutes of God, which being exactly kept, afford life to the keepers of them: chap. xx. 13, "They walked not in my statutes, and they despised my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them," or live by them, as it is Lev. xviii. 5. If a man walk in these from day to day, and keep them perfectly, committing no iniquity, what then?

"He shall surely live, he shall not die." This and the like promises are legal, and made to legal righteousness, and clearly evince that the prophet speaks of a legal righteous man. The gospel saith not, that a just man shall live by doing, but that "the just shall live by faith," and that the law is not of faith. If men could keep the law, do what it requires, they should live by it; but (except Christ) none ever did, and so none was ever justified by the law, Gal. iii. 10—12. If a man could be found that walked in the statutes of life without sinning, he should surely live, and live as comfortably as Adam did in Paradise, and should not die.

Ver. 16. "None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him." The Hebrew is, all his sins which he hath committed shall not be mentioned unto him; that is, none of his sins shall be imputed or charged upon him. See chap. xviii. 22.

"He hath done that which is lawful and right; he shall surely live." The life here spoken of cannot be eternal life, because, 1. A man's turning from his former wicked ways, and making restitution to men for wrongs done, is no satisfaction to the justice of God for the breach of his laws. And, 2. No man can so keep the law or statutes of life, as thereby to obtain life eternal. Here is no mention of Christ, or faith in him, without which eternal life cannot be had. I conceive it is meant of a temporal life: he that ceases from his wicked ways, that lives honestly, doing lawful and right things, he shall not have cause to complain, as the Jews did, that they pined away under their iniquities; but he should live in living, as the Hebrew is, and that is, he should live a very comfortable life.

Obs. 1. There is a righteousness which will not profit a man when he hath most need. When a man sins, then he hath most need of righteousness to cover his sin, to prevent judgment; but then his own righteousness, a legal righteousness, a duty righteousness, will stand him in no stead; "The righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression; he shall not be able to live in the day that he sinneth." Let us, therefore, look after an evangelical righteousness, for Christ hath told us, "that except our righteousness exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, we shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven," Matt. v. 20. They had a legal, a duty, an own righteousness, but they had not the righteousness of Christ, "the righteousness which is of God by faith;" and that is the only righteousness which will stand in stead against all sin, and let us into heaven.

Obs. 2. It is perseverance which will crown men's undertakings, and make them acceptable. It is not enough to begin well, unless we go on; if men be righteous, and give over their righteousness, falling to iniquity, as those that are legally righteous may, they lose their former righteousness, and fall under judgment: "If a righteous man commit iniquity, all his righteousness shall not be remembered, but for his iniquity which he hath committed, he shall die."

Obs. 3. Men are apt to rest upon a legal righteousness. "If he trust in his own righteousness." When men restore the pledge, make restitution for what they have gotten wrongfully, walk in the statutes of life, do that which is lawful and right, they are very prone to trust in this their own righteousness; so did the Pharisees, Luke xviii. 11, 12; so did Paul while he was a Pharisee, Rom. vii. 9; but being become a true christian, and having obtained the righteousness of faith, "he had no confidence in the flesh," Phil. iii. 3, but his whole confidence was in Christ Jesus.

Obs. 4. Let the wickedness of men be what it will, if they turn from the same, it shall not prejudice them, but they shall live a comfortable life. "As for the wickedness of the wicked, he shall not fall thereby in the day that he turneth from his wickedness." If he turn from his sin, and do that which is lawful and right, his sins shall not be mentioned unto him, "he shall surely live," he shall live in living; others, by reason of their iniquities, are dead in living, they have no comfort in their lives, but pine away. It is men's sins which make times evil, and lives uncomfortable: Psal. xxxiv. 12—14, "What man is he that desireth life, and loveth many days, that he may see good? Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile. Depart from evil, and do good:" this is the way to live long and comfortably. Righteousness exalts nations, families, and persons.

Obs. 5. God's statutes punctually kept afford life: "He who walks in the statutes of life without committing iniquity, shall surely live." Deut. iv. 1, "Hearken, O Israel, unto the statutes and unto the judgments which I teach you, for to do them, that ye may live, and go in and possess the land." He speaks of a temporal life here; but in Matt. xix. 17, of an eternal life, "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." The young man spake of eternal life, and Christ bids him "keep the commandments" if he would have that; showing, that if a man could personally and perfectly keep the commands of God, he should have eternal life.

Ver. 17—20. Yet the children of thy people say, The way of the Lord is not equal: but as for them, their way is not equal. When the righteous turneth from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, he shall even die thereby. But if the wicked turn from his wickedness, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall live thereby. Yet ye say, The way of the Lord is not equal. O ye house of Israel, I will judge you every one after his ways.

The prophet having vindicated the truth of God which the Jews calumniated, he comes now to vindicate the justice which they likewise impeached, saying, his proceedings were not equal; and that he doth in these verses.

Ver. 17. "The way of the Lord is not equal." The Septuagint is, the way of the Lord is not right. Others thus, thy people deny that to be equal and just which the Lord doth; they say, He governeth the world unrighteously, and doth not administer justice indifferently to all men, but hath persons in respect, and punisheth one for another: this was that they charged God with.

"But as for them, their way is not equal." Here is answer to that unjust charge they charged God with, and it is by way of recrimination: that they charged upon the Lord is recharged upon themselves; you say, The Lord's ways are not equal; but he saith, Your ways are not equal, just, right, or well ordered: "Your prophets have conspired against me, and devoured souls; your priests have violated my law, and profaned my holy things; your princes have been ravenous wolves to shed blood, and to destroy souls for dishonest gain; the people of the land have used oppression, exercised robbery, have vexed the poor and needy, yea, oppressed the stranger wrongfully, chap. xxii. 25—27, 29; and now whose ways are not equal, yours or mine? Of these words see what hath been said, chap. xviii. 25.

Ver. 18. "When the righteous turneth from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, he shall even die thereby." You charge me that I respect persons, and punish one for another, the son for the father; but it is not so: and in this verse and the next, the Lord doth clearly free himself from that imputation, hereby showing what his dealings are with a righteous man, whatever he be, father or son, prince or subject: if he "turn from his righteousness," and fall to wicked and vile practices, he shall surely die; God will judge him for his wickedness, and bring some judgment upon him; and there is no injustice in that: if men turn traitors to a state, it is justice in that state to cut them off.

Ver. 19. "But if the wicked turn from his wickedness, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall live thereby." Here also the Lord vindicates himself, by showing what his proceedings are with a man that turns from his wickedness, and doth amend his life, by doing what is lawful and right: that man, whatever he be, shall be spared, he shall live and enjoy blessings from God; it shall go well with the man that turns to God, and ill with him that turns from God, and doth evil. Now if so, what injustice is there in God? what is the evil of his ways? Let them both speak and declare wherein God wrongs either of them, if they can.

Ver. 20. "Yet ye say, The way of the Lord is not equal." Having made it evident, by clear demonstration, that his ways are equal, and that by two instances, viz. one of the righteous, and the other of the wicked; he here upbraids them for their stubbornness and impudency, persisting in their perverse opinion, and saying, "Yet the way of the Lord is not equal;" they might as well have said, the sun was dark, and the night was day.

"O ye house of Israel, I will judge you every one after his ways." Seeing ye are so wicked, perverse in your judgments, as to condemn my ways, and sentence them to be unequal, I will call every one of you to account for this evil way of yours, and the rest of your evil ways, and will judge you accordingly. This is the conclusion the Lord draws upon the premises.

Obs. 1. Wicked men are apt to complain of, and carp at, the ways of God. They said, "The way of the Lord is not equal." Job xxi. 15, "What is the Almighty, that we should serve him? and what profit should we have, if we pray unto him?" we get nothing by his service, by calling on his name; he is a hard Master, he regards not our labour or prayers. These were of the same spirit with them in Malachi's days, who blushed not to say, "It is vain to serve God; and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hosts?" Mal. iii. 14. We were told that no service was like unto the Lord's, that those that did mourn for their sins, and walk in his ways, should be blessed, and live comfortably, but we find no such thing; we have tried him, and find that he regards, exalts, and blesses those that never minded him or his ways, ver. 15; therefore, "It is vain to serve him." In the fifth chapter of Jeremiah is a notable instance to this purpose, ver. 11—13, "The house of Israel and the house of Judah have dealt very treacherously against me, saith the Lord. They have belied the Lord, and said, It is not he, neither shall evil come upon us, neither shall we see sword nor famine; and the prophets shall become wind, and the word is not in them." They said God had no reason to threaten them with sword or famine, they deserved no such judgment at his hands, and therefore the prophets that prophesied such things were not sent of God, his word was not in them, they brought windy doctrines of their own, and should, together with their doctrines, become wind; evil shall not come upon us, but upon them. When Christ was on earth, how did the scribes and Pharisees carp at him, his ways, and doctrine! see Matt. xii. 24; John v. 10, 18; viii. 48; x. 32, 33. In our days do not men carp at the Scriptures, ordinances, providences, and dispensations of God? Such is the pride and arrogancy of man, that he dares blame and condemn the ways and things of God.

Obs. 2. Men have no cause to complain of, or cavil against, the ways of God. For,

(1.) His ways are equal, just, righteous, however they appear to men; he is God, and cannot do unjust things; he "is light, and in him is no darkness at all," 1 John i. 5; "Just and true are his ways," Rev. xv. 3; he "is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works," Psal. cxlv. 17; "The just Lord is in the midst of the city, he will not do iniquity," Zeph. iii. 5. "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" Gen. xviii. 25: yes, though men do wickedly, God will not. Hab. i. 13, "Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on iniquity;" he cannot look on it to approve it, much less to act it.

(2.) Our ways are unequal; and shall the guilty complain of the innocent? Had the Sodomites any cause to complain of God, who were so wicked? had the old world, which was so corrupt, cause to cry out of Heaven, which was pure? No man hath just ground to quarrel against God's dispensations, when himself walks unevenly before God, and his paths are crooked. If just men sin and step aside, Eccles. vii. 20, what do wicked men? they are altogether out of the way, Psal. xiv. 3. They do no good, their lives are a constant sinning, or a continued sin; and should God punish him daily for so doing, he had no just cause to fault the Lord: Lam. iii. 39, "Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins?"

(3.) Upon comparing of his dealings with the righteous falling to commit iniquity, and the wicked turning from iniquity, it appears to all unprejudiced men, who are not blinded with iniquity; the one is punished for his apostasy, the other is pardoned upon his repentance; judgment is the portion of the one, and mercy the portion of the other. If God should punish the repenting wicked man, and spare the apostatized righteous man, then there were cause of complaint; but it is contrary, therefore his ways are equal, and there is no cause to complain of them.

(4.) God hath power over the sons of men, they are his family, and he may exercise discipline in his family, "the house of Israel." The Jews were God's house, he Master of that family, and when any sinned in it, he had power to correct them, or turn them out of doors; and who should fault him? it is not children's duty to complain of their parents, nor for servants to complain of their lord and master.

(5.) Complaints in this kind will do us no good, they will harm us rather, for God is Judge, yea, the highest Judge, and will not only judge us for our other evil ways, but for this very way of charging him to be unjust, and cavilling at his dispensations: he will judge every one after his ways, neither great nor small can avoid his judgment. Let us all, therefore, take heed how we fault the ways of God, how strange or grievous soever they appear or be unto us.

Obs. 3. When men have once taken up prejudice against God and his ways, it is not easy to be removed. The Jews had drunk in this conceit, chap. xviii. that the ways of God were not equal; and much of that chapter is spent in proving the contrary, to extirpate that misconceit: but it took not effect, they let pass God's arguments, whereby he cleared himself, and carried along with them their prejudice against him and his ways, as appears in this chapter, ver. 17, 20, "Yet ye say, The way of the Lord is not equal." When weeds are gotten into the ground, and rooted there, it is not easy to cleanse that ground from them; when errors, delusions, corrupt opinions, and prejudice against the truth, are gotten into the head or heart, it is not an easy thing to get them out. Many wonder that ministers should not convince unlearned and weak men of their errors, and take them off from their opinions and prejudices, but they should consider some men will not be convinced, either by God or man. These here were not convinced by God, nor the Pharisees by Christ, John viii. 6, 7, and chap. x.; nor the Athenians by Paul, Acts xvii.

Ver. 21, 22. And it came to pass in the twelfth year of our captivity, in the tenth month, in the fifth day of the month, that one that had escaped out of Jerusalem came unto me, saying, The city is smitten. Now the hand of the Lord was upon me in the evening, afore he that was escaped came; and had opened my mouth, until he came to me in the morning; and my mouth was opened, and I was no more dumb.

Here the third general part of the chapter takes place, and is a denunciation of judgment against those that escaped at the destruction of Jerusalem, ver. 21—30; and this is set out or amplified,

I. From the time and occasion of it, ver. 21.

II. From the efficient cause, ver. 22.

III. From the moving causes, ver. 24—26.

IV. From the final cause, which is in ver. 29.

Ver. 21. "In the twelfth year of our captivity, in the tenth month, in the fifth day of the month." How long this was after the taking and smiting of Jerusalem will appear, by comparing Jer. lii. 5—7, with this verse. "In the eleventh year of Zedekiah, in the fourth month, in the ninth day of the month, the city was broken up." The captivity of the Jews began with Zedekiah's reign, for that time he was made king Jehoiachin was carried away captive into Babylon, 2 Kings xxiv.; now this was in the twelfth year of the captivity, the tenth month, in the fifth day of it, so that it was a year and six months, wanting four days, before these tidings of Jerusalem's being smitten came to Ezekiel.

"One that had escaped out of Jerusalem came unto me, saying." Many perished in Jerusalem by the famine and plague in the time of the siege, many were slain at the taking of it, yet some escaped, and it is probable they hid themselves in holes and woods, among the mountains, or fled to Egypt; one of which, after so long a time as a year, five months, and sixteen days, came to Ezekiel, and told him the city was smitten. It is without question he and others had heard something of Jerusalem's condition before, but no certainty.

"The city is smitten." The word for "smitten" is from נָסַח which notes so to smite, as not to miss, it was certainly smitten. The Septuagint is, the city is taken; the Vulgate, the city is laid waste, "broken up," as in Jer. lii. 7. This was sad news he brought, that Jerusalem, that famous city, that city of God, was destroyed.

Ver. 22. "Now the hand of the Lord was upon me." This expression we had in chap. i. 3. and iii. 14, "The hand of the Lord was strong upon me." And here, by the "hand of the Lord," is meant, the prophetic influence, prophetic breathings, of God's Spirit were upon the prophet, whereby he was enabled to speak freely and boldly concerning the state of the Jews in Judea that had escaped; God informed the prophet how things were at Jerusalem before the messenger came.

"In the evening, afore he that was escaped came." The "evening" was the beginning of the day among the Jews, and so of much esteem; and God then, by his Spirit, visited the prophet.

"And had opened my mouth, until he came to me in the morning." In chap. xxiv. God had told the prophet that one should escape and bring him tidings of things at Jerusalem, and that in that day his mouth should be opened; and here it is made good. The opening of the mouth implies, 1. Matter of speaking. 2. Freedom of speaking. 3. Opportunity of speaking. All these concurred here. He had matter given in to speak unto those that were escaped, and flattered themselves they should live and recover their losses; he had freedom, Jerusalem being smitten, boldly to maintain what he had formerly prophesied against Jerusalem; and occasion ministered unto him, from the man's coming.

The word $\gamma\epsilon\upsilon$ for "until" were better rendered, when. There was a sweet harmony and correspondence between what the prophet received from the Spirit of God, and that which this messenger faithfully related unto him.

"My mouth was opened, and I was no more dumb." After this he was so filled with the prophetic spirit, that he was silent no more, but prophesied freely and frequently unto them.

Obs. 1. God's people are sometimes under long afflictions. "In the twelfth year of our captivity." They had endured many miseries in a foreign land, amongst a barbarous people, twelve years. Numb. xx. 15. "We dwelt in Egypt a long time; and the Egyptians vexed us and our fathers." Egypt was a house of bondage and vexation unto them, and when they were brought out God threatened them, that if they would not observe all the words of his law to do them, and fear his glorious name, he would make their plagues great, and of long continuance, Deut. xxviii. 59. And this captivity of theirs was so long, that they thought God had forgotten them; Lam. v. 20, "Wherefore dost thou forget us for ever, and forsake us so long time?" seventy years' time they lay in Babylon, which was no better than an iron furnace. Ezekiel, Daniel, and other godly ones, were in this condition.

Obs. 2. That when utter desolation comes upon places, and God's judgments are severe, yet some have their lives for a prey. "One that had escaped came." Chap. ix. 5, 6, the slaughtermen are commanded to show no pity, but to slay utterly old and young, both maids, little children, and women, only the marked ones they must not touch. It is probable this man that escaped was one of the marked ones, for he had a special care to come and inform Ezekiel what had befallen them and the city, that so he might bear witness both to the truth of Jeremiah's and Ezekiel's prophecies: had he been a wicked man, he would hardly have come to the prophet into Babylon; but whoever he was, he escaped famine, plague, and sword, which cut off thousands of others.

Obs. 3. Ancient, renowned, and privileged cities, have their periods and dissolutions. Jerusalem was very ancient: there is mention of it in Joshua's days, Josh. xv. 8. She was famous throughout the earth, called the gates of the people, for the resort unto her, Ezek. xxvi. 2; she had choice privileges, she was the holy city, Isa. xlvi. 2; the city of the Lord of hosts, Psal. xlvi. 8; the city of solemnities, Isa. xxxiii. 20; the valley of vision, Isa. xxii. 1; the perfection of beauty, Lam. ii. 15; the city judged by all to be impregnable, chap. iv. 12. But whatever Jerusalem was, here is the conclusion, "Jerusalem is smitten, broken in pieces, and laid utterly waste;" kings, princes, nobles, counsellors, judges, prophets, priests, people, all were smitten. In Rev. viii. 12, it is said, the sun, moon, and stars were smitten, a third part of them; but here, the sun, moon, and stars, and orbs they were in, were wholly smitten. Oh what darkness was then upon the face of the Jewish earth! All created and artificial glory is subject to smiting; let not your hearts be taken with sun, moon, or stars, with cities, and the glory of them, &c.

Obs. 4. The faithfulness of God in performing what he foretells and promises. Chap. xxiv. 23, 27, it was hinted to the prophet, that one should escape the fury of the Babylonians, and bring the news of Jerusalem's destruction, and that that day his mouth should be opened, and he should speak; and is it not here fulfilled punctually? That day the party escaped, came with that sad news of Jerusalem's being smitten, was the mouth of the prophet opened: and mark how forward God is to make good what he promises, he opened not his mouth at the end of the day, but the evening before the man came, which was the beginning of their day; he came in the morning, by what time the prophet might be up, but God had been with the prophet before: see Exod. xii. 41. Let us learn to be faithful, and perform to a day what we promise, rather be beforehand with men, than behind with them.

Obs. 5. God is pleased sometimes to confirm the truths delivered by his servants, by witness and signs. Here was a witness came from Jerusalem to assure the prophet and others, that what had been prophesied against Jerusalem was true and made good; here was sign upon sign, he was as dumb before, and now his mouth was opened, which was a confirmation to him and others likewise: Isa. xliv. 26, "He confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the counsels of his messengers." Many would not believe Ezekiel, nor Jeremiah, touching the destruction of Jerusalem, but God confirmed their words.

Obs. 6. Liberty to speak the things of God is from the Spirit of God. No man can prophesy or declare the things of the Lord, unless the Spirit of God breathe upon him, and open his mouth: "The hand of the Lord was upon me, and opened my mouth, and I was no more dumb." He had great freedom and boldness of speech when the Spirit of God came upon him, that filled him with sanctuaty water, and made the waters flow strongly: before the Spirit waters them prophets are dry, before that speaks they are dumb; but when the hand of the Lord is upon them, then they cannot but speak and distil heavenly dews, or pour out great rains. 2 Cor. vi. 11, "O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you, our heart is enlarged." The Spirit had filled his heart with divine things, and his mouth was open freely and boldly to communicate the same unto them.

Ver. 23—26. Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, they that inhabit those wastes of the land of Israel speak, saying, Abraham was one, and he inherited the land: but we are many; the land is given us for inheritance. Wherefore say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Ye cut with the blood, and lift up your eyes toward your idols, and shed blood: and shall ye possess the land? Ye stand upon your sword, ye work abomination, and ye defile every one his neighbour's wife: and shall ye possess the land?

These words contain the causes that occasioned and moved God to denounce judgment against the Jews, who escaped the Babylonish sword when Jerusalem was smitten. The cause occasioning God to threaten them with destruction, was their vain confidence that they should possess the land still, ver. 24; the causes moving God to destroy them, were their sins, which are mentioned, ver. 25, 26.

Ver. 23. "Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying." When the hand of the Lord was upon him, when the Spirit of prophecy was upon him, then the word of the Lord came unto him. The Spirit brings the word of God unto men; prophets spake as they were inspired by the Spirit of God, not of their own heads; Ezekiel would rather be silent and dumb, than speak from himself.

Ver. 24. "They that inhabit those wastes of the land of Israel." Nebuchadnezzar, having been a year and half (as appears by 2 Kings xxv. 1—3; Jer. lii. 4—6) before Jerusalem with a great army of the worst of men, Ezek. vii. 24, the land of Israel, or Judah, (for Israel here is put for Judah,) could not but be greatly spoiled and laid waste; when once the temple and city were burnt and ruined, then was the land as a wilderness. Zephaniah calls that day "a day of wasteness and desolation," chap. i. 15; and Jeremiah saith, "The land was then a desolate wilderness," chap. xii. 10. Some were left by Nebuzaradan to inhabit the waste and desolate places of the land, Jer. xxxix. 10; he left some poor people, gave them vineyards and fields to labour in, and live upon; and Gedaliah being made governor, many flocked unto him, who had hid themselves in woods, holes, among the mountains, and fled to neighbouring countries for security: see Jer. xl.; 2 Kings xxv. 22, 23.

"Speak, saying, Abraham was one, and he inherited the land." The land of Canaan was promised to Abraham and his seed, Gen. xii. 7; xv. 18; xxvi. 4. Abraham did not inherit it personally, he had not so much as one foot of ground in it, Acts vii. 4, 5; he dwelt in it, Gen. xiii. 12, but had no inheritance in it, therefore they here were mistaken to say, "He was one, and he inherited the land." Abraham was one, yea one that believed, one that feared, loved, and obeyed God, yet for his oneness had he not the land: God gave him the land, having an eye to his faith and obedience, Gen. xv. 6, 7; xxii. 16—18.

"But we are many, the land is given us for inheritance." This was the argument with which they flattered themselves, who were now remaining in Judea, that they should still possess the land, and recover themselves again: The land, said they, was given us for inheritance, who are many, as well as Abraham, who was one; if he enjoyed it, being but one, shall not we much more, being many, and being his seed? What reason hath God to cast us out of that inheritance he gave our father, and us his children? he will not do it, we shall dwell here, grow up quickly, being many, and recover our former liberty and glory. But these men deceived themselves by this foolish reasoning: for God did not give Canaan to Abraham because he was one, and so the beginning of the number of Israel, but because of the covenant which he made with him, Gen. xv. 18; xvii. 7, 8; which covenant Abraham kept, living by faith in God, and bringing forth fruits suitable thereunto, which themselves did not: for had they been the children of Abraham, they would have done the works of Abraham, as Christ said, John viii. 39; but you may see what their works were in the two verses following this we are speaking of. Besides, they had forgotten what God had threatened against those he gave the land unto, if they did forsake and disobey him: Deut. xxviii. 63; xxx. 18, God told them they should not prolong their days, but perish, or be plucked off the land. Little reason had they also to argue that they should be spared and possess the land because they were many, for that, as Junius well observes, a greater number than they who had possessed the land were cut off, or removed out of the land.

Ver. 25. "Wherefore say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God." Their vain confidence provoked the Lord, and therefore here he commissions the prophet to tell them what he judged of them and their sayings. His thoughts were far differing from theirs; and Ezekiel must declare the Lord's, not his own thoughts unto them. And, l. 11 charges them with their sinful practices. 2. Denies them the possession of the land.

"Ye eat with the blood." It was commanded, before the law was given, that they should not eat blood, Gen. ix. 4; Lev. xix. 26; that is, neither blood let out from the flesh, nor blood with the flesh. One reason is given, Lev. xvii. 14, "Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh: for the life of all flesh is the blood thereof." The Hebrew is, נפש; the soul of all flesh is the blood thereof: nephesh is put sometimes for the whole man, as Gen. xvi. 26, "All the souls of the house of Jacob," that is, all the persons: sometimes for the more noble part of man, viz. the reasonable soul, Matt. x. 28, "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul:" sometimes for the affections, as Deut. vi. 5, "Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy heart, and with all thy soul: sometimes for the life, as Isa. liii. 12, "He hath poured out his soul unto death," that was, his life, John x. 15; and so it is rendered and to be taken in the place cited. "The life of all flesh is the blood thereof;" blood properly is not the life or soul of flesh, but the life or soul is said to be in the blood. Another reason why they might not eat blood, is in the 11th verse of that chapter, "I have given it to you upon the altar, to make an atonement for your souls; for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul." The blood being to be offered upon the altar, represented the blood of Christ, which was to be shed for the remission of sins, Matt. xxvi. 28, and therefore not to be eaten. A third reason was, that they might not be cruel and bloody-minded, but might in a special manner take heed of shedding man's blood, which is the ground of the prohibition, Gen. ix. 4, 5. But they minded neither the prohibition itself, nor the reasons of it; they did eat with the blood, that is, they did eat the flesh with the blood in it, or they did eat the blood drawn out from the flesh.

Some make question in these days, whether they may eat blood; and the ground of it is from Acts xv. 29, where it is ordered, that christians should abstain from blood and things strangled. But those that scruple eating of blood, do not scruple the eating of things strangled, as fowls and rabbits; and there is as much reason for that as the other. As for the thing itself, I shall only say what Christ saith, Matt. xv. 11, "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man, but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man;" and Paul, Titus i. 15, "Unto the pure all things are pure;" and 1 Tim. iv. 4, "Every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving."

"And lift up your eyes towards your idols." Idolatry was forbidden in the law with great severity; see Deut. xvii. 2—5; Exod. xxii. 20; xx. 4, 6; yet these Jews minded idols and affected them. Of lifting up the eyes to idols, see chap. xviii. 5; it notes adoration of them, and expectation of help from them.

"And shed blood." Shedding of blood was a grievous sin; and here it may be understood either of their oppressing innocent ones, taking away their lives illegally, or else of their children which they offered to Molech, which was forbidden unto them, Lev. xviii. 21; of which bloody sacrifices was spoken, Ezek. xvi. 20, 21.

"And shall ye possess the land?" This is a stinging interrogation, intimating, that whoever possessed it, they should not. What! do you look to possess the land, that do such things, that are so impious and profane? Did I not cast heathens for their wickedness out of the land you are in? and do you think to continue in it, that have exceeded them in wickedness? Ezek. v. 6. No, no, the land is not for you; Abraham did not such things, you are not his seed, therefore you shall not inherit the land.

Ver. 26. "Ye stand upon your sword." Not, you are in arms to defend yourselves against Babylonians, but you trust in your strength, are ready for spoil, violence, and shedding of innocent blood. When any offended them in word or deed, they meditated revenge, and laboured by the sword to right themselves, there was no place for justice, "but the land was full of bloody crimes," Ezek. vii. 23.

"Ye work abomination." Of abominations, and what sins are so called, was spoken, chap. v. 9; xviii. 12, 13, in the third observation. Ye do that which is detestable and loathsome to the very senses.

"And ye defile every one his neighbour's wife." Adultery was a grievous sin, and punishable with death, Lev. xx. 10; Deut. xxii. 22; yet this sin was frequent amongst them, Jer. v. 7, 8; vii. 9; ix. 2. That honourable state of marriage was abused, and the bed defiled, and it was a common and universal practice among them, "every one defiled his neighbour's wife."

"And shall ye possess the land?" Do ye trust in your swords, violate all justice, shed innocent blood, do abominable things, defile your neighbours' wives, and yet presume you shall possess the land? O impudent creatures, brazen-faced sinners, what vain persuasions have you taken up! it is madness for you to dream of possessing the land; rather than such as ye shall inherit it, it shall lie desolate without inhabitant. The word here for to "possess" is, jarash which is a word that signifies contrary things, as to possess and dispossess. Josh. xxiii. 5, "The Lord shall drive them from out of your sight, and ye shall possess their land;" here jarash signifies, to drive out, and to possess. When the Lord saith, "Shall ye possess the land?" his meaning is, they shall be dispossessed of it, and driven out of it.

Obs. 1. Men in great misery, under grievous afflictions, are apt to flatter and deceive themselves with one vain confidence or other. These Jews were conquered by the Babylonians, had their city, temple, strong holds, and pleasant places, all laid waste; they were a company of poor people that inhabited the wastes of the land, yet they flattered themselves with this conceit, that they should inherit and possess the land; and why? there was a number, a multitude of them: "Abraham was one, and he inherited the land: we are many, and it is given to us." Their afflicted condition might have wrought other apprehensions in them, and made them see and say, All the chief ones of the land are cut off, or carried away captives, the land is fallen into Nebuchadnezzar's hands, we are his servants and slaves, left to till the land and dress the vineyards, that so a revenue may be raised for him; but as for ourselves, we are like to be miserable all our days, yea, and our posterity after us; but their thoughts were otherwise, they looked to inherit the land, and be great ones in it, because of their number. Men in straits, and out of straits, make lies their refuge, which prove their ruin; see Isa. xxviii. 15, 17, 18; Jer. vii. 4; xiv. 15; xxvii. 14—17.

Obs. 2. Expectation of promises to be performed unto us, not performing the conditions required, is foolish and vain. "The land is given us for inheritance;" the Lord hath promised us that we shall inherit the land. They minded the promise, but forgot the condition, which was, That they should keep his judgments, Lev. xxv. 18; walk in his statutes, chap. xxvi. 3—6; then they should be blessed in the land, and dwell safely in it: yea, they were to observe all the statutes and judgments of the Lord, Deut. xi. 31, 32; and if they did not, the Lord threatened to cast them out of his sight, Jer. xvii. 15; and out of the land, Jer. xvi. 13: these things they forgot, catching bold of the promise, saying, "The land is given us for inheritance." It is madness and folly to look that God should perform what he hath promised, when we perform not the condition of the promise. When God promises a thing conditionally, the condition must be performed, else the Lord is not obliged. 2 Chron. vii. 14, "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land." Had they performed the conditions here required, their land had been healed, and not laid waste.

Obs. 3. The way multitudes go is no argument for the rightness and warrantableness of that way. These Jews were absolutely mistaken, yet they were many; the most judged the same thing, and went the same way. The greatest part of people every where mistake, cry, Peace, peace, when war and death are at the doors. The old world could not justify its way, because all walked in it except Noah and two or three more. It is not safe to be of the multitude's mind, and to tread in their steps, "for broad is the way that leads to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat." The prophet counselled the Jews, Ezek. xx. 18, not to walk in the statutes of their fathers, nor to observe their judgments, but to walk in the Lord's statutes and judgments, and to do them: better be alone in God's way, than be with multitudes in a false way.

Obs. 4. The true children of Abraham may be known by their works. These Jews stuck upon this much, that they were Abraham's seed: "Abraham was one, and we are many;" we come from his loins, and the land was given to his seed for an inheritance; and who should inherit it, but we who are his seed, and so the right heirs unto it? If it be true which you assert, you shall inherit the land; if you be the seed and heirs of Abraham, it shall be so. But come, let us try that by your works, saith God; "Ye eat with the blood, and lift up your eyes towards your idols, and shed blood; ye stand upon your sword, work abomination, and defile every one his neighbour's wife." And are these the works of Abraham? he did no such things. Were you the children of Abraham, ye would do the works of Abraham, keep the covenant as he did; ye would fear, honour, love, and obey me, deal justly, live chastely, and do good in your generation: these things you do not, therefore you are not his children, his heirs, have no right to the land.

Ver. 27—29. Say thou thus unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; As I live, surely they that are in the wastes shall fall by the sword, and him that is in the open field will I give to the beasts to be devoured, and they that be in the forts and in the caves shall die of the pestilence. For I will lay the land most desolate, and the pomp of her strength shall cease; and the mountains of Israel shall be desolate, that none shall pass through. Then shall they know that I am the Lord, when I have laid the land most desolate because of all their abominations which they have committed.

In the 27th and 28th verses, the judgments threatened are particularly mentioned.

1. The sword for those in the wastes.

11. The devouring beasts for those in the fields.

III. The plague for those in the forts and caves.

IV. Desolation for the land and mountains.

V. Cessation of strength, and the pomp of it.

All these confirmed with an oath.

Ver. 27. "As I live." The vain confidence of these Jews so provoked God, that he swears they shall not inhabit the land, and that by his life; As sure as I am the living God, ye that are so guilty of such great sins, and so unlike unto Abraham, shall be rooted out and destroyed.

"Surely they that are in the wastes shall fall by the sword." After the destruction of Jerusalem, many got into other cities and towns, which had been plundered, fired, and spoiled, thinking that there would be safety for them; but God would cause some to search those places, and sheathe their swords in the bowels of the Jews hid in them. The Hebrew for "by the sword" is, כהרב in the sword, but כ here is "by."

"Him that is in the open field will I give to the beasts to be devoured." Some, in this time of common calamity, kept in the open fields, or in the face of the fields, as the Hebrew is, fearing to venture into any town or city, and so promised to themselves security there; but the fields were no shelter unto them, God had lions, bears, wolves, and such wild beasts, which found them out, tore them in pieces, and devoured them.

"They that be in the forts and in the caves shall die of the pestilence." Some were got into strong forts, others were hid in caves of the earth, where none could find them, or come at them; these seemed to be out of all danger, but the pestilence and famine could reach them there. In that land were forts, rocks, holes to hide men in; see Isa. ii. 19; 1 Sam. xiii. 6; Josh. x. 16; 1 Sam. xxiv. 3; Judg. vi. 2.

Ver. 28. "For I will lay the land most desolate." Canaan was a land which abounded with all good things, it flowed with milk and honey, and was "the glory of all lands," Ezek. xx. 6; yet this land would God lay most desolate. מְשֻׁמָּה מְשֻׁמָּה desolation, desolation, it should be a wilderness, extremely desolate.

"The pomp of her strength shall cease." In chap. vii. 24, we had these words, "I will also make the pomp of the strong to cease:" and, chap. xxx. 18, "The pomp of her strength shall cease:" the land shall be so battered, wasted, consumed, that she shall no more trust in any strength of hers. Junius refers it to the ark, or sanctuary, called "the excellency of their strength," chap. xxiv. 21.

"The mountains of Israel shall be desolate, that none shall pass through." The land of Israel was full of mountains, which were not barren, but some for pasture, some for vines, some for cedars and other trees, and some for cattle: when they were so, many paths were made to the mountains, and they were frequently visited; but they should be desolate, without cattle, trees, vines, or any to pass by or through them; none should come over the mountains to worship at Jerusalem.

Ver. 29. "Then shall they know that I am the Lord, when I have laid the land most desolate, because of all their abominations which they have committed." Here the final cause of God's destroying them and their land is pointed out, and that is, the glory of God in their acknowledging his just proceedings. Before, they said, "His ways were not equal," but now they should acknowledge the equity of his ways, and that they had deserved such things.

Obs. 1. When God is resolved upon punishing a people, there is no place or refuge to secure them from his strokes and judgments. Here were men got into waste places, into open fields, into forts and caves, yet none of these secured them; the Lord had sworn to destroy them, and the sword finds out those in the waste and ruinous places; the wild beasts finding others in the open fields, devour them; and those who were got into the forts, and hid in caves, the pestilence and famine consumed. They thought to flee and hide themselves from the vengeance of God, but it could not be; had they gone down to the bottom of the sea, yea, down to hell, God would have met with them there, Amos ix. 2—4. No town, no fort, no field, no cave can protect that person whom God pursues; if men and beasts cannot come at him, God hath the arrows of famine and pestilence to shoot into his sides and liver. Let us take heed how we offend God, and provoke him to set upon our destruction; there is no place, person, or privilege, can protect us from his stroke. Let us get into Christ, hide ourselves in him, in the clefts of that Rock; then we shall be safe, whatsoever storms are abroad.

Obs. 2. It is men's sins which lay lands waste, and bring remarkable judgments upon them. Canaan was laid desolate, the pomp of her strength ceased, the mountains had none to pass by or over them; yea, "the land was laid most desolate;" and why? "because of all their abominations." Their sins exceeded the sins of the heathens, and they had answerable judgments; their manifold abominations brought manifold judgments. They had the best land in the world, and should have been the best people; but they degenerated and provoked God so by their abominations, that he made their plagues wonderful great, and of long continuance, Deut. xxviii. 59. Seventy years did they suffer, and the land also, which suffering they brought upon themselves and the land, as the Lord tells them, Zech. vii. 14, "They laid the pleasant land desolate;" they by their abominations did it: they caused the temple to be burnt, the testimonies of divine presence to be removed, the cities, fields, and mountains, to be desolate.

Obs. 3. By severe judgments God convinces men of the equity of his way, and causes them to give glory to his name. "Then shall they know that I am the Lord, when I have laid the land most desolate because of all," &c. Severe judgments awaken conscience, sharpen the understanding, and cause men to search, judge, and condemn themselves, and withhold to justify the Lord; they have influence into heathens: Jer. xxii. 8, 9, "Many nations shall pass by this city, and they shall say every man to his neighbour, Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this great city? Then they shall answer, Because they have forsaken the covenant of the Lord their God, and worshipped other gods, and served them." Thus they justified God, and gave him glory, when they saw his terrible judgments upon Jerusalem and the land of Canaan.

Ver. 30, 31. Also, thou son of man, the children of thy people still are talking against thee by the walls and in the doors of the houses, and speak one to another, every one to his brother, saying, Come, I pray you, and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the Lord. And they come unto thee as the people cometh, and they sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them: for with their mouth they shew much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness.

In these verses, and the rest to the end of the chapter, is contained a reproof or complaint of the captives in Babylon, for their detraction, hypocrisy, and covetousness.

I. Their detraction, in ver. 30.

II. Their hypocrisy in the end of ver. 30, and most of ver. 31.

III. Their covetousness, in the end of ver. 31.

Ver. 30, "The children of thy people." It is not, the children of my people; God would not own them, they were so wicked; but, "the children of thy people." Of these words before, ver. 2.

"Still are talking against thee by the walls, and in the doors of the houses." To speak against God or man is to detract from them, and disparage them.

2 Chron. xxxii. 16, Sennacherib, by his servants, spake against the Lord, and against Hezekiah, and that they said was detracting from the power of God, and truth of what Hezekiah had said. Acts xxviii.

22, "As concerning this sect, we know that it is every where spoken against;" that is, it is disparaged and condemned for a wicked sect. Numb. xii. 1,

"Miriam and Aaron spake against Moses because of the Ethiopian woman; and said, Hath the Lord indeed spoken only by Moses? hath he not also spoken by us?" their speaking against Moses was detracting from him.

So here, their speaking against Ezekiel was to defame and disparage him; and this they did openly and privately, by the walls where any met, and in their doors where friends met.

Some take the words thus, The children of thy people are speaking of thee by the walls, and in their doors; they give thee good words, and consult of coming to thee; but I conceive the former sense best.

"And speak one to another, every one to his brother, saying, Come, I pray you, and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the Lord." Though they vilified the prophet, yet now, one being come to him that had escaped at the destruction of Jerusalem, they excite and stir up one the other to go to the prophet, and hear what he had to say. The smiting of Jerusalem was a great affliction unto them, and they hoped to hear somewhat from him to refresh and comfort them, especially seeing that he had spent three years in speaking against the nations, and said nothing unto them.

Ver. 31. "And they come unto thee as the people cometh." They flocked to the prophet in troops, as people use to do to public places for religion or pleasure; they hasten thither, crowd in, take up all places, and sit in expectation to hear somewhat that may please, or to catch somewhat they may carp at, and make advantage of, which some expositors affirm to be the end of their coming here. The Hebrew for "as the people cometh," is, according to the coming or entrance of the people; some come for to hear notions and novelties, some to scoff, some to censure; few come upon right grounds, or for right ends.

"They sit before thee as my people." They carry it before thee as my people, they hearken to what thou sayest, and make as if they would not lose one truth, but lay up all, and do as my people ought to do, viz. practise what they hear; they seem before thee to be saints, the people of God, as those that would learn righteousness.

"They hear thy words, but they will not do them." They took pains to hear the prophet, they came to his house, as chap. viii. 1; xiv. 1. It was not likely that they had public places of meeting; the Babylonians did not favour them so much as to indulge them with such liberty. Wherever it was they heard the prophet, they did not do what he said, they obeyed not him, nor the Lord who sent him.

"For with their mouth they show much love."

From the teeth outwards they professed much kindness to the prophet, they gave him smooth and good words. The Hebrew for "much love" is, אגרימ agavim, from אגר agar, which signifies, to be much in love with one, to be taken with the sight, hearing, or company of one; and they make as if they were deeply in love, much affected with the sight and hearing of thee, when it was not so: here was their hypocrisy. The Septuagint hath these words thus, ὅτι ψεύδουσιν ἐν τῷ στόματι αὐτῶν, because there was a lie in their mouth; they dissembled with the prophet. Arias Montanus renders the word agavim, subsannationes, which is, mockings, with bending the brows, and snuffing the nose. The Vulgate is to that purpose, they turn thy words into a song, they jeer at what thou sayest; so that translation Vatablus follows, they laugh at thy doctrine.

The word for "show" is, אשא asah, which usually signifies, to do, to effect, to perfect; but here hath a differing signification, viz. to show, declare, or profess: and so Polanus tells that the word in Matt. xii. 33 is to be taken, "Either make the tree good, and his fruit good; or else make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt: for the tree is known by his fruit." Look upon the works which I have done, and by them profess, declare, what I am: if I have done evil works, declare me and my works to be evil; if I have done good, declare me and my works to be good; for such as the tree is, such is the fruit.

"But their heart goeth after their covetousness."

They looked upon the prophet, and listened to his words, but their hearts looked another way. The word for "covetousness" is, bitzha, from בצז to wound, break, damnify; and metaphorically, to be covetous, given to get and gain, intimating that covetous men do wound, break, damnify themselves and others. The Septuagint has these words thus, ὁπίσω τῶν μασημάτων αὐτῶν καρδία αὐτῶν πόρευεται, their heart goeth after their pollutions; "covetousness" is a defiling thing. The Greek word for "covetousness" is, πλεονεξία, a desire of having more: not simply of having more, but more than God allows us. When we go beyond the bounds he hath set us, which bounds are in 1 Tim. vi. 8; Heb. xiii. 5, if we be not content with food, raiment, and such things as we have, but let out our desires to more, we are covetous. They being in captivity, having little in respect of what they once had in their own land, they were not contented with what they had, but let out their minds and hearts to more, and so were covetous.

Obs. I. It is the portion of God's servants to be ill spoken of, and that from time to time, by those they live amongst, and do good unto. "The children of thy people still are talking against thee by the walls, and in the doors of the houses." They had spoken ill of Ezekiel before, they did it still, openly and secretly. David met with such a portion from many; Psal. xli. 7, "All that hate me whisper together against me;" Psal. lxxix. 12, "They that sit in the gate speak against me;" Psal. cix. 2, "The mouth of the wicked and the mouth of the deceitful are opened against me; they have spoken against me with a lying tongue;" Psal. cxix. 23, "Princes also did sit and speak against me:" great and small, publicly and privately, did defame David. Jeremiah escaped not the lash of the tongue; chap. xviii. 18, "Come, let us smite him with the tongue." Paul, that precious servant of Christ, how was he spoken against! he saith, he was made as the filth of the world, and the off-scouring of all things, 1 Cor. iv. 13. Look what filth is washed out of, or rust scoured off, from pots, and thrown out of doors, such was Paul and his name made. It is the basest office to set our tongues on work to detract from the worth of any; if there be evil in men, our charity should cover it, if virtue, our wisdom should commend it. It is a devilish sin to speak evil of others; he first brought this sin into the world by speaking evil of God, Gen. iii. 4, 5; and too many are like unto him, in speaking ill of the servants of God, but we must steel ourselves to pass through bad report; see 2 Cor. vi. 8; Rom. iii. 8.

Obs. 2. Whatever wicked men speak against the prophets and servants of God, he knows and takes notice of the same. "Son of man, they speak against thee by the walls and in the doors of the houses." Let them speak openly or secretly, God hears them. When they said, "Come, let us devise devices against Jeremiah; come, let us smite him with the tongue, and let us not give heed to any of his words," chap. xviii. 18, God heard them, and revealed to Jeremiah what they said. There is not a word spoken by any, but the Lord is privy to it; and not only words, but thoughts also; Isa. lix. 7. "Their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity." Let us look narrowly to our hearts and tongues, for God knows the thoughts of the one, and the words of the other.

Obs. 3. How religiously and cunningly soever hypocrites do carry it, their hypocrisy is known to God, and shall be discovered. Hypocrisy is a doing or speaking that to God or men, wherein the heart and spirit of a man is not. Those men pretended religiously, they call upon one another to hear what word the Lord gave out to the prophet, and they come, being excited one by another, and sit before the prophet as God's people; they attended to what he said, as if they meant punctually to observe the same, but they did not do what he said, their hearts were not in the business. What worshipping was this of God, to give him an ear, and the world their heart! So, to speak against the prophet behind his back, and to speak fair, show much love to his face, was not this hypocrisy? did they not carry it religiously towards God, and cunningly towards the prophet? however they carried it, the Lord saw their hypocrisy, and discovered the same. The scribes and Pharisees wore long robes, made long prayers, and under pretence of them devoured widows' houses; but the Lord Christ knew their hypocrisy, and made it known, though religiously and craftily carried, Matt. xxiii.

Obs. 4. Many hearers pretend much love and kindness to the prophets, and yet behind their backs afford them not a good word. When these Jews came to the prophet's house, they showed much love with their mouths; but when they were by the walls, and at their own doors, they showed as much ill will with their mouths, they spake against him, they slandered him, they disgraced him: out of the same mouth came bitter and sweet. The Jews and Herodians pretended much love to Christ, and said, "Master, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, neither carest thou for any man; for thou regardest not the person of men. Tell us therefore, What thinkest thou? is it lawful to give tribute to Caesar, or not?" Matt. xxii. 16—18. Here they showed much kindness with their mouths, when there was gall and bitterness in their hearts.¹

Obs. 5. When men draw near to God in any duty of his worship, he principally looks which way the heart stands, whether that be real, and towards him. "Their heart," saith God, "goeth after their covetousness;" it went not after the word, after God himself. Isa. xxix. 13, "This people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honour me, but have removed their heart far from me." When their bodies were in the temple, their hearts were in their shops; when their lips were speaking to God, their hearts were conversing with the creatures: God's eye was upon their hearts. The heart is the principal part in man, and it is the principal thing God aims at: Prov. xxiii. 26, "My son, give me thine heart:" not thy hat, thy hand, thy tongue, thy foot, but "thine heart." Whatever he hath without the heart is nothing, but having the heart, he hath all; whatever is wanting; let the eye be wanting, a man is blind; let the leg be wanting, a man is lame, let the whole body be wanting, a man is sick; yet if God have the heart, he hath all. Delilah had Samson's bodily presence, yet that sufficed her not, because she thought she had not his heart: Judg. xvi. 15, "How canst thou say, I love thee, when thine heart is not with me?" God hath no love from us, nothing of us, when our hearts are not with him.

Obs. 6. Men have carnal hearts in spiritual duties. These men were hearing Ezekiel prophecy, and whilst they were hearing, their hearts went after their covetousness: the word was in their ears, and the world in their hearts; Ezekiel tells them of the things of God, and they mind the things of the earth. To be earthly-minded at any time is blamable, Phil. iii. 19; but to be so in spiritual things is grievous, it is a despising, a debasing of them: when the things of God, of Christ, heaven, salvation, life, grace, and glory, are presented unto us, which should take up our thoughts abundantly, affect our hearts powerfully, for us then to mind the dust, sticks, straws, and pebbles on the earth, to have our hearts upon them, that is a great wickedness, horrible ingratitude. Rom. viii. 6, "To be carnally-minded is death;" it argues a dead soul, it tends unto death, and ends in eternal death.

Obs. 7. Covetousness is a sin which adheres to professors. These that came to hear the prophet, and sat before him as the people of God, their hearts went after their covetousness, they had hearts exercised with covetous practices, as it is in 2 Pet. ii. 14. The Pharisees made profession of religion, they were hearers of Christ, but the text saith, they were covetous, Luke xvi. 14. Judas, an apostle and follower of Christ, had a covetous heart, and sold his Master for thirty pieces of silver, Matt. xxvi. 15. Demas forsook Paul, having loved the present world, 2 Tim. iv. 10; while he was with Paul, his heart was in the world. John, seeing this evil incident to christians, dissuades them from the love of the world by a strong argument; 1 John ii. 15, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him;" he doth not know God to be his Father, and love him as a Father, that loves the world; he may think, say, and swear that he loves the Father, but the Spirit of truth saith, "The love of the Father is not in him." Let christians, therefore, take heed of this sin, for besides that it argues the love of God is not in us, it chokes the seed of God's word, which should beget grace in us, Matt. xiii. 22; it makes us idolaters, Eph. v. 5: yea, covetousness unfits us for church communion, 1 Cor. v. 11; it shuts us out of heaven, 1 Cor. vi. 10; it exposes us to wrath, Col. iii. 5, 6, to God's hatred, Psal. x. 3, to a curse, 2 Pet. ii. 14.

Ver. 32, 33. And, lo, thou art unto them as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument: for they hear thy words, but they do them not. And when this cometh to pass, (lo, it will come,) then shall they know that a prophet hath been among them.

Ver. 32. "Thou art unto them as a very lovely song." The Hebrew is, נִישֵׁר עֲנִינִים as a song of lovers; so the word is rendered, Jer. iv. 30, "Thy lovers will despise thee," it is the same word. Lovers have delightful songs, to please their ears, and pass away time; so the prophet's preaching was delightful unto them to hear; but as, in music and singing, there is nothing comes of it when done, so, they heard the prophet, but nothing came of their hearing. The Septuagint hath it, ὡς φωνή ψαλτηρίας, as the voice of a psaltery, which was an instrument to sing unto. Some render the words, thou wilt be to them a song of scoffers, that is, however they seem to be greatly pleased and affected with thy prophesying, yet in their hearts they laugh at thee, and deride thee.

"Of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument." When one both plays well and sings sweetly, that music of all others is most taking, affects the ear, and stirs the spirits; so Ezekiel's voice was pleasing to them, and he handled his matter well, they were, or seemed to be, stirred and affected with what he delivered. The Hebrew for "can play well on an instrument" is, נָן יִשְׁבַּח, which Montanus renders, of one that knows well how to play. Agan signifies, to play upon a musical instrument, and also to sing to it.

"For they hear thy words, but they do them not." Some heard not at all; those that heard rested in what they heard, or abused it, jeering and scoffing at the prophet as a pleasant songster; they were not doers of what was taught them, they received not the truth with love, they mingled it not with faith, they yielded not obedience to it, which things do make a doer of the word: see 2 Thess. ii. 10; Heb. iv. 2; Rom. v. 17.

Ver. 33. "When this cometh to pass, (so, it will come.)" When the judgments threatened shall be made good, viz. that those in the wastes shall fall by the sword, and those in the open fields shall be devoured by the beasts, they in the forts and caves shall die of the famine and pestilence, when the land and mountains shall be laid most desolate, which things will certainly come to pass, whatever thoughts they have, or false prophets say to the contrary; for I have determined these things against them, commissioned thee to declare them, and I, being omnipotent, will in due time accomplish them.

"Then shall they know that a prophet hath been among them." The execution of what is threatened shall convince them, and make them say, We were deceived about Ezekiel; he spake not out of ill will to us, or of his own head; but he was sent to denounce the judgments of God against us for our sins, which he faithfully did, and we now feel the weight of them, and find he was a prophet, not a songster, that his matter had dread in it, and was not to be sported with.

Obs. 1. That men may be much affected with hearing the prophets and preachers of God, and yet be vile hypocrites, very wicked. These men that flocked to hear Ezekiel, and unto whom he was "as a very lovely song, as a song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument," they were backbiters and covetous. There was none in Babylon pleased them like Ezekiel; they said, Come, come, let us go and hear Ezekiel; they were as much taken with him as any are with music, with pleasant voices, tunes, and songs, which oftentimes ravish the hearers; yet they were unsound at heart, the word did them no good, they amended not their lives, they parted not with their lusts. In Christ's time, the people flocked to hear him, were affected with him; Mark xii. 37, "The common people heard him gladly;" and, chap. xiv. 43, "Judas and a great multitude with him, came to take Christ, and laid hands on him," ver. 46; and, chap. xv. 8, 13, 14, the multitude cried, "Crucify, crucify him." Many of them that heard him gladly before, were much affected with his heavenly doctrine, now cried out, "Crucify him," and so showed what vile hypocrites they were. In our days some preachers are as a pleasant song to some persons, they are affected with their voice, notions, gestures, expressions, matter, arguments, stories; they sigh, they weep sometimes, and are ravished at other times, they never heard such a man, such a sermon, such things; and yet are not changed in their hearts, reformed in their tongues or lives, but are notorious hypocrites.

Obs. 2. When people hear the preacher, and do not practise what is taught, the word is no more to them than a song, or a fit of music, nor the preacher more than a musician or fiddler unto them. "Thou art unto them as a lovely song of one that can play well on an instrument, for they hear thy words, but they do them not." These words are a proof and reason of the former. Should we tell people, You esteem the word preached no more than an idle, amorous, witty, scurrilous song, nor the preacher any more than he that sings such a song, they would think themselves much wronged; but it is so in God's account, when they hear the preacher, and do not practise what they hear. A fit of music affects for the present, but quickly passes away, and both the music and the man are forgotten; so is it here, people are affected somewhat at a sermon, but sermon and preacher are quickly forgotten.

Obs. 3. Hearing of the word is good, but not to be rested in. They are not blamed for hearing, that is a duty which belongs to all, James v. 19; but they rested in their hearing; they made not the "word a lamp unto their feet, and a light unto their paths," as David did, Psal. cxix. 105; they did not meditate on it, digest it, turn it into good nourishment, that so they might express the virtue of it in their lives; they heard the word, and that was all. Of such that is verified, Matt. xiii. 13, "Hearing they hear not;" the word hath no influence into them, impression upon them, expression from them; they are no better than those that never heard; they are like men that observe wind and tide, but never make a voyage. 2 Tim. iii. 7, there were women ever learning, but never attained to the knowledge of the truth; and many are ever hearing, and never come to practice. Luke xiii. 26, "Thou hast taught in our streets;" they had heard Christ, rested in their hearing, and that was their undoing.

Obs. 4. God expects men should be not only hearers, but doers also, of his word. "They hear thy words, but they do them not." Hearing alone pleases not God; he gave not his word to be heard only, but to be heard and practised; they are good hearers who turn words into actions: James i. 22, "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." He tells them they deal fallaciously, they baffle and delude themselves, not others, if they hear the word and do it not; though there be power in the word to save your souls, yet if ye be not doers of it, ye deceive yourselves, and will lose your souls. Matt. vii. 26, 27, "Every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell, and great was the fall of it."

He that hears Christ's heavenly doctrine and doth not practise it, is not built upon the rock, but upon the sand; and when the trial comes, will be deceived of his expectation, his house will down, his soul will be lost. It is not hearing, it is not crying, "Lord, Lord," that will open a door for a man to enter into heaven by: ver. 21, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven;" not any one which goes no further; "but he that doth the will of my Father, which is in heaven." My Father, saith Christ, hath made known his will; he would have men do his will, and then he will open unto them, and let them into heaven. It is not men's hearing or saying, but their doing what they hear, which pleads most strongly for their entrance into heaven. Many men commend the preacher, the word, with their tongues, but disgrace both with their lives: the best commenders of the preachers and their doctrine are men's lives, when they are doers of the word. Matt. xxv. 21, it is "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into thy master's joy:" not, well heard, or, well said, but, "well done." Let us see to it, that we be not hearers only, but doers of the word: Rev. xxii. 14, "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

Obs. 5. The judgments threatened by the prophets of God shall certainly take place. "When this cometh to pass (to, it will come)." He means the sword, wild beasts, pestilence, utter desolation, which were threatened. It seemed somewhat unlikely, that, after a war, a few poor people left in wastes, holes, caves, forts, woods, and fields, should be cut off: but the Lord had said it, and he did effect it. How improbable or impossible soever things appear to us, what God threatens by his prophets to do (without repentance intervene) he will accomplish.

Obs. 6. Whatever the thoughts of wicked ones are for the present of the prophets, the time will come when they shall have other kind of thoughts of them. "When this cometh to pass, then shall they know," &c. When the sword, wild beasts, pestilence, utter desolation, are upon them and the land, when they are in straits, in the jaws of death, then they will have other apprehensions of Ezekiel than now they have. Ezekiel at present is as a "lovely song, like a man that hath a pleasant voice," some affect him, some scoff at him, others censure him: but when death is before them, then their thoughts will alter, then they will say, Ezekiel told us of these things that are come upon us, and how to avoid them, he called upon us to consider our ways, to turn from all our iniquities, and to provide for our souls; we then slighted him, only gave him the hearing of what he said, but now we see he was a prophet of God, delivered weighty things, and we were fools that we hearkened not unto him, doing what he said. When young men, who despise all the preachers say against whoredom and wanton courses, come to be in years, find their flesh and bodies to be consumed, then will they have other thoughts of them and what they preached, then will they say, "How have we hated instruction, and our hearts despised reproof! we obeyed not the voice of our teachers, nor inclined our ears to them that instructed us," Prov. v. 11—13: there were prophets amongst us, who sought our good, who tendered mercy and many precious truths unto us, but we were so blinded with our lusts, so conceited of our own ways, that we rejected them, and whatever they tendered us.

Obs. 7. The prophets will be witnesses at last against disobedient hearers. "They shall know that a prophet hath been amongst them." They heard

Ezekiel, but did not what he said; his person, his doctrine, did at last bear witness against them. Wherever the Lord sets a faithful preacher, who takes pains among the people, declaring the mind of God unto them, and they do not practise what they are taught, that preacher will rise up in judgment against them; his doctrine, his prayers, tears, drops of sweat, his life, his sufferings, reproaches, death, will all be witnesses against them. If the rust of men's silver and gold will be witnesses against them, and eat their flesh like fire, James v. 3, because they let their silver and gold lie by them, and did not improve the same for public good, and in charitable uses; how much more will the truths of God, which the preachers have commended unto them, (being neglected, and not improved to the good of the hearers and others,) bear witness against them, and eat their flesh, yea, their souls, like fire! Thousands who have flocked after ministers to hear them, will find those ministers witnesses against them, because they heard them only, and never did what they heard. What a multitude of witnesses will London and England have against them at the latter day! all the godly, faithful ministers whose doctrine hath been heard, but never obeyed.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Ver. 1—6. And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, prophesy against the shepherds of Israel, prophesy, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God unto the shepherds; Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves! should not the shepherds feed the flocks? Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with the wool, ye kill them that are fed: but ye feed not the flock. The diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye healed that which was sick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye sought that which was lost; but with force and with cruelty have ye ruled them. And they were scattered, because there is no shepherd: and they became meat to all the beasts of the field, when they were scattered. My sheep wandered through all the mountains, and upon every high hill: yea, my flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth, and none did search or seek after them.

EZEKIEL having reprov'd and threatened the judgments of God against the people for their sins, he comes in this chapter to deal with the governors and rulers of them, through whose default they became so wicked, and suffered the Babylonish yoke. In this chapter are these things considerable:

I. A reproof of the shepherds, and judgment threatened against them, in the first ten verses.

II. God's care of, and comfortable provision for, his flock, ver. 11—22.

III. A sweet prophecy of Christ and his kingdom, under the figure of David, ver. 23, to the end.

Ver. 1. "The word of the Lord came unto me, saying." These words we have often had. By them the prophet declares himself to be a true prophet: false ones spake of their own heads, they had no word from God, they deluded the people with lying words; but Ezekiel had a word from God, and that word he commended to the people.

Ver. 2. "Prophesy against the shepherds of Israel." The shepherds of Israel were the chief rulers, both political and ecclesiastical, princes, magistrates, prophets, priests, and Levites. Isa. xlv. 28. Cyrus is called a shepherd; and, Zech. xi. 17. those in the church are called shepherds. Jer. xxv. 34. "Howl, ye shepherds, and cry; wallow yourselves in ashes, ye principal of the flock;" that is, as the flock is considered politically and ecclesiastically, ye are the shepherds, the principal thereof; "howl, ye," &c. They are called shepherds, because they are to govern, protect, provide for, and to feed them.

"Woe be to the shepherds of Israel." Herein general judgment is threatened against these shepherds, "Woe be to them!" This word is a comprehensive word, and includes variety of evils in it; not some one, but divers sad judgments should come upon them. The word for "shepherds" is from רָעָה to feed, and metaphorically, to govern, teach, and so to feed men.

"That do feed themselves! should not the shepherds feed the flock?" Here was their sin, they fed themselves, not the flock. Those who are shepherds in state or church, are set up for the good of the people, to benefit and advantage them, not to seek themselves, to draw from the people what they can to make themselves great; they should be content with their allowance, and lay out themselves fully and wholly for the good of them that are committed to their trust. This interrogation, "Should not the shepherds feed the flock?" sets out the heinousness of their sin, and the indignation of God against it: What! you shepherds, and not feed the flock? you pervert the course of nature, and violate the order which God hath set, and that is intolerable, he will visit severely for it.

The word for "flock" is, צֶמֶד which signifies, a multitude of sheep or goats. The Septuagint renders it, sheep, and in a metaphorical sense it is put for the people: Zech. ix. 16; Micah vii. 14, people are resembled unto sheep.

First, sheep are foolish, silly creatures, not like foxes, lions, leopards, which are subtle and crafty; so are people for the generality of them. Jer. v. 21. "Hear now this, O foolish people, and without understanding; which have eyes, and see not; which have ears, and hear not:" they had no ears to hearken unto the word of God, no eyes to see the hand of God, no understanding to discern the mind and dealings of God. So Deut. xxxii. 28, "They are a nation void of counsel, neither is there any understanding in them:" they act like foolish, silly people, that know nothing of God.

Secondly, Sheep are apt to go astray; I Sam. xvii. 20. David "left the sheep with a keeper," he knew they would wander had they not a keeper; so people are apt to stray from that which is just and equal, to turn aside from the ways of God: Isa. liii. 6. "All we like sheep are gone astray;" and Jer. ii. 13. "My people have forsaken me the fountain of living waters;" that is, they have forsaken me their Shepherd, who provided all good things for them.

Thirdly, When one sheep goes out of the way, many follow, run after that one; so it is with the multitude. 2 Sam. xx. 1, 2. "One Sheba, the son of Bichri, a Benjamite, blew a trumpet, saying, We have no part in David, neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse; every man to his tents, O Israel. So every man of Israel went up from after David, and followed Sheba the son of Bichri." Here was a ram led all Israel into rebellion. So Theudas stepped out of the way, and presently four hundred others joined themselves unto him; and Judas of Galilee drew much people after him, Acts v. 36, 37.

Fourthly, Sheep are exposed to much danger, they are a prey to dogs, lions, wolves, foxes, bears, and such wild beasts; so are the people exposed to spoil, and to be preyed upon by the great ones: Zeph. iii. 3. Jerusalem's "princes within her are roaring lions, her judges are evening wolves;" they preyed upon the poor people. Jer. l. 17, "Israel is a scattered sheep; the lions have driven him away: first the King of Assyria hath devoured him, and last this Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon hath broken his bones."

Fifthly, They are subject to many diseases, and apt to infect one another. It is observed, that of all creatures, a man, a horse, and a sheep are subject unto most diseases; and quickly doth one sheep communicate this infection unto another. So people are subject to many distempers, seditions, insurrections, rebellions, errors, heresies, superstition, idolatry, and what not: Ezek. ii. 3, the children of Israel are a rebellious nation; Jer. vi. 28, "They are all grievous revolters, walking with slanders: they are brass and iron; they are all corrupters;" one infected another. Jer. v. 23, "This people hath a revolting and a rebellious heart;" the disease was come to their hearts. Isa. i. 4, "Ah sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil-doers, children that are corrupters;" they corrupted one another with evil opinions and practices.

Ver. 3. "Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with the wool." The Septuagint, Vulgate, and French have it, Ye eat the milk. The Hebrew word is, חֵלֶב which signifies fat, because it is made of milk kine fatness; what they feed upon hath a fatty milkiness in it which turns to fat. The word for milk is, חֵלֶב and that for "fat," חֵלֶב which also notes the principal of every thing. By these expressions of eating the fat, and clothing themselves with the wool, the prophet taxeth the covetousness of the princes, priests, and false prophets, who pretended the public good, but were intent upon their own profit and pleasure: they were not content with what stipends were allowed them, but devised ways and means to draw the wealth of the people into their own coffers, which is here called "the fat and the wool." The word for "wool" is, צֹמֶר which notes all sorts of wool, even cotton wool which grows upon trees. Had they any wool upon their backs (as our proverb is) these governors would fleece them of it.

"Ye kill them that are fed: but ye feed not the flock." The Hebrew for the first word is, ye sacrifice the thick: חֵלֶב הַבָּרִיאָה is from בָּרָא to create, and בָּרִיאָה bari, is, fat, flesh, because a sheep becomes fat and flesh by a kind of creation, there is the power of God put forth in it; and when men grow wealthy it is by the power of God; Deut. viii. 17, 18, it is not men's power, and the might of their hands, that gives them their wealth, but it is the Lord gives power to get wealth. The false prophets kill their souls with lies, with corrupt doctrines; and the magistrates found out ways to cut off them that were rich for their estates: thus they sought themselves, but fed not the flock. The princes and rulers did not maintain justice, preserve the innocent, relieve the oppressed, nor the priests and prophets teach them sound and wholesome doctrine.

Ver. 4. "The diseased have ye not strengthened." Here are five particulars in this verse, concerning the sheep, which the shepherds should have minded, but neglecting them all, are severely taxed for them. 1. They were diseased. Sheep are liable to various diseases, faintings, weaknesses. Montanus renders the word החלש those that languish and are feeble; those who languished in their estates or spirits, were not strengthened; those who wanted bread for their bodies and for their souls, were not looked after. The Septuagint is, the weak ye have not strengthened.

"Neither have ye healed that which was sick." 2. A sheep may be diseased, yet not be sick. That is sick, cui totum corpus dolet, when the whole body is pained, saith Lavater; the whole body is so dis-tempered that the members of it cannot perform their offices. There were many among the Jews who were sick in their estates and spirits, and could not perform the duties of their general or particular callings, who had none to heal them.

"Neither have ye bound up that which was broken." 3. Brokenness. Some sheep had their flesh torn by dogs or bushes, their legs and other bones about them, broken or put out of joint; divers amongst them had broken estates, broken spirits, and none bound them up. The word הבט signifies binding, as men are bound in prison; binding, as men bind packs to horses; binding, as men are bound by laws to obey or suffer; binding of ornaments to the head, and binding up of wounds to cure and heal them, as here.

"Neither have ye brought again that which was driven away." 4. Some were driven away. Storms, dogs, wolves, and other wild beasts, oftentimes cause the sheep to run this way and that way, to fall into ditches and pits, which, if looked after, might be preserved and reduced. The wars and other evils forced many Jews to flee into other countries, and none in place did think of them, that they might be brought back.

"Neither have ye sought that which was lost." 5. Sheep being wandering creatures are oftentimes lost, Luke xv. 4. Among the Jews there were some who had straggled from the rest, and were lost, lost through corrupt opinions and practices; they left the ways of God, and wandered in by-paths which led to utter destruction; such a losing the word אבד signifies. They were not sought after, they did not make diligent inquiry and search after them.

"But with force and with cruelty have ye ruled them." They dealt not as fathers of their country, but as tyrants, which are the very plagues of the earth; they dealt not as shepherds with their sheep, but as cruel task-masters over servants. The word for ruling is רדה radah, which notes such ruling as a master doth exercise over a servant, rigorous ruling; therefore the Jews were forbid to rule over a poor brother, Lev. xxv. 43, "Thou shalt not rule over him with rigour." Here they ruled with rigour, they put forth their power to the breaking and ruin of the people, they were rough and cruel in their government. The Septuagint is, ye weary, wear out, yea, murder the strong with vexation and labour.

Ver. 5. "And they were scattered, because there is no shepherd." The shepherds being either negligent or tyrannical, the sheep were scattered; through default of their political shepherds, they were scattered into waste places, into the open fields, into forts and caves, chap. xxxiii. 27, and into other countries. Had Zedekiah and the nobles been faithful to God, to Nebuchadnezzar, and the people, ruling as he and they should have done, the people had not been so scattered. And through default of their ecclesiastical shepherds, they fell into errors, superstitions, and idolatrous practices; justice, laws, and religion being laid aside, there was nothing remained but confusion, disorder, and dispersion. The Hebrew is, they were scattered without a shepherd; which may be taken thus, being scattered they had no shepherd; or thus, they were scattered because, or for that, they had no shepherd, that is, no faithful shepherd; this is the better sense; and so the Septuagint speaks, for that they had no shepherds, that is, no such shepherds as cared for their good civilly or spiritually.

"And they became meat to all the beasts of the field, when they were scattered." When the sheep are scattered into caves, woods, upon mountains and hills, they become a prey to dogs, swine, wild beasts; so the Jews being scattered into several parts of the world, were exposed to the injuries of strangers, and a prey unto them.

Ver. 6. "My sheep wandered through all the mountains, and upon every high hill." They went from mountain to mountain, and from hill to hill, and set up altars: Jer. ii. 20, "Upon every high hill and under every green tree thou wanderest, playing the harlot;" so Jer. iii. 6. Or they were forced to flee to the mountains and hills, in the time of war and danger which their rulers brought upon them.

"Yea, my flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth, and none did search or seek after them." The Hebrew is, upon all the faces of the earth. Every country hath a several face in a metaphorical sense, as one man hath from another: Egypt had one face, Babylon another, the countries about Judea their distinct faces or superficies; now they were scattered abroad upon them all, and none did search or seek them. Here are two words signifying the same thing, בקש and דרש the first signifies to seek or search with the greatest care, the second, with the most correct judgment.

Obs. 1. Those that are set over the people in church or state are shepherds, and ought to be like unto them towards their flocks. They should govern them gently, protect them constantly, provide for them carefully, and feed them faithfully, and seek their good diligently. God who is the great Shepherd doth so: Isa. xl. 11, "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young." Isa. xxvii. 3, "Lest any hurt it," (that is, his vineyard, his people.) "I, the Lord, will keep it night and day." Psal. xxiii. 1, 2, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want:" he provided green pastures and still waters for him, and for all his. Jer. v. 7, he "fed them to the full." He gave them David for a shepherd, "to feed Jacob his people, and Israel his inheritance;" and "he fed them according to the integrity of his heart," Psal. lxxviii. 71, 72; he sought their good, Micah vi. 8; he turned curses into blessings for them, Deut. xxiii. 5: here was a good Shepherd. Magistrates and ministers should be like unto God in all these.

Obs. 2. Few of those that are over God's flock in church or state, do prove such as they ought to be. The political rulers were wicked, and the ecclesiastical rulers were such also. They are called shepherds, but they did not the office or work of shepherds, they were generally naughty; the shepherds of Israel did not feed the flock. Ezek. xxii. 25-28, you may see what the prophets, priests, and princes were, not a true shepherd amongst them.

Obs. 3. See here the true characters of wicked shepherds in church or state: and they are three.

(1.) They feed themselves. They were covetous, self-seekers, they did eat the fat, clothe themselves with the wool, and killed them that were fed, full of fat and flesh, they made a prey of the rich and wealthy. The political shepherds were selfish and covetous. Micah iii. 1-3, "Hear, O heads of Jacob, and ye princes of the house of Israel; Is it not for you to know judgment? who hate the good, and love the evil, who pluck off their skin from off them, and their flesh from off their bones; who also eat the flesh of my people, and flay their skin from off them; and they break their bones, and chop them in pieces, as for the pot." Look how butchers deal with oxen and sheep, killing, flaying, chopping in pieces, breaking their bones, selling some, and eating other parts, and whatever they do is for their own interest; so deal these state butchers with the people. The ecclesiastical shepherds were selfish and covetous. Isa. lvi. 11, speaking of the watchmen, he saith, "They are greedy dogs which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand; they all look to their own way, every one for his gain, from his quarter:" one's gain comes from one quarter, a second's from another quarter, a third's from a third, and their eyes were upon their gain and nothing else. Micah iii. 11, "The heads of Jerusalem judge for reward, the priests teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money;" thus all sought themselves, and thereby declared what they were.

(2.) They fed not the flock. A good shepherd's care and delight is to feed his flock, and manifest it by strengthening the weak, by healing the sick, by binding up the broken, by bringing back what is gone astray, and by seeking up what is lost. These shepherds did none of these things: the state shepherds neglected the flock, the church shepherds did so, the weak were not strengthened, &c.

(3.) Harsh and cruel usage of the flock: "With force and cruelty have ye ruled them." These shepherds did not distinguish between the weak and strong, the sound and sick, and so rule them wisely, gently, compassionately; but they were rough, rigid, bitter, and cruel unto them. The political shepherds shut up the doors of the temple, and would not let them come in to sacrifice or worship there; 2 Chron. xxviii. 24. They compelled the people to serve idols, 2 Kings xxi. 11. They revolted from under Nebuchadnezzar, and so brought wars and heavy taxes upon the people, Ezek. xvii. 15. "The princes in the midst of Jerusalem were like wolves ravening the prey, to shed blood, and to destroy souls, to get dishonest gain," Ezek. xxii. 27. The ecclesiastical shepherds also ruled after their own wills: the prophets were roaring lions ravening the prey, they devoured souls, they took the treasure and precious things, they made many widows in the midst of Jerusalem; the priests violated the law of God, and so wronged the people, ver. 25, 26. The prophets and priests conspired together to tyrannize over the people, who were so accustomed to it, that they were content to have it so; Jer. v. 31, "The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so." The word for bearing rule imports rigorous dealing; they took too much upon them, which you may see, Jer. xxvi. 8, the priests and the prophets took Jeremiah, "saying, Thou shalt surely die." They were bitter enemies to Jeremiah, and those who believed his prophecies. Jer. l. 6, "My people hath been lost sheep; their shepherds have caused them to go astray," &c.

Obs. 4. Such is the condition of God's flock here, that it hath need of shepherds to look after it. There be in it some diseased or infirm, some sick, some broken, some driven away, some straggling and in danger of losing. God's sheep are subject to many evils, distempers, and dangers; to vain customs, Jer. x. 3; to bruising and breaking, Jer. vi. 14; to hunting like wild beasts, Ezek. xiii. 18; to beating and grinding to pieces, Isa. iii. 15; to devouring, Psal. xiv. 4; to errors, heresies, corrupt opinions and practices, Matt. xxiv. 5; 2 Pet. ii. 2; to backsliding, Jer. viii. 5; to mistakes and all sorts of evils, Isa. v. 20. It is mercy, yea great mercy, that God hath appointed shepherds for his flock, civil and spiritual, to provide for the weaknesses, maladies, and dangers of the soul, as well as of the body. Where these are wicked, it goes ill with the flock; if they be selfish, negligent, rigid in ruling, the flock will suffer much. O pray unto God earnestly, that he would give us good shepherds. There is a choice promise or two in Jer. xxiii. 4, "I will set up shepherds over them which shall feed them; and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking." And Jer. iii. 15, "I will give you pastors according to mine heart, which shall feed you according to knowledge and understanding." These promises speak of good shepherds for state and church. Let us improve them, and press God for the fulfilling of them.

Obs. 5. That wicked magistrates and ministers, in God's account, are as no magistrates, no ministers. "They were scattered, because there is no shepherd." There were many shepherds in the state, and many in the church, yet all these were as none, because they were wicked, sought themselves, fed not the flock, but ruled with cruelty. When shepherds degenerate so far, as to be contrary to what they should be, then they are as none before God. Such, in Zech. xi. 17, are called "idol shepherds:" idols are nothing, 1 Cor. viii. 4, and so were they as nothing in the sight of God; and when it is so, then the sheep are scattered.

Obs. 6. That as God eyes the great ones in state or church, so he deals impartially with them being wicked. He observed what magistrates and ministers did in their places, and seeing them selfish, negligent, cruel, he threatens them all: "Woe to the shepherds of Israel!" He saw they were all guilty of grievous sins, amended not after his long forbearing them, and therefore without respect denounces judgment against them. God is greater than the greatest, and fears not the faces of princes or prophets; let them have what pretences they will to colour their ways, the Lord discerns them; let them be never so terrible unto men, the Lord will be a terror unto them; let them continue in their wickedness never so long, at last God will be avenged on them.

Ver. 7—10. Therefore, ye shepherds, hear the word of the Lord; As I live, saith the Lord God, surely because my flock became a prey, and my flock became meat to every beast of the field, because there was no shepherd, neither did my shepherds search for my flock, but the shepherds fed themselves, and fed not my flock; therefore, O ye shepherds, hear the word of the Lord; Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against the shepherds; and I will require my flock at their hand, and cause them to cease from feeding the flock; neither shall the shepherds feed themselves any more; for I will deliver my flock from their mouth, that they may not be meat for them.

These verses set out the judgments threatened against the shepherds of Israel, for their promiscuous sins. In the words take,

1. God's particular application of himself to the shepherds, ver. 7, 9.

11. The certainty of their punishment, ver. 8, "As I live," &c.

III. A repetition of their former sins, ver. 8.

IV. A specification of their judgments or punishments, ver. 10.

Ver. 7. "Therefore, ye shepherds, hear the word of the Lord." These words are again in ver. 9, and show the great indignation which was in the breast of God against these shepherds: O ye princes, priests, and prophets, seeing ye have done such things, and neglected what you should have done, hear the word of the Lord, he is vehemently displeased with you, and can hold no longer.

Ver. 8. "As I live, saith the Lord God, surely." The Hebrew is, I living, if not; the sense whereof is this, Let me not be the living God, but be laid aside as some idol or false god, if I do not punish these shepherds which have dealt so with my flock.

"Because my flock became a prey." The word for "prey" is קָרָב which signifies spoiling, and such spoiling as is with treading down, and despising the thing spoiled: they vilified the flock of God, and spoiled them of what they had.

"And my flock became meat to every beast of the field." Wicked men are here called beasts, and beasts of the field, for that they range up and down to get a prey; and when they have gotten it, tear and rend it in pieces, as a lion or bear doth a lamb or sheep.

"There was no shepherd." Not simply no shepherd, but no shepherd that did his duty, as the next words show, "neither did my shepherds search for the flock;" he saith, my shepherds, because they were in God's stead to look after his flock; but they fed themselves, not the flock; they made laws, imposed burdens, and found out ways to enrich themselves, and impoverish the people.

Ver. 10. "Behold, I am against the shepherds." In this verse the punishments of these shepherds are enumerated, and this is the first, viz. God's enmity against them. They being great princes, priests, and prophets, kept all in such awe that none durst appear in word or action against them; if any did, they were soon crushed: wherefore saith the Lord, "Behold, I am against the shepherds;" I, that am the Governor of nations, the Lord of heaven and earth, and so the dread Sovereign of princes, priests, and prophets; even I, that am Jehovah, that gave being to all creatures, and can take away all again, am against them. The Hebrew is, Behold, I to the shepherds, that is, I come to set myself against them: the Vulgate is, Behold, I am above them; others have the words thus, Behold, I am against these shepherds.

"I will require my flock at their hand." Not only will I have account of them, what is become of my flock, but I will have recompence for every one that is wounded, weak, lost, or slain; I will require at your hand limb for limb, blood for blood, and life for life. This is the second punishment mentioned.

"And cause them to cease from feeding the flock." Here is a third punishment, and it is no less than displacing of them. Some were cut off by the hand of justice, Jer. lii. 10, 11, 24-27; Lam. v. 12. Others were carried away captive, and held in chains and bonds, as Zedekiah, Jeconiah, and many besides.

"Neither shall the shepherds feed themselves any more." Here is a fourth punishment; they should be deprived of those opportunities they had to enrich themselves: they made a prey of the flock, eating the fat, clothing themselves with the wool, and killing those that were fed, they made advantage of the flock, only seeking themselves, not the good of it; but they should not do so any longer.

"For I will deliver my flock from their mouth."

They have been feeding upon and devouring my flock a long time; but now I will do by them as a shepherd doth by a lamb in a lion's or bear's mouth, Amos iii. 12. I Sam. xvii. 34, 35, David delivered the lamb: so God would pull his flock out of these lions' and bears' mouths, which is a gracious promise of the deliverance of his people.

"That they may not be meat for them." Being once delivered, they shall no more be spoiled and devoured by such tyrants as they were, but shall enjoy liberty and safety.

Obs. 1. When there are no faithful shepherds, the flock is a prey to all sorts of beasts. "My flock became meat to every beast of the field, because there was no shepherd." The princes, nobles, priests, prophets, and all their under officers, made a prey of the flock. The flock was amongst wild beasts of all sorts, and they did eat the milk, shear the fleece, and devour the flesh of the flock. No state officers, no church officers were faithful unto the flock, but all in place and power made a prey of it: it is the nature of dogs, foxes, wolves, lears, lions, and such beasts, to suck the blood, crush the bones, and devour the flesh of the lambs and sheep. Kings, in Dan. vii. 17, are called beasts; and Rev. xiii. 1, 11, there is mention made of a beast which rose up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns; and of a beast that rose up out of the earth, which had two horns, like a lamb, but spake like a dragon: these two beasts denote the ecclesiastical and political powers, and how they dealt with the people you may read in that chapter. When God's flock is without faithful shepherds, they are a spoil to sea beasts and land beasts, to all beasts whatsoever.

Obs. 2. That the sins of magistrates and ministers in seeking themselves, neglecting and wronging the flock, do greatly provoke God, bring certain and severe judgments upon themselves. "Behold, I am against the shepherds;" I, that am higher, stronger, greater than them all, even I, and all my attributes, are against them: I will call them to account, and have satisfaction for all the wrong and violence they have done; I will deprive them of their sweet morsels, and throw them with shame out of their places. These are severe judgments, which God swears, by no less than his own life, that he will bring upon them: God commits great trust unto them, and when they are unfaithful God visits severely for it. Jer. xxv. 34-36. "Howl, ye shepherds, cry; and wallow yourselves in the ashes, ye principal of the flock, for the days of your slaughter and of your dispersions are accomplished; and ye shall fall like a pleasant vessel." They should have no way to flee or escape; cry and howl they might, their pastures should be spoiled, and themselves destroyed. The shepherds had been preserved like a pleasant vessel in the hand of God, he esteemed them; but now, being so vile, they should fall, be broken, and not esteemed at all. See Jer. xxxiii. 1, 2; Zech. xi. 17. This hath been made good in our days, against the political and ecclesiastical shepherds. Have not our princes, nobles, prelates, and their officers, for their feeding themselves, not feeding the flock, for their ruling them by force and cruelty, have they not had God against them, been deprived of their fat, and sweet morsels? have they not been turned out of their places, and suffered justly for their demerits? The oppressions in state and church were such, that the flock had perished, had not God appeared for it against those lions and wolves: their sins were provoking, and drew the fury of God upon them.

Obs. 3. Those sheep that are under oppressing and devouring shepherds, God will relieve and set at liberty. "I will deliver my flock from their mouth, that they may not be meat for them." Many years had his flock been molested by wicked princes, priests, and prophets; they had eaten up many of his flock, and the rest were in danger of devouring; but the Lord had a care of them, and pulled them out of their jaws. The poor sheep could not withstand their violence; they were like young lions among the flocks, which go through, tread down, and tear them in pieces, and none can deliver, Micah v. 8: but though the sheep had no man able to deliver them from these lion-like shepherds, yet God was able to do it, and did it; he was a lion to these lions, and tore them in pieces, rescuing his flock. It is not long since we were under such shepherds, who made us meat to their teeth, eating up our estates, liberties, and lives; they oppressed and devoured us, and who durst appear for us? if any did, they felt the jaws and claws of these lions: but God at last arose for us, and hath driven away those shepherds, and delivered us from being meat to their mouths.

Ver. 11—16. For thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I, even I, will both search my sheep, and seek them out. As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered; so will I seek out my sheep, and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day. And I will bring them out from the people, and gather them from the countries, and will bring them to their own land, and feed them upon the mountains of Israel by the rivers, and in all the inhabited places of the country. I will feed them in a good pasture, and upon the high mountains of Israel shall their fold be: there shall they lie in a good fold, and in a fat pasture shall they feed upon the mountains of Israel. I will feed my flock, and I will cause them to lie down, saith the Lord God. I will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away, and will bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick: but I will destroy the fat and the strong; I will feed them with judgment.

These verses set before us God's care and comfortable provision for his flock, which is the second general part of this chapter; and they have in them,

1. Gracious promises.
1. A promise of seeking out the sheep, ver. 11, 12, 16.
2. A promise of reducing them, ver. 13, 16.
3. A promise of feeding them being reduced, ver. 13—15.
4. A promise of healing the broken and the sick, ver. 16.
11. A declaration how God will deal with the fat and strong ones, ver. 16.

Ver. 11. "Behold, I, even I, will both search my sheep, and seek them out." You think much to look after my sheep, but, behold, I, even I, that am the great Shepherd, the great God, infinitely distanced from you, will both search and seek them out. The word for "search" is, בקר, which the Septuagint renders, I will require; it notes searching out what they had done with them, and requiring them at their hand.

Ver. 12. "As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered; so will I seek," &c. When some great storms by wind, rain, thunder, lightning, or wild beasts, have been in the field among the flock, and they are scattered here and there, then the shepherd hastens to them, sees whether any be wanting, and if so, seeks up and down till he finds them, and so brings them together again; which is a great mercy to the scattered sheep, and as great a comfort to the shepherd: so would God seek out his sheep that were scattered into several places, and would deliver them: they had met with storms and wild beasts, which had divided and scattered them, and God, like a choice shepherd, would seek them out, and have a special care of them.

"In the cloudy and dark day." The Hebrew is, ביום ענן וצפופ in the day of a cloud and of darkness, thick darkness, so the word signifies. It was a day of a cloud, or a cloudy day, when the Chaldean army besieged Jerusalem; then many were scattered and driven into neighbour nations: and it was a day of thick darkness, when the city was broken up, the temple burnt, Zedekiah's eyes put out, the princes and nobles put to death, many carried captive into Babylon, and the rest dispersed into woods, caves, mountains, and other places.

Ver. 13. "And I will bring them out from the people, and gather them from the countries." God finding his sheep scattered into several nations, where they met with hardships, he graciously promises to bring them out of those nations; they should not always be amongst their enemies, who were no better than wild beasts unto them. This hath an aspect to God's gathering his elect out of the several quarters of the world.

"And will bring them to their own land, and feed them upon the mountains of Israel by the rivers." Being gathered out of foreign lands, God would bring them into their own land, viz. into Canaan, a type of the church; they should both possess their land, and be put into a church condition again, and he would feed them with his word and ordinances, and put them into a better state than ever. This refers to the times of Christ and the gospel; then especially did God gather his sheep out of Babylon and bring them to Zion, then did he feed them upon the mountains of Israel by the rivers. So that in this verse are three grand mercies: 1. Education out of a miserable condition. 2. Introduction into a good condition. 3. Preservation in that good condition.

Ver. 14. "I will feed them in a good pasture, and upon the high mountains of Israel shall their fold be." In this verse are two mercies more promised; 1. Good and fat pastures; 2. Rest; both which are very needful for the flock. After their reduction into Canaan, they shall not simply have pasture, but good pasture, fat pasture, viz. the good word of God, the gospel, which is milk, wine, bread, marrow, and fatness; this feeds hungry souls, and makes lean sheep fat; and as their pastures should be fat, so their folds should be good. Sheep have their folds to rest in, and so are safe from heat, cold, and other dangers. The church is the fold for God's sheep, there they have rest and safety; the several churches are the several folds, where the sheep find rest and refreshing.

The Jews from this verse, as Sanctius reports, conclude that the Messiah is not come, because that when Christ was on earth there was no gathering of the Jews, nor feeding of them with such good pastures as were promised to be in the time of the Messiah: Our Messiah, they say, was rather for the dissipating of the Jews, than the congregating of them; he drove them into lean pastures, and gave them no fat pastures, for after his coming they were scattered into all parts of the world.

The gathering here spoken of, was not meant only of the Jews, but of the gentiles also; our Messiah made way for them, and gathered in them, and he would have gathered the Jews to him; Matt. xxiii. 37, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" The Jews would not be gathered unto Messiah, he would have gathered them, but they would not. They looked for a Messiah in pomp and glory, that should have restored the kingdom to the Jews, and made them great in the world above other nations; great places, riches, and honours were the fat pastures they minded. Christ did not feed his sheep with such pastures; but with spiritual dainties, heavenly manna, divine truths, promises, and ordinances he did. Their refusal of the Messiah, putting him to death, and wishing his blood to be upon their heads, was the cause of those heavy judgments that came upon them, and their dispersion thereupon, 1 Thess. ii. 15, 16.

Ver. 15. "I will feed my flock, and I will cause them to lie down." Other shepherds have neither fed them, nor let them have rest, they have wearied them and preyed upon them; but God would both feed them, and see that they should have rest, he would cause them to lie down as sheep in their folds lie down, and have rest; so God would order it, that his sheep should have rest and refreshing in their folds, in the congregations they are of.

Ver. 16. "I will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away," &c. In the 4th verse, the neglect of the shepherds of Israel was set out; and here God promises to supply their neglect, and do what they did not.

1. He "will seek that which was lost." They did not so, those that were lost they left them to perish; God is more mindful of his, he seeks them up, and will not lose them: Hos. ii. 23, "I will say to them which were not my people, Thou art my people." Saul was a blasphemer, a persecutor, an injurious person, in a lost condition, and the Lord sought him out, Acts ix.

2. He will "bring again that which was driven away." The Israelitish shepherds did it not, but the God of Israel would do it. David was driven away by Saul and Absalom, but the Lord brought him back again, 1 Sam. xix.; 2 Sam. xv. and xix.

3. He "will bind up that which was broken." They minded not those that were in such a condition, and needed binding up; the Lord did, who is the good Shepherd: Isa. lxi. 1, "He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted." When Peter had broken himself by denying the Lord Christ so fearfully as he did, the Lord bound up his wounds, and relieved him.

4. He "will strengthen that which was sick" and weak. They omitted it, but the Lord regarded such and strengthened them. Ezek. ix. there were some sick at heart, lamenting for the abominations done in the midst of Jerusalem, but the Lord sent one to confirm them, and set a mark upon their foreheads.

Obs. 1. God's flock being committed to the vigilancy and care of magistrates and ministers, he will inquire how they have discharged their trust, and require his flock at their hands. "Behold, I will both require my sheep, and seek them out." I committed them to your charge, I expected you should have had a special care of them, kept them so that none should have been wanting or prejudiced any way, like good shepherds; but you have not minded the safety and welfare of my flock: some are wanting; where are they? some are in a languishing and perishing condition; how is it that they are so?

give me an account of these things, I will bear it no longer at your hands.

Obs. 2. That God's flock doth sometimes meet with storms, and such foul weather as scatters them here and there. "They have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day." They had not all serene and good days, but many cloudy days and days of darkness. In Manassch's time they had black and bloody days, which made a great scattering of the sheep, 2 Chron. xxxiii. So in Jehoahaz's, Jehoiakim's, Jehoiachin's, and Zedekiah's reigns, there were clouds, tempests, whirlwinds, from the south, north, and other parts, from Egypt, Babylon, from Moab, Syria, and Ammon, 2 Kings xxiii. xxiv. xxv. which made at last a total dissipation of the flock. Had not we dark and cloudy days, which scattered the flock of God into several countries, in the time of the late princes and prelates? had not Ireland a black day when the massacre was there? And as it is with the flock in general, so with particular sheep and lambs, they have cloudy and dark days wherein they find themselves scattered.

Obs. 3. However others neglect the flock, yet God is a vigilant, faithful, and tender-hearted shepherd over them. God will seek out the sheep, deliver them from enemies, and bring them to Zion; he will give them fat pastures, cause them to enjoy rest in good fields: if any be broken, he will bind them up; if any be weak or sick, he will heal and strengthen them; if any go astray, he will reduce them. David found the Lord to be such a Shepherd unto him: Psal. xxiii. 1—3, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want." If I be hungry, he hath green pastures for me; if I be thirsty, he hath still waters; if my soul droop, he restores it; if I know not the way, he leads me in the paths of righteousness. O happy man, and happy people, who have the Lord for their Shepherd! and happy are those magistrates and ministers, who are vigilant, faithful, and tender-hearted shepherds over the flock, doing to the same as God himself doth.

"But I will destroy the fat and the strong." Here God declares how he will deal with those that were injurious to others: some amongst them were fat and strong, they were rich and potent. Men in place, and abounding in wealth, are in Scripture language said to be fat, Psal. xxii. 22; Jer. xlvi. 21; and when they are fat they grow wanton. Deut. xxxii. 15, "Jeshurun waxed fat and kicked;" then they kicked at God and his ordinances, and at their fellows which are lean; Amos iv. 1, the kine of Bashan oppressed the poor, and crushed the needy. In Gen. xli. the lean kine did eat up the fat; but here the fat did eat up the lean, and because they did so, the Lord would destroy them. The Hebrew for "destroy" is, שרר which signifies so to destroy a thing as that there shall be no remainders thereof; God would make a total abolition of them. The Septuagint, mistaking the word שרר for שרר renders it, and so the Vulgate, I will keep the fat and the strong; that is, keep them in, and restrain them.

"I will feed them with judgment." Montanus saith, I will feed them in judgment, משפט which the Septuagint renders, with judgment. The words may import either God's judgments and plagues which he would bring upon the fat and strong, as Jer. xxiii. 15, "Behold, I will feed them with wormwood, and make them drink the water of gall;" or, God's wisdom and judiciousness in feeding of his flock. Foolish shepherds distinguish not between the weak and strong, the sick and sound, they drive, they feed, they govern all alike; but a wise shepherd considers the nature of his flock, what condition every sheep is in, what it is capable of, whether milk or strong meat, oil or wine, and so applies himself accordingly to each. Thus would God do with them, Isa. xl. 11; and so (1 Thess. ii. 7, 8, 11) did Paul with them.

Ver. 17—22. And as for you, O my flock, thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I judge between cattle and cattle, between the rams and the he goats. Seemeth it a small thing unto you to have eaten up the good pasture, but ye must tread down with your feet the residue of your pastures? and to have drunk of the deep waters, but ye must foul the residue with your feet? And as for my flock, they eat that which ye have trodden with your feet; and they drink that which ye have fouled with your feet. Therefore thus saith the Lord God unto them; Behold, I, even I, will judge between the fat cattle and between the lean cattle. Because ye have thrust with side and with shoulder, and pushed all the diseased with your horns, till ye have scattered them abroad; therefore will I save my flock, and they shall no more be a prey; and I will judge between cattle and cattle.

These verses exemplify what was said in the latter end of the 16th verse:

I. Declaring how God would deal with the rich who oppressed the poor, ver. 17, 20, 22.

II. Setting out the causes moving God thereunto, ver. 18, 19, 21.

Ver. 17. "As for you, O my flock, thus saith the Lord God." Here is an apostrophe; God turns his speech unto his flock, and shows himself very sensible of their condition, breaking out into a pathetical exclamation: O my flock, thou art oppressed, and sullerest hard things, which I see, am sensible of, and will speedily remedy.

"Behold, I judge between cattle and cattle." I know the cattle are not all of one nature; some are strong, and some are weak; some are clean, and some unclean; and behold I take notice thereof, and put a difference between one and the other. The word for "cattle" is, צאן which signifies the small cattle, as lambs and kids; ארנן the greater sort of that kind, as sheep and goats; and בקר signifies larger animals, as oxen, asses, and the like.

"Between the rams and the he goats." The word for "rams" is from איל because of their strength, they are very strong creatures. The word for "he goats" is, עתרים which notes the greater goats, those which lead the flock, and metaphorically the rulers and leaders of the people; as Isa. xiv. 9, כֹּל-עֵתִירֵי אֶרֶץ all the great goats of the earth, is the Hebrew; "all the chief ones of the earth," saith our translation. By "rams" some understand the good, gentle, and meek ones; by "he goats," the vile, wicked, and unquiet ones. Diodate interprets "rams" to be the violent, and "goats" the filthy ones. I conceive by "rams and he goats" are meant, the leaders of the flock, the rulers of the people, which differed in dispositions and in actions, as Polanus saith: God would distinguish between the good and bad of these, and so of the people, which are set out by the name of "cattle," and deal with them according to their ways and works; where by "cattle" are meant the meaner and poorer sort of people, by "rams and he goats," the rich and great ones.

Ver. 18. "Seemeth it a small thing unto you to have eaten up the good pasture." Here again by way of apostrophe God speaks to the rams and he goats, which had good pastures, plenty of all things, great blessings, milk, honey, and fat of the land. They had the chief places, lands, and fruits of the earth, they had gotten all considerable in church or state into their own hands, they lived deliciously and oppressed others, which they thought to be nothing; but saith God, Seemeth it a small matter unto you? you deceive yourselves, it is a grievous crime, and that you shall know.

"But ye must tread down with your feet the residue of your pastures?" Wanton sheep, when they are full, run up and down, treading upon the pastures, so that they become uneatable, or less pleasant and nourishing being eaten; so did the rich and great in state and church, they corrupted justice and the word of God with their inventions and traditions, so that the people were not fed, or fed with that which was unsavoury and unprofitable. Or thus; they troubled the poor, and suffered them not quietly to enjoy that little they had; they were cruel to the godly and poorer sort, though they had abundance, serving their pride and lusts therewith; or, having the principal of all things, they slighted and vilified the rest.

"And to have drunk of the deep waters, but ye must foul the residue with your feet?" The word for "deep" is, קָטַף which properly is whatever settles and goes down to the bottom; so that, by a figure called hypallage, sedimentum aquarum is put for aquas sedimenti, waters of settling, that is, pure and clear waters; and so divers expositors render the words. Some cattle when they have drunk, stamp and stir the mud in the waters, and so foul them that others cannot drink thereof; so did these rams and goats so mud and foul the waters of the sanctuary, and of the civil state, that the city of God was not made glad with them; there was no true justice nor pure religion.

Ver. 19. "And as for my flock, they eat that which ye have trodden with your feet; and they drink that which ye have fouled with your feet." By "feet" are expressed men's lusts, whereby they do defile things. Mark ix. 45, "If thy foot offend thee, cut it off." "Foot" is not to be taken literally, but for any lust that bears up a man's spirit for the present, and carries it up and down, as the feet do the body. They, out of will, honour, lust, mingled their traditions with the word of God, and corrupted justice, so that the flock had nothing pure in church or state; they laid heavy burdens and taxes upon the people, and the commodities the Lord gave, which troubled their spirits, and soured their comforts unto them. Such interpretations they gave of the law, as made it void and violated it, Ezek. xxii. 26.

Ver. 20. "Therefore," &c. "Behold, I, even I, will judge between the fat cattle and between the lean cattle." Seeing ye deal thus with my flock, saith God, I, even I, that am the great Shepherd, will distinguish and put a difference between cattle and cattle. There be fat ones and lean ones, the one doth wrong and abuse the other; the fat and strong carry it proudly and arrogantly against the lean and weak, which ought not to be. The Septuagint hath it, between the strong sheep and the weak sheep. The Chaldee is, between the rich man and the poor man. The word for "fat" is, biriah from bara, to create, because there is a creating power put forth in making cattle fat and men rich.

Ver. 21. "Because ye have thrust with side and with shoulder, and pushed all the diseased with your horns," &c. Here he describes the nature and manners of the fat cattle; they being strong were unkind, yea, cruel towards the rest, and thrust them out of the fold, out of the flock, and pastures also. The noble men, the rich, and those in power and place, dealt sometimes cunningly, sometimes openly and violently with the poorer sort, thrusting them out of their possessions, yea out of the land: Ezek. xi. 15, there were those in Jerusalem who said, "Get you far from the Lord; unto us is this land given in possession." Isa. lxvi. 5, their brethren hated them, and cast them out. The word to "push" is, נָחַץ which signifies to push with the horn, as oxen and rams do, Exod. xxi. 29. Now besides this word is added בְּקָרְיָכֶם which intends the sense: You have pushed with your horns, you have gored and hurt them greatly, you left not pushing at them till you had slain them, or driven them quite away.

Ver. 22. "Therefore will I save my flock." Seeing men are so unkind and cruel to my flock, using all their art and power to do it mischief, therefore will I take care of it, and deliver it; their sides, shoulders, and horns shall harm it no more; "I will judge between cattle and cattle," I will bring judgment upon those that have entreated my flock so ill, and it shall no longer be a prey unto them.

Obs. 1. All in God's flock are not good, they are not all of one sort; there are some fat, some lean, some strong, some diseased; there are he goats and rams, as well as others. There were in Moses' days them that said, "All the congregation are holy, every one of them," Numb. xvi. 3; but they that said so, were unholily themselves, he goats and strong rams. As it was with Jeremiah's figs, there were good and bad, Jer. xxiv. so was it with the flock of God, there were good and bad in it; there were lions, wolves, goats, and swine mingled with the sheep. Jer. vii. 9, 10, thieves, murderers, adulterers, perjured persons, and idolaters came to the temple with those that were innocent. In the waters are fish and frogs, in the field wheat and tares, and in the flock of God goats and sheep.

Obs. 2. Wicked men may have choice outward blessings, and that in abundance. They had good pastures, and in such abundance as that they trod them down with their feet; the fat and sweet of the land was theirs, the best of all things, places, and preferments were in their hands; honour, power, wealth, they abounded with. Nabal, that stony-hearted man, was very great, he had three thousand sheep, one thousand goats, 1 Sam. xxv. 2. And Job tells you that wicked men "are mighty in power," Job xxi. 7, have houses full of good things, Job xxii. 18. And David saith, they are fat, yea, "enclosed in their own fat," Psal. xvii. 10; they have the choicest of all things round about them. Ahab and Ahaz were both very wicked, yet one was king of Israel and the other king of Judah. Though all things come alike to all, yet usually wicked men have the fattest pastures, for their portion is in this life, Psal. xvii. 14.

Obs. 3. Wicked men being fat and full, in place and power, do abuse the blessings of God, are disquieting and harmful unto others. They are injurious to God, and those they dwell amongst. When their own turns were served, they trod down the residue of the pastures, they fouled the waters, they were unthankful for the best mercies, and made the rest unfit for others; and this was not all, they thrust with their sides and shoulders, and pushed with their horns; their strength, wealth, honour, power, were all abused to the dishonour of God, and prejudice of others. Thus was it of late amongst us, the fat ones in state and church did abuse the blessings God had given them, corrupting justice and religion, disquieting the inhabitants of the land with their inventions, superstitions, oppressions, innovations, &c. And because many would not bow to their wills, they thrust sorely at them with their sides and shoulders, and pushed them so with their horns, that they drove them out of the land. It is hard in prosperity to carry it rightly towards God or man.

Obs. 4. Though men think unthankfulness towards God, and uncharitableness towards men, a small matter, yet it is not so in God's account. "Seemeth it a small thing unto you to have eaten up the good pasture, but ye must tread down?" &c. "Must my flock eat and drink that which is trodden down and fouled? and do you think it a small matter? I tell you, my thoughts are far otherwise; it is a provoking sin, calls for a weight of wrath, which when you feel, you will confess your sin was not little. Many deal outwardly with men and God, and when they have so done, make slight of it: Isa. vii. 13, "Is it a small thing for you to weary men, but will ye weary God also?" They refused to hear the prophets, and to hear God, they wearied both with their delays, shifts, and thought it a small matter; but God judged it not so, as ver. 16, 17 show. God blessed Jerusalem with choice and various mercies, and she sacrificed her children unto idols; here she was unthankful to God, unmerciful unto her own flesh, and thought it a matter of nothing: Ezek. xvi. 20, "Is this of thy whoredoms a small matter?" Saith God, Thou thinkest so, but I think they are crying sins, and will visit thee accordingly, ver. 38.

Obs. 5. God will distinguish between the oppressors and the oppressed, between the bad and the good; he will punish the one, and deliver the other. "Behold, I, even I, will judge between the fat cattle and the lean;" and because the fat and strong ones thrust with their sides and shoulders, and pushed with their horns, therefore God would feed them with judgment, (they should have according to their deserts,) and destroy them; but for the weak, diseased, oppressed, he would save them. Rich men, and those that are great in the world, being wicked, do unjust things, thrust hard at the people of God, keep them under, cut them short, deprive them of their rights and liberties, yea, oft push them so with their horns, that they drive them out of all their enjoyments, Jer. xl. 12; xliii. 5. Isa. xvi. 4, "Let mine outcasts dwell with thee, Moab." The goats and rams had driven some of the flock, not only out of the fold, but out of the field; this God beholds, and will recompense upon the oppressors' heads. Psal. xii. 5, "For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise, saith the Lord; I will set him in safety from him that puffeth at him;" that is, from him that would insnare him. Lot sighed and groaned in Sodom; and when the Sodomites did puff at him, and seek to insnare him, the Lord arose and set him in safety, 2 Pet. ii. 7—9. See Psal. xxxvii. 37—40. Did not the Lord of late make a distinction among us between cattle and cattle? hath he not judged the fat and strong ones, punished the rams and he goats, and provided for his flock? Some there be still, that thrust with the side and shoulder, that push with their horns, with whom ere long God will reckon, and, without repentance, he will destroy them.

Ver. 23, 24. And I will set up one shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd. And I the Lord will be their God, and my servant David a prince among them; I the Lord have spoken it.

Here begins a sweet prophecy of Christ and his kingdom, with many benefits which the flock of God shall have therein.

1. A happy condition under him and his government, ver. 23.

II. God to be theirs, ver. 24.

III. A covenant of peace, ver. 25.

IV. Protection, ver. 25, 28.

V. Security, ver. 25, 27, 28.

VI. Watering and fruitfulness, ver. 26, 27.

VII. Freedom from enemies, ver. 27, and evils, ver. 29.

VIII. The presence of God, ver. 30.

"And I will set up one shepherd over them."

Some make this shepherd to be Zerubbabel, who came of the race of David, and brought the Jews out of Babylon into their old pastures again, viz. into the land of Canaan, where they had their temple, worship, and ordinances, as in former days; but if we consult chap. xxxvii. 24, 25, where he speaks of the same person, you shall find things there incompetent to Zerubbabel, and must refer unto Christ; and the things mentioned here, were not fulfilled in Zerubbabel's days. By "shepherd" is meant the Lord Christ, who is frequently so called in Scripture; as 1 Pet. ii. 25; John x. 16; Zech. xiii. 7; Isa. xl. 11; and not simply a shepherd, but,

1. The true Shepherd; John x. 2, "He that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep," that is, the true Shepherd, and dischargeth that trust committed unto him most faithfully.

2. "The good Shepherd," John x. 11, 14. Never any like him for goodness; he laid down his life for his sheep; he knew them exactly, and was so conversant with them that they knew his voice; he took not away from, but gave fleeces unto his sheep, and supplied all their wants.

3. The great Shepherd, yea, "that great Shepherd of the sheep," Heb. xiii. 20. He made the sheep, he owns the sheep; he hath more and greater flocks than any other shepherd in the world; he stands and feeds them "in the strength of the Lord, in the majesty of the name of the Lord his God," Micah v. 4.

4. "The chief Shepherd," 1 Pet. v. 4. He sets all others over his flock, and they are under him, 1 Cor. xii. 28; Eph. iv. 11. They are sheep, he is Head of the church, Eph. i. 22, and their Shepherd; Psal. xxiii. 1, "The Lord is my shepherd," saith David, who was a prophet and a king, both an ecclesiastical and a political shepherd.

5. "One Shepherd," as here. One, either in opposition to the multitude they had before, which wronged the flock, Jer. xii. 10, "Many pastors have destroyed my vineyard, they have trodden my portion under foot;" of which sort Christ speaks, John x. 8, "All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers." Or one, that is, the first or only Shepherd, unto whom none is comparable, the only wise Shepherd that gave out living and effectual truth: Eccl. xii. 11, "The words of the wise are as goads, and as nails fastened by the masters of assemblies, which are given from one Shepherd;" that is, from Christ, the only Shepherd; all the masters of assemblies had their words from Christ, which ever did any souls good.

This Shepherd did not intrude himself into the office, but was called and sent of God. "I will set up;" the Chaldee paraphrase is, I will raise up one governor over them, and he shall govern them. This expression of setting up, is in the New Testament set out by giving, John iii. 16, by sending, Gal. iv. 4, by sealing, John vi. 27.

"And he shall feed them." This word "feed" notes the whole office of a shepherd, which is briefly set out, ver. 4; viz. strengthening the diseased or weak, healing the sick, binding up the broken, bringing back that which was driven away, seeking up that which was lost, and ruling gently. Others make these things the complete office of a shepherd, viz.

providing good and wholesome pastures for them, bringing back those that go astray, keeping them from wolves and wild beasts, and healing those which are ill affected; all these were found in Christ, Isa. lxi. 1—3; Luke iv. 18, 19; Isa. xl. 11; Jer. iii. 15; Isa. xxvii. 3; Psal. xxiii. 1, 2; Micah v. 4; John x. 4.

Remark the difference between this Shepherd and all others.

1. He is a universal Shepherd, all flocks are his. God saith, Psal. l. 10, "The cattle upon a thousand hills are mine;" and Christ saith, The flocks in a thousand countries are mine. The churches in Judea, Galilee, and Samaria, Acts ix. 31; the churches of Syria, and Cilicia, Acts xv. 41; the churches in Asia, Rev. i. 11; the churches of Macedonia, 2 Cor. viii. 1; the churches of Galatia, 1 Cor. xvi. 1; the churches of the gentiles, Rom. xvi. 4; are all called the churches of Christ, Rom. xvi. 16. They had their particular pastors, teachers, elders, but Christ was the universal Pastor: Paul was the apostle of the gentiles, Peter of the Jews, but Christ was the Apostle and Shepherd of both; therefore saith, John x. 16, that he hath other sheep which he must bring to his fold, meaning the gentiles.

2. Christ is a Shepherd that feeds them with such meat and drink as other shepherds cannot; they may feed them with knowledge and understanding, Jer. iii. 15, but besides this, Christ feeds them with his flesh and blood, John vi. 51, 53—55; Matt. xxvi. 26, 28; he feeds them with his Spirit, John xvi. 7; Acts viii. 15, 17.

3. He enables all other shepherds to discharge the trust committed to them. Those that are over his flocks, he gave them their gifts, their graces, their power, they have nothing but what they received of him; therefore Isaiah, chap. l. 4, saith, "The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I should know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary." Isaiah, who was one of the Jewish shepherds, had all his wisdom, skill, and power from the Lord Christ. And when he sent out his twelve apostles, Matt. x. 8, he told them, they had freely received, and must freely give. No shepherds give aught to Christ, he communicates all to them: John xv. 5, "Without me ye can do nothing;" but Christ could do all without them.

4. Christ is an abiding, an everlasting, unchangeable Shepherd. Other shepherds are flitting hither and thither, and at last die and leave the flock; Christ doth not so, he died for the flock, but was brought again from the dead, Heb. xiii. 20, and lives for ever, making intercession for his flock, Heb. vii. 25; he stands on mount Zion, Rev. xiv. 1, beholding and feeding them daily; he walks in the midst of the golden candlesticks, Rev. ii. 1.

5. Christ knows which are sheep, and which are goats, John x. 3, 14, 26, 27; others do not.

"Even my servant David." Christ is here called David, and so in many other places, as Jer. xxx. 9; Hos. iii. 5; Isa. xxxvii. 35; 2 Kings xix. 34; Ezek. xxxvii. 24, 25. In all those places is Christ called David, because he came of "the seed of David according to the flesh," as it is Rom. i. 3, and because David was a type of Christ: he might have said, My servant Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, as Isa. xlix. 3, "Thou art my servant, O Israel;" Christ is called Israel, because he was from the Israelitish nation; but David is named, because he was the first godly king of all Israel and Judah, and so typed out Christ more eminently than his predecessors.

"My servant," so Christ is called, Isa. xlii. 1; lii. 13; Ezek. xxxvii. 24, 25, and in other places. A servant is one who is under another, and who keeps and doth things commended to him by his master. Christ, as man, was under his Father, and kept his commandments, John xv. 10. He served him in taking man's nature upon him, and doing his will in redeeming and saving man, Heb. x. 9; Matt. xx. 28; John xiii. 16; Phil. ii. 7.

"He shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd." He insists upon and repeats the same thing again, to show the great care, diligence, and intention of Christ in and upon his work of feeding the flock; he shall make it his business to do it: others have made it their work to fleece them, to scatter or devour them, but he shall so mind them, as to make up what was wanting in others, and to do some singular thing for them; he shall go in and out before them, and lay down his life for them.

Ver. 24. "And I the Lord will be their God." The Hebrew is, And I Jehovah will be to them for a God, or a God to them. And I the Lord will be their God; I will set my son, or servant, David over them to feed them, and I the Lord will be their God; they shall find me a merciful and gracious God; they shall find me, in Christ my Son, their Shepherd, reconciling them unto myself, not imputing their trespasses unto them: I will be their God to pardon them, to take special care of them, to deliver them, to comfort and counsel them in all their straits and miseries, and to communicate choice mercies unto them. Of these words before, chap. xi. 20.

"And my servant David a prince among them." The words are to be read thus, My servant David shall be a prince amongst them: if we take the former words with them, it is clear they ought to be read, I will be their God, and my servant David shall be a prince among them.

Whether this prophecy be fulfilled is questionable; there is somewhat in the gospel may make us conceive it is, for Matt. ii. 2, it is said, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" and Matt. xxi. 5, "Tell ye the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy King cometh unto thee;" Acts v. 31, "God hath exalted him to be a Prince and a Saviour;" and Rev. i. 5, he is styled "Prince of the kings of the earth:" these scriptures evince that Christ is a King, a Prince, but not that he reigned as a Prince among them; for he professes that he came not to reign but to serve, Matt. xx. 28; Phil. ii. 7; and therefore washed his disciples' feet, John xiii. 12; and when they would make him a king, he would not, John vi. 15. Christ hath appeared fully in his priestly and prophetic office, and hath had the honour of them; but he hath not appeared in his kingly office, nor had the honour of it; therefore it is conceived this prophecy is not yet fulfilled, but that the time is to come wherein he shall reign as a Prince and King in the midst of his people. Luke xxii. 29, 30, "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom." The time is coming that Christ shall reign, and keep a table like a Prince, where his friends shall freely eat and drink. Christ speaks not this of his spiritual kingdom, which is now in the churches and hearts of his people; nor of his kingdom of glory, for there is no eating or drinking; but of his personal, human kingdom, as some term it; for, Rev. iii. 21, Christ hath another throne to sit in than his Father's, in which at the present he doth sit: Christ hath not possession of that throne yet; when he hath, his promise is, that those that overcome shall sit with him therein. I shall have occasion in the 37th chapter of our prophet, to speak to this so controverted a point.

"I the Lord have spoken it." These words are as a seal to and ratification of what went before. If you make question of what is said, if you conceit these promises are too great and good for you, or hard to be accomplished, know, I the Lord, who am Jehovah, and give being to all my promises, I have spoken it.

Obs. 1. The appointing of officers in the church belongs to God, not to man. "I will set up one shepherd over them;" God appointed the office and the officer. 1 Cor. xii. 28, "God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers." In the Romish church are many officers which God never appointed; there are popes, cardinals, patriarchs, archbishops, &c. which places were never appointed by God, and therefore have no blessing go along with them, but serve for secular ends, even pomp and tyrannizing over the consciences of men.

Obs. 2. It is a great mercy and happiness to that people, who have Christ for their Shepherd. The Lord doth promise it here as a choice blessing unto them, to give them Christ for their Shepherd. The mercies or blessings are divers.

(1.) They shall be sure to be fed. "He shall feed them;" his heart will be upon them, and take special care that they have wholesome and good food. Ver. 14, "I will feed them in a good pasture," yea, "in a fat pasture shall they feed;" they shall not want, but have the green pastures and still waters, Psal. xxiii. 1, 2; yea, he will feed them with his own flesh, and give them his own blood to drink.

(2.) He will govern them with gentleness, and with skill. Their former shepherds did thrust with the side and shoulder, and push with the horn; Christ would not do so; he is likened to David, who was meek and gentle: 1 Chron. xxviii. 2, "Then David the king stood upon his feet, and said, Hear me, my brethren, and my people;" here he expressed his disposition and affection to his people: so Christ, he was a gentle, mild, and meek Shepherd, Isa. xl. 11. David was wise and skilful, Psal. lxxviii. 72; and Christ orders them by judgment; he judges between sheep and sheep, and deals with them according to their ages, conditions, and capacities.

(3.) He will lead them in the right way. John x. 4, he goes before them, and they follow him. Christ never is out of the way; and where he is the Leader, how can the sheep go astray? Psal. xxiii. 3, "He leadeth me in paths of righteousness." Whoever follows Christ shall be found in a path of righteousness. If we follow others, we may be led into by-ways; therefore saith Paul, 1 Cor. xi. 1, "Be ye followers of me," &c.

(4.) He will keep them so that none shall be lost, or miscarry. He is vigilant and potent, he sees the wolves and lions when they are coming, and suffers them not to destroy his sheep or lambs. John x. 27, 28, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me: and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." All the persecuting emperors could not pluck one sheep out of Christ's hand: out of the hands of other shepherds it is easy to pull them, but impossible to pull them out of Christ's hand: he knows it is his Father's will, that of all he hath given him he should lose nothing, John vi. 39, and Christ will lose nothing.

Ver. 25. And I will make with them a covenant of peace, and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land: and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods.

The Lord proceeds here in mentioning more benefits which his flock should have in the kingdom and under the government of Christ their Shepherd; and they are three: peace, protection, security.

"I will make with them a covenant of peace." The Hebrew is, I will cut with them a covenant of peace; the reason of which phrase is this: when the Jews made covenants, they used to take a calf and cut it in the midst, laying the two halves at a distance, and so passed between them; this was their manner of covenanting, and hence came the expression of cutting a covenant; see Jer. xxxiv. 18. To this God alludes when he saith, I will cut, or strike, a covenant with them: he did it by making Christ a sacrifice, by shedding his blood, dividing his soul and body, who (Isa. xlii. 6) is said to be the "covenant of the people," that is, the Mediator of the covenant between God and his people.

The word for "covenant" is, ברית, of which, and whence it comes, hath largely been spoken, Ezek. xvi. 8. It is not a covenant of works, but a covenant of peace, which some interpret of external peace, plenty, and prosperity which they should have; but the peace here meant reacheth further than to outwards, it is a peace which concerns the soul, a peace procured by the blood of Christ: Col. i. 20, "And, having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things to himself." Hence as Christ is called the "covenant," so he is called "our peace;" Eph. ii. 14, "He is our peace, who hath made both one;" he is the ground and foundation of peace, between Jew and gentile, between God and man. And the gospel upon this account is called "the gospel of peace," Eph. vi. 15, for Christ preached peace unto them, chap. ii. 17. This peace is not like the peace of the world, John xiv. 27; but it is peace that quiets the conscience, passeth understanding, keeps the heart, and rules in the soul, Rom. v. 1; Phil. iv. 7; Col. iii. 15. Where this peace is, neither death nor devil are feared, because sin is remitted, 1 Cor. xv. 55—57; Rom. viii. 33, 34.

"And will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land." In the seventy years' captivity, when Judea was without inhabitant, wild beasts might multiply therein; these God doth promise to cause to cease, they should be no more. But these evil beasts were rather false teachers, and tyrants, wicked political and ecclesiastical shepherds: God would order it so, that those, who were worse than bears, lions, wolves, and foxes, should be no more; and instead of such, he would give them good magistrates and ministers; Jer. xxiii. 4, "I will set up shepherds over them which shall feed them; and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed." There is another construction to be made of the words, namely this; that God would cause the wild and beastly dispositions of men to cease, and they should become meek and gentle, according to that in Isa. xi. 6, where it is said, that in the days of Christ, "the wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid." Wolves and leopards are creatures most fierce and cruel, especially against lambs and kids, yet God would so alter the nature of these, that they should live and lie down together: he would make the most fierce, rugged, cruel men, to become mild and sweet, and to converse with them that were for disposition lambs and kids. Junius' sense of the words is this, That the Lord would take away or restrain every hurtful thing; he would not suffer his people to be infested, or if they were, they should not be damaged by those infestations.

"And they shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods." These are proverbial speeches, setting out the great security the flock of God should have under Christ. Where there are no wild beasts in the wilderness or the woods, there the sheep feed and rest without all fear, they are most secure; and God's people under the gospel and Christ, have the greatest security. The word for "safely" is, לבטח, that is, confidently, they shall be free from the fear of all enemies both corporal and spiritual; Satan shall be cast into the bottomless pit, Rev. xx. 2, 3, and all other enemies brought to such a condition, as that they should not cause fear, Jer. xxiii. 4. The Jews, because they see not such security for themselves any where, do therefore deny that Messiah is come; for when he comes he shall make a covenant of peace, and they shall be in safety, even in wildernesses and woods, because there shall be no enemies, no evil beasts to take away or hinder their peace. Though when the Lord Christ, the true Messiah, came, there was a universal peace through the world, it being at that time when the taxing was in Augustus' days, Luke ii.; and though the wars after were not so much as before; yet I conceive there is a time when this prophecy shall be more fully completed, for every prophecy of Christ was not fulfilled when he came in the flesh, but many were to be fulfilled in after-times, among which this was one. The Jews were mistaken concerning Messiah's coming, but not much concerning this prophecy.

Obs. 1. The infinite goodness, kindness, and condescension of God, who will enter into covenant with sinners, with any of the children of men. Doth not the Scripture say, "Verily, every man at his best estate is altogether vanity," Psal. xxxix. 5; and why should the Lord, who is an infinite excellency, infinitely distanced from all creatures and vanity, enter into covenant with man? what did he see in these Jews, or in the gentiles, to awaken, rouse, and draw out his heart unto such a work? If stubbornness, ignorance, unbelief, idolatry, oppression, and such like, might induce him thereunto, these abounded both in Jew and gentile: there was nothing but God's own goodness, grace, and mercy, to cause him so to condescend, as to make a covenant with man, and such a covenant as a "covenant of peace." This should,

(1.) Raise up our spirits and hearts to admiration, that an infinite, holy, glorious, and great God should mind, converse, and make covenant with dust and ashes. Psal. cxliv. 3, "Lord," (saith David,) "what is man, that thou takest knowledge of him! or the son of man, that thou makest account of him!" David wondered that God should take notice of, especially make account of, so mean a thing as man is, as himself was, though a king and prophet.

(2.) Endear us greatly unto him. When high ones stoop unto those that are low and mean, it gains much upon their hearts, and endears them abundantly unto them. When David condescended to Abigail to take her to wife, it affected her greatly, and endeared her unto him not a little, as you may see 1 Sam. xxv. 41.

(3.) Make us faithful unto God. Is he pleased to make a covenant with man, and shall not man be faithful unto him? A wife should not be unfaithful unto her husband, and break covenant with him, though he be but a little above her; how much less should man break covenant with God, who is so much above him! God complains in Hosea vi. 7, saying, "They like Adam have transgressed the covenant;" I condescended to Adam, and made a covenant with him; yea, I condescended to them, and made a covenant with them; but they both proved unfaithful, father and posterity, they transgressed the covenant.

(4.) Cause us to be free and cheerful in our obedience unto God. When so great a God shall so graciously condescend unto us, as to enter into covenant with us, and that a "covenant of peace," should it not make us run in his ways, and serve him with gladness of heart?

Obs. 2. That men, through sin, are at distance from and enmity with God. "I will make a covenant of peace with them." What needed "a covenant of peace," if there had not been war between God and man? Man being apostatized from God through Adam's fall, lived in enmity to God; Rom. viii. 7, "The carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." Men by nature have carnal minds, oppose God, his laws, and ways; and therefore, Rom. i. 30, they are said to be "haters of God;" and in Psal. v. 5, God is said to hate them, "Thou hatest all workers of iniquity." There was such hostility between God and man, as that there was no approach for man to God without a mediator, and such a mediator as could make satisfaction to divine justice, being offended. Col. i. 21, "You, that were sometime alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled." The Colossians, as well as others, were once at a great distance from God, and enemies to God; and wherein lay their enmity? "in their minds;" and how did that appear? "by wicked works:" they plotted, contrived, and did such things as declared them to be enemies to God; and being so, they durst not appear before God. But,

Obs. 3. God by Christ hath been pleased to take away this enmity, and to reconcile sinners unto himself. 2 Cor. v. 18, "All things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ." It is Christ hath paid the price of our redemption, he hath satisfied his justice fully, and delivered us from wrath to come, 1 Thess. i. 10. It is by Christ the Mediator that reconciliation is made; neither angels nor men could do that work; it was a work for one that had more worth in him than all angels or men. Col. i. 19, 20, "It pleased God that in him all fullness should dwell, that so by him he might reconcile all things to himself; by him, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven." "By him" is twice in the verse, that we may see by whom the enmity was taken away, and from whom the reconciling virtue came, even from the Lord Christ, whose blood made the atonement, Eph. ii. 13-16. How should this teach us to honour and prize the Lord Christ, by whom so difficult, so great, and glorious a work was wrought!

Obs. 4. Those that are received to God by the mediation of Christ, shall be preserved from all hurtful things, receive all good things needful, and enjoy much security. When men are in the "covenant of peace," then God "will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land," then no creatures, no enemies, no devils shall do them harm, Job v. 23; Prov. xvi. 7; Rom. xvi. 20. Then there will be a communication of all good things needful; "they shall dwell in the wilderness," there they shall have blessings, so as they shall not be put to remove their dwellings for want, Psal. xxxiv. 9, 10; xxiii. 1; lxxxiv. 11. Then shall they "dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods;" nothing without or within shall create any fear, or cause any solicitousness in them; they shall have perfect peace, and be as in the suburbs of heaven, Jer. xxiii. 4.

Ver. 26, 27. And I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing; and I will cause the shower to come down in his season;

there shall be showers of blessing. And the tree of the field shall yield her fruit, and the earth shall yield her increase, and they shall be safe in their land, and shall know that I am the Lord, when I have broken the bands of their yoke, and delivered them out of the hand of those that served themselves of them.

In these verses, as in the former, the Lord promises sweet mercies unto his people.

I. A blessing in general, ver. 26.

II. Particular blessings; and they are these:

1. Seasonable showers from heaven, ver. 26.

2. Fruitfulness of the earth, and that both of the trees and land, ver. 27.

3. Safety, ibid.

4. Acknowledgment of God, ibid.

5. Freedom, ibid.

III. The time when all these shall be, ibid.

Ver. 26. "I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing." The Jews being in Babylon were for a proverb, a reproach, a taunt, and a curse, Jer. xxiv. 9; xxv. 18; xxix. 18; but God would roll away their reproach, and make them a blessing. The Chaldees, they shall be blessed. It is usual in Scripture to put the abstract for the concrete: as Gen. xii. 2, "Thou shalt be a blessing;" the Vulgate there is, Thou shalt be blessed. Take the word "blessing" here for the concrete, and the sense is, They shall be blessed with abundance and variety of blessings, they shall be happy and prosperous in all things; but take the word as it is in the abstract, "a blessing," the sense is, they shall be a blessing unto others, they shall be a blessing unto the nations; as they were a curse in the nations, so they should be a blessing unto them: Zech. viii. 13, "It shall come to pass, that as ye were a curse among the heathen, O house of Judah, and house of Israel; so will I save you, and ye shall be a blessing," that is, a blessing unto the nations round about them.

The word "hill" must be interpreted before we can well understand this place. By "hill" is meant mount Zion, where the temple was, and Jerusalem; there God recorded his name, set up his worship, and therefore saith, "my hill." Now these were types of Christ and the church in his time. As the Jews therefore came out of Babylon and other places to mount Zion, to Jerusalem, and the temple when rebuilt; so to Christ and the evangelical church, gentiles flocked out of several nations; and so the church and members of it were a blessing unto them, as mount Zion and the inhabitants of it, together with them who dwelt round about it in Judea or Canaan, were a blessing unto the nations. The "blessing" here, I conceive, principally refers to spiritual blessings: he spake before of a "covenant of peace" wrought by Christ, and now of blessings they should have by him; the church under Christ should be blessed with all spiritual blessings, according to that, Eph. i. 3.

"And I will cause the shower to come down in his season." The word for "shower" is, צפ which notes a great and vehement rain, as Kirker saith, even such as shakes the earth. Most make it signify a strong rain; but Ramban, a gentle rain: be it great or gentle, God would give them rain in season. In Deut. xi. 14, you read of the former rain and the latter rain. The former rain was in October, or September, which was upon the sowing of their corn; and this rain came moderately, Joel ii. 23, that so the corn might swell with moisture, root, and grow. The latter rain was in the first month, as Joel ii. 23, that which we call March, though some others put it in May; and it was to make the ear full: their harvest was sooner than ours, their country being hotter. Under these showers heavenly things are figured unto us; as in Deut. xxxii. 2, "My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distil as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass." Here heavenly doctrine is likened unto rain, dew, showers; and in our prophet is set out by showers, heavenly doctrine, and influences of the Spirit, which do make God's people fruitful in all good works, as the rain doth the earth and trees in all kind of herbs, corn, and fruit. In Christ's time there were many such showers, he rained heavenly ones oft upon the people. In 2 Pet. ii. 17, and Jude 12, false teachers are said to be "wells without water, and clouds without rain;" but Christ's apostles were wells full of water, and clouds full of rain, and by those did Christ water divers persons and places.

"There shall be showers of blessing." The Septuagint is, the rain of blessing, or blessed rain. Piscator renders the words, there shall be plentiful rains. They may be called "showers of blessing," because they are from the blessed God, have a blessing in them, and benefit them they fall upon. Some rains are so great, that they do much harm and little good; these should not be such, they should be seasonable and moderate; they should have heavenly doctrines and blessings seasonable, and as they were capable of them.

Ver. 27. "And the tree of the field shall yield her fruit." After the heavens have sent forth their showers, the trees and earth do send forth their fruit. Not only the tree of the garden, but the tree of the field, being watered, brings forth. The Hebrew for "tree" is, ay which signifies any wood, and synecdochically a tree, because it is wood.

"And the earth shall yield her increase." When there have been seasonable rains, the earth hath brought forth abundantly, in some places thirty, in some sixty, in some a hundred-fold. The word for "increase" is jebul, from ay to bring, because the earth doth bring profit to the owners thereof. By "tree" and "earth" we may understand the higher and meaner sort of people, who under the gospel and showers of it should become fruitful.

"And they shall be safe in their land." In ver. 25, it is said, "They shall dwell safely in the wilderness," and here, "They shall be safe in their land;" they should have safety every where, and the words are repeated to show the certainty thereof.

"When I have broken the bands of their yoke." This "yoke" was the Babylonish captivity, which is called a "yoke," Jer. xxx. 8; and it lay heavily upon them, Isa. xlvii. 6. The bands of this "yoke" were the Babylonish powers, Nebuchadnezzar, his princes, and officers; but God did break the Babylonish empire in pieces by Cyrus and Darius, and so took the yoke off their necks, setting them at liberty. Yokes are burdensome, restrictive, and reproachful; this breaking yokes and bands, and bringing the Jews out of Babylon, typed out the spiritual liberty of the church in Christ's time, when antichristian bands and yokes should be broken, and people brought out of spiritual Babylon.

"And delivered them out of the hands of those that served themselves of them." The Hebrew is, and shall deliver them out of the hands of them who made them to serve. The Babylonians made the Jews to serve and work for them, being captives among them, they exacted service of them; their dealings with the Jews were like the Egyptians, who were cruel task-masters over them.

Obs. 1. Temporal and spiritual blessings are from God; he makes people blessed, and gives them what blessings he pleases. "I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing." Gen. ix. 1, "God blessed Noah and his sons, and said unto them, Be fruitful, multiply, and replenish the earth;" here, God is the Author of temporal blessings. Gen. xii. 2, of Abraham God said, "I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing; and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed;" here God shows himself Author of temporal and spiritual blessings. It is peculiar unto God to bless. Balak was out when he said of Balaam, "I wot that he whom thou blessest is blessed, and he whom thou cursest is cursed," Numb. xxii. 6: no, it is not in the power of any creature to bless or curse; men and devils may utter words of blessing or cursing, but they cannot make blessed or cursed: it is God who turns blessings into curses, Mal. ii. 2; and curses into blessings, Neh. xiii. 2.

Obs. 2. Others fare the better for the church's sake. "I will make the places round about my hill a blessing." On the hill of Zion was the temple, the place where God recorded his name, there were the solemn assemblies, the divine ordinances, God's presence; and all that were near in Judea, yea, the nations round about, had some blessing and benefit thereby. They heard of the God of Israel, that he differed from all idol gods; they heard of his laws, that they were more righteous than the laws of the nations; they saw his sabbaths, how strictly they were kept; they heard of the prophets that were in Jerusalem and Israel: did not Naaman, a Syrian, get a blessing from Elisha? 2 Kings v. The wisdom of Solomon had influence into all the places round about Zion, yea, into all the countries far off; the queen of Sheba heard thereof, and it was a blessing unto her. From any nation they might come to Zion, become proselytes, and enjoy what mercies the Jews themselves enjoyed. Micah iv. 1, 2, "In the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it. And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." These things are spoken of Christ's times, when the church should be very eminent and conspicuous, like the highest of hills, when the law of faith and the gospel should go out of Zion and Jerusalem, and be a blessing unto all nations.

Obs. 3. God's blessings are seasonable; both temporal and spiritual are in due time. "I will cause the shower to come down in his season," when it shall be a blessing, do much good; there shall be showers of blessing; Lev. xxvi. 4, "I will give you rain in due season, and the land shall yield her increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit." Those rains are seasonable which cause fruitfulness; those are unseasonable rains which hinder or destroy the fruit of the trees and increase of the earth. The Lord observes times and seasons to do sinners good, both for body and soul: Isa. xxx. 18, "He waits, that he may be gracious;" he waits for fit seasons wherein his mercies may come with advantage and acceptance unto men. Isa. lv. 10, 11, "As the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud," which is an argument it came in season, "so shall my word be that goeth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." God gives his word seasonably, as he doth the rain: Tit. i. 3, "God hath in due times manifested his word through preaching;" the original is, καρπὸς ὕδατος, in his own times, and those are the due times, the most seasonable times. Gal. iv. 4, "When the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman;" Christ's birth was at the fulness of time, when it was most seasonable: so his death, Rom. v. 6, "in due time," or according to the season, "Christ died for the ungodly." Psal. lxxii. 6, "He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass: as showers that water the earth:" as Solomon was to the people, by his wisdom and justice, like seasonable rains to the grass and earth, much more is God and Christ so to the church; what seasonable dews, droppings, and influences of the Spirit hath it from them, which make it to grow green and flourish! Let us wait for his showers and influences; none can give them but himself, and when he gives them, it is in season.

Obs. 4. The end of God's blessings is, that we may acknowledge and honour him for them. "I will cause the shower to come in season; I will make the trees fruitful, and the earth increase; I will make them safe in their land, and they shall know that I am the Lord." God's blessings have something of God in them; they are glasses, and show us his power, wisdom, goodness, and loving-kindness, each of which oblige us to acknowledge him the author of them, and to honour him for them.

Obs. 5. God's people are sometimes in subjection and bondage to their enemies, who make them to serve, and serve themselves of them. The Jews were under the Babylonish yoke, they served and suffered hard things under the Babylonians; Jer. l. 33, they were oppressed, held under, and put to do servile things. God had told them by the mouth of Jeremiah, chap. xvii. 4, that they should serve their enemies; and their enemies made them to serve, and advantaged themselves by their service: Lam. v. 4—6, "We have drunk our water for money: our wood is sold unto us;" they could neither have water nor fire unless they bought or earned the same with hard labour: "our necks are under persecution, we labour and have no rest;" this iron yoke of captivity is upon us, we labour and serve these Babylonians, and yet we have no rest; we have not bread to satisfy our hunger: they made the young men grinders in the mill, ver. 13. This was the condition of God's people in Babylon under Nebuchadrezzar and Belshazzar, their grand enemies; and such hath been the condition of God's people since Christ's time; they have been often in subjection and bondage to antichrist, to princes and prelates, who have tyrannized over their souls and bodies.

Obs. 6. God hath his time to set his people at liberty, to break the bands and yokes which they are held in. "When I have broken," or shall break, "the bands of their yoke, and delivered them out of the hand of those that made them to serve." The Jews found their bands and yokes so strong, and fast tied about their necks, that they were without hope of ever having them loosed or removed: Ezek. xxxvii. 11, "Our hope is lost;" this captivity we shall never shake off, nor our posterity. And the Babylonians, they held them fast, and refused to let them go, Jer. l. 33; but when the seventy years were expired, (when God's time was come,) he brake the yokes and bands, he knocked them off, and set them at liberty; for, ver. 34, "Their Redeemer is strong; the Lord of hosts is his name." Let enemies' strength be great, let their yokes be of iron, which they put upon his people's necks, and let them be tied on with the bands of human laws, yet God is stronger than they, he will break empires and emperors in pieces, abrogate their laws, loose the bands, pull off the yokes, and set his people at liberty, he will thoroughly plead their cause, give them and their land rest, and disquiet the inhabitants of Babylon. We were under Romish antichristian yokes a long time, the bands of which were loosened somewhat under Edward the Sixth and queen Elizabeth, but they were tying fast again by their successors, and became so heavy that multitudes of our brethren were glad to flee for the burdensomeness of those yokes; others cried unto God to break them in pieces, and his time being come, he hath done it: our antichristian bands, and Babylonish yokes, are loosened and knocked off our necks; let us take heed lest (through the abuse of our liberty) the Lord cast us into a worse and greater bondage than ever.

Obs. 7. Eminent works of God do cause eminent knowledge of God. "And they shall know me, when I have broken the bands of their yoke, and delivered them out of the hand of those that served themselves of them." This was an eminent work of God to bring them out of Babylon, and this bred eminent knowledge of God in them; then they had large experience of God's power, faithfulness, and goodness unto them, that they said, "The Lord liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them;" Jer. xxiii. 8. When their captivity was turned, then they had such apprehensions of God as filled their mouths with laughter, and their tongues with singing; Psal. cxxvi. 1—3, then they said, "The Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad."

Ver. 28. And they shall no more be a prey to the heathen, neither shall the beast of the land devour them; but they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid.

The Jews had oft been a prey to the heathen; the Egyptians, Amorites, Moabites, Midianites, Philistines, Babylonians, and others, had oft spoiled and served themselves of them, which the Lord laying to heart, doth here graciously promise, that they shall no more be a prey unto the nations. The Hebrew word for "prey" is, baz, from בז to spoil, to pluck from; and the English word is from præda, which some make to be corpora rerum captarum, the bodies of things taken: or thus, "prey" is that which men get and devour for whom it was not prepared or intended; as Heb. x. 34, "They took joyfully the spoiling of their goods;" their goods were not prepared or intended for those that got them. The word for "spoiling" is, ἀπαγάγη, which signifies a "prey," because it is violently gotten and taken.

"Neither shall the beast of the land devour them." The land of Canaan was the "glory of all lands," chap. xx. 6, yet was it not without wild beasts, which did tear and devour, 2 Kings ii. 24; xvii. 25; but now God would claim up the bears and lions, so that they should do no harm. There is another sense to be made of the words, which is, that God would so order the spirits of wicked magistrates, false prophets, and vile, turbulent spirits, that they should not harm his flock: such men formerly had eaten up many of God's people, Ezek. xxii. 25, 27, 29.

"But they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid." To "dwell safely" is a great mercy, to "dwell" so "safely, that none shall make afraid," is extraordinary mercy. Men are subject unto fears, even the best of men, and that several ways: when fire breaks out in a town, when famine or plague are in a city, when storms and tempests are abroad, when wars begin, persecution, imprisonment, banishment, and death are threatened, then fears seize upon persons, and prevail too far with many; but here the Lord promises that his people shall be free from all fears, none shall make them afraid. The word for making afraid, is from דָּרַד which notes, not a slight fear, but such as is with trembling, outwardly manifested, and it ariseth either from inward solicitude of mind, or from apprehension of evil impending and at hand.

Obs. God's people are in the safest condition of any; they have promises of protection and security from all their enemies, from those without and those within. "They shall no more be a prey to the heathen," that is, those without, the nations abroad in the world; "neither shall the beast of the land devour them," that is, none within, none of them among whom they dwell, not the magistrates, not the prophets, nor the base and vile ones of the earth, none shall harm them, none shall make them afraid, "but they shall dwell safely." Not to be harmed by the beasts of the land, is mercy; but not so much as to be made afraid by them, is greater mercy. None under heaven are in so good a condition for protection and safety, as God's own people. Job xi. 18, 19, "Thou shalt take thy rest in safety. Also thou shalt lie down, and none shall make thee afraid." Job himself, and all he had, should be in safety, free from fear and danger. Jer. xxxi. 10, "Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, He that hath scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock;" here the Lord makes proclamation to the nations, and lays it upon them to make it known to others, that he would have a special care of Israel, that is, his people, "and keep them, as a shepherd doth his flock;" he would not suffer the wolves, lions, bears, and dogs, to hurt them, or make them afraid. Isa. xxvii. 3, lest any hurt the Lord's vineyard, he will keep it night and day; he will not slumber nor sleep, but always watch over it; his care for his is the same in the night when wild beasts are abroad, as in the day when they lie hid in their dens. Psal. xxxi. 20, "Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of man; thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues;" God's people are hidden ones, and so secured from the harm of enemies' hands and tongues.

Ver. 29. And I will raise up for them a plant of renown, and they shall be no more consumed with hunger in the land, neither bear the shame of the heathen any more.

This verse speaks out the goodness of God unto his flock abundantly, in positive and negative mercies; he would raise up for it a plant, and that of renown, and he would free it from hunger and shame.

"And I will raise up for them." The words may be read thus, For I will raise up for them, and so be a reason of what went before, viz. They shall no more be a prey to the nations, nor be devoured by the beast of the land, but dwell safely without fear; for I will raise up a plant of renown for them. It is true, the Hebrew participle וְ sometimes signifies "for," as Psal. lx. 11, "Give us help from trouble; for vain is the help of man;" וְ is the word; re is there "for;" so Isa. lxiv. 5, "Behold, thou art wroth; for we have sinned," re is rendered "for." But the prophet here is reckoning up variety of promises, mercies, and benefits, which the Lord makes to, and would bestow upon, his people, and therefore re or ra is here copulative, continuing the series of mercies and promises, "And I will raise up:" you are like plants plucked up by the roots, scattered here and there like dry branches; but "I will raise up a plant for you," even a

"Plant of renown." The Hebrew is, סֵטֶר שֵׁשׁ a plant for name: the Septuagint is, a plant of peace: the Chaldee is, a plantation that they may remain: the Vulgate is, a noble sprig, or plant: Vatablus hath it, a plant of a famous name, that should bring glory and renown unto them: Irenaeus saith, a plant for fame: Piscator turns the words thus, a noble plant: Campadius and Lavater are to this purpose, a plant for name or renown; as both the French and our translation is. This "plant of renown" is, by some expositors, interpreted to be the christian church, gathered out of all nations, and planted in Christ, which, Isa. lxi. 3, is called "The planting of the Lord;" and, Isa. lx. 21, "The branch of his planting;" others do expound it of Christ; so do Jerom, Theodor t, and divers later expositors: we may take in both, Christ, and the church which springs up out of him. But chiefly Christ is presented to us by this "plant of renown," which is the same with that in Jer. xxiii. 5, where it is said, "I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper;" he shows whom he means by that "righteous Branch," viz. Christ, who was to be King, and to execute judgment and justice in the earth. So here, "the plant of renown" is the "righteous Branch;" God would raise the one and the other: hence, Isa. liii. 2, he is said "to grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground." God planted him in Zion, and he came from Joseph and Mary, who were like dry ground; and he is oft called "the Branch," and "Branch of righteousness," and "Branch of the Lord," Zech. iii. 8; Jer. xxxiii. 15: and, Isa. iv. 2, "In that day shall the branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious," or, beauty and glory, as the Hebrew is. It is evident Christ is the "plant" or "branch," and not simply so, but a "plant of renown." That which makes men renowned, is something extraordinary; what is common extends not far, neither procreates renown- edness; but when things are beyond, or above, the common course of things, then they spread and beget fame: now Christ had extraordinaries not a few.

1. His conception and birth were extraordinary, Isa. vii. 14; Matt. i. 18, 20; Luke i. 31, 32, 35.

2. His gifts and graces were extraordinary, Isa. xi. 2, 3; Luke ii. 46, 47; John i. 14; iii. 34; Col. i. 19; ii. 3.

3. He did extraordinary things, and many of that kind. He took away the sin of the world, John i. 29. He brake down the partition wall between Jew and gentile, and reconciled both to God, Eph. ii. 14—16. He laid the foundation, and built the christian church, Zech. vi. 12. He brought in everlasting righteousness, Dan. ix. 24; life and immortality, 2 Tim. i. 10. He did many miracles, John iii. 2; vii. 31; ix. 16, 32; xi. 47; xii. 37. He fulfilled all righteousness, Matt. iii. 15. He authorized and enabled men to cast out devils, to cure all diseases, chap. x. 1. He revealed the Father, chap. xi. 27. He forgave sins, Luke v. 20, 21. He foretold things to come, Matt. xxiv. He sent the Comforter, John xvi. 7. He did such works as never any man did, John xv. 24.

4. He suffered more than other men. His sufferings were extraordinary, Isa. liii. 3—7, &c.; Luke xxii. 41; so Matt. xxvii.; Luke xxiii. He trod the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God, Rev. xix. 15. Paul's sufferings made him famous, Phil. i. 13, much more Christ's.

5. He had extraordinary titles; as Immanuel, Isa. vii. 14. The stone of Israel, Gen. xlix. 24. The Lord our Righteousness, Jer. xxiii. 6. The power and wisdom of God, 1 Cor. i. 24. The heir of all things, Heb. i. 2. King of kings, and Lord of lords, Rev. xix. 16. The light of the world, John viii. 12. The glory of Israel, Luke ii. 32. The Prince of life, Acts iii. 15. Judge of quick and dead, Acts x. 42. The image of the invisible God, Col. i. 15. The Head over all things, Eph. i. 22. The Lamb of God, John i. 29. The Mediator between God and man, 1 Tim. i. 5. The Sun of righteousness, Mal. iv. 2. His name is Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace, Isa. ix. 6.

6. He had extraordinary honour. When he was brought into the world, God commanded all the angels to worship him, Heb. i. 6. He stirred up the spirits of the wise men of the east, directing them by a star to come and worship him, Matt. ii. 11. When he was baptized, heaven was opened, the Spirit descended like a dove, and a voice from heaven said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased," Matt. iii. 16, 17. When he was transfigured, Moses and Elias appeared unto him; and the same voice of the Father was heard again with some addition, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, hear him:" and he committed all judgment to the Son, that "so all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father," John v. 23.

Take this "plant of renown" for the christian church, and it is renowned for that it is planted in Christ, Col. ii. 7; Eph. iv. 15; bears the name of Christ, James ii. 7; is his spouse, Rev. xxi. 9; John iii. 29; under his government, Eph. v. 24; freed from the bondage of the ceremonial law, Gal. iv. 1—5; hath clearer manifestations of God's love in Christ, Eph. ii. 7; extends further than ever the Jewish church did to the gentiles, to all nations, Isa. liv. 1—3; lx. 3; lxii. 2; Rev. xxi. 24, 25; and had such miraculous effusion of the Spirit upon many of the members of it, Acts ii. 3, 4; 1 Cor. xii. 8—10; and is the habitation of God, Eph. ii. 22; visible, and irremovable as mount Zion, Micah iv. 1, 2; Matt. xvi. 18; the ground and pillar of truth, 1 Tim. iii. 15.

"And they shall be no more consumed with hunger in the land." In Jacob's days there was a great famine, and his family had been consumed, if Egypt had not afforded relief. In David's days many suffered by the three years' famine then, 2 Sam. xxi. 1. There was a sore famine in Ahab's days, 1 Kings xviii. 2; and questionless many perished with hunger in the siege of Jerusalem, Lam. iv. 9; and many who were scattered abroad, not having to satisfy their hunger, became a prey to hunger itself. The promise here is, "They shall no more be consumed with hunger;" they shall have plenty of all good things, there shall be no corporal nor spiritual hunger: their teachers had been removed into corners, Isa. xxx. 20; their prophets had been ent off, and were glad to be hid in caves, 1 Kings xviii. 4; but God would set up shepherds over them, which should feed them, and they should not be lacking, Jer. xxiii. 4; "their eyes should see them," Isa. xxx. 20. The word for "consumed" is, asuppe, from sup which signifies, to gather together, to take away, and to consume. In time of famine men get together, consult how to relieve themselves, and when all means fail, the famine consumes them, and takes them away. The Septuagint is, They shall not be few in number, they shall have abundance and multiply.

"Neither bear the shame of the heathen any more." The Hebrew word for "shame" is, shameh which signifies, reproach. The Babylonians, and others where the Jews were scattered, did reproach them, and said, "Sing us one of the songs of Zion," Psal. cxxxvii. 3; you are the holy people, have holy ordinances, and holy songs, "sing us one of those songs." You thought yourselves safe in your holy city, that your God would protect you from all the nations; but where is your God? what is become of your city, temple, and confidences? are you not in our hands? are you not in bondage and captivity? ye are servants unto us, and shall never be at liberty more. Thus did they "bear the shame of the heathen," they were "a reproach, a proverb, a taunt, and a curse, in all places," Jer. xxiv. 9; but God would set them at liberty, roll away their reproach, and make them honourable: they should be a praise: Zeph. iii. 19. "At that time I will undo all that afflict thee: and I will save her that halteth, and gather her that was driven out; and I will get them praise and fame in every land where they have been put to shame:" and, ver. 20, "I will make you a name and a praise among all people of the earth, when I turn back your captivity."

Obs. 1. The Lord Christ himself, his renown, and that the church hath by him, is from the Lord. "I will raise up a plant of renown." Christ is called "the Word," John i. 1; and God made that Word flesh, ver. 14. He is called a "Rod, a Branch," Isa. xi. 1; and God caused that "Rod" to come out of the stem of Jesse, and that "Branch" to grow out of his roots. God planted Christ at first in the virgin's womb, and from thence he grew up (through God's wise disposing of things) to be "a plant of renown:" and, Luke i. 32, the angel said to Mary, "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord shall give him the throne of his father David." This God performed, and so made him a man, a "plant of renown:" he gave Christ to the church, he planted him in Zion, Isa. xxviii. 16; and so all the glory the church had by him (which was, and is, exceeding much) came originally from the Lord: Christ is therefore called "The gift of God," John iv. 10.

Obs. 2. Christ is fruitful, and yields good fruit. He is "a plant of renown:" were this plant barren, or did it bear evil fruit, it could not be "a plant of renown," it would be a plant of contempt. This plant is that "tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month," Rev. xxii. 2. No barrenness at all was on this tree, it had plenty and variety of fruit summer and winter, and the goodness of this fruit the church will tell you of, Cant. ii. 3. "I sat under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste." If the shadow of this tree was very delightsome, certainly the fruit of this tree was exceeding sweet. The man sick of the palsy found the sweet of this fruit, when Christ said unto him, "Son, be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven thee," Matt. ix. 2. Thousands can tell you how sweet the fruit of this tree hath been to their tastes, to their souls: Acts x. 38, "He went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil;" those that laboured and travailed, he said unto them, "Come unto me, and I will give you rest," Matt. xi. 28; you shall rest under my shadow, and be refreshed by eating of my fruit. There must needs be excellency and sweetness in the fruit of this plant, because all desire to have it: Hag. ii. 7, he is "the desire of all nations." Let him be the desire of our souls, and let them feed more upon the fruit this "plant of renown" bears; so shall we live, and live more abundantly.

Obs. 3. That the church under Christ shall be freed from those evils it hath formerly been subject unto, and shall enjoy the contrary good. "I will raise up a plant of renown, and they shall no more be consumed with hunger." They had been; but now they should have plenty, especially of spiritual food, they should know God from the least to the greatest, out of their bellies should flow rivers of water: "neither should they bear the shame of the heathen any more;" they should not be under their reproach, but should be honourable. God hath promised to take away reproachful terms, Isa. lxii. 4, and to give glorious titles to Zion; "Thou shalt no more be called Forsaken, Desolate; but thou shalt be called Hephzi-bah, Beulah;" yea, he hath said, she shall have abundance of glory, Isa. lxvi. 11. Whether the church hath had such glory is questionable: Christ was reproached himself when on earth, called a Samaritan, a seducer, a devil, and what not? So the christians in the primitive times were said to be factious, infant-killers, &c.: and to this day the church of Christ hath lain under the reproach of heathens and antichrist. But the time is coming, that reproaches shall be wiped away, and the church have abundance of glory, Rev. xxi. 3, 4, 10, 11.

Ver. 30. Thus shall they know that I the Lord their God am with them, and that they, even the house of Israel, are my people, saith the Lord God.

Here is a further blessing, viz. conviction of the heathens, that God is the God of that flock that hath suffered so much, and is with them. When God should gather his flock out of the countries where it was scattered, set up one shepherd, even his servant David, to be a prince over it, make a covenant of peace with the same, set it at liberty from all enemies, cause it to be in safety on all sides, take away its reproach, put honour upon it, and satisfy it with blessings temporal and spiritual: when these things were done, then should they, that is, the nations, "know that the Lord their God was with them," and thus should they know. By those gracious acts of God, and great mercies bestowed upon the house of Israel, they should be convinced; as when God began the work in the type, bringing them out of Babylon, the heathens said, "The Lord hath done great things for them," Psal. exxvi. 2. The Babylonians and others said, "God had cast off his people," exposed them to reproaches and cursing, that he regarded them not, but had left them to be a prey to all the world; but when they saw God appear so eminently for them, then they understood that God had not left or cast off his people so, but that he was still their God, and they his people.

"The house of Israel." The first mention of the "house of Israel," is in Exod. xvi. 31, and the last is in Heb. viii. 10. It is most mentioned in our prophet Ezekiel, well nigh as often as in all the holy Scriptures besides, if not more often. Gen. xxxii. 28, tells you how Jacob's name was turned into "Israel," whence his sons and posterity were called the "house of Israel;" and in process of time, not only those descended from his loins were so called, but all that believed in the seed promised to Jacob were Israelites, and "the house of Israel." It is not here to be confined to the Jews, but to extend to all believers.

Obs. 1. God hath a people in the world whom he doth own, and afford his presence in a special manner. "I the Lord their God am with them, and the house of Israel are my people." God owned the Jews of old above all the people of the earth; Dent.

vii. 6, "The Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth." There were multitudes of nations, all which, or any of which, he might have taken, and left the Jews, but he chose only that nation, Deut. x. 15; and therefore saith, Amos iii. 2, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth;" that is, You only have I known to be your God, to be with you, to be mine; others I have known, but not to be in covenant with them, not to afford them my special presence and favours: Lev. xxvi. 11, 12, God did dwell with and walk amongst them. And as then God had the Jews, so now he hath the christians for his people, whom he owns, and is present with, in a peculiar manner, 2 Cor. vi. 16, 18; Rev. ii. 1; Acts xviii. 9, 10, where you may see how God was with Paul, encouraging him to preach, and upon what ground, "for I have much people in this city;" it was in Corinth. Rev. xxi. 3, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God." God dwells in the christian church, and is with it to bestow variety of choice blessings upon it, and to protect it.

Obs. 2. Sometimes God's dealings with his people are so distinguishing, that heathens are convinced that they have God on their side, and enjoy special favours from him. "Thus shall they know that I the Lord their God am with them, and that they, even the house of Israel, are my people." "Thus," that is, by my dealings with them, which are different from my dealings with others. Dan. iii. when God preserved the three children in the fiery furnace, and delivered them from that hell, then was Nebuchadnezzar mightily convinced, and said, "Blessed be the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, who hath sent his angel, and delivered his servants that trusted in him, and have changed the king's word, and yielded their bodies, that they might not serve nor worship any God except their own God. Therefore I make a decree, That every people, nation, and language, which speak any thing amiss against the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, shall be cut in pieces, and their houses shall be made a dunghill: because there is no other God that can deliver after this sort." ver. 28, 29. So in Christ's time, and the apostles' times, the miracles done by them in several places convinced unbelievers that God was with them. The great things done in our days have made enemies to say, God hath done great things for them.

Ver. 31. And ye my flock, the flock of my pasture, are men, and I am your God, saith the Lord God.

This verse is the key to open what was said before. The Lord had spoken oft of his flock, and lest any should take the same literally, here he unfolds his mind, and tells us plainly, his flock are men, not brute creatures. The Hebrew word for "flock" is twice, "And ye my flock, the flock of my pasture." Some read the words in the future, thus, Ye my flock of my pasture shall be men; hitherto ye have been brutish, ye have savoured the things of the earth, and followed after carnal things, but henceforward ye shall be men cleaving to God and heavenly things. We may take them as they are, and find that sense in them which Sanctus hath: I have told you of great things, that my servant David shall be your shepherd, and a prince among you, that ye shall dwell safely in wildernesses, sleep in woods, and that none shall make you afraid; yea, I have told you, that I will free you from bondage, shame, famine, and that I will make you renowned, blessing you with variety and plenty of temporal and spiritual good things: but you see not how these things can be accomplished; you are men full of infirmities, shallow of understanding, apt to doubt and make objections, but I am God, and your God, I have promised and will perform, saith Adonai, Jehovah; my word is truth, and my power shall give being to whatsoever I have said. There is yet another sense of these words, "Ye, the flock of my pasture, are men;" that is, men called out of the world, men renewed by the transforming of your minds, men walking in the Spirit, not after the flesh, men given up to me and my ways, men dealing justly and honestly, men fearing God and pursuing holiness, men of choice spirits and practices. This sense I should approve of, but that the word for "men" is Adam, which rather imports "men" with their frailties, than "men" with their excellences.

"The flock of my pasture." God calls them the "flock of his pasture," because he provided for them food for their bodies and souls, as a shepherd doth provide pasture for his sheep; he gave them manna from heaven in former days, and now he gives them his ordinances, his word, the flesh and blood of his Son. God's flock is different from other flocks, and hath different pastures; they are of the world, and feed upon the acorns and husks of the same; but God's flock is picked out of the world, separate from it, and feeds on heavenly dainties.

"I am your God." This is a great and gracious word. What can the Lord say more than this to any, "I am your God?" what can any desire more than to have God there? Psal. lxxiii. 25, "Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee," saith Asaph: let others desire what they will in heaven or earth, I desire nothing but God himself. Asaph knew that, in having him for his God, he should have all things. When the Lord saith so, he doth engage himself, all his attributes, and whatsoever he hath, unto the people or person he so saith.

Obs. 1. God hath a peculiar people on earth, which he owns and feeds. "Ye my flock, the flock of my pasture." God hath elect, called, justified, and adopted ones, which make up his flock; see 1 Pet. ii. 9, 10; Titus ii. 14. Zech. xiii. 9, "I will say, It is my people." God hath a people refined and tried in the furnace of affliction, which he is not ashamed of, but owns openly, and this people he provides for: Isa. lxxv. 13, "Behold, my servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry: behold, my servants shall drink, but ye shall be thirsty: behold, my servants shall rejoice, but ye shall be ashamed." God's people shall have meat and drink, and that with gladness, Acts ii. 46: they have hidden manna, Rev. ii. 17: they are fed by the Lamb, and drink of living fountains of waters, Rev. vii. 17. They are a peculiar people, and have peculiar meat and drink.

Obs. 2. That of whomsoever God's flock doth consist, yet they are weak and frail creatures. "The flock of my pasture are men." Noah, Lot, Abraham, Jacob, Job, David, Jeremiah, Peter, Paul, John, who were worthies in Israel, yet had their weaknesses, and showed themselves to be men. "Can God prepare a table in the wilderness?" said the house of Israel: and Mary, whom all generations called blessed, we may call an Adamite, the daughter of Adam, for she showed her weakness when she said, "How can this be, seeing I know not a man?" Luke i. 34.

Obs. 3. The happiness and comfort of God's flock lieth in having God to be their God, and his manifestation of it. Ye are men, feeble, helpless things, but I am your God, saith the Lord. Whatsoever is defective in yourselves is redundant in me; as there is nothing but impotency and misery in you, so there is nothing but power, grace, and happiness in me: I have loved you freely, and taken you to be my flock, I have given myself unto you, and all I have with myself, and this I make known unto you.

CHAPTER XXXV.

Ver. 1—5. Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, set thy face against mount Seir, and prophesy against it, and say unto it, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O mount Seir, I am against thee, and I will stretch out mine hand against thee, and I will make thee most desolate. I will lay thy cities waste, and thou shalt be desolate, and thou shalt know that I am the Lord. Because thou hast had a perpetual hatred, and hast shed the blood of the children of Israel by the force of the sword in the time of their calamity, in the time that their iniquity had an end.

THE Lord having, in the former chapter, laid down many precious promises for the restoration, freedom, and comfort of his afflicted flock, here he comes to deal with the enemies of his church; and in the chapter are,

I. Threatenings of punishments, ver. 2—4, 6—9.

II. The sins moving God thereunto, ver. 5, 10—13.

III. The end of those threatenings and punishments, ver. 4, 11, 15.

Ver. 1, 2. "Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, set thy face against mount Seir." The prophet received the word from, and was empowered by, God to prophesy against "mount Seir." Of setting the face towards, or against, was spoken before, chap. xx. 46; xxi. 2; xxv. 2; where there is a prophecy against Moab and Seir. He must turn himself another way, and speak boldly against mount Seir; that is, against Idumea, wherein mount Seir was, between the lake Asphaltites and Egypt, where Esau and his posterity dwelt, Gen. xxxii. 3, who were called Edomites, or Idumeans.

Ver. 3. "Behold, O mount Seir, I am against thee." Here is a sad message for "mount Seir," or rather the inhabitants of Idumea, who, by a metonymy, are understood thereby. They had God against them, and this declared, Behold, I am against thee, Idumea, I am against all thine inhabitants; thou hast not Israel against thee, but the God of Israel: I that formed Israel, that formed thee; I that made all the world, and can annihilate it at my pleasure; even I am against thee, to infatuate thy counsels, to weaken thy forces, to frustrate thine enterprises, and to bring thee low.

"I will stretch out mine hand against thee." Stretching out the hand is sometimes in mercy, as Prov. i. 24; and sometimes in judgment, as here, and chap. xxv. 13, "I will stretch out mine hand upon Edom, and will cut off man and beast." This posture of the hand imports vehement displeasure in the party that doth it, and readiness to strike. God was very wroth with these Idumeans, and would set his power on work to smite them with destructive judgments.

"I will make thee most desolate." The Hebrew is, שָׁמַיִם שָׁמַיִם which Montanus renders, desolation, and solitariness. The Septuagint is, I will make thee a wilderness, and thou shalt be a wilderness. When the Hebrew is doubled, that is instead of a superlative; here it is desolation and desolation, which implies most desolateness.

Ver. 4. "I will lay thy cities waste." Idumea had many cities, as Temán, Dedan, Bozra, Maresa, Rhinocorura, Raphia, Gaza, Anthedon, Asealon, and Azotus, all which God threatens to lay waste, chap. xxv. 14. God said he would lay his vengeance upon Edom, and this was made good in the destruction of her cities and people.

"And thou shalt be desolate." God would, by his judgments, cut off man and beast, chap. xxv. 13, and so made it desolate to purpose. When there are neither men nor cattle in a land, how desolate is it!

"And thou shalt know that I am the Lord." When thy cities are laid waste, when man and beast are cut off, then shalt thou know that I am against thee, and that I am the Lord Jehovah, who hath done such things.

Ver. 5. "Because thou hast had a perpetual hatred." The Hebrew is, for that there is to thee a hatred or enmity of old. This is the first sin mentioned, which provoked God to proceed so severely against them, viz. their ancient hatred to the Israelites. Gen. xxvii. 41, Esau hated Jacob, and purposed in his heart to slay him, because he had got the blessing. This hatred descended to the posterity of Esau, against the posterity of Jacob, and began in the womb of Rebekah, when the children struggled together, Gen. xxv. 22. The Edomites were ever enemies to the Israelites in their hearts; and vented it as they had occasion. When the Babylonians took Jerusalem, they cried, "Raise it, raise it, even to the foundation thereof," Psal. cxxvii. 7.

"And hast shed the blood of the children of Israel by the force of the sword." In the Hebrew it is thus, and hast poured out the children of Israel by the hand of the sword. The Septuagint, thou hast sat down before the house of Israel by deceit, or thou hast laid wait for the house of Israel by the hand of the enemies' sword. The Tigurine translation is, thou hast terrified them by the sword. The Vulgate is, thou hast shut up the sons of Israel into the hand of the sword: thou stoppedst their flight, and so causedst them to fall by the enemies' sword. Junius, by thy hatred thou effectedst it, that the Israelites were diminished by the sword. Munster differs somewhat from all these; saith he, thou hast forced the Israelites upon the sword, thou camest out against them, and drovest them back when they thought to escape by thy borders. The word nagar signifies, to flow, to pour out, and in Hiphel, to make to flow; the sense is, Thou hast slain the children of Israel, and hast made their blood to flow, or poured out their blood. That in Obadiah gives light to this; ver. 14, "Thou shouldest not have stood in the cross way, to cut off those of his that did escape; neither shouldest thou have delivered up those of his that did remain in the day of distress." When the Babylonians entered Jerusalem, some Jews got away, but the Edomites watched for them at a cross way, and there cut them off, and others they delivered up to be cut off. By the hand of the sword, that is, the power of it.

"In the time of their calamity." Here is the aggravation of their sin, that they were cruel when they should have been compassionate: Job vi. 14, "To him that is afflicted pity should be showed." The Edomites, being brethren, should have pitied the Israelites when they suffered such hard things from the Babylonians; but they were without pity: Amos i. 11, "Edom did pursue his brother with the sword, and did cast off all pity:" he was so far from pitying, that he was cruel, even cruelty itself, he cast off all pity, put on nothing but cruelty; they fled to them for succour, and they destroyed them.

"In the time that their iniquity had an end." Here is another aggravation. "Iniquity" may be taken for sin or punishment: if it be taken for sin, the sense runs thus, That the Edomites shed their blood, when their sins were come to the height, and they put into a condition of sinning so no more; now they should have showed them kindness, not have exasperated them. If we take "iniquity" for punishment, the sense is, In the time that they had their utmost punishment for their sin, when God dealt most severely with them, when city and temple were burnt, laid level with the ground, when church and state were wholly ruined, even thou didst then shed their blood, and dealest cruelly with them.

Obs. 1. The prophets were ordered by God to prophesy for, or against, whom he pleased. "Son of man, set thy face against mount Seir, and prophesy against it." In the chapter before he had prophesied against the shepherds of Israel, and for God's flock, which he did by divine appointment; and here he is appointed to prophesy against the Edomites, who were as wolves to his flock. The prophets spake as they were moved by the Spirit, and unto whom they were directed by God.

Obs. 2. Those that are enemies to God's people, have God an enemy unto them. The Idumeans were enemies to the Jews, and God declares himself to be an enemy unto them: Behold, O mount Seir, I am against thee, and thou shalt feel the force of mine enmity, as thou hast made my people feel the force of thy sword; thou hast stretched thy hand against them, and I will stretch out my hand against thee; thou hast cut them off, and I will cut thee off; I will lay thy cities waste, and make thee desolate. The effects of God's enmity are dreadful. Woe to that land, those cities and people, whom he is against! see Ezek. xxv. xxvi.; and Isa. lxvi. 14, it is said, "The hand of the Lord shall be known toward his servants, and his indignation toward his enemies." God will put a difference between his people and his enemies; for the one, he will put forth his power for their good, and for the other, he will let out his indignation for their destruction.

Obs. 3. God takes notice how the hearts of men stand towards his people, whether they love them, or hate them. Esau and his posterity hated Jacob and his posterity, and this the Lord noted. Not only doth he observe what they do to his people, but also what spirits they have towards his people. Esth. ix. 1, "The Jews had rule over them that hated them." The Lord regarded the spirits of the Babylonians, how malicious they were toward the Jews.

Obs. 4. The nature of hatred is lasting and destructive. "Thou hast had a perpetual hatred, and hast shed the blood of the children of Israel." This hatred had lasted above twelve hundred years, it was a hatred of ages, it ran through generation after generation, and lasted from Esau's days to the Babylonish captivity; and notwithstanding it was so old, yet it had so much spirit and life in it, as to shed the blood of Israelites. Hatred is implacable, and seeks the utter extirpation of what it hates. Cain hated Abel, and slew him; the Jews hated Christ, and they were restless till they had cut him off from the land of the living. David tells you, Psal. xxv. 19, what is the true nature of hatred; saith he, "They hate me with cruel hatred:" not that any hatred is gentle, ("for the mercies of the wicked are cruel," Prov. xii. 10,) but all hatred is cruel and bloody: it would tear the party hated in pieces, and shred him as herbs for the pot.

Obs. 5. God is much incensed against them who deal harshly with his people, being in a suffering condition. These Edomites were bitter and bloody to the Israelites when they were in great affliction, deprived of all their outward comforts, and fled for their lives: they, being in circumstances of intimate relation, should upon those accounts have had pity on them; or if not on those respects, yet for that they were men, and what befalls one condition of men may befall another; but they showed them no mercy, "they shed their blood in the day of their calamity," and therefore God was wroth, laid waste their cities, and shed their blood: Obad. 10, "For thy violence against thy brother Jacob shame shall cover thee, and thou shalt be cut off for ever." Thus God made good what he gave out by the mouth of Solomon, Prov. xvii. 5, "He that is glad at calamities shall not be unpunished."

Ver. 6—9. Therefore, as I live, saith the Lord God, I will prepare thee unto blood, and blood shall pursue thee: sith thou hast not hated blood, even blood shall pursue thee. Thus will I make mount Seir most desolate, and cut off from it him that passeth out and him that returneth. And I will fill his mountains with his slain men: in thy hills, and in thy valleys, and in all thy rivers, shall they fall that are slain with the sword. I will make thee perpetual desolations, and thy cities shall not return: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

In these verses God's proceeding against the Edomites is more particularly laid down.

I. Here is the destruction of themselves, ver. 6, 8.

II. The desolation and misery of their country, ver. 7, 9.

III. The confirmation of both these by an oath, ver. 6.

Ver. 6. "Therefore, as I live, saith the Lord God." Of this divine oath hath oft been spoken: it is used sometimes to confirm promises, as Isa. xlix. 18, 19, but most frequently to confirm threatenings, which are hardly believed. Seeing thou hast been unbrotherlike, unnatural to the Jews, in shedding of their blood, "therefore, as I live," as sure as I am the living God, "I will prepare thee unto blood;" thou thinkest thyself secure, and that no mischief shall come upon thee, but let not me be the living God, if you escape so.

"I will prepare thee unto blood." The Hebrew is, because I will make thee unto blood; that is, I will fit thee, prepare thee, unto blood, I will order things so, that thy blood shall be shed.

"And blood shall pursue thee." God's oath we may refer to these words, and read the verse thus, As I live, saith the Lord God, because I will prepare thee unto blood, even blood shall pursue thee. By "blood" here we may understand, either the "blood" of the Jews which they had shed, and cried for vengeance like the blood of Abel; or by "blood" may be meant bloody men: those who are thine enemies, they shall pursue thee, and shed thy "blood" without pity.

"Sith thou hast not hated blood." Several ways men render these words, but our translation is most approvable, because, or "sith, thou hast not hated blood;" or, if thou hatest not blood. The Edomites did not hate shedding of blood, but were glad of that opportunity they had to cut off the Jews, that so they might ingratiate themselves with the Babylonians.

Ver. 7. "Thus will I make mount Seir most desolate." "Mount Seir" is put for the land of Idumea, which was a pleasant and fruitful land; but this would God make desolation, even desolation; that is, most desolate, it should be void of inhabitants.

"And cut off from it him that passeth out and him that returneth." God would do by Idumea as men do by a wood, cut down the great trees and the lesser, even every tree and every bush. So not only the great ones in Idumea, but the meaner sort, such as travelled from place to place to get a living, those that carried out commodities, and those that brought them in, they should all be cut off, there should be none left to tread in her paths.

Ver. 8. "And I will fill his mountains with his slain men." Idumea had many mountains, which formerly were filled with sheep and oxen, but now they should be filled with the carcases of slain men, which shows the greatness of the slaughter that should be made of the Idumeans. Such a general destruction of them there should be, as that in all places the dead should lie in the hills, in the valleys, and in the rivers; they fled to those places to secure themselves from the Chaldean army, and there they slew them, and made them meat for the fowls of heaven and fish in the waters.

Ver. 9. "I will make thee perpetual desolations." There is another scripture speaking thus much, that Edom should not only be desolate, but desolate for ever; as Jer. xlix. 17, 18, it should be made like Sodom and Gomorrah, none should abide or dwell there. Sodom and Gomorrah were never built again, but the cities of Edom were, as appears by Mal. i. 4. Jer. xxvii. 7, "All nations shall serve Nebuchadnezzar, and his son, and his son's son, until the very time of his land come: and then many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of him." Edom was afterwards possessed again, and the Edomites so strong and malicious, that they besieged the Israelites, 1 Mace. v. 3. By "perpetual," therefore, we must not understand eternal, that which had no end, but that which was for a long time; so the word עולם doth usually signify; and it is rendered, by some, age, I will make thee the desolations of an age, thirty, a hundred, or a thousand years; for a long season thou shalt be desolate, without cities and inhabitants.

"And thy cities shall not return." Not till after a long time, and then they shall not return unto that glory, strength, and greatness which formerly they were in. After cities and countries are once wasted, they attain not to their former condition oft in many generations.

Obs. 1. Bloody men frequently have bloody ends. Idumea was cruel and bloody against the Israelites, there God prepared her for blood, and said, "Blood shall pursue thee; sith thou hast not hated blood;" blood calls for blood. The Babylonians were bloody and cruel to the Jews, and hear what the Lord saith, Jer. li. 36, "I will plead thy cause, and take vengeance for thee;" and ver. 40, "I will bring them down like lambs to the slaughter, like rams with he goats." God would deal with them as butchers do with such creatures, they take away their lives, and shed their blood. Hosea i. 4, "I will avenge the blood of Jezreel upon the house of Jehu;" he caused the seventy sons of Ahab to be beheaded by the rulers of Jezreel, 2 Kings x. 1, 7, and this blood did God avenge upon his house. 2 Sam. xxi. 1, Saul's house was bloody, he slew the Gibeonites, and seven sons of his were put to death for it, ver. 6, 9; so God pursued blood with blood. In like manner was Joab dealt withal; he shed innocent blood, and his blood was shed at the horns of the altar, 1 Kings ii. 29, 31.

Obs. 2. When God doth visit wicked ones for shedding of blood, he doth it fully and thoroughly. God would make mount Seir without inhabitant, those that went out, and those that came in, should be cut off. Such a slaughter would he make amongst them, as that the mountains, hills, valleys, and rivers, should be filled with the slain bodies. Isaiah, speaking of God's visiting the Edomites, chap. xxxiv. 6, 7, saith "The sword of the Lord is filled with blood, it is made fat with fatness, and with the blood of lambs and goats, with the fat of the kidneys of rams: for the Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumea. And the unicorns shall come down with them, and the bullocks with the bulls; and their land shall be soaked with blood, and their dust made fat with fatness:" great and small, rich and poor, noble and ignoble, should be cut off.

Obs. 3. That according to the time of men's sinning, God doth lengthen out his judgments. Edom had perpetual hatred, and God saith, "I will make thee perpetual desolations." Edom's anger did tear perpetually, Amos i. 11, and God's judgments upon Edom had a perpetuity, Obad. 10, she was cut off for ever. Those that continue long in a course of sinning, God causes sometimes to lie long under severe judgments; the Jews were seventy years in captivity, they had lived long in idolatry.

Ver. 10. Because thou hast said, These two nations and these two countries shall be mine, and we will possess it; whereas the Lord was there.

The Idumeans had a fruitful land of their own, that satisfied them not, covetousness and desire of rule possessed them; they thought and said, the whole land of Judea should become theirs; the Babylonians would root the Jews wholly out, leave the land, and so it would fall to their lot and possession.

"These two nations and these two countries." When God brought the Jews out of Egypt into Canaan, they were one nation, and it one land, and so continued till the rent made by Jeroboam, 1 Kings xii. Then ten tribes falling off from Rehoboam, constituted a new kingdom, and so the people and land were divided into two nations and two countries. The one sort were called Ephraim, the house of Israel, Samaritans, and their country, Samaria. The other sort were called Jews, the house of David, and their country, Judea.

"Shall be mine, and we will possess it." Judea and Samaria, saith Edom, "shall be mine," and we Edomites will possess it, and make it one land again, as it was at first: none have so much right to it as we, who are from the same stock, Isaac, and from the elder brother Esau, whereas they were from Jacob; and seeing the Babylonians are come to cut them off, we will join with them to secure ourselves, and recover our right. When the temple and city were destroyed, the Jews carried into captivity, and the land made desolate, the neighbouring nations gaped for and got what they could of their country; Jer. xlix. 1, "Concerning the Ammonites, thus saith the Lord: Hath Israel no sons? hath he no heir? why then doth their king inherit Gad, and his people dwell in his cities?" Ammonites, Edomites, and others said, "Come, let us cut them off from being a nation, and let us take to ourselves the houses of God in possession," Psal. lxxxviii. 4, 12.

"Whereas the Lord was there." The words may be read thus, though the Lord be there: and so they set out the arrogance and blasphemy of the Edomites, who said, they would possess the land though the Lord was there; he would not hinder them from coming in, sitting down, and continuing in it. Or the word "there" may relate to the Edomites, the Lord was there amongst them, when they said, "These two nations and these two countries shall be mine, and we will possess it." He heard these words, and was displeased at them, coming from pride and bitterness of spirit. Or, thirdly, the words may be taken as we read them, and afford this sense; The Edomites have presumed much, promised great matters to themselves, to have the whole land of Canaan in possession; whereas the Lord was there, and had that land under his patronage, reserving it for temple worship again, as it had had it formerly. That land was the habitation of God, who would not suffer the bloody Edomites, whatever thoughts they had, or attempts they should make, to inhabit that land, and defile his holy mountain with their idolatrous sacrifices; though he did greatly afflict the land, yet he did not wholly desert it.

Obs. 1. Wicked men, the enemies of Zion, do think and design to raise themselves by the ruins and spoils thereof. Edom said, "These two nations and these two countries shall be mine:" whatever is left of the Jews I will have; if there be nothing but the very land, I will take that for a possession, so shall I enrich myself, enlarge my borders, and become great. Such thoughts and hopes were once in Tyrus, she looked to be made by the sufferings of Jerusalem: Ezek. xxvi. 2, "Tyrus said against Jerusalem, She is broken that was the gates of the people: she is turned unto me; I shall be replenished, now she is laid waste." Tyrus expected that Jerusalem being ruined, all the trading should come to her, that the great concourse of people Jerusalem had, should enter her gates, and tread her streets. Obadiah tells us, that the Edomites laid hands on the Jewish substance "in the day of their calamity," ver. 13. They coveted their wealth, thirsted after their land, and sought to advance themselves by their ruins.

Obs. 2. The desires, hopes, and expectation of the wicked come to nought. The Edomites coveted Canaan, hoped and waited for it, but the Lord was there, and disappointed them; they were shortly after the destruction of Jerusalem destroyed by the Babylonians; Jer. xxvii. 3, 6, God had given them into Nebuchadnezzar's hand. David tells yon, Psal. exii. 10, that "the desire of the wicked shall perish;" and Solomon saith, Prov. x. 28, that "the expectation of the wicked shall perish;" they desire, and expect the fulfilling of their desires, but themselves, their desires, and expectations, come to nought. In Prov. xi. 23, Solomon hath a strange expression; it is this, "The expectation of the wicked is wrath." Do men look for wrath? No, but the event of their expectation is such, they meet with the wrath of God. These Edomites looked for the land of the Jews, and lost their own.

Obs. 3. The Lord keeps and disposes of lands as he pleases. He was in Canaan, "the Lord was there;" he was Patron of it, he kept it out of the Edomites' hands, he reserved it for his people again. Hence Obadiah, ver. 17, saith, "The house of Jacob shall possess their possessions;" they shall come again and inhabit their country which God reserved for them. Jer. xlix. 1, 2, when the ten tribes were carried away, the Ammonites, who dwelt near the tribe of Gad, intruded into it, and the cities of it; but see what God saith in ver. 2, "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will cause an alarm of war to be heard in Rabbah of the Ammonites; and it shall be a desolate heap, and her daughters," that is, lesser towns, "shall be burned with fire: then shall Israel be heir unto them that were his heirs." Israel shall return out of captivity, and possess his own land, and the Ammonites' also, which for a season got part of his.

Obs. 4. Whatever the fate of a land is, whatever calamities it lies under, yet the Lord is not far from it, he is in it. Judea was laid waste, the temple and cities in it ruined, man and beast cut off, enemies on all sides seeking to get it in whole or in part; and notwithstanding it was in such a case, in such danger, "the Lord was there." God is said to dwell in darkness; Psal. xviii. 11, "He made darkness his secret place;" here was a land of darkness, and God hid himself in it, he was there, though the Edomites saw him not. When Babylonians lay waste Zion, drive out the inhabitants thereof, yet they cannot drive out God; he is in Zion, and will abide in Zion. The bear out of the wood not long since was wasting, and the wild beast of the field devouring, they drove many out of our Zion, but they could not drive God out; he was here when the face of all things was lamentable.

Ver. 11. Therefore, as I live, saith the Lord God, I will even do according to thine anger, and according to thine envy which thou hast used out of thy hatred against them; and I will make myself known among them, when I have judged thee.

In this and the two next verses, you have a further discovery of mount Seir's sins, and how God would deal with the inhabitants thereof, and all confirmed by oath.

"I will even do according to thine anger." Thou hast been angry with my people, yea, angry unto death, and I will do accordingly: not that God would be angry, but he would punish them severely for their anger. Anger is not a boiling of the blood and spirits about the heart, as some have made it, for that is rather an effect, than the nature of it; it is an inordinate desire of returning evil to him whom we conceive hath wronged us.

"And according to thine envy." The Edomites envied the Jews, who prospered into a kingdom, and grew renowned, chap. xvi. 13, 14. The nature of envy is to grieve at the good of another man, and to think it an evil to ourselves, that we are exceeded by others in any thing; an envious man is afflicted that any is equal to him, or above him.

"Which thou hast used out of thy hatred against them." Hatred is an enmity of the appetite to things or persons, apprehended contrary to its good and contentment. The Edomites looked at the Jews as enemies, as contrary to their good and content, and so hated them. There is a twofold hatred, or rather two degrees of hatred: the first is, aversion, which only flees from what is hated; we hate toads, serpents, and such venomous creatures, and flee from them: the second is, persecution, which pursues the thing hated to destruction: the one respects the evil simply, the other the thing or person in which the evil is apprehended to be. With this last kind or degree of hatred were the Edomites infected, and so envying them sought their ruin.

"And I will make myself known among them, when I have judged thee." I will execute judgment upon thee, deliver thee and thy wealth into the hands of thine enemies, and my servants shall behold my glory in punishing thee, and my mercy in delivering them; my people shall know what a God I am, when I have visited you for your hatred, envy, and wrath against them: they shall find me a God exercising mercy, as you have found me a God executing judgments; as I have made myself known to you in my power and justice, so I will make myself known to them in mercy and loving-kindness.

Obs. 1. One sinful affection sets others on work. The Edomites' hatred set their anger and envy on work. They used these out of their hatred of the Jews; they hated them, and that hatred stirred up their anger to do them harm, and their envy to persecute them unto death. The apostle saith of love, 1 Cor. xiii. 4, 5, it envies not, it is not easily provoked, it thinks no evil; but hatred envies, is easily provoked, and thinks nothing but evil; it is a root of bitterness, and brings forth bitter fruit, it makes use of other affections to accomplish its ends. Jealousy kindles anger, and casts forth hatred; fear sets grief and despair on work. The affections are seated so near one another in the heart, that if one move sinfully, the rest are ready to stir and accompany the same. Let us look well to our affections, for they are dangerous things; Solomon knew it, and therefore, Prov. iv. 23, counsels us to "keep our hearts with all diligence."

Obs. 2. God will deal with men not only according to their evil actions, but according to their evil affections also. "I will even do according to thine anger, and according to thine envy." Men are convinced they must be responsive for evil actions, but not so for evil affections. The Lord puts it out of doubt here, and swears to it, "As I live, saith the Lord God, I will even do according to thine anger," &c. Matt. v. 22, he that "is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment." Rev. xxi. 8, "The fearful shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone." Edom's rejoicing is mentioned, Obad. 12, among the sins that caused God to cut her off. John iii. 19, "This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness." God will deal with men for their sinful fear, sinful joy, and sinful love; for sinful affections as well as sinful actions. Hence are we counselled to put away all bitterness, wrath, and anger, Eph. iv. 31; to mortify inordinate affection, Col. iii. 5.

Obs. 3. After the insulting enemies of Zion are punished, God will show kindness unto Zion, she shall have expressions of his love. "I will make myself known amongst them," that is, those of Zion, "after I have judged thee," that is, the Edomites. They insulted over the Jews, and added affliction to affliction, which the Lord visited them for, and then comforted his afflicted people. The Babylonians were bitter enemies to the Jews, they insulted over them, and said, "Sing us one of the songs of Zion," Psal. cxxxvii. 3; for which you may see how God would deal with them; Isa. xliii. the Medes should destroy them, and that without pity: and what then? chap. xiv. 1—3, "The Lord will have mercy on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel, and set them in their own land; they shall rule over their oppressors, and have rest from their sorrows." After Sennacherib's army was destroyed by the angel of the Lord, which insulted over the Jews, and spake blasphemous things against God and Hezekiah, did not God express love to Hezekiah, and in him to all the Jews, in granting him fifteen years more unto his days? Isa. xxxvii. and xxxviii. When God had judged the Egyptians, he brought forth the Jews, seated them in Canaan, and showed them not a little kindness there, Acts vii. 7.

Ver. 12, 13. And thou shalt know that I am the Lord, and that I have heard all thy blasphemies which thou hast spoken against the mountains of Israel, saying, They are laid desolate, they are given us to consume. Thus with your mouth ye have boasted against me, and have multiplied your words against me: I have heard them.

Their blasphemies against God and Israel are here set down, and the notice God took of them.

Ver. 12. "Thou shalt know that I am the Lord, and that I have heard all thy blasphemies." The Hebrew is thus, Thou shalt know that I the Lord have heard all thy blasphemies. The Edomites spake freely against the Jews, thinking God had cast them off, and cared not for them; but when he should judge and punish them, then they should be convinced that he had heard their blasphemies. The word for blasphemy is, neatzah, from נָאָז to despise, contemptuously to provoke. Kirker saith, it is to provoke with reproachful and cursed speeches: Junius hath it, all thy provocations: the Septuagint, French, and others, have it "blasphemies."

"Which thou hast spoken against the mountains of Israel." By "mountains of Israel," the land and people of Israel are intended; that land was full of mountains, and among others there was the mountain of the Lord, Psal. xxiv. 3; and they spake against that mountain with the rest.

"Saying, They are laid desolate." Are these words so evil as that they should be judged blasphemy? it is not to be doubted but they said more, though it be not here expressed. Obad. 12, Edom spake proudly in the day of Jerusalem's distress; she insulted and gloried in the sufferings and desolations of the people and land: Where is your temple and city, said they, that stood on mount Zion? where are the cattle that fed upon the mountains, and were for sacrifices? They are laid desolate; now where will you have sacrifices? and whither will ye go to sacrifice? Thus they spake blasphemously.

"They are given us to consume." The Jews are now destroyed and gone into captivity, they shall never return to take possession of these mountains again, they are now given to us to be a prey; but who gave them they declare not. God did not give them unto the Edomites, and no other could, for the land was the Lord's; they took the mountains of Israel, their covetous hearts would have them, ver. 10: and what would they do with them? "Consume them," saith our translation; but the Hebrew is, לֶחֶם לֶחֶם to eat; that is, to bring them under our power, and to make use of for our good.

Ver. 13. "Thus with your mouth ye have boasted against me." Ye have magnified against me, saith the Hebrew; you have spoken great words, your mouth hath been wide open against me, and hath lift you up above me, or against me: Obad. 12, is thus, Thou hast magnified thy mouth, which is rendered, "Thou hast spoken proudly." Jer. xlvi. 26, "Moab magnified against the Lord," that is, magnified his mouth against him by speaking arrogant words; Ezek. xxv. 8, Moab said, "Behold, the house of Judah is like unto all the heathen." When men speak proudly, insolently against God or his people, they do magnify with their mouths, or magnify their mouths.

"And have multiplied your words against me." They spake much more than is expressed. They multiply words; the Hebrew word for multiply here is מְרַבּ athar, which signifies to abound in words, as in prayer. These Edomites did multiply words, words against the Lord, and their words were stout against him.

"I have heard them." Though you thought me shut up in the heavens, that I could not hear at so great a distance, or that I minded not the affairs of the world, especially what words one nation speaks against another, yet saith God, "I have heard them."

Obs. 1. The Lord takes notice of all the bitter, reproachful, and provoking speeches which wicked ones do utter against the church and people of God. "I have heard all thy blasphemies which thou hast spoken against the mountains of Israel." Whether Edom secretly muttered out or openly vented her blasphemies, the Lord heard them. Ammon said, "Aha, against God's sanctuary, when it was profaned; and against the land of Israel, when it was desolate; and against the house of Judah, when they went into captivity," Ezek. xxv. 3; and Moab said, "The house of Judah is like unto all the heathen." When they said so, was the Lord deaf? Zeph. ii. 8, "I have heard the reproach of Moab, and the revilings of the children of Ammon, whereby they have reproached my people, and magnified themselves against their border." The Lord heard and remembered what they said, and made it known to all ages; so did he hear what Tyrus, the sea-city, said insultingly against Jerusalem, Ezek. xxvi. 2; he took notice of the letter that Rehum the chancellor, and Shimshai the scribe, and the rest of their companions, wrote against Jerusalem, Ezra iv. 8. There is nothing said or thought against the people of God, but he is privy to it: Lam. iii. 61, saith Jeremiah, "Thou hast heard their reproach, O Lord, and all their imaginations against me." God heard not only what their wicked tongues spake, but also what their vile hearts imagined, yea, all that they imagined; he hears imaginations.

Obs. 2. God will convince and make blasphemers know that he heard their blasphemies. "And thou shalt know that I the Lord have heard all thy blasphemies." Men blaspheme heaven and earth, they speak proudly against God, Christ, Scriptures, ordinances, and flatter themselves that they shall never more hear of their blasphemies, they think God minds them not; but God hath times to make such black-mouthed wretches to know that he heard them, even all of them. When God visited Edom with the sword, then they should know it; when death comes, or judgment after death, then shall they know what they have said. If men must give account of every idle word they speak, Matt. xii. 36, much more of reviling and blasphemous words.

Obs. 3. The revilings and blasphemies uttered against the people of God, God accounts as spoken against himself. The Edomites spake against the Jews, and the mountains of Israel; but thus saith the Lord, "With your mouth ye have boasted against me, and have multiplied your words against me;" it is myself you reproach and speak against, when you deal so by my people. What Moab said against the house of Judah, Ezek. xxv. 8, God saith was against himself; Jer. xlvi. 26, 42, "Moab hath magnified himself against the Lord." When the wicked spake against God's servants, truth, and sanctuary, David saith they reproached God: Psal. lxxiv. 22, "Arise, O God, plead thine own cause: remember how the foolish man reproacheth thee daily:" it was God they reproached. As wicked men act against God when they act against his people, (2 Chron. xiv. 11; Numb. xvi. 3; with Numb. xxvii. 3.) so they speak against God, when they speak against his people; all the bitter, reviling, and provoking speeches they utter against them, God hears, reckons as vented against himself, and will recompense into the bosoms of his enemies.

Ver. 14, 15. Thus saith the Lord God; When the whole earth rejoiceth, I will make thee desolate. As thou didst rejoice at the inheritance of the house of Israel, because it was desolate, so will I do unto thee: thou shalt be desolate, O mount Seir, and all Idumea, even all of it: and they shall know that I am the Lord.

In this conclusion of the chapter, the Lord further declares his mind concerning Idumea, and tells her she shall suffer when all others shall rejoice: and why? Because she rejoiced at the sufferings of the house of Israel.

Ver. 14. "When the whole earth rejoiceth." If we refer the word "earth" to the land of Judea, the sense may be this, When I shall make that whole land rejoice; or, if we understand by "earth," the other parts of the world, the meaning is, When I shall bring my people out of captivity, and cause the whole earth to rejoice thereat, then will I make thee desolate. But scriptures do hint it to us, that Edom was made desolate before the return of the Jews from Babylon: Jeremiah, chap. xxv. and xxvii. tells us that Edom was given to Nebuchadnezzar, and was to drink the cup of God's wrath like other nations; and sundry expositors agree in this, that shortly after the destruction of Jerusalem, Edom was laid desolate. Some other interpretation therefore of the words is to be looked out: we may refer "earth" to Idumea, and then the sense will be this, As the whole land of Idumea hath rejoiced at the desolation of the Israelites, so will I make it wholly desolate. The Hebrew favours this interpretation, for it is thus, As the whole earth, or land, hath rejoiced in desolation, I will do unto thee. Piscator goeth this way, and saith, As all this land, namely, Idumea, hath rejoiced in desolation, so will I do unto thee, O Idumea.

Ver. 15. "As thou didst rejoice at the inheritance of the house of Israel, because it was desolate." The Edomites, when they saw the temple burnt, Jerusalem made even with the ground, and all the land turned into a wilderness, they rejoiced at it: Obad. 12. they of Edom "rejoiced over the children of Judah in the day of their destruction:" when they saw men and beasts cut off, the goodly cities ruined and the pleasant land laid waste, they laughed at it, and said, "Aha, so would we have it."

"The inheritance of the house of Israel." This "inheritance" was the land of Canaan, which God gave to Abraham, Gen. xv. 7, and to his seed, Exod. xxxii. 13; to Jacob and Israel did God give Canaan, the lot of their inheritance, Psal. cv. 11. And this land was the Lord's inheritance, Exod. xv. 17; he dwelt in it, and owned it for his land; and when the wicked invaded it, the psalmist said, "O God, the heathen are come into thine inheritance," Psal. lxxix. 1; and ver. 10 of this chapter, it is said, "The Lord was there." It was both the Lord's and his people's inheritance, and when it was made desolate, the Edomites were glad thereof.

"So will I do unto thee." Thou hast rejoiced at the calamities of others, and others shall rejoice at thy calamities; thou didst insult and speak proudly when the inheritance of the house of Israel was laid waste, and thou shalt meet with such dealings when thine inheritance shall be laid waste; thy cities shall be destroyed, man and beast shall be cut off, and the nations shall be glad of it.

"Thou shalt be desolate, O mount Seir, and all Idumea, even all of it." When sad judgments are upon lands, some parts are spared, as strong holds, great cities, port towns, and the like; but so severely should the enemy deal with "mount Seir" and "Idumea," that nothing should be left, all, even all should be utterly ruined and made desolate.

Obs. 1. The generality of people are apt to go the wrong way, to rejoice at the evil of God's people. All Idumea rejoiced. The whole earth, the people of it, from one end to another, were glad of the sad things that befell the Jews; not some great ones, not one corner of the land, but all the Edomites throughout the land. Thus did the Ammonites also, they generally concurred in the same sin; Ezek. xxv. 3, they cried, "Aha, against the sanctuary, the land of Israel, and house of Judah, when they were profaned and laid waste." This was the practice of the Tyrians, they all with one consent rejoiced at the sufferings of Jerusalem, Ezek. xxvi. 2. When the two witnesses were slain, the inhabitants of the earth rejoiced over them, made merry, and sent gifts one to another, Rev. xi. 10. The greatest part of men are disaffected towards the people of God, and when evil befalls them, they are glad thereof.

Obs. 2. Men thirsting after what is others', do lose what is their own. The Edomites said, "These two nations, and these two countries, shall be mine, and we will possess it," ver. 10; and not long after, they lost their own country, it was made desolate. Achan was not content with what he had, his heart was upon the Babylonish garment, the two hundred shekels of silver, and the wedge of gold of fifty shekels' weight, and by so doing he lost both estate and life, Josh. vii. Pharaoh-necho was ambitious, he sought to enlarge himself, Jer. xlvi. 2; but his army was beaten, and afterwards he lost his country, Ezek. xxx. Many princes coveting and attempting to enlarge their borders by getting from others, have lost themselves and what they had. The dog catching at the shadow, lost what he had in his mouth; many waste and lose their estates at law, while they seek to get that which is other men's.

Obs. 3. The Lord in due time repays the same, or like things, to wicked ones. Edom rejoiced when the inheritance of the house of Israel was laid waste, and God would lay Edom waste, make her desolate, and others should rejoice at her; "So will I do unto thee, thou shalt be desolate," and meet with those that shall laugh at thy calamity. In Obadiah's prophecy, where the carriage of Edom towards the house of Jacob is fully set out, the Lord saith plainly, "As thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee." Nebuchadnezzar spoiled many nations, and had his pleasure on them, and in due time he was spoiled by the nations: Jer. xxvii. 7, "And all nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son, until the very time of his land come; and then many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of him;" then they should do to him as he had done to them, chap. l. 15. Adoni-bezek had his thumbs and toes cut off, as he had served others, Judg. i. 7. Many in our days have met with that measure they measured unto others. Prov. xxvi. 27, "Whoso diggeth a pit shall fall therein; and he that rolleth a stone, it will return upon him;" he that intends or doth mischief to others, that mischief will fall upon himself: Psal. ix. 15, "The heathen are sunk down in the pit that they made, in the net which they hid is their own foot taken." Here is lex talionis Vide Quistorpnus in Jer. l. 15. the just judgment of God upon evil-doers: all the enemies of Zion God will meet with in due time, and return the same or like things into their bosoms.

Obs. 4. It is nations' and people's own sins that bring desolation upon them. Edom's rejoicing at Jerusalem's calamities, her anger, envy, and hatred, her boasting and blasphemies, caused God to lay her waste, and utterly waste; "O mount Seir, thou shalt be desolate, and all Idumea, even all of it." Had not these sins preceded, that dreadful judgment had not followed. It was wickedness brought in the flood upon the whole world, and it is wickedness brings desolating judgments upon any part of it. "Who gave Jacob for a spoil, and Israel to the robbers? did not the Lord, he against whom we have sinned? for they would not walk in his ways, neither were they obedient unto his law. Therefore he hath poured upon him the fury of his anger, and the strength of battle." It was Jacob's and Israel's sin that exposed them to spoilers and spoiling, Isa. xlii. 24, 25. God was not forward to this work, but would have had them prevented it: Isa. xlvi. 18, 19, "O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea: thy seed also had been as the sand, and the offspring of thy bowels like the gravel thereof: his name should not have been cut off nor destroyed from before me."

Obs. 5. God's great design in punishing the enemies of his people, and of showing kindness unto them, is to make known himself experimentally unto them. When the wicked feel the weight of his power, strength of his wrath, severity of his justice, they will acknowledge God, and God to be another kind of God than they imagined; when he shall render to them the same or like things to what they have done, they will be convinced of the equity of his ways. So when God's people taste of his loving-kindnesses, partake of choice deliverances, and find the sweetness of his dispensations towards them, then they say, "Among the gods there is none like unto thee, O Lord; neither are there any works like unto thy works," Psal. lxxxvi. 8.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

Ver. 1—7. Also, thou son of man, prophesy unto the mountains of Israel, and say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord: Thus saith the Lord God; Because the enemy had said against you, Aha, even the ancient high places are ours in possession: therefore prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Because they have made you desolate, and swallowed you up on every side, that ye might be a possession unto the residue of the heathen, and ye are taken up in the lips of talkers, and are an infamy of the people: therefore, ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord God; Thus saith the Lord God to the mountains, and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys, to the desolate wastes, and to the cities that are forsaken, which became a prey and derision to the residue of the heathen that are round about; therefore thus saith the Lord God; Surely in the fire of my jealousy have I spoken against the residue of the heathen, and against all Idumea, which have appointed my land into their possession with the joy of all their heart, with despiteful minds, to cast it out for a prey. Prophesy therefore concerning the land of Israel, and say unto the mountains, and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I have spoken in my jealousy and in my fury, because ye have borne the shame of the heathen: therefore thus saith the Lord God; I have lifted up mine hand, Surely the heathen that are about you, they shall bear their shame.

The Jews being deprived of their comforts, carried into captivity, they suffered hard things, and lay under great reproach among the nations; whereupon the Lord here in this chapter doth,

I. Denounce judgment against the heathen, setting out the causes moving him thereunto, ver. 1—7.

II. Promise mercy to the land of Israel, which is specified in several particulars, ver. 8—15.

III. Show the causes why the Jews were driven out of their country, ver. 16—20.

IV. Set out the ground of their restoration, ver. 21—24.

V. Multiply promises of spiritual and temporal things upon them and their land, ver. 25, to the end.

Ver. 1. "Thou son of man, prophesy unto the mountains of Israel." In the former chapter he prophesied against mount Seir, in this he is to prophesy to the "mountains of Israel;" against that he prophesied judgment, unto these he prophesieth mercies. These "mountains of Israel," by a synecdoche, are put for the whole land of Judea, and by a metonymy, for the people contained therein, or who had lived therein.

"Hear the word of the Lord." The land mourned because the profane nations had laid it waste, and taken possession of it; the Lord therefore calls to the land, and people that had inhabited it, to let them know that the one should not long lie in so desolate a condition, nor the other always be kept out by enemies from their inheritance.

Ver. 2. "Thus saith the Lord God." These words are in ver. 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, also. The Jews being cast into so low a condition, might think God had forgotten them, and would leave them to perish in the hands of their enemies; to take off such thoughts, he commands the prophet to say in six verses together, "Thus saith the Lord God:" it is not the voice of Ezekiel, but of Jehovah, who is affected with the insolency of your enemies, and the grievous things you suffer.

"Because the enemy hath said against you, Aha." The Hebrew word for "enemy," is from אֶחָיִל to bear ill will, to hate. This enemy principally was the Edomite, who had a perpetual hatred against the Jews, Ezr-k. xxxv. 5; and the Ammonite, who cried, "Aha," Ezek. xxv. 3, and entered upon the Jews' inheritance, Jer. xlix. 1; with the Moabite, who reproached the people of God, Zeph. ii. 8, 10. These and others were disaffected to the Jews, and hated them, insulted in the day of their calamity, saying, "Aha." The Hebrew is, אָחָה which is an insulting, provoking, scornful word.

"The ancient high places are ours in possession." בְּמִצְתֵי עֵיבָרִים the ancient mountains, which have kept their station and height in all ages. Septuagint is, the everlasting solitudes; Vulgate, the everlasting height. The land of Israel had many high mountains, which being solitary and desolate, the enemy said, "They are ours in possession," we shall inherit them for ever. The Edomites being from Esau, Jacob's elder brother, the Ammonites and Moabites from Lot, Abraham's brother, they challenged the ancient high places of Israel for their possessions, called excelsa sæculi, because God and his worship had been there many years, and the land was promised the Jews for ever.

Ver. 3. "Because they have made you desolate, and swallowed you up on every side." The enemies of the Jews were bitter and bloody, they stripped them of what they had, and devoured them; they did eat them up. אָסַף signifies, to draw in the air, to suck it up, and metaphorically, to swallow, to devour: they did not, like cannibals, eat the flesh of the Jews, but they dealt cruelly with them, not in one place only, but on all sides; those that were their neighbours cut them off and destroyed them round about.

"That ye might be a possession unto the residue of the heathen." So little did they care for the church of God, his people, and their inheritance, they rule over these few Jews that were left. This made Jeremiah to complain, Lam. v. 2. "Our inheritance is turned to strangers, our houses to aliens."

"Ye are taken up in the lips of talkers." In the Hebrew it is thus, and ye have ascended upon the lip of the tongue, or, ye are made to ascend, ye are the common talk of men, as we use to say, table talk. They were made a reproach, a proverb, a taunt, and a curse amongst the people, according to what is written, Jer. xxiv. 9. Junius and Piscator both have it, You are traduced and slandered through the tongues of the nations, they talk at large of you. The "lip of the tongue" is a hebraism, noting a talkative person, as Job xi. 2. A man of lips, is the Hebrew, that is, a man of talk; and Psal. cxl. 11, "Let not an evil speaker," in Hebrew, a man of tongue; such a one utters much evil, and falls under the denomination of an evil speaker.

"And are an infamy of the people." The word רבה "infamy," is from רבב which signifies, to speak, and to relate the evils of others. The enemies of the Jews related what evils they knew or heard of concerning them, and made them infamous. The Septuagint is, a reproach or scorn to the nations.

Ver. 4. "Thus saith the Lord God to the mountains, and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys, to the desolate wastes, and to the cities that are forsaken." He mentioned the "mountains of Israel" before, and "the ancient high places;" here he adds "hills, rivers, valleys, wastes, cities," to show that he would vindicate the whole land from the possession of the nations, who did so greatly vilify his church and people.

"Which became a prey and derision to the residue of the heathen." The heathen did not only spoil and make a prey of Judea, but also deride the Jews, they scoffed at those that were left, and those that were carried away. The word for "derision" is, יקץ which notes deriding with scorn and contempt; and therefore by the Septuagint is rendered, καταπατημα, a trampling under feet, they derided them as worthy to be trodden under feet.

Ver. 5. "Surely in the fire of my jealousy have I spoken against the residue of the heathen," &c. The Hebrew for "surely" is, בטח which implies an oath; Unless I have spoken in the fire of my jealousy, let me not be God, let me never be believed. To speak in the fire of jealousy, is a hebraism; saith Pintus, it notes hot displeasure; Psal. lxxix. 5, "Shall thy jealousy burn like fire?" Here the Lord's jealousy was on fire; he was not only angry with the heathen, but in a fiery jealousy, for jealousy is more than anger, Deut. xxix. 20. Men in their jealousy are extremely moved, and carried out with heat and fury to be revenged on those they apprehend have done them wrong: and so God, after the manner of men, is said to speak in the fire of his jealousy against the heathens, who had wronged him, his people, and the land.

"Which have appointed my land into their possession." Judea, saith God, was my land, I dwelt there, and set up my worship there, I gave it my people for a possession; and though at present they be driven out for their sins, yet I keep it for them, and none ought to meddle with, or challenge that land. How is it then that the Edomites and heathens have consulted and determined to take my land into their possession? they are resolved to rob me and my people of our right, to swallow up our inheritance.

"With the joy of all their heart." Joy is a dilatation of the heart from apprehension of good: these heathens apprehended it good that the Jews were cut off and carried away, that hereupon the land should be theirs; this filled them with joy, and made them attempt with all their hearts the possession of the land.

"With despitiful minds, to cast it out for a prey." The words in the Hebrew are thus, in contempt of mind, for expulsion of it for a prey, so Montanus; צש signifies depopulation, as well as contempt: they were very earnest and violent in depopulating the land, that the seat of its expelled ones might be for a prey; Piscator saith, that its fields or suburbs might be for spoil. The people being slain or carried away captive, the Edomites and others did with malicious minds expose the land to the spoil of any.

Ver. 6. "Behold, I have spoken in my jealousy and in my fury." Here is an addition of fury to jealousy. Fury is heat of anger, or severe anger; fury is anger with vehemence; when it is given to God, it notes the severe, holy, and just indignation of God.

"Because ye have borne the shame of the heathen." The heathen have reproached you, poured scorn and contempt upon you, made you the filth of the world; Zeph. ii. 8, 10, they so reproached them, that it affected God himself; and Jeremiah, Lam. v. 1, was so pierced with the reproachings of the heathen, that he complains, and cries out, "Remember, O Lord, what is come upon us; consider, and behold our reproach." They jeered and scoffed at them for their temple, worship, city, mountains, songs, yea, for their God. Of bearing the shame of the heathen, see chap. xxxiv. 29.

Ver. 7. "Therefore, thus saith the Lord God; I have lifted up mine hand." Lifting up the hand was a gesture used by men in taking of oaths, as Gen. xiv. 22, Abraham lifted up his hand unto the Lord, that was, in swearing; and this metaphorically is applied unto God, who when he swears is said to lift up his hand, so that swearing and lifting up the hand are equivalent. Numb. xiv. 30, "Doubtless ye shall not come into the land, concerning which I swear to make you dwell therein." The Hebrew for "I swear" is, I lifted up my hand. So then, God's lifting up his hand here is, his swearing, that he would make the nations bear their shame for reproaching his people.

"Surely the heathen that are about you, they shall bear their shame." As sure as I am God, the heathen which have made you a reproach, a proverb, a taunt, and a curse, they shall be a reproach, a proverb, a taunt, and a curse; they have made you infamous, and they shall be infamous; they have covered, loaded you with shame, and they shall be covered and loaded with shame.

Obs. 1. God hath a special care of his church when it is in an afflicted condition. The Jews were dispossessed of their land, carried into captivity, made infamous, and their land usurped by others; hereupon the Lord sends Ezekiel unto them, to prophesy comfort unto them in the destruction of their enemies: "Son of man, prophesy unto the mountains of Israel, and say, Hear the word of the Lord." He hath a terrible word for your enemies, a comfortable word for you; threatening for them, promises for you. Though men hated his people, yet God himself pitied them; though men swallowed up their habitation, yet God would restore it to them again. Jer. xxx. 6—10, "Wherefore do I see every man with his hands on his loins, as a woman in travail, and all faces are turned into paleness? Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it. For it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, that I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds, and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him: but they shall serve the Lord their God, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them. Therefore fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the Lord; neither be dismayed, O Israel: for, lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid." The church was in great affliction, like a woman in travail; and here the Lord showed his goodness towards it, and special care over it; he would break Babylonish yokes and bonds, set it at liberty, restore it to the former, yea, a better condition, viz. such privileges and security it never had.

Obs. 2. When God's people are under affliction, their enemies are glad thereof, and take advantage to disgrace them, and make a prey of what was theirs. The Israelites suffered hard things by the Babylonians; upon this the enemies cried, "Aha," they were glad at the heart, they talked their pleasures of them, and made them the infamy of the people: they swallowed them up on every side, and said, The mountains of Israel are ours, and we will possess the ancient high places. When Zion goes down, Babylon rejoices, the heathens disgrace and devour it, adding affliction to the afflicted; see Zeph. ii. 8; Obad. 10—14. All the enemies which heard of Zion's trouble were glad, Lam. i. 21; they reproached Zion and her children, chap. ii. 15, 16, and said, "They shall no more sojourn there," chap. iv. 15; Judea shall never be repossessed by them, it shall be ours.

Obs. 3. That rejoicing at the sufferings of God's people, disgracing and wronging of them, doth greatly offend the Lord. "Because the enemy cried, Aha," defamed the Jews, arrogated the land for their possession, therefore the Lord spake against them in the fire of his jealousy, and in his fury; he was exceedingly wroth, and would deal severely with them; it went to his heart, and inflamed his spirit, that his people who were so dear unto him, should be derided, despitefully used, what was theirs made a prey of, and that by heathens. Jer. l. 11, 12, "Because ye were glad, because ye rejoiced, O ye destroyers of mine heritage, because ye are grown fat as the heifer at grass, and bellow as bulls; your mother shall be sore confounded:" that is, the city Babylon, or the land of Chaldaea, or both; because the Babylonians had dealt so by the people of God and their land, God would not only confound them, but sorely confound them.

Obs. 4. Those that make the people of God infamous, shall themselves be made infamous. The nations made the Jews the infamy of the people, they loaded them with reproaches and shame; and God swears, "Surely the heathen shall bear their shame." Do you mock and hiss at my people? ye shall be mocked and hissed at. In Lam. ii. 15, 16, you have the carriage of all towards Jerusalem; they clapped their hands, they hissed, they wagged their heads, they opened their mouths, and gnashed their teeth, and said, "Is this the city men call The perfection of beauty? we have swallowed her up; this is the day we have looked for." In other places you may observe how God returned their revilings upon their heads; Jer. xlix. 17, "Edom shall be a desolation; every one that goeth by it shall be astonished, and shall hiss at all the plagues thereof." Nineveh was proud and insulted, and God made her infamous; all that passed by hissed and wagged the hand at her, Zeph. ii. 15. Babylon had the same measure; Jer. li. 37, she was made "an hissing, without an inhabitant;" so chap. l. 13; and Isaiah tells us the insulting proverb which was used against the king and city of Babylon when they were destroyed, Isa. xiv. 4, "How hath the oppressor ceased! the golden city ceased!"

Ver. 8—15. But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people of Israel; for they are at hand to come. For, behold, I am for you, and I will turn unto you, and ye shall be tilled and sown; and I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel, even all of it: and the cities shall be inhabited, and the wastes shall be builded: and I will multiply upon you man and beast; and they shall increase and bring fruit: and I will settle you after your old estates, and will do better unto you than at your beginnings; and ye shall know that I am the Lord. Yea, I will cause men to walk upon you, even my people Israel; and they shall possess thee, and thou shalt be their inheritance, and thou shalt no more henceforth bereave them of men. Thus saith the Lord God; Because they say unto you, Thou land devourest up men, and hast bereaved thy nations; therefore thou shalt devour men no more, neither bereave thy nations any more, saith the Lord God. Neither will I cause men to hear in thee the shame of the heathen any more, neither shalt thou bear the reproach of the people any more, neither shalt thou cause thy nations to fall any more, saith the Lord God.

These eight verses are the second general part of the chapter, containing rich promises of favour and mercy unto the afflicted Jews; and they are,

- I. Fruitfulness of their country, ver. 8.
- II. Return into it, ibid.
- III. God's turning unto them, ver. 9.
- IV. Multiplication of men and beasts, ver. 10, 11.
- V. Rebuilding of their cities, waste places, and reinhabiting of them, ver. 10, 12.
- VI. Settling them in a better condition than ever, ver. 11.
- VII. Freedom,

1. From destruction, ver. 12—14.

2. From the reproachings of enemies, ver. 15.

Ver. 8. "But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches." In the time of Jerusalem's siege, the land of Israel was much wasted, the fruitful and useful trees cut down; and during the captivity, it was overrun with briars and thorns, Isa. v. 6; xxxii. 13; yea, all the land was so, chap. vii. 24. But here God's promise is, that the mountains of Israel should be fruitful, they should shoot forth their branches; vines and other trees full of branches should be planted there, and thrive.

"And yield your fruit to my people of Israel." Strangers shall not eat your fruit, as heretofore, but my people shall have the benefit thereof. Israelites shall eat your fruit, not Edomites or Babylonians.

"For they are at hand to come." Here is the reason given why the mountains and land of Canaan should bring forth and yield increase; it was because the time drew near of the Jews returning out of captivity. In the creation God did bid the earth bring forth, prepared a Paradise for man, and then brought man into it; so here he takes care that the mountains and countries should bring forth, for that his people were to come into it. The Chaldee hath it, the day of redemption shall come; and the Septuagint, ἑτα ἰσχυροῦ τοῦ ἰσθίου. Seventy years was but a little time unto God, some part of which was expired, and the time hastened for their deliverance.

Ver. 9. "For, behold, I am for you, and I will turn unto you." God had formerly been against them, as appears, Ezek. v. 8; xxi. 3; xv. 7; and they had found it so, being driven out of their own land into Babylon, where God tells them to their comfort, Behold, I am for you, and for the mountains of Israel which have been laid waste; I will turn unto you, and look upon you in mercy.

"Ye shall be tilled and sown." Where bushes, nettles, and briars grew before, there should be ploughing, sowing, and corn in abundance.

Ver. 10. "And I will multiply men upon you," &c. This verse and the next further sets out the effect of God's turning to the mountains; they should abound with men and beasts, the whole land should be possessed, the waste places builded, and the cities inhabited, and both men and beast should be fruitful.

"All the house of Israel, even all of it." When this was fulfilled doth not appear: few of the ten tribes returned, and not all of the other two.

Ver. 11. "I will settle you after your old estates." The Hebrew is, I will make you to dwell according to your antiquities, as you dwelt in Joshua's time, or as you were settled before your captivity; then you had peace, plenty, and many accommodations, which you shall have again, and more; for it follows,

"And will do better unto you than at your beginnings." God had done great things for them formerly; they abounded so in riches, stately buildings, wise, holy, and strong men, in famous victories, and in plenty of all good things, that they exceeded all people; yet God promises here to do better unto them than at the beginning. When this was made good is greatly questioned. Some answer it thus, That when they first came into Canaan, they were low, poor, and not in a capacity to build a temple; but when they returned out of Babylon, they went about and built a temple: but this temple exceeded not the former temple in greatness, richness, ceremony, sanctity, multitude of priests or prophets, Ezra iii. 12. Others say, That after their return from their captivity their bounds were more enlarged than ever before; which they clear from Isa. xlix. 19, 20; Zech. ii. 8, 9; and therein God did better unto them than at the beginning. Others refer this promise to Christ's time, wherein they had choicer mercies than ever, viz. the presence, doctrine, and miracles of Christ, which made the glory of the latter temple greater than the former; according to what Haggai had said, chap. ii. 9. But how if we could not assign a time of God's doing better unto them than at the beginning? that is human weakness; God is faithful, and what he saith he doth accomplish; it was so.

Ver. 12. "And thou shalt no more henceforth bereave them of men." He speaks of the land of Canaan, which the Jews should possess, inherit, and not be deprived of, that is, not for a long time. The words "no more," must not signify for ever, because the Jews were after a long time deprived of their land by the Romans.

Ver. 13. "They say unto you, Thou land devourest up men, and hast bereaved thy nations." This was a charge laid upon Canaan, that she devoured men, that she was destructive to her own children: she was not so called because of her fruitfulness, which caused men to surfeit and so die: but either in regard of the civil wars which were amongst the heathens when they possessed it, which made the spies (Numb. xiii. 32) say, "It is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof;" or because that when the Jews possessed it, the nations round about hating them made incursions upon them often, and so destroyed multitudes of the inhabitants; and when they besieged any place of note, as Samaria and Jerusalem, the plague and famine consumed many. The famine was so sore, that women ate their own children, 2 Kings vi. 28, 29; Lam. iv. 10; fathers ate their sons, and sons their fathers, Ezek. v. 10. And as it vomited out the heathens before, (Lev. xviii. 25, 28,) so it served the ten tribes and other two afterwards.

Ver. 14. "Therefore thou shalt devour men no more, neither bereave thy nations any more." Here God promiseth to take away that imputation, and to put them into such a condition as that they should for a long season be free from sword, famine, plague, and such straits as caused consumption of men. The words "bereave thy nations any more," are, in Hebrew, nor cause thy nations to fall any more; they fell by several judgments, but now God being turned unto them, would maintain them in peace, honour, and safety.

Ver. 15. "Neither will I cause men to hear in thee the shame of the heathen any more." They had oftentimes been reproached by the heathen, and borne their shame, ver. 6; but now God in his wise providence would order things so, that heathens should not revile them, but speak honourably of them, as Psal. cxxvi. 2, the heathen said, "The Lord hath done great things for them."

"Neither shall thou bear the reproach of the heathen any more." They reproached one another; the people mocked at the prophets, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16; Jer. xx. 7, and children behaved themselves proudly and basely against the ancient and the honourable, Isa. iii. 5; but God would take away this evil from them, and cause them to speak well one of another.

"Neither shalt thou cause thy nations to fall any more." The Hebrew is, thy nations; thou shalt not expose thy people to ruin and destruction, by famine, plague, or war. The sense of the whole verse is, that God would turn those evils and curses they endured formerly into blessings.

Obs. 1. When God pours out contempt and shame upon the enemies of his people, he will pour out blessings and mercies upon them. The heathens shall bear their shame, but ye, O mountains of Israel, shall shoot forth your branches; and ye shall have the former and latter rains, and bring forth in abundance. Canaan was God's land, and he had a special eye to that, and would honour it, when he stained the glory of other nations.

Obs. 2. The fruitfulness of mountains and lands depends upon God; he makes them so at his pleasure, by his command and blessing. "O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit." Men's wickedness moves God to make lands barren and desolate, Jer. xii. 4; but it is his good pleasure and free grace that moves him to make a land fruitful; Acts xiv. 17, rain and fruitful seasons are the gift of God.

Obs. 3. God is provident for his people when he removes them from place to place, he will not have them to come into empty places. The mountains must shoot forth their branches, and the land yield her fruit; for the Jews were at hand to come. When Jacob went down to Egypt, with his family, God provided the best of the land for them, Gen. xlvii. When the Jews came first to Canaan, it flowed with milk and honey, it abounded with all good things needful for them.

Obs. 4. When God is reconciled to a people, then he multiplies blessings upon them, then he makes their land bring forth, and themselves and their cattle to increase. "I am for you, and will turn unto you, and ye shall be tilled and sown; I will multiply upon you man and beast, and they shall increase and bring forth fruit." God's favour hath all blessings in the womb of it, and upon what land or people soever that falls, it will make them fruitful; when God is for a people, then he comes unto them as the rain, as the former and latter rain, Hos. vi. 3; he hath various and seasonable blessings for them. Zeph. iii. 20, "At that time will I bring you again, even in the time that I gather you: for I will make you a name and a praise among all people of the earth, when I turn back your captivity before your eyes." When God turned back their captivity he was for them, and turned unto them, they had his favour, and then he would bestow such blessings upon them as would make them renowned among all people: see Jer. xxxi. 10—14.

Obs. 5. God's dealings with his people are best at last; they may have much kindness and mercy in the morning, but they shall have more in the evening. "I will settle you after your old estates, and will do better unto you than at your beginnings." The Jews had the best wine at last; they had milk and honey before, but the feast of fat things full of marrow, and of wines on the lees well refined, were at the latter end of their day given in; they had Christ and the gospel at last. Abraham had much of the world at first, and his Isaac afterward, Job xlii. 12, "God blessed the latter end of Job more than his beginning." Simeon in his latter days saw Christ, and had him in his arms, Luke ii.

Obs. 6. Wicked men do turn the judgments of God upon his land and people into a reproach unto them. Because God for the sins of his people laid the land waste, and cut them off by sore judgments, or removed them into captivity, therefore the heathens reproached Canaan, and said, "Thou land devourest men, and hast bereaved thy nations." They called Emmanuel's land a cursed and bloody land, that did eat up her own children; this was a great reproach to heaven and earth. God's judgments should have caused fear, and taught them to have learned righteousness; for if God spared not the green tree, what will become of the dry trees?

Obs. 7. Such is the goodness of God, that he takes occasion from the wickedness of his people's enemies, to do his people good. Because the heathens said, "Thou land devourest up men, and hast bereaved thy nations," because they reproached the Jews and their land thus, therefore saith God, "Thou shalt devour men no more, neither bereave thy nations any more;" I will bless thee with peace, plenty, and safety; there shall be no wars, no famines, no plagues, nor other judgments to devour the people of the land.

Obs. 8. God in his time takes away the evils that are upon his people, and turns them into blessings. "Neither will I cause men to hear in thee the shame of the heathen any more, neither shalt thou bear the reproach of the people any more, neither shalt thou cause thy nations to fall any more:" these evils will I take away from thee, and not only so, but I will bring in the contrary blessings; instead of shame and reproach, thou shalt have honour, praise, and renown; instead of destroying thy people and nations, thou shalt multiply thy people, and have nations to serve thee, Isa. lx. 12—14.

Ver. 16—20. Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, when the house of Israel dwelt in their own land, they defiled it by their own way and by their doings: their way was before me as the uncleanness of a removed woman. Wherefore I poured my fury upon them for the blood that they had shed upon the land, and for their idols wherewith they had polluted it: and I scattered them among the heathen, and they were dispersed through the countries: according to their way and according to their doings I judged them. And when they entered unto the heathen, whither they went, they profaned my holy name, when they said to them, These are the people of the Lord, and are gone forth out of his land.

Men being apt to make perverse constructions of the judgments of God, and to censure his ways to be unequal; here he gives account of his proceedings towards his people, and shows the true grounds and causes why he drove them out of their country; which are set down,

I. In general, ver. 17, amplified by a similitude.
II. In particular, ver. 18, blood and idolatry, which are repeated in general terms, ver. 19.
III. After these he shows what their carriage was in their enemies' land, ver. 20.

Ver. 16. "Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying." The prophet having declared God's jealousy and fury against the enemies of his people, comforted them being in captivity with many choice promises: here he is commissioned by the Lord to speak out the causes which moved God to cast them into that condition.

Ver. 17. "When the house of Israel dwelt in their own land." By "house of Israel," understand not the two or ten tribes, but the whole twelve tribes who possessed Canaan, which is called "their own land," because promised and given unto them by God for their inheritance, Psal. cv. 10, 11.

"They defiled it by their own way and by their doings." The Hebrew is, in their own ways, and in their own doings; they followed their own devices, inventions, desires, customs, manners; they did what was right in their own eyes, and so defiled the land.

"Their way was before me as the uncleanness of a removed woman." Their way was very loathsome before the Lord, he greatly abhorred their manners and practices.

Ver. 18. "Wherefore I poured my fury upon them." They had committed heinous sins, and continued long in them without repentance; this is evident from the Lord's "fury." He is not in fury for small sins, nor presently furious for great sins; but when men go on from day to day in them, his anger grows hotter and hotter, and at last riseth up into fury; and this being increased, the Lord would not let it out in petty judgments, as it were drop by drop, but pour it out in greater judgments, like as the sea pours out water when a breach is in the banks, it pours out water with violence, and drowns up all the adjacent country.

"For the blood that they had shed upon the land." They shed the blood of the prophets, 2 Chron. xxiv. 21; Matt. xxiii. 37; of innocent ones, 2 Kings xxi. 16. They had unjust and unnatural wars, 2 Chron. xxviii. 9; and so shed blood in abundance, Ezek. vii. 23. They poured out blood upon the land, and God poured out fury upon them; it is the same word in the Hebrew for shedding and pouring out.

"And for their idols wherewith they had polluted it." They had many idols, the land was full of them, Isa. ii. 8; which they worshipping defiled the land. The word for "idols" is, עֲבֹתָיִם which Junius renders, dunghill gods; and Piseator, dunghills, for that no dunghill doth so defile a land as idols and idolatry; hence idols are called "abominations," Jer. xxxii. 34; "shames," Hos. ix. 10; "devils," Deut. xxxii. 17.

Ver. 19. "And I scattered them among the heathen," They had learned the manners of the heathen, got their idols, and served them; and for it God "scattered them among the heathen;" they had heathenish spirits, chosen heathenish gods, and so deserved to be driven into heathenish countries.

"And they were dispersed through the countries." The Hebrew word for disperse is, שָׁרַר which signifies to disperse by fanning; God had fanned them out of their own land, and dispersed them as chaff before the wind into divers lands; they went from country to country, yea, through whole countries into Chaldaea.

"According to their way and according to their doings I judged them." Men might wonder God should deal so with his people, as to pour out his fury upon them, drive them out of their own land, and disperse them amongst heathens, who were his and their enemies; this might carry a face of cruelty; but the Lord clears himself, and shows the equity of his proceedings. "I judged them," that is, I dealt with or punished them according to their ways and doings; had they not deserved such hard things at my hands, I should not have executed them. They drove me out of my sanctuary, and far from it, Ezek. xiii. 6; they cast me off, Jer. ii. 13; and is it not equal that I should drive them out of my land, and cast them into foreign lands? Let all the world judge.

Ver. 20. "And when they entered unto the heathen whither they went, they profaned my holy name." When the Jews came amongst the heathen, they profaned his holy name; which is done two ways; either formaliter, when men's own words or actions are profane, prostituting the name of God to dishonour; or occasionaliter, when occasion is given to others by their words and actions, to profane the holy name of God; as David by his sinful action with Bathsheba, gave occasion to the enemies of God to blaspheme, 2 Sam. xii. 14. And this was the case here: for the Babylonians said,

"These are the people of the Lord, and are gone forth out of his land." The Jews being under sad judgments of God, should have learned righteousness; but they being neither affected with the honour of God, care of their salvation, nor with fear of offending the heathens, persevered in their wicked ways and idolatrous practices, Ezek. xx. 32; whereupon the heathens said, "These are the people of the Lord." They boast of their God to be a holy, omnipotent, and faithful God, but you may know what their God is by their unholty practices; had he been omnipotent, as they say, he would have kept them out of our hands; but he could not, which shows our gods are stronger than he; or if he could, he would not: he was not faithful unto his people, as our gods are unto us, "they are gone forth out of his land," whereas we abide in ours; had their God been such as ours are, he would have protected them, and prevented their casting out of his land.

Obs. 1. The wicked ways of men, especially those of blood and idolatry, are loathsome unto God. "Their way was before me as the uncleanness of a removed woman;" that is, extreme loathsome. All sin is defiling, and so loathsome, abominable unto God, who is holy, yea, holiness itself; but murder and idolatry are most hateful, and most loathsome unto him; Psal. v. 6, the bloody man is abhorred of God; and he lets him not live out half his days, Psal. lv. 23; and, Jer. xlv. 4, the Lord calls idolatry, an abominable thing which he hates; he hates and loathes it infinitely.

Obs. 2. Men by their own sinful doings, do bring evils, mischief, and destruction upon themselves. "When the house of Israel dwelt in their own land, they defiled it by their own way and by their doings; wherefore I poured my fury upon them." Had they not sinned, nor walked in evil ways, they had not met with fury; but because their ways were wicked, bloody, and idolatrous, therefore they had fury, and fury poured out abundantly, their own evil doings brought destruction upon them. Prov. xi. 5, "The wicked shall fall by his own wickedness." Jer. ii. 19, "Thine own wickedness shall correct thee." Jerusalem's own sin was her ruin. And David tells us how God will deal with wicked men, Psal. xciv. 23, "He shall bring upon them their own iniquity, and shall cut them off in their own wickedness." It is ill work wicked ones are about, they make fetters for their own feet, and build houses for to fall upon their own heads; so mischievous is the nature of sin, that it damnifies and destroys the parents of it.

Obs. 3. What judgments soever God brings upon sinners, he is just and righteous in so doing. God poured fury upon them, he drove them out of their own country, he scattered them up and down among heathens, whose language they understood not, who were bitter and harsh towards them; and all this was not more, no, not so much as their sins deserved: "According to their way and their doings, I judged them," saith the Lord; I did them no wrong, they had not any cause to complain of me, the fault was their own. Whatever God's proceedings are with any nation, family, or person, he is righteous; for, Psal. cxlv. 17, "The Lord is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works;" there is no spot cleaves to his hand, or any action the roof.

Obs. 4. It is a grievous, provoking thing, when God's people, who profess his truth and worship, give occasion to the enemies thereof to blaspheme and speak reproachfully. The Jews being among the Babylonians spake and did such things as gave occasion to blaspheme; "When they entered unto the heathen, they profaned my holy name." This was a great grief and provocation of God, that his people being afflicted for their sins, yet should carry it so sinfully as to give them advantage of dishonouring God, his truths, worship, and servants. Isa. lii. 5, God complains that his name was blasphemed continually every day. The Babylonians watched the Jews, and caught all advantages to profane the name of the Lord; this was their daily language, "These are the people of the Lord, and are gone forth out of his land;" he could not, or would not, keep them out of our hands; he is a weak, unfaithful, unholty God, and his people are like unto him. When David gave occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme, it brought forth sad effects, or rather had sad consequences, the death of the child, and sword at his door for ever, 2 Sam. xii. Those therefore who profess the true religion, should be exceeding careful, wherever they be come, that they walk answerable to the religion they profess, that they avoid all sin, and do good, that so the name of God may be glorified, and not profaned or blasphemed.

Obs. 5. Heathens and heathenish spirits are glad of occasions and advantages against the true God, his ways, and people. The Babylonians said, "These are the people of the Lord, and are gone forth out of his land." They were glad they had matter to insult and blaspheme: What is your God better than ours? ye do the things we do; and what is his land better than this land? have not we corn, wine, and oil, milk and honey, as well and as much as you had in that land? Why is Canaan so cried up, and Jerusalem so magnified? our Assyria and our city Babylon are as good, as excellent as they, yea, far beyond them.

Ver. 21.—24. But I had pity for mine holy name, which the house of Israel had profaned among the heathen, whither they went. Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen, whither ye went. And I will sanctify my great name, which was profaned among the heathen, which ye have profaned in the midst of them; and the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, saith the Lord God, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes. For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land.

These verses contain the ground of the Jews' restoration, which is the fourth general part of the chapter: they being in captivity, and sinning there greatly, they caused the name of God to be profaned by the heathens; and so, deserving nothing but confusion, he pitied them, and for his name's sake delivered them; which name of God is set out by two adjuncts, or epithets:

I. Holy.

H. Great.

Ver. 21. "But I had pity for mine holy name." The Hebrew is, And I spared them upon the account of my holy name; I would not suffer that to be profaned so by the heathen, and therefore did deliver them. The Septuagint is, I spared them for my holy name's sake; I had a tender respect unto my name, which being holy, I would not suffer to lie under heathenish obloquies.

"Which the house of Israel had profaned among the heathen, whither they went." God is styled in Scripture, "The Holy One of Jacob," Isa. xxix. 23; "The Holy One of Israel," Psal. lxxviii. 41; "The Holy One," Isa. xl. 25. And the Jews, above all nations and people in the world, should have had a special care of the name of their God, that the holiness thereof might have been maintained; but they forgot God in Babylon, did wickedly, and so gave occasion to the heathens to blaspheme his holy name.

Ver. 22. "I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel." They deserved not such a mercy at the hands of God, as reduction out of Babylon into Canaan: they were defiled with blood and idolatry, which moved God to cast them out of their land, and scatter them among the heathen, but they did nothing to incline God to show them the least favour: had they had according to their deserts, they should never have been set at liberty, but have perished utterly in their captivity. They might think, because they were circumcised, came of David, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and were the only people God had in the world, that therefore God would do much for their sakes; but to take them off from such conceits, the Lord makes open profession, that what he was about to do was not for their sakes.

"But for mine holy name's sake." God's name is sometimes put for himself; as Psal. xxxiii. 21, "We have trusted in his holy name," that is, in God himself. Sometimes it is put for his power; Prov. xviii. 10, "The name of the Lord is a strong tower," that is, his omnipotence is such a tower. Sometimes it is put for the attributes and divine perfections of God; Psal. viii. 1, "O Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth!" that is, how excellent are thine attributes! Sometimes it is put for the fame and glory of God; as 2 Sam. vii. 23, "To make him a name," that was, to make himself famous and glorious. The two last may be understood here by "name:" the heathens said, God was not wise, not faithful, not omnipotent, that would let his people go into captivity, and become servants unto us; yea, it is evident by his people's doings what a God he is; they are an unholy people, and he is an unholy God; and so his fame and glory were eclipsed: therefore saith God, For mine holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen, I will vindicate my name, and make heathens know, and you know, that I am a wise, a faithful, an almighty, and holy God.

Ver. 23. "And I will sanctify my great name." I will vindicate my name from all aspersions laid upon it, and make it known to heathens, and to you, O house of Israel, by punishing them for their idolatry and other wickednesses, and by bringing you out of captivity, that I am a God of power, wisdom, faithfulness, and holiness. God sanctifies his name when he clears it from disgrace and reproach cast thereupon, and makes it appear as it is in itself, glorious and holy. God's name hath many epithets given unto it in the word; it is said to be glorious, Psal. lxxii. 19, excellent, Psal. cxlviii. 13, dreadful, Mal. i. 14, holy, ver. 21 of this chapter; and here, great. God hath done great and wonderful things in the world, wherenpon he hath a great name, not only in Israel, Psal. lxxvi. 1, but all the world over, Psal. viii. 9. Many men have had great names, yet nothing comparable to the name of the Lord.

"Which was profaned among the heathen, which ye have profaned in the midst of them." The Jews being under the Babylonish yoke for their sins, did not humble themselves before God, repent and turn from their wicked ways, that so God's name might have been sanctified among the heathen; but they persisted in their wicked ways, and were worse than the heathens among whom they were scattered, and so occasioned the heathens to speak evil of their God, their religion, and worship; and not only so, but themselves profaned God's name, they rejected the God of Israel and his ways, saying, "We will be as the heathen, as the families of the countries, to serve wood and stone," Ezek. xx. 32. They made the God of Israel like the heathen gods, and his ways like theirs; which was a great profanation of him and his name.

"And the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, saith the Lord God, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes." When the Lord shall manifest his mercy towards them, and put forth his power to bring them out of Babylon, then was he sanctified in the midst of them, then he did vindicate his name from all aspersions, and made the Jews and Babylonians know, that he was a holy, faithful, wise, merciful, and an almighty God; he would make his name honourable before them all, which had been profaned.

Ver. 24. "For I will take you from among the heathen." The heathen make full account you are theirs, that you shall never get out of their borders, or return into your own land; they think that their idol gods are stronger than I, who am the God of Israel; but they shall find it otherwise, for I will by a strong hand take you from among the heathen,

“And gather you out of all countries.” They were dispersed into divers countries, into the hundred and twenty-seven provinces that were under Ahasuerus his government, Esth. iii. 8; and it seemed improbable that they should ever be gathered out of so many countries; but the Lord tells them for their comfort, that he would gather them “out of all countries;” no distance of place, or difficulty in any place, should impede his congregating of them.

“And will bring you into your own land.” After the seventy years of their captivity were expired, the Lord set them at liberty, and brought them back to the land of Canaan, their own land, because they inherited it from their fathers, unto whom the Lord had given it. This was a glorious and great work, viz. the bringing the Jews out of Babylon, and all the countries where they were scattered, into Canaan; and did prefigure the salvation of the church by Christ, and gathering of those that were his out of all nations unto it, according to what is in John x. 16, and xi. 52.

Obs. 1. The name of the Lord is holy. His essence, his will, his attributes, his works, his word, are his name. All these set out God, make him known, and so are his name, even the name of his holiness, or “his holy name.” There is no name under heaven like unto the Lord’s; it is a holy name, and so glorious; a great name, and so dreadful. We should sanctify the name of God; which is done by believing; Numb. xx. 12, when Moses and Aaron did not believe God, they did not sanctify his name; but when men believe God’s word, then they sanctify his name. It is done also by fearing to displease him, Isa. viii. 13; xxix. 23. It is done also by acknowledging his name to be holy, Matt. vi. 9, when men praise him.

Obs. 2. The profaning of God’s holy name, as it is a trouble unto him, so it sticks and abides upon him. Other provocations pass away, but this settles upon his spirit. See here what hold it took; ver. 20, “They profaned mine holy name;” and ver. 21, “The house of Israel profaned mine holy name among the heathen;” ver. 22, “Mine holy name which ye have profaned among the heathen.” Thrice the Lord mentions their profaning of his name; yea, in the next verse, as if he could not shake this act of theirs out of his mind, he mentions it twice more, “My name which was profaned, which ye have profaned.” God’s name being holy is dear unto him, and the profaning of it makes deep impressions in his heart.

Obs. 3. Temporal mercies are not merited at God’s hands by men. “I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel.” What was it God did not for their sakes? viz. deliver them from their Babylonish bondage, and bring them into their own country; these were temporal mercies; and though there were godly men amongst them, as Ezekiel, Daniel, Mordecai, Ezra, Nehemiah, and others, yet with all their prayers, fastings, suffering, and holiness, they did not merit these outward mercies: liberty, safety, plenty, possessions, are not the merit or purchase of the creature, but the gift of God; 1 Tim. vi. 17, he “giveth us all things richly to enjoy.” Have men more or less of these outward things, they are upon free gift, not any desert; and if we deserve not temporal things, much less do or can we deserve spiritual and eternal things, which are of a transcendent nature: if we do not deserve an outward deliverance, an earthly Canaan, how shall we deserve a spiritual deliverance, a heavenly Canaan? all things of that nature are free gifts, Luke xii. 32; Rom. vi. 23.

Obs. 4. The good which God doth unto his church, be it temporal or spiritual, is for his own sake. What I do, (saith God,) I do it for mine holy name’s sake; there is nothing to move me but mine own name; that is holy, great, and glorious, and I will for my name’s sake do much for my church and people. That they were preserved in Babylon, was for his holy name’s sake; that they were brought out of Babylon, was for his holy name’s sake; that they were replanted in Canaan, was for his holy name’s sake; that they had a temple, sacrifices, priests, prophets, ordinances again, was for his name’s sake; when they were near to destruction often in former days, God wrought for his name’s sake, Ezek. xx.; so Isa. xlvi. 8, 9. It is not for the enemies’ sake that God doth preserve or deliver his people; nor for their sakes, their prayers, tears, faith, obedience, holiness, that he doth great things for them, bestow great mercies upon them; but it is for his own name’s sake. For man’s sake God cursed the earth, Gen. viii. 21; but it is for his name’s sake that he bleaseth it. The choicest mercies God’s people have, are for his name’s sake: they have pardon of sin for his name’s sake, Psal. xxv. 11; 1 John ii. 12; purging of sin for his name’s sake, Psal. lxxix. 9; leading in the paths of righteousness for his name’s sake, Psal. xxiii. 3; quickening of their dead and dull hearts for his name’s sake, Psal. cxliii. 11. Though his people much offend him, yet he forsakes them not for his great name’s sake, 1 Sam. xii. 22. The Lord doth all freely and for the honour of his name; let us then say with the prophet, whatever we have, “Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but to thy name be the glory:” not unto us, who are thy creatures, not unto us who are tools in thy hand, but to thy name, which is the ground, root, and spring of all our mercies, be the glory, all the glory, and that everlastingly.

Obs. 5. God will not suffer his holy and great name always to lie under aspersions and reproaches of men. “I will sanctify my holy and great name, which was profaned among the heathen, even in the midst of them.” He will vindicate his honour and glory. Great men, when their names are blemished, do stand upon it, and will vindicate them with much cost and labour; so God, when wicked ones have profaned his name, and darkened the glory thereof, will stand upon it, and do that which shall clear his name before all his enemies. Goliath for many days defied the God of Israel, and the armies of Israel; but not long after the Lord vindicated his holy and great name, by stirring up and strengthening of David to take off his head, 1 Sam. xvii. 45, 51. When the king of Assyria and Rabshakeh blasphemed the name of God, as they did, Isa. xxxvi. xxxvii. did not the Lord quickly send an angel and destroy their great army of one hundred fourscore and five thousand, and so by this stroke of his made his holy and great name glorious and dreadful? He will scatter the smoke and venomous vapours, that ascend from the tongues and lives of profane persons to hinder the beams of his glorious name from shining, as the wind scatters clouds from before the sun; and as by destruction of his enemies, so by delivering of his servants.

Obs. 6. When God doth great things for his people, and they honour his name for them, then very heathens will be convinced, acknowledge God, and give glory to his name. “The heathen shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall be sanctified in you.” that is, in your deliverance, “before their eyes;”

then you will magnify my name, and they will magnify my name, which hath been profaned; then they will see and say that I am another kind of God than their idol gods are, that I am omnipotent, faithful, holy, wise. Psal. cxxvi. 1, 2, when the Lord turned the captivity of his people, as they said, "The Lord hath done great things for us;" so the heathens said, "The Lord hath done great things for them:" so much of God appeared in taking them out of Babylon, that Jewish and Babylonish tongues were constrained to speak out the power, truth, and goodness of God.

Obs. 7. Things difficult, and in the eye of man impossible, are facile to and feasible by the power of God. The Jews were among the heathens, who by their laws, power, and vigilancy kept them in great bondage; they were scattered into one hundred twenty and seven provinces, Esth. viii. 5, with chap. i. 1, and so it seemed impossible that these should be drawn out and carried to Canaan, which was so far off, especially for them who were seated near India; but what saith the Lord to this? "I will take you from among the heathen." He would but put forth his hand and lay hold of them, saying, Come, go with me, and it should be done; he would gather them out of all countries, as a hen gathers her chickens that are dispersed up and down among the bushes, trees, or weeds in an orchard; and as he carried them upon eagles' wings from Egypt to Canaan, so would he bring them upon the same wings from Babylon to Canaan. This work God is upon in these days of Christ, he is bringing out of all nations some unto Christ, and gathering them into spiritual Canaan.

Ver. 25. Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you.

We are now come to the last general part of this chapter; which consists in the multiplication of promises, both spiritual and temporal, with the ground of them.

1. The spiritual are,
 1. Remission of sins, ver. 25, 29, 33.
 2. Regeneration, ver. 26.
 3. Sanctification, ver. 27.
 4. Renovation of the covenant between God and them, ver. 28.
 5. Repentance, ver. 31.
11. The temporal are,
 1. Repossession of their land, ver. 28.
 2. Plentiful maintenance, ver. 29, 30.
 3. Re-edifying of their cities and waste places, ver. 33, 35.
 4. Increase of men, ver. 37, 38.

The ground of all these sweet and great promises is God's free grace, not man's desert, ver. 32.

"Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you." When they were called and come out of Babylon, then would the Lord sprinkle clean water upon them. The Jews by "water" mean the abundance of outward things. Some others interpret it of the water in baptism; but neither doth abundance of outwards, nor the water of baptism, cleanse from the pollution of idols: for after their return from Babylon, Jason sent money for the sacrifice of Hercules; he, Meneaus, and others, fell to the customs of the gentiles, desired to be like them in all things, they set not by the honour of their fathers, but liked the glory of the gentiles best of all, 2 Macc. iv. And are not many baptized ones amongst the papists and others idolaters? Some other sense of the word therefore must we seek out. By "water," the blood of Christ is intended, say the best expositors. Some make grace the thing; but that is too general, unless we limit it to the blood of Christ, which of grace is given to wash sinners with. These words, "I will sprinkle clean water upon you," have some allusion unto the waters mingled with the ashes of the red cow, which being sprinkled by a branch of hyssop upon the unclean party, he was cleansed; and this water was called the "water of separation," or "purification for sin," Numb. xix. 9. The Septuagint calls it, the water of sprinkling; and so the 18th and 19th verses express it. This red cow figured out Christ in his afflictions and sufferings; and the water mingled with the ashes of it, the blood of Christ, which from hence is called "The blood of sprinkling," Heb. xii. 24.

The water they used in sprinkling was clean water, running or spring water, free from all filth; so the blood of Christ is pure, he was without sin, any blemish, or spot; his blood was precious and pure, 1 Pet. i. 19; and here it is called "clean water."

This sprinkling of clean water upon them, is the application of the blood of Christ, by the Spirit of God: as the priest was to take of the blood of the red heifer with his finger, and to sprinkle it; so God by the hand and finger of his Spirit doth take and sprinkle the blood of Christ, that is, apply the fruit and benefit of it unto the hearts of men, 1 Cor. vi. 11.

"And ye shall be clean." There are three things among others which water serveth for, viz. to cool, to nourish, to cleanse. 1. It quengeth thirst caused by heat, and so cools; the like doth the blood of Christ, being drunk by faith, John vii. 37. 2. It nourisheth and causeth growth; and Christ's blood doth the same, John vi. 55. 3. It cleanseth, which is the use of it here mentioned: water washeth away the filth of garments, vessels, and persons; so the blood of Christ is a cleansing thing. Heb. ix. 13, 14, "If the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer, sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh: how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?" The argument is a minori ad majus; if the blood of typical sacrifices could do that to the flesh for which they were appointed, much more the blood of Christ, the true sacrifice, will do that to the soul and conscience for which it was appointed, viz. purge away the guilt of sin; otherwise the honour and efficacy of the type should be greater than the honour and efficacy of the substance; which the apostle denies, when he tells us types were shadows of good things to come, Heb. x. 1. This cleansing is the remission of their sins through the blood of Christ, or the justifying of their persons, so as they are before God without spot, or fault, Col. i. 14; Rom. v. 9; Rev. xiv. 5. When sins are forgiven, the persons are clean in the sight of God.

"From all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you." They had state defilements and temple defilements, family and personal filthinesses, Zeph. iii. 3, 4; Micah iii. 9—11; Ezek. xxii.; Jer. vi. 13; vii. 9. Whatever their filthinesses were, God would cleanse them; and because idolatry is a sin which exceedingly defiles, and provokes the Lord to jealousy, Exod. xx. 5, to fury, ver. 18 of this chapter, and they might apprehend there was no mercy for them; therefore the Lord mentions the filthiness of idols, and tells them he will cleanse them from that filthiness. It is not material water that washes from the filth of idolatry, but spiritual water.

Obs. 1. When it pleases God to gather his people out of Babylon, and to bring them to Zion, then he will multiply mercies upon them, and do for them great things. I will gather you from among the heathen, out of all countries, and bring you into your own land; and then will I sprinkle you with clean water, then will I give you a new heart, then will I put my Spirit into you, then will I call for the corn, and multiply the fruit of the tree and increase of the field. After great afflictions, God bestows great kindnesses; after sharp sufferings, he gives solid comforts. Isa. liv. 7, "For a small moment have I forsaken thee; but with great mercies will I gather thee:" ברחמי גרתיים. When God gathers his people out of Babylon, a state of confusion, that is mercy; and when he brings them into Zion, to behold the order, beauty, and glory thereof, that is great mercy; and God will not leave them there, but go on with them, and heap great mercies still upon them: see Isa. xlix. 18—23; Jer. xxxii. 37—41.

Obs. 2. Justification is a gracious act of God upon a sinner. "I will sprinkle clean water upon you." It is God's prerogative to forgive and blot out sins, Mark ii. 7; Isa. xliii. 25; and this he doth freely, it is an act of grace and mercy. Rom. iii. 24, "Being justified freely by his grace." Now in this act nothing is done in a sinner, there is no grace infused, no change made in the heart by it, there are no χαρακτα therein, it is upon a sinner: justifying grace is subjectively in God, objectively on man; for it is a judicial act of God, which puts nothing into the creature, Rom. iii. 22, it is "upon all of them that believe."

Obs. 3. The blood of Christ applied by the Spirit of God, is efficacious to free sinners from the guilt of their sins, and of all their sins, of what kind soever they be. "I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean." Their sins were great, very great; they were guilty of blood, oppressing the widow and fatherless, of idolatry, of despising and profaning holy things, Ezek. xxii. 8, 26. They were under the guilt of all crying and notorious sins, chap. xvi. 47, worse than Sodom or Samaria; than the nations, chap. v. 7; yet the Lord would cleanse them by the blood of Christ; there was virtue in that to cleanse them from their old spots, from their deep guilt, yea, from all their guilt, they should be clean from all their filthinesses. As water washeth all the filth out of a cloth, so doth the blood of Christ all sin out of the soul: 1 John i. 7, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin," the guilt of our thoughts, words, acts, neglects; there is no sin defiles the conscience so, but the blood of Christ will purge it away, Heb. ix. 14; i. 3. Christ's blood is of great virtue, it purges away all sin, and procures peace, Col. i. 20; so that "being justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath," as it is Rom. v. 9.

Obs. 4. All sin defiles and makes guilty before God, yet some sins defile more than others, and make more deeply guilty. God would cleanse them from all their filthiness, from every sin that had polluted them and made them guilty; and from their idols, which had made them more deeply guilty. Idolatry hath more guilt adhering to it than many other sins; that is a sin breaks covenant with God, deposes God, and sets up an idol in his stead.

Ver. 26. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh.

This is another great promise, even a promise of regeneration; and in it there is considerable,

I. The party promising, "I, I, I, I."

II. The things promised;

1. "A new heart."

2. "A new spirit."

3. Removal of the stony heart.

4. "An heart of flesh."

III. The parties to whom the Lord will do these things, "You, you, you."

IV. The manner of God's doing these things, which is by giving, putting, and taking away.

"A new heart also will I give you." By "heart" in Scripture is signified the judgment and understanding, Eph. iv. 18, the will and affections, Prov. xxiii. 26, and the conscience, 1 John iii. 20; all which are here comprehended in the word "heart." "New" notes sometimes that which is for substance new, totally new; as "new ropes," Judg. xvi. 11, 12; "a new wife," Deut. xxiv. 5; "new gods," Deut. xxxii. 17. And sometimes that which is only for quality new, as the new moon; Isa. lxvi. 23, "From one new moon to another;" the moon is not new for substance, but renewed with light, new in regard of quality: so "new tongues," Mark xvi. 17; they had not their old tongues plucked or cut out of their mouths, and other new ones put in; but those tongues they had before had new languages put into them, new gifts and graces. Here then by "a new heart," is not intended one new for the substance or nature of it, but the same heart altered for the qualities of it, renewed, and endued with other qualities than it had before; such qualities are wrought in the heart, that a man thereupon is said to be regenerate or "born again," John iii. 3, 5—7, and to be "a new creature," Gal. vi. 15.

This "new heart" lieth not in those common gifts which many have, yet without alteration in their hearts. Judas had a covetous, an earthly, an old heart, notwithstanding those great gifts he had; he could cast out devils, and heal all manner of sicknesses, Matt. x. 1, 4. And those, Matt. vii. 22, 23, who had the gift of prophecy, of casting out devils, and working wonders, had no new hearts; for Christ sends them going for workers of iniquity. But it lieth in grace infused, which is a principle of light and life, supernatural and permanent. Man since the fall of Adam is in a state of darkness and death, Eph. v. 8; ii. 5, and when grace is infused, that brings light and life into the heart; John viii. 12, it is called "the light of life;" and when a blind heart sees, a dead heart lives, there is a great and glorious alteration, so that it is become "a new heart;" it hath a new principle which is supernatural and permanent, called "the divine nature," 2 Pet. i. 4; "divine," to show the supernaturalness of it, and "nature," to show the permanency of it.

"And a new spirit will I put within you." These very words we had Ezek. xi. 19, where they were largely opened. "New spirit" there was interpreted to be those excellent qualities and graces God put into the soul, and showed upon what account they were called "spirit" and "new." Here I conceive "a new spirit" is added exegetically, being the same with "a new heart."

This "new heart," or "new spirit," causeth the party in whom it is to look at God as a Father; and so, to honour him, Mal. i. 6; to love him, 1 John v. 1; to fear him, 1 Pet. i. 17; to yield obedience to him, Rom. vi. 17; 1 Pet. i. 14, 15; patiently to bear his chastisements, Heb. xii. 6—9; to eschew sin and work righteousness, 1 John v. 18; iii. 9, 10; to acknowledge how he hath offended him, Luke xv. 18; to pray fervently unto him, Rom. viii. 15; to be like unto him in mercifulness and doing of good, Luke vi. 36; to delight in his ways, and to have communion with him, and his Son Christ, 1 John i. 3; to worship him in spirit and truth, John iv. 23; to be thankful always unto him for all things, Eph. v. 20; to live nobly and spiritually, minding the things of heaven, Rom. viii. 5; 1 Pet. i. 14; John iii. 6; 2 Cor. v. 16; and to love those that are regenerate, 1 John v. 1; and these doing so, God their Father hath a special care of them, and love unto them, Matt. vi. 26, 32; Luke xi. 13; xii. 32.

"Will I give you, will I put within you." The "new heart" and "new spirit" comes from God: he that is the author of "every good and perfect gift," is the author of the same. Now in the working of this "new heart" and "new spirit," observe,

I. Several attributes of God set on work: as,

1. His infinite mercy. That he should mind sinners, who have old, polluted, hard, dead hearts within them, so at enmity with God, that they would pull him out of heaven had they power to do it; for God to mind such hearts and spirits, and make them "new," so as to affect him and his ways, argues unspeakable mercy, loving-kindness superabundant. It was a time of love when God saw Jerusalem in her blood, and said unto her, "Live," Ezek. xvi. 6, 8; it was infinite love, infinite mercy for him to pity Jerusalem in such a case, and to say so unto her: the same it is when God makes of an old heart a new heart, of an old spirit a new spirit.

2. God's infinite power is employed in this work. The making of a dead heart to live, a blind heart to see, an old heart and spirit to become new, requires an omnipotent arm. By the preaching of the word men have great convictions, strong resolutions, and are persuaded almost to be christians; but those convictions and resolutions die away, and they never come altogether to be christians, altogether to be new-hearted and new-spirited, till the Lord put forth his almighty power, and create new hearts and spirits in them: it is a work of creation, Psal. li. 10; 2 Cor. iv. 6; Eph. ii. 10; and such hearts and spirits are called new creatures, Gal. vi. 15; 2 Cor. v. 17.

3. Infinite wisdom. The heart of man "is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; who can know it?" Jer. xvii. 9. It is beyond the knowledge of man: it hath so many windings, turnings, pretences, shifts, arguments, wiles, depths, methods, as that none but God knows it; he being infinitely wise, can answer all the objections, arguments, and subtle distinctions of the heart, so that it shall be silent. Man's heart whilst it is old, hath the cunning of the old serpent in it, and pleads hard to keep its old principles, its old ungodly lusts, its old ignorance, its old darkness, its old formal ways of worship, its old fleshly confidences, its old delights and pleasures, its old company, its old customs, its old aims and ends, which were self; it musters up many arguments to defend these; and who can convince the heart of the evil of these, and take it off from them, but God by his infinite wisdom? To make a heart, or spirit, which hath so many obdurances in it, new, argues more skill and wisdom than dwells in any creature.

4. His infinite holiness and purity. When God takes an old heart, which is as dark as hell, as stinking as any sepulchre, Matt. xxiii. 27; an old spirit, which is as unclean and loathsome as the devils are; when he takes these, and makes them new, he scatters darkness, abolisheth death, separating filthiness: and instead thereof brings in "marvellous light," 1 Pet. ii. 9; a glorious life, Eph. iv. 18, and "true holiness," ver. 24: which import that God is light without darkness, life without possibility of dying, holiness without any spot or imperfection. When the wind cleanseth the air infected, pestilential, and stinking, it argues the wind is pure; when a vessel or house is noisome, and one cleanses and sweetens them, as not enduring them in that condition, it argues their cleanliness, and if they could make them new, it would argue it much more: so here, God makes them new, he puts them into the fire that they may be refined, and partake of his holiness, Heb. xii. 10. It is God's holy arm which makes an unholy heart to become holy, and glorious in holiness.

11. The dignity and excellency of this "new heart" and "new spirit," is worthy the notice.

1. It is that doth discriminate and difference a man from all others. They that have old hearts, old spirits, and new hearts, new spirits, differ as much as light from darkness, life from death, and holiness from filthiness. A man with a new heart, a new spirit, is a living man, whereas others are dead, Eph. ii. 1; he is a seeing man, whereas others are blind, 1 John v. 20; 1 Cor. ii. 14; he is pure, whereas others are filthy, 1 Pet. ii. 9; Tit. i. 15. Hereby a man is differentiated from all profane, civil, and moral men; from all gifted men; from all hypocrites, what specious forms of religion and holiness soever they have: whoever hath a new spirit is distinguished from all other spirits, yea, from the devils, who are but unclean spirits.

2. It doth ennoble a man. A new heart and new spirit doth not only distinguish from others, but makes more excellent than others; Prov. xii. 26, "The righteous is more excellent than his neighbour." Righteousness is one of the qualities in the new heart, in the new spirit, Eph. iv. 23, 24; and that nobilitates a man: such a one is "born, not of blood," that is, not of the princes and nobles of the world, who stand upon their blood and greatness; "nor of the will of the flesh," that is, not in the ordinary way; "nor of the will of man," viz. not by education and school principles, "but of God," John i. 13; he is descended from the highest, the King of kings; he is of the most royal blood, even the blood of God, Acts xx. 28. Others are vile, but he is precious, Jer. xv. 19; 2 Pet. i. 1; he is partaker of the divine nature, and lives the life of God, 2 Pet. i. 4; Eph. iv. 18.

3. It fills them where it is with new joys. New things affect much: when the apostles had new tongues given them, they were greatly affected therewith; and when men have new hearts, new spirits, they abound in joy: the greater the mercy, the more full the joy. If when a sinner is converted, there be joy in heaven, what joy is in the sinner's heart then! When Christ came to Zaccheus, and gave him a new heart, a new spirit, he was filled with joy, Luke xix. and new joys. Before his joy was to get money by any means, and treasure it up; now his joy was to disperse, make satisfaction, and to give away, ver. 8. His new heart begat in him new joys, and enabled him to joy in that he could not do nor think of before without sadness. So Paul, when he had a new heart and spirit, he had new joys, fullness of them in those things he could not rejoice in before; 2 Cor. vii. 4, "I am filled with comfort, I am exceeding joyful in all our tribulations;" and, chap. xii. 10, he took "pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses." Here is the excellency of a new heart and a new spirit, it fills with new joys in God, in Christ, in the promises, in the saints, and enables us to rejoice and "glory in tribulations," Rom. v. 3.

4. It entitles us to divers new and excellent things: as,

(1.) To the new covenant. When a man hath a new heart and a new spirit he hath an interest in the new covenant, Jer. xxxi. 31, 33. The law of sin, and principles of Satan and the world, were written in the old heart, and old spirit, and so the party was under the covenant with death and hell, Isa. xxviii. 15; but in the new heart is written, the law of God, the law of faith, Rom. iii. 27; Heb. viii. 10, and so they are under the new covenant, which is called "grace," Rom. vi. 14.

(2.) To new names. Where there is newness of heart and spirit, there they are sealed in their foreheads with new names; their title is, "new creatures," 2 Cor. v. 17; "the seed of Abraham," Isa. xli. 8; "servants of righteousness," Rom. vi. 18; "children of light," John xii. 36; "conquerors," Rom. viii. 37; God's "workmanship," Eph. ii. 10; "kings and priests," Rev. i. 6; "temples of God," 1 Cor. iii. 16; the "glory" of God, Isa. iv. 5; "new-born babes," 1 Pet. ii. 2; "his saints," Psal. cxlix. 9; "vessels of gold and silver," 2 Tim. ii. 20; "wise virgins," Matt. xxv.; "heirs of salvation," Heb. i. 14.

(3.) To a new Lord and Master. When their hearts were old, Satan was their sovereign, they walked "according to the prince of the air," Eph. ii. 2; see 2 Tim. ii. 26; his lusts they did execute, John viii. 44. But having new hearts, they have a new Lord, a new Master, and that is the Lord Christ; Phil. i. 1, Paul, a servant of Christ. He had a new heart, and now he had a new Master, which was Christ; he would serve Satan no longer, but Christ, who died for sinners, that they might live unto him, 2 Cor. v. 15. When the hearts and spirits of men are new, they are dead to their old masters, and have new, Rom. vii. 4. Christ is the Husband and Head of every one renewed by his grace, he is Lord and Master of all such, 1 Cor. vii. 22; Matt. xxiii. 8.

(4.) To a new guard. Such have a guard of angels about them: before, as they were without God, so without the protection of his angels, exposed to all dangers; but having new hearts and new spirits, being new creatures, they have a multitude of the heavenly host, not only to praise God for their new birth, as they did at Christ's birth, Luke ii. 13, but to attend and protect them: Heb. i. 14. Are not the angels "ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" and none shall be such, but those that have new hearts and new spirits, for "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," 1 Cor. xv. 50.

(5.) To new alliance (this change is wrought in them. Blasphemers, idolaters, adulterers, drunkards, murderers, liars, unbelievers, hypocrites, and all profane ones, they are very devils themselves, John viii. 44; but when they have new hearts and new spirits, then they have new kindred. As a man that marries a woman, all her kindred become his; so here, all that have new hearts and spirits are his kindred who hath a new heart, he is allied unto them all; Matt. xxiii. 8, "All ye are brethren." All the saints throughout the earth, how great, how learned, how rich, how gifted or gracious soever they be, are all brethren; yea, the angels are brethren unto those that have new hearts, Rev. xix. 10; xxii. 9; and that which is beyond all, Christ himself is their Brother and Father, Matt. xii. 49, 50; Heb. ii. 12, 13.

(6.) To the new mansions in the city made without hands. John xiv. 2, saith Christ, "In my Father's house are many mansions, and I go to prepare a place for you; you have right and title to them, ye have new hearts, 'ye believe in God,' ver. 1; and I go to prepare and fit places for you in those mansions.

5. The excellency of a new heart is this, that it sets a high price upon the things of God, and a low price upon the things of the world, how goodly soever they appear; whereas before the things of the world were magnified, and the things of God slighted. When Paul had another heart and another spirit than before, then he had "no confidence in the flesh," then he did not value his great privileges, he counted them and all things but "loss for Christ;" they did damnify him rather than advantage him, and therefore looked upon them as dung, things of no worth, in respect of Christ, his righteousness, and knowledge of him, Phil. iii. 7-9; all which had an excellency, and were so prized by Paul, that he was willing to lay down his life for them, Acts xxi. 13. When Simon Magus offered the apostles money for to have power to give the Holy Spirit, by laying on of hands, Peter, in his own name, and in the name of the rest, said, "Thy money perish with thee: we value not bags of gold and silver, but the things of God, Acts viii. 19, 20. When the conjurers had the devils cast out of them, and new hearts given them, they brought forth their books which they had highly valued, and burned them before all men, and so many they burned as came to fifty thousand pieces of silver, Acts xix. 19; and instead of these, they prized the books of Moses, the prophets, and apostles. A new heart sees excellency in spiritual things, and saith, it cannot overvalue them, but for other things it puts them under its feet.

6. It is excellent in that it doth really make God its end, and aims at his glory in its operations; before self was all, now God is all. Acts xx. 23, 24, Paul was told by the Spirit of God, that bonds and afflictions did abide him every where, that his life was in danger; now had not Paul been a man of a new heart and spirit, he would have shifted for himself, and let the preaching of the gospel have fallen; but being such an one, what saith he? "None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God." That was Paul's end, to make known the grace of God in the gospel towards poor sinners, that so they partaking of that grace might give glory to God, and God be glorified by him. God and his glory were so in his eye, that he gave out a rule for all christians to eye and mind God and his glory in all things, 1 Cor. x. 31.

7. It is the principle of eternal life and happiness. When God puts life, light, and grace into the heart, and so makes it new, he hath begun our admission into heaven and happiness; this new heart and spirit are the water which springs up into everlasting life, John iv. 14; they are the eagles' wings which will carry you not only up to heaven, but into heaven.

III. Concerning this new heart and new spirit there are divers mistakes; many think they have the same, when they have it not. There are several things which cause men to judge so.

1. Outward reformation. When men cease from their former lewd courses, when they give over their drunkenness, whoredom, swearing, lying, oppression, and other scandalous practices, they think themselves, and are reputed of others, to be new men, and so to have new hearts; but know, a man may have escaped the pollutions of the world, have changed his manners, yet retain his old heart: a swine may be washed, and yet reserve her swinish nature. Herod reformed in many things, yet had an unreformed heart, Mark vi. 20; Luke iii. 20;

ix. 9. The scribes and Pharisees were whited sepulchres, they had beautiful outsides, they appeared righteous unto men; but what were their hearts? were they not full of hypocrisy and iniquity? Matt. xxiii. 27, 28. Shame among men, fear of punishment, death, hell, terrors of conscience, afflictions, strength of reason, and hope of profits and reward, may make a man reform his life and manners, his heart being still naught; a man formerly wicked may become a new man, and yet not have a new heart.

2. Moral virtues cause many to be deceived about this new heart: because they are temperate, just, prudent, faithful to their friends, true in their speeches, patient under afflictions, seek the public good, not their own interest, are chaste, and courteous unto all, they thereupon conclude that they have the new heart and new spirit here spoken of; but all these are no more than were found in heathens. Scipio, Aristides, Cato, Emilius, Lepidus, Lucretia, and others, excelled in moral virtues. The Roman faith was in great esteem in all the world, because the Romans kept their word, and made good whatever they promised. Many heathens excelled in moralities, and did virtuous actions for virtue's sake, yet they had no new hearts or spirits; they knew not what regeneration was, they were strangers to the life of God and faith; they attained to what they had by their own industry, and what they did was not done according to the mind of God in his word, and so referring to his glory; they sought their own glory in all.

3. A form of godliness. When men have left their old ways of sin, and taken up a way, or form of godliness, which is new to them, they imagine themselves to be new, and to have new hearts; they read, pray, hear, meditate, and worship God with their hearts, which they never did before, and hence they ground a newness in their hearts. The Jews have a form of godliness at this day, yet are they cast off of God and numbered amongst unbelievers, Rom. xi. 20; such was their godliness, as persecuted true godliness, Acts xiii. 50; 1 Thess. ii. 15. The heathens had forms of godliness: Plato taught men not to sleep without repentance for their sins; Hermes instructed them to pray earnestly unto God, and continually for repentance, to call upon him in the day, and not to forget him in the night; they worshipped by nature those which were no gods, Gal. iv. 8; forms of worship they had, though they worshipped blindly: Socrates saw further than the most of them, who said, God must be worshipped only that way which he hath appointed; yet neither Socrates, nor the rest of the heathens, had new hearts. Christians have forms of godliness, yet all among them have not new hearts; among papists and protestants are many religions, but few pious, they have the form of godliness, but not the power. Painted fire is not true fire, and all that worship God do not worship him in newness of spirit; the most do worship him with old hearts.

4. Some are deceived upon this ground, that they have the law in their hearts, approve of truth, make conscience of their ways, have peace within, and so determine their hearts are new. But here is a great mistake, the law is in men's hearts by nature; Rom. ii. 14, 15, "The gentiles, which had not the law, did by nature the things of the law, and so showed the work of the law written in their hearts;" when they did ill their consciences did accuse them, and when they did well they did excuse them, and so they had peace; here was nothing supernatural: where there is a new heart, a new spirit, there is something supernatural; men have not these by descent from their parents, but they are given, they are put in by God, "I will give you a new heart, and I will put within you a new spirit." The law that all men have in their hearts is by virtue of creation, not of the new covenant; that is another law, Jer. xxxi. 33, which is from grace, not from nature: where this law is written, the heart is new, and so doth not only approve of truth in general, but knows and approves of truth as it is in Christ, Eph. iv. 21, and as it is according to godliness. Truth in a new heart provokes unto godliness, and maketh consciences towards God and men, Acts xxiv. 16, looking at Christ for peace; Rom. v. 1, "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God," the conscience being purged from dead works by the blood of Christ. Men have sound peace in their new hearts; it is false peace which men of old hearts have, they bribe their consciences with doing something, and that is their peace.

5. New relations make some to fancy they have new hearts and new spirits; they are under church privileges, they are citizens of Zion, inhabitants of Jerusalem, in relation to Christ and his ordinances; this may be, and yet without newness of heart or spirit. Relations made not alterations in men's hearts. Simon Magus was baptized, stood in relation to Christ and the gospel, yet his heart was the same it was before, Acts viii. The Jews gloried they were the seed of Abraham, John viii. 33; yet they were of their father the devil, ver. 44, and had bloody hearts, ver. 40, seeking to kill Christ. Rom. ii. 28, 29, outward privileges may be, as circumcision of the flesh, where there is no circumcision of the heart; and Paul tells us, Gal. vi. 15, that "circumcision nor uncircumcision avail any thing, but a new creature;" they may be where the new creature is not; himself had many privileges, Phil. iii. when he was far from newness of heart.

6. Gifts. They breed mistakes in divers persons: those that have choice and great gifts persuade themselves they have new hearts and spirits, that they are gracious and good; but there is a vast difference between gifts and grace.

(1.) Gifts make not a man a christian. Heathens had great gifts, as Tully, Seneca, Plato, Aristotle, Plutarch. It is grace makes a christian. The gentiles were not christians, and so not acceptable to God, till they were sanctified by the Holy Spirit, Rom. xv. 16. They may make a man a useful man, not a good man; Acts xi. 24, it is faith and the graces of the Spirit make a good man.

(2.) All gifts do seldom or never meet in one man, but graces do, they are the fruits of the Spirit, and grow all in a new heart; John i. 16, "Of his fulness have we all received, and grace for grace." Graces go together, not gifts.

(3.) A man may have gifts and not be saved. Judas had gifts, yet was a son of perdition. The beast which came up out of the earth had miraculous gifts, and the false prophets also, and notwithstanding their gifts, they were both cast into the lake of fire burning with brimstone, Rev. xiii. 11, 13, 14; xix. 20. But he that hath a new heart and new spirit hath grace, and so shall be saved, John iii. 6; 2 Cor. iii. 17; he that is born of the Spirit is a new creature, he hath grace, and shall be saved, Acts xv. 11.

7. Activeness. Some men growing active for God and the public, zealous against corrupt practices in church or state, gather from hence that they have new hearts and spirits; they were not so before, and how can it be that such new operations and activeness should be in them, and from them, and they not be men of new hearts? When men are called to public employments, they may have other hearts than they had before, yet not such a new heart as is here spoken of. Saul had "another heart," 1 Sam. x. 9, when anointed to be king, yet not a new heart. Credit, profit, and conscience misinformed may make men zealous and active, when they have no other than their old hearts. Paul before his conversion was very active, and exceedingly zealous of the traditions of his fathers, Gal. i. 13, 14. How active are Jesuits! how zealous are papists, and many others! and that from erroneousness of their consciences, not newness of their spirits.

Obs. 1. Men's hearts and spirits, by nature, are old, they are degenerated from that innocency, simplicity, and purity Adam was created in, they are corrupted ever since he ate of the forbidden fruit. Psal. xiv. 1, "Men are corrupt, they have done abominable works, there is none that doeth good." Psal. liii. 3, "Every one of them is gone back: they are altogether become filthy; there is none that doeth good, no, not one:" such as their hearts are, such are their actions: old hearts have answerable operations: Psal. lviii. 3, "They go astray as soon as they be born;" they brought corrupt hearts and natures with them into the world, and their first actions were against God, truth, justice, and holiness. Men by nature have hearts full of old things: 2 Cor. v. 17, old things are not passed away, but abide. Old principles, old lusts, old desires, old thoughts, old reasonings, old enmities, old confidences, old hardness, old deceitfulness, old frowardness, and old naughtiness, are all found in men's hearts till they are made new: see Gen. vi. 5; Matt. xv. 19.

Obs. 2. A new heart, a new spirit, is not from the power or will of man, but from the grace of God. "A new heart will I give you, a new spirit will I put into you." God bade them, Ezek. xviii. 31, make themselves new hearts and new spirits, but they were not able to do it; he promises therefore to do it for them. It is God's way in his holy word to command and call for that at the hands of men, which he intends to give and work; as Phil. ii. 12, "Work out your own salvation;" and in the next verse it is said, "It is God which worketh in you both to will and to do:" Isa. i. 16, "Wash you, make you clean?" Ezek. xxxvi. 25, "I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean:" Deut. x. 16, "Circumcise the foreskin of your heart;" they could not do it, therefore, Deut. xxx. 6, "The Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart." These Scriptures evince, that it is the Lord himself who performs what he commands; it is not man's will or power which produceth the new heart, it is the gracious and mighty hand of God which effects it; and when he will work, who shall let it? Shall man's will? Yes, if God did only propound arguments, command, exhort, invite, encourage, threaten, it might; but God doth promise to do the thing, "to give a new heart, put in a new spirit;" and should the liberty of man's will hinder it, how should God be faithful? But, rather than he will be found unfaithful, he will overpower the corrupt wills of men, and make them flexible to his will. The efficacy of grace depends not upon man's will, embracing or refusing what is tendered, but on the good pleasure and power of God, Phil. ii. 13. When it pleases God to put forth his power, the work shall be done, the "new heart and new spirit" shall be wrought in the man, notwithstanding all the oldnesses therein.

"And I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh." In chap. xi. 19, the words are, "I will take the stony heart out of their flesh," and here they are, "I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh."

Much was spoken of them there; something I shall speak now.

"The stony heart." The Hebrew is, the heart of stone, that is, the heart which in a spiritual sense is like a stone.

1. A stone is senseless, it feels or perceives nothing; and so is a "stony heart:" Eph. iv. 19, "Who being past feeling;" they were so accustomed to sin, that they felt not any evil in sin. Zech. xiv. 4, we read of a mountain that cleaved in sunder at the presence of Christ; but the hearts of the Jews were so stony, that they were not at all affected at the presence or voice of Christ.

2. A stone is hard and impenetrable, a knife, a sword, a nail, will not enter into it; so a "stony heart" is so hard, that the word of God hath no entrance into it. Psal. cxix. 130, "The entrance of thy words giveth light;" when it enters into the heart it doth so: but though the word be of a sharp and piercing nature, yet it enters not into a "stony heart," it is impenetrable. Zech. vii. 14, "They refused to hearken, and pulled away the shoulder, and stopped their ears, that they should not hear. Yea, they made their hearts as an adamant stone." No truths, no arguments, no invitations, no prayers, no tears, no mercies, no threats, no judgments, do conquer or prevail with it: neither wind, rain, thunder, lightning, sunshine, heat, cold, do change the nature of a rock.

3. A stone is unpolished, and inept for building and other uses, till it be hewn, sawn, and brought into some other form; so a "stony heart" is a heart unpolished, unfit to lie in any part of God's building, or for any service of his, till it be polished, hewn, sawn, hammered, and brought into some other frame. As a stone cannot change itself, no more can a "stony heart." The devil knew that the stones, Matt. iv. 3, could not turn themselves into bread, therefore saith to Christ, "Command that they be made bread." He knew they might be made bread meet to eat: and so "stony hearts," though they cannot make themselves fleshy, yet they may be made fleshy, they may be brought to another form, and so be fit for spiritual employments and uses.

4. A stone doth resist and repel what falls upon it: stones do oft break the instruments which strike them, and force them back, there is a resisting in them; so in "stony hearts" there is much resistance. Luke iv. 28, 29, "All they in the synagogue, when they heard these things, were filled with wrath, and rose up, and thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the brow of the hill that they might cast him down headlong." Their flinty, rocky hearts resisted and rejected all the precious truths Christ had delivered, and made them fall foul upon him, and seek to spill his blood. 2 Tim. iii. 8, "As Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith;" they were men of stony hearts resisting the faith: Acts vii. 51, "Ye stiff-necked, and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist," &c.

5. A stone is heavy, Prov. xxvii. 3, and its motion is downwards; it is earth hardened, and its whole tendency is to the earth; so a "stony heart" is heavy, earthy, and tends downwards altogether: Ezek. xx. 16, "Their heart went after their idols:" chap. xxxiii. 31, "Their heart goeth after their covetousness:" and Hosea iv. 8, "They set their heart on their iniquity." Men are born with the stone in their hearts, and naturally they mind earthly things, Phil. iii. 19; their motion is downward: John iii. 31, "He that is of the earth is earthly, and speaketh of the earth;" his thoughts, his words, his motions, are all that way. The things of heaven are burdensome to a "stony heart," that cannot move upwards.

6. Stones keep their places, and are immovable. Eccles. x. 9, "Whoso removeth stones shall be hurt therewith;" great stones, mountains, rocks, abide fixed, and it is dangerous to meddle with them. So "stony hearts" keep their stoniness, they are immovable; what opinions, principles, conclusions soever they have taken in, though false and corrupt, they are tenacious of, and obstinate in: Judg. ii. 19, "They ceased not from their own doings, nor from their stubborn way." God sold them into the hands of enemies, where they suffered grievous things; God raised them up deliverers, who set them at liberty; yet "they ceased not from their own way," they were immovable from their own opinions, corrupt principles, and dangerous tenets. Men are so self-conceited, self-willed, that they are like rocks, not to be stirred.

7. Stones are dry, and have no moisture in them at all. Take a rock, there is no water in it; take any stone, it is dry; all stones are dry and barren; so stony hearts, they have no moisture of grace in them, they are all dry and barren, the waters of life are not found in them. The woman of Samaria had a "stony heart," and how dry, how barren was it! not a good word came out of it towards Christ, John iv. Whilst the gentiles were without God and Christ in the world, they had "stony hearts," and so were barren and fruitless, Isa. liv. 1. Wheresoever is a "stony heart," there is no melting, no mourning, no tears.

8. Stones are cold. 1 Sam. xxv. 37, it is said, Nabal's "heart died within him, and he became as a stone," that is, cold and senseless. So "stony hearts" are cold, there is no spiritual heat in them; though the word be as fire, yet it heats them not. Men of "stony hearts" are frigid in the things of God, they contend not for the truth, they reprove not wickedness in others, they stand not for the interest of Christ, they are not zealous for God and his glory, they put not their hands to his work, they mind not the conversion of sinners, they are indifferent how things of that nature go. A "stony heart" is a dead heart, and as it hath no life nor motion in it, so no warmth in it; like the Shunammite's son, 2 Kings iv. 34; till Elisha came and stretched forth himself upon it, there was neither life nor warmth in it; and till God's Spirit come and stretch forth its virtue and power upon a "stony heart," it hath neither life nor warmth in it. Thus you see wherein a "stony heart" resembles a stone, or rock.

Quest. What is the evil of a hard heart?

Ans. 1. It is ever unthankful; mercies, kindnesses, do not affect it, and how then can it be thankful? some verbal thankfulness may be in a hard-hearted man, but in his heart, in his life there is nothing. Pour wine, oil, the spirits and quintessence of any thing upon a stone, it is lost, the stone is not at all the better for it, not affected with it; so a "stony heart," let the choicest mercies of heaven or earth be presented to it, they are lost, that heart is unthankful; and whereas we should be thankful in every thing, 1 Thess. v. 18, such a one is thankful in nothing, and makes the times perilous, 2 Tim. iii. 2.

Ans. 2. It grows worse and worse, harder and harder, every day, nothing stops it from proceeding on in its wicked ways. The Jews were a stony-hearted people, and what saith the Lord to them? Isa. i. 5, "Why should ye be stricken any more? ye will revolt more and more:" threatening judgments did not stop or turn them from their wickedness. Pharaoh saw the wonderful judgments of God, ten plagues were upon him and his land, and yet his heart grew harder and harder. They that came to take Christ, went backward and fell to the ground when Christ said, "I am he;" they saw also a miracle wrought by Christ, in restoring to Malchus his ear, which Peter had cut off, yet, being stony-hearted, they proceeded to take Christ, to bind him and carry him to the high priest, John xviii. 6, 10—13.

Ans. 3. It causeth a man to walk contrary to his profession. Those that are christians, profess Christ and the gospel, they have in baptism given up themselves to him, and obliged themselves to walk according to gospel rules: now whence is it that they profess one thing, and practise another, that they profess christianity, and walk as heathens, or worse than heathens? whoredom, drunkenness, covetousness, lying, pride, swearing, theft, murder, witchery, contention, slander, oppression, &c. are they not as frequent among christians as ever they were among heathens? Paul, writing to the Ephesians, exhorted them "not to walk as other gentiles, in the vanity of their minds, having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart, who being past feeling have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness." It was the hardness of the heathen gentiles' hearts, which made them walk so; and when christian gentiles walk so, it is from the hardness of their hearts. We are of the gentiles, and notwithstanding our christianity, we walk contrary to Christ and the gospel, which is from the stoniness of our hearts, keeping out the power; and this is a grievous evil: we profess Christ and the gospel verbally, and deny both really, and so cause our holy profession, and the Lord Jesus Christ, to be blasphemed, Rom. ii. 24; James ii. 7.

Ans. 4. It is a spiritual judgment, which is worse than all other diseases, than all other judgments. A blind eye, a deaf ear, a dumb tongue, a palsy hand, a gouty leg, a leprous head, the stone in the kidneys or bladder, are nothing to the stone in the heart; no plague is like that plague. Those four sore judgments mentioned chap. xiv. 21, are not so ill as the stone in the heart; men are sensible of those, and tremble at them, but the stoniness of their hearts they neither feel nor fear, by reason of it. Can there be a more dreadful judgment upon a man than to be given up of God to hardness of heart? Psal. lxxxi. 11, 12, "My people would not hearken to my voice; and Israel would none of me. So I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust: and they walked in their own counsels:" they were stubborn, and God punished their stubbornness with stoniness.

Ans. 5. It pleaseth itself in the ways of wickedness: Prov. x. 23, "It is as sport to a fool to do mischief;" and chap. xiv. 9, "Fools make a mock at sin:" fools, that is, wicked men, whose hearts are hardened, who know not the nature of sin, who feel not the weight of sin, they slight sin, they sport themselves with sin, they rejoice to do evil. Prov. ii. 14, "They count it pleasure to riot in the day time," 2 Pet. ii. 13. There is no sin but men of stony hearts take delight in, some in one, some in another, and if they can or cannot commit wickedness themselves, they take pleasure in them that can, Rom. i. 32.

Ans. 6. It is the seat of Satan, he dwells in it. A "stony heart" is the devil's castle: Eph. ii. 2, he is in, and works in the children of disobedience: in their hearts he hath strong holds, keeps possession, and rules them at his pleasure, they are his subjects.

God dwells in a broken heart, Isa. lvii. 15 ; but the devil in a "stony heart."

Ans. 7. That man that hath a "stony heart" increaseth his own woe daily: Rom. ii. 5, Thou "after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath;" that is, thou causest God to treasure up more severe punishment for thee daily; thou sinnest more and more daily, and God heats the furnace hotter and hotter daily.

"I will take away." The word is in Hiphil, and signifies thus much, I will cause to depart, or, I will make to remove, cause to be gone. Montanus renders it, I will remove it. God doth this,

1. By enlightening the blind heart to see, Acts xxvi. 18; 1 Pet. ii. 9; Eph. iv. 18; v. 8.

2. By enlivening the dead and senseless heart to feel its stoniness. When breath and life entered into the dry bones, they were sensible, Ezek. xxxvii.; and when God breathes upon a stony heart it lives, and is sensible. What an adamant heart was in Paul, who took pleasure in vexing, imprisoning, and murdering of the saints; but when Christ breathed upon him, and put life into him, he then became sensible of his hard-heartedness, Acts ix.

3. By the warmth of his Spirit, and moisture of his grace, love, and mercy, he melts the "stony heart." Some fire will melt brass and iron, and some waters dissolve any stone; such is the fire of God's Spirit, there is not any iron or brazen heart but that can melt it; such is the water of life, there is not any "stony heart" but that will dissolve it. There is an omnipotent power in the Spirit and grace of God to turn millstones into wax, and rocks into streams; it was verified in Paul, who feeling the mighty power of God's Spirit and grace in his heart, had the millstoniness and rockiness thereof removed, for presently he cried out, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" and fell to weeping and praying.

"Out of your flesh." By "flesh" here is not meant corrupt nature, as Gal. v. 13; but by it is meant man, "I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh," that is, out of you.

Obs. 1. The hearts of men, as they are in themselves, are stony, even stones, senseless of sin, unyieldable to truth, inept for spiritual employments, repelling and rejecting the counsel of God, moving downwards, and minding earthly things, immovable from their tenets, cold, and barren. Such are all men's hearts naturally, and the hardness of them is much increased by actual and customary sins. When men consent to evil thoughts and lusts in their hearts, vent them by actings, and reiterate the same day after day, they make their hearts more and more hard, as the hand is by working, and the foot by walking. Jer. v. 3, "They have made their faces harder than a rock; they have refused to return." If their faces were hardened like rocks, what were their hearts? Zechariah tells you, "They made their hearts as an adamant stone," Zech. vii. 12, which exceeds other stones in hardness; and not some few of them had done so, but even all of them: Ezek. iii. 7, "All the house of Israel are impudent and hard-hearted;" all of them had faces of rock and hearts of adamant.

Obs. 2. It is the prerogative of God, who hath dominion over the heart, to alter the heart. "I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh." They could not change their own hearts, they were not able to get the stone out of them, nor the prophets, who were their spiritual physicians. Kidney-stones, and bladder-stones, men may remove; heart-stones none can remove but God; men cannot remove mountains or rocks, but the Lord can; he hath an arm of strength, his word is a word of power, when he commands, it is done. Though a "stony heart" can stand it out against men, yet it cannot stand it out against God; he fetched water out of a rock, and God can make the hardest rocky heart in the world to melt, repent, and send forth floods of water. Mary Magdalene had an impudent face and a hard heart, but when God dealt with her, he took away the hardness of her heart and impudency of her face, she sat and wept at the feet of Christ, Luke vii. 38; the Lord can turn wildernesses into standing waters, and dry ground into water-springs, Psal. cvii. 35.

Obs. 3. It is a great mercy to have the stoniness of the heart removed. The removal of any evil from the body of man is mercy, as blindness from the eye, deafness from the ear, lameness from the leg, weakness from the stomach; much more, then, the removal of spiritual evil, and that from the heart. Stoniness of heart is the greatest evil which can befall it, and for God to take that away, to cure it, is a rich, a wonderfully great mercy, it is a mercy of the new covenant; it is more than God's delivering Daniel from the lions' den, Jonah from the whale's belly, or the three children from the fiery furnace. They should have been saved had they died in those conditions, but the man that dies with a hard heart perisheth for ever.

"And I will give you an heart of flesh." The "heart of flesh" is opposed to the "stony heart," and it implies several things which are considerable: as.

1. Softness, tenderness. A "stony heart" is hard, but a "heart of flesh" is tender and soft. The Scripture speaks of "a soft tongue," Prov. xxv. 15, and of a "soft heart," Job xxiii. 16; that is, a heart free from stoniness and obduration. Some flesh is brawny and hard, some very tender, as the flesh of those mentioned Deut. xxviii. 56. The "heart of flesh" is a heart like the tenderest flesh, even the flesh of a child new-born.

2. Sensibleness. Some flesh is so hardened, as that it feels nothing, and some is so tender, it is sensible of the least touch. The drunkard's flesh felt not the stripes when he was beaten, Prov. xxiii. 35; but Josiah's heart was sensible of the anger of God, when he heard the law only read, 2 Chron. xxxiv. Christ's heart was tender and sensible of our infirmities, he was touched with the feeling of them, Heb. iv. 15; the least infirmity he was affected with, for he had a "heart of flesh," a heart without any stoniness at all in it; and where a "heart of flesh" is, it is sensible of the least sin, the least dishonour to God: vain thoughts, risings of corruption, extravagancy of affections, all sins are burdensome to it. The man of such a heart hath his senses exercised to discern between good and evil, Heb. v. 14.

3. Meltingness. A "stony heart" never melts, but a "heart of flesh" is of a melting nature. Josiah's heart was not only affected with the law read, but melted also into tears: 2 Kings xxii. 19, his heart was tender, and he humbled himself before the Lord. So David, Psal. xxii. 14, "My heart is like wax; it is melted in the midst of my bowels;" how did it melt after Nathan had told him of his sin! Psal. li.; so after his numbering of the people, 2 Sam. xxiv.

17. Peter's heart was of this nature, for after Christ looked upon him "he went out and wept bitterly," Luke xxii. 62. Such were their hearts, Ezek. ix. 4, who sighed and cried for all "the abominations which were done in the midst of Jerusalem." A heart of flesh melts and mourns that God is dishonoured by others, but most of all that he hath been dishonoured by him in whom it is: that man that hath a "heart of flesh" sheds most tears for the wrongs himself hath done unto God, Luke xv. 18, 19.

4. Teachableness. A "stony heart" is indocible, inflexible, it repels and keeps out truths, but a "heart of flesh" admits and receives truths, it is yielding and teachable. When Lydia's hard heart was turned into flesh, Acts xvi. 14. she attended unto the things which were spoken by the apostle, she received them, and believed them; she was a good scholar, and constrained her teachers to come and abide at her house, that she might learn more of them, ver. 15. Paul no sooner had his heart of stone made flesh, but he manifested a teachableness in himself: Acts ix. 6, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" I am a blind Pharisee, and have been all my days out of the way; I desire now to learn, and to be taught of thee, whom I ignorantly blasphemed. David shut not his eyes against the light, as many hard-hearted persons do; he prayed that the Lord would open his eyes, that he might behold wondrous things out of the law; he was oft begging of God to teach him, "O teach me the way of thy statutes, and I shall keep it unto the end," Psal. cxix. 18, 33. He was willing to see, to hear, and to do: Psal. cx. 3, "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power." When the "stony heart" is removed, and "a heart of flesh" put in the room of it, that is a day of power; and then the people so hearted are willing to hear the Lord speak, to understand his counsels, and to resolve their wills into God's, so that his will is theirs.

5. A disposition to obedience. A "stony heart" is refractory, contradictory, disobedient, but a fleshy heart is yielding and obediential; it is a heart which follows God, as Elisha followed Elijah, virtue went out of the mantle and constrained him to do so; and the virtue gone out from God into "a heart of flesh" prevails with it, and causeth it to follow God, to yield obedience unto him. Caleb had another spirit than the rest of the Jews had, and he followed the Lord fully, Numb. xiv. 24; his spirit was not obstinate, but obediential; and wherever this "heart of flesh" is, it is so far from being contentious against the truth, or withholding the truth in unrighteousness, as that it obeys the truth heartily, Rom. vi. 17.

1. Remark the excellency of a tender heart.

1. It is the mansion of God's Holy Spirit. When the heart is tender and fleshy, God puts his Holy Spirit into it, as in the next verse appears. The Spirit itself is a tender thing, and takes no content in a hard heart: Isa. lvii. 15, it is in the heart of humble and contrite ones that the Spirit dwells. The Corinthians were babes in Christ, very tender, and they were temples of the Spirit, 1 Cor. iii. 1, 16. How excellent is a tender heart, that the "Spirit of grace," Heb. x. 29, "the spirit of glory," 1 Pet. iv. 14, should take it up for its habitation! it was there before as an agent, not as an inhabitant.

2. It cannot endure the dishonour of God; it is much affected, yea afflicted, thereat. When Rabshakeh blasphemed and reviled the God of Israel, how was Hezekiah afflicted at it! "He rent his clothes, covered himself with sackcloth, and went into the house of the Lord;" sends for Isaiah, begs his prayers, spreads the blasphemer's letter he had received before the Lord, and cried unto him for help to vindicate his own name, 2 Kings xix. 1—4, 14—19. Hezekiah had a tender heart, and herein was the excellency of it, he was deeply affected with the dishonour of God. David's heart was touched thoroughly when men violated the law of God, and dishonoured his name: Psal. cxix. 136, "Rivers of waters run down mine eyes, because they keep not thy law." None of his own afflictions, his persecution by Saul, his expulsion by Absalom, did draw so many tears from him as the dishonour of God's name, that made his tender heart like a fountain which sends forth rivers. The heathens, who had hard hearts, said of their heathenish king, "It is not meet for us to see the king's dishonour," Ezra iv. 14. And can christians see the dishonour of the God of heaven? those that have "hearts of flesh" cannot endure to see it; if they cannot help the same, they will mourn, and mourn abundantly for it.

3. It is a strong defence against all sin; it quickly feels the nature of sin, and so flees from it. Touch tender flesh with a needle or pin, it endures not the same, it cries out against, and removes them. Some bodies are so delicate that they feel every wind, every little distemper, and so fortify themselves against them; and some hearts are so tender, that corruption or the devil cannot stir but they discern, feel, and find them, and so set themselves against them. When Joseph's mistress tempted him to folly, his heart startled at it, and caused his tongue to say, "How can I do this, and sin against God?" Gen. xxxix. 9. A tender heart sticks at the appearance of evil, and will not venture there. Abraham would not take any thing of the spoil recovered, but returned all into the hands of the king of Sodom, lest he should say, "I have made Abraham rich," Gen. xiv. 23. This was an excellent frame of spirit, and proceeded from the tenderness of his heart; such tenderness antidotes a man against the poison of sin. Job's heart was flesh, not stone, and not his friends, wife, or devil, could draw him to commit sin; his heart was sensible of his sons' sinning, and on their behalf he offered sacrifice continually, Job i. 5; and that tenderness preserved him from sinning. David's heart smote him when he cut off but the lap of Saul's garment, 1 Sam. xxiv. 5.

4. It is active for God. When Paul's heart was turned into flesh, presently saith he, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" I am now ready to do aught for thee, Acts ix. 6; "and straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues," ver. 20. Josiah was of a tender heart, and he acted notably for God, he destroyed the groves, altars, high-places, images out of Judah and Jerusalem, and other places; he repaired the temple, he caused the law to be read, the people to enter into covenant with God, he kept a most solemn passover, such as had not been from Samuel's days before, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 35. A hard heart is active against God, and a soft heart is active for God. Manasseh, through the hardness of his heart, did more wickedly than any, 2 Chron. xxxiii. And David, through the tenderness of his heart, fulfilled all the will of God, Acts xiii. 22; he durst not neglect any duty the Lord called for, nor do it remissly when he went about it.

11. Inquire what are the mistakes about a tender heart?

1. There is a legal tenderness which arises from apprehension of God's sovereignty and justice, and his wrath due unto men for sin, and their sinful practices, whereupon they humble themselves, mourn, sigh, weep, pray, and so manifest some tenderness of heart. Such, I conceive, was the tenderness of Manasseh's heart, when he was among thorns, bound in fetters, and in affliction, then he besought the Lord, humbled himself greatly, and prayed, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11—13. Such tenderness had Judas, who repented of what he had done, saying, he had sinned in betraying innocent blood, Matt. xxvii. 3, 4; terrors of conscience put him upon it. This legal tenderness is not that here meant. For, fear of death and hell, do never melt the heart. The law, judgments of God, considerations of death and hell, may break the stony heart into many pieces, yet every piece remain a stone, retain its hardness: when you break a millstone or rock into pieces with a hammer or pick-axe, though broken, yet there is no true softness in them.

(1.) Apprehensions of God's power, justice, wrath,

(2.) Legal tenderness never loves God, it loves itself, and seeks itself; but evangelical, or spiritual, tenderness carries out the heart to God and Christ. Peter, having hardened his heart by denial of the Lord Jesus once, twice, and thrice, and then being softened again by a look of Christ upon him, Luke xxii. 61, 62, he loved him dearly; and that it might be known, Christ asked him the question, "Simon, lovest thou me more than these?" he saith not, Peter, dost thou love me? but, "dost thou love me more than these?" I know these love me much, how stands thy heart to me? his answer was, Yea, I love thee, and more than these do love thee, and thou knowest it. A tender heart is strongly in love with Christ. Paul, after his heart was regenerate and softened, he was so in love with Christ, that he wisheth Anathema Maran-atha to that man which loves not the Lord Jesus, 1 Cor. xvi. 22.

2. There is a natural fleshiness or tenderness, which is much in women, and sometimes also in men; as when Joseph made himself known unto his brethren, he wept, it was from a natural tenderness in him, Gen. xlv. 1, 2. Some are by nature very tender and pitiful: such tenderness is not what our prophet aims at. For,

(1.) This natural tenderness is born with men, they bring it with them into the world: the other is a gift, "I will give you an heart of flesh;" the one is of nature, the other of grace. Parents procreate the one, God creates the other: the one is from constitution, the other from regeneration.

(2.) Where there is a natural tenderness, it is flexible both ways, to good and evil. Rehoboam, who was a wicked king, having a tender heart, 2 Chron. xiii. 7, he was for evil and for good, he hearkened to the young men's ill counsel at one time, and to Shemaiah's good counsel another time, 1 Kings xii. 14, 24; he was easily drawn this way and that way, like some in the apostle's time, who "were carried about with every wind of doctrine," Eph. iv. 14; they were children, they had a natural tenderness in them, and bowed to sound and corrupt doctrine. But a man that hath the tenderness of heart here intended, is untractable towards evil, and only flexible unto good: 1 John iii. 9, "He cannot sin, because he is born of God;" his heart is obstinate against sin, he keeps himself from the touching of the wicked one, chap. v. 18; but is pliable to the will of the holy one, "prepared unto every good work," 2 Tim. ii. 21.

3. Natural tenderness is faint in the cause of God, it hath no courage, no magnanimity for God, but spiritual tenderness hath. Paul was tender-hearted after his conversion, and see what a spirit he had for God: Acts xvii. 22, 23, "Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious," &c.: he contended with the whole university of Athens. The Book of Martyrs tells us of Alice Driver, (a tender-hearted woman,) who said, she would set her foot against the foot of any of them all: she meant the bishops and their creatures: she had courage for God and his cause.

4. Natural tenderness is dulled by fasting, prayer, and humiliation, but spiritual tenderness is sharpened and quickened by the same. Esther, after her fasting, praying, and humbling her soul, was more sensible of the state of the Jews, and the great danger they were in, and ventured her life for them, Esth. iv. v.

5. Afflictions, crosses, are very heavy to that heart that is naturally tender, it is restless, unquiet under them; but a heart spiritually tender welcomes afflictions, receives them with joy, Heb. x. 34; and finds sin heavier than afflictions. There are some soft natures which can weep, shed tears in abundance, for loss of relations, estates, favours of great ones, yet never wept for sin; these have a natural tenderness, not a spiritual.

Besides what may be gathered from what is said, I shall,

III. Give some characters of a tender heart.

1. It is sensible of the church's and saints' afflictions, it mourns for and with them; a tender heart bleeds when it goes ill with Zion and the people of God. When the men of Ai smote but thirty-six Israelites, how was Joshua affected with it! "He rent his clothes, and fell to the earth upon his face before the ark of the Lord until the eventide," Josh. vii. 6. You may read, Psal. lxxix. lxxx. how greatly David, or Asaph, were affected with the desolation of Jerusalem, and miseries which befell the church. These were men of tender hearts, and sensible of evils at a distance. Such was Paul, 2 Cor. xiv. 20, and Jeremiah, whose eyes ran down with tears, because the Lord's flock was carried away captive, Jer. xiii. 17.

2. Where a heart hath a gracious and spiritual tenderness, it is affected with the perishing condition of others, it grieves to see men impenitent, unbelieving, going on in the broad way, to be in a state of unregeneracy, and pities them. Rom. ix. 2, 3, Paul had great heaviness, and continual sorrow in his heart, and why? for his brethren, and kinsmen according to the flesh; they rejected Christ and his gospel through unbelief and hardness of heart, they were in the broad way to destruction. Christ, seeing Jerusalem insensible of her own good, he wept over her, Luke xix. 41. And in former times Jeremiah had manifested the tenderness of his heart toward the Jews, when he said unto them thus, "Hear ye, and give ear, be not proud: for the Lord hath spoken. Give glory to the Lord your God, before he cause darkness, and before your feet stumble upon the dark mountains, and while ye look for light, he turn it into the shadow of death, and make it gross darkness. But if ye will not hear it, my soul shall weep in secret places for your pride," Jer. xiii. 15—17.

3. A tender heart dare not go out from God in any case, but commits itself and way to him, it consults with God, and leans upon him for counsel and direction. Josiah, when the law was found, and he understood from it what wrath was due to the breach of it, presently sends men to inquire of the Lord for himself and others what to do; he took counsel of God, and not of man, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 21. So Jehoshaphat, he sought not to Baalim, but to the Lord God of his fathers; and David made God's testimonies his counsellors, Psal. cxix. 24. Hard hearts dare presume and venture to go out from God, and into ways he hath not warranted; so did Gehazi, Judas, and Demas, they followed the imaginations of their own hearts, and declared that their hearts were brass. Those that have hearts of flesh say with them in Isa. ii. 3, "Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths," not in our own.

4. It is affected presently at the frowns and chidings of God, at the appearance and shaking of the rod. A child of a tender nature will melt when the parent begins to manifest displeasure, as to chide, or take the rod into his hand; but it is not so with a stubborn nature, that will hear bitter words, and endure many strokes, before it will melt: Jer. v. 3. "Thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved; thou hast consumed them, but they have refused to receive correction: they have made their faces harder than a rock; they have refused to return:" these had no tender hearts in them. When Absalom had driven David out of Jerusalem, he went up mount Olivet weeping: he was presently affected with the hand of God, 2 Sam. xv. 30. Moses was presently affected with the wrath that went out from God against the people, Numb. xvi. 46.

5. A tender heart feels much stoniness in itself, and complains of it: Oh what a stony, rocky, adamant heart have I! saith a tender-hearted man. Its tenderness discovers and feels hardness: Eph. iv. 19, they were hardened in sin, were past feeling. Where hearts are all stone, there is no sensibleness of the stoniness: those have the tenderest hearts, that feel most brass and iron in them. David cried off to God for quickening; Psal. cxix. 154, 156, 159, "Quicken me according to thy word;" "quicken me according to thy judgments;" "quicken me according to thy loving-kindness." And why did he cry so for quickening? because he felt much deadness and hardness in his heart. A dead heart is a hard heart: a man when dead is cold, still, and hard; so a man's heart, if dead within him, is cold, still, and stony.

IV. How may the heart be kept tender?

1. By taking heed of every sin, for it is only sin that hardens the heart. As the foot, by treading, hardens the earth, so when sin walks up and down in the heart, it hardens and obdures the same. Dan. v. 20, Nebuchadnezzar's mind was hardened in pride: and the apostle tells you, Heb. iii. 13, that men's hearts come to be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. Men think little sins can do them little harm; but they harden their hearts, and is that no harm? is that little harm? it is the greatest harm that can be done you.

2. By searching and examining of your hearts frequently, that is a special means to keep them tender. It is like digging of the garden, and ploughing of the earth, which keeps it from hardening; the more digging and ploughing, the more tender and crumbly is the earth, that is the chiefest way to preserve it so; and they who are ever searching their hearts, examining them daily, have them in a tender frame. David communed oft with his own heart, and his spirit made diligent search, Psal. lxxvii. 6; that kept his heart in a tender frame.

3. By studying the word much, and minding it. There is great virtue in the word, it is like fire, and will not only thaw the iciness of their hearts, but keep them unfrozen: the hardest metals, while they are in the fire, are soft: and whilst men's hearts are in the divine fire of the Scriptures, they will be soft. The word is like water and oil, which moisten and supple the heart, so that the tenderness of it is preserved.

4. By meditating seriously on God's love, the heights, depths, lengths, and breadths of his love. When a soul is taken up with thoughts of the freeness, greatness, strength, sweetness, everlastingness, and fruits of God's love, it will be in a melting frame, that fire works kindly upon the heart; love apprehended makes the heart tender.

5. Look much to Christ crucified, Zech. xii. 10. When we consider what Christ hath suffered for our sakes, it will make and keep our hearts tender. Hence

Obs. 1. A tender heart is a choice mercy. As a "stony heart" is a grievous plague, so a "heart of flesh" is a great blessing: it is sensible of sin, even secret sins, it trembles at thoughts of God, his attributes, and word, it understands divine things, it is teachable and obediential, it is compassionate and full of bowels towards all: such a heart is rare to find, but wherever it is, it is a mercy of mercies, a superlative mercy.

Obs. 2. It is a gift, even the gift of God. "I will give you an heart of flesh." None but he who can fetch water out of a rock, and turn stones into flesh, Matt. iii. 9, can give this tender heart; we can make our hearts stony by sinning, but we cannot soften them again. It is God's prerogative to make and give a "heart of flesh;" he can make the hardest heart exceeding tender. Beg such a heart of him, and press him with his promise; "for faithful is he who hath promised, who also will do it."

Ver. 27. And I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them.

In the 25th verse remission of sins was promised, in the 26th, regeneration, and in this, infusion of the Spirit is promised. In the words are,

I. The mercy promised, viz. the "spirit."

II. The parties recipient, "you."

III. The effects of this reception, "walking in," &c.

"I will put my spirit within you." By "spirit" here, I understand not the new heart or new spirit mentioned in the verse before, viz. the gifts and graces of the Spirit, but the Spirit itself; so Æcolampadius, Lavater, Junius, and Polonius: and however it be a great dispute among school-men, whether the Spirit itself be given unto men, and dwell in them; some conclude, that the person of the Spirit is not given, but dwells in us only, by his gifts imparted: yet the Scripture is clear, that the Spirit itself is given, and dwells in the sons of men. Rom. v. 5, "The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, which is given unto us." Here is a distinction made between the grace of the Spirit, and the Spirit itself: the grace of love is shed abroad in the hearts of the saints by the Spirit, and that Spirit which worketh that grace in them, is given unto them. The person of the Spirit is distinguished from the gifts and graces he works in men; 1 Cor. vi. 19, "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit in you?" a temple is not for gifts or graces, but for a person, a deity, and some special presence of that deity. The world hath God in it, yet it is not called The temple of God, because he is in a general and common manner in the same; but the Spirit is in the bodies of the saints, and that in a special manner: 1 Cor. ii. 12, "We have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God." By "spirit" here cannot be meant gifts or graces, but the person of the Spirit, "who searcheth the deep things of God," as it is ver. 10, and makes them known by degrees unto those he dwells in, discovering what God hath done for them. Rom. viii. 11, "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you:" it is the Spirit of God himself who dwells in believers, and not only the gifts and graces of the Spirit; these are in them as qualities in a subject, but he is in them as an inhabitant in a house.

The Spirit, by reason of its infiniteness, is every where, in trees, worms, flowers, waters, all creatures; is it any otherwise in the saints than in them? True, the Spirit, as to his essence, is in all things; yet,

I. It is not in them by way of union. A fish is in the water, but not united to the water: the Spirit is in the saints by way of union, therefore is said to "dwell in them," by his own gifts and graces: we are united to the Spirit, and the Spirit to us.

2. It is not in them by way of gracious operation. All he doth in other creatures, is upholding their beings, enabling them to put forth their natural power, vigour, virtue, and ordering their motions to what ends he pleaseth: he worketh nothing in them above their natures: but in those he dwells he worketh gracious effects: in those the Lord gives the Spirit unto, he worketh such operations as are not elsewhere, even such as are above nature: he is in them, by a special title, by an act of grace. A gardener worketh curious knots in the garden, which he doth not elsewhere: God made other works, and set other plants, in Paradise than in the world.

3. As the Deity of Christ is every where, in every creature, yet otherwise in Christ's human nature than in any creature. Col. ii. 9: so the Spirit, though it be every where, yet is otherwise in believers than in other creatures, it is in them as it is in Christ himself, but not in the same measure.

What doth the Spirit, being within us?

1. It unites the Lord Christ and the soul together, it makes a happy union between them two. The Corinthians were espoused to Christ, 2 Cor. xi. 2, not only by the ministry of Paul, but by the Spirit: 1 Cor. xii. 13, "By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body;" that is, the church, the body of Christ. The Spirit is the great Agent in this work.

2. The Spirit gives out divine oracles and truths unto the soul. As in the temple God gave out his mind, made known his will, so doth the Spirit in the heart of man: Matt. x. 20, the Spirit of the Father speaks in believers. 1 John ii. 20, "Ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things:" that unction is the Spirit, which makes known all needful things unto those it dwells in. It is needful to be instructed, and armed against antichrist and his seducements: it is needful to be directed in the way to heaven: they had the Spirit, which did teach them how to avoid the one, and how to proceed in the other; and so were taught of God: "and who teacheth like him?" Job xxxvi. 22. He teacheth inwardly, infallibly, powerfully.

3. It conquers and drives out the enemies that had possession of and quartered in us. There is no man the Lord puts his Spirit into, but the Spirit finds the devil there; he hath possession of men's hearts, and labours to keep the same. There are also a multitude of base and ungodly lusts which fight for the devil's interest; these the Spirit sets upon, subdues, and casts out. When Christ came into the temple, he whipped out all the money-changers: when Joshua came into Canaan, he drove out the Canaanites and other nations: and when the Spirit comes into a man, it beats down strong holds, drives out Satan and his troops; 1 John iv. 4, "Greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world." The devil had been in them before, but was now driven out of them into the world by the Spirit which was in them, and their lusts were mortified by the same Spirit. Rom. viii. 13.

4. The Spirit put into man, takes the rule and government of that man into his own hand; he must no longer be under the dominion of sin or Satan, but under the conduct of the Spirit; he, and all in him, must bow to that great Person. When a great man cometh into the country to dwell, he looks for all about him to bow unto him, and to be at his command; hence men that have stout and stubborn spirits which cannot bow use to say, We care not for a great neighbour. The Spirit is greater than all men, and when he is put into men, it is to rule; he is there not to be checked, controlled, opposed, but to bear sway, to have the keys of every room delivered up unto him: he must be, and will be, sovereign in the soul, before him every mountain and hill must be brought low, yea, every creature must swear fealty unto him. Rom. viii. 14, "They are led by the Spirit of God?" the Spirit is the commander and leader of those it dwells in, they follow him and not others; whereas those that are without the Spirit are "led away with divers lusts," 2 Tim. iii. 6; or drawn away with their own lust, James i. 14: and so follow Satan, 1 Tim. v. 15. It is not so with those that have the Spirit; that is called a guide, John xvi. 13; and such a guide, as guides into all truth, and orders them so, as that they shall not miscarry; for it is a Spirit of wisdom, Eph. i. 17: of counsel, Isa. xi. 2; of power, 2 Tim. i. 7: so that he must rule, and where he rules, he doth it wisely.

5. He frames them to his own mind, and transforms them into his own likeness. As a graft put into a stock turns the sap of the stock, and assimilates it and the stock to itself, so doth the Spirit in the parties where it is: 2 Cor. iii. 18, "We are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord," or, by the Lord the Spirit, so the Greek will bear it; we are selfish, sinful, natural, mortal, and the Spirit makes us spiritual. The husband frames the mind of his wife suitable unto his own; when a man comes into an old house, he pulls down and sets up, he takes away and adds what he pleases, and fits the house to his own mind; so doth the Spirit, being in our earthly tabernacles, it abrogates the laws of the flesh, it throws out the principles of Satan and the world, it sets up new laws, and works new principles, Rom. iii. 27; viii. 2.

6. The Spirit being put into man, and man becoming his temple, he doth beautify and adorn that temple, and make it glorious. Solomon overlaid the temple with pure gold, 1 Kings vi. 21; the inside was very glorious: and the Spirit trims up its temple with pure graces, with "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance," &c. Gal. v. 22, 23; Ephes. v. 9. The Spirit garnished the heavens with those greater and lesser lights, Job xxvi. 13, which fill this lower world with their glory. It is the Spirit which reneweth the face of the earth, Psal. civ. 30, and makes it beautiful; and it is the Spirit reneweth and garnisheth the soul, making it glorious and beautiful with all graces: Psal. xlv. 13, "The king's daughter is all glorious within;" and the Spirit's temple is no less glorious. If Solomon's temple were called "the holy and beautiful house," Isa. lxiv. 11, much more may the temple of the Spirit be so called.

7. It being in man, enables him to do many things, it strengthens him with might to do that which otherwise he could not do, Eph. iii. 16. As,

(1.) To discern between the things of men and the things of God, between the things of Christ and those of antichrist, between true and counterfeit graces. 1 Cor. ii. 15, "He that is spiritual judgeth all things:" he hath the Spirit enabling him to make a difference, and to see the reality, beauty, and excellency of some things above others. The high priests, scribes, and Pharisees, saw no beauty in Christ that they should desire him, but the apostles, who had the Spirit in them, did: John i. 14, "We beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father:" and Paul saw so much in Christ, and the knowledge of him, that he counted all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ, Phil. iii. 8.

(2.) It enables them to pray spiritually. Rom. viii. 26, "The Spirit helpeth our infirmities; for we know not what we should pray for as we ought." The Spirit tells us what to pray for, and helps us to bring forth those petitions it hath formed in us: Zech. xii. 10, it is called "the spirit of supplication," because it teaches us what to supplicate God for, and assists us in supplicating. Both Paul and Jude exhort those they write unto, to pray in the Spirit. Eph. vi. 18: Jude 20; that is, in the strength and help of the Spirit, not in their own strength.

(3.) It enables to stand in time of trouble, persecution, and sufferings. The Spirit prompts answers unto those that are questioned for truth's sake, and helps them against all their opposers: see Mark xiii. 11; Matt. x. 19, 20; Luke xii. 11, 12. When they were led before magistrates and powers, they must take no thought beforehand what to speak, nor premeditate: the Spirit should help them, encourage and uphold them, not an angel, but the Spirit. Acts vi. 10, Stephen was so mightily assisted by the Spirit, that his opposers, viz. the Libertines, Cyrenians, Alexandrians, and others, were not able to withstand him.

(4.) It enables to bring forth good fruit. If there be no sap in a vine, it will bear no fruit: if there be only our own sap, it will yield sour fruit; but if the sap of the Spirit be there, then it will afford good fruit, special fruit. Acts x. 38, "Christ, being anointed with the Holy Spirit, and with power, went about doing good;" so the apostles; Acts i. 8, "Ye shall receive power, after the Holy Spirit is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." The Spirit empowered them to walk up and down in the world, to preach the gospel, convert souls, plant churches, and to do them good; so did Paul, Rom. xv. 19. Where the Spirit is, it enables and provokes unto good, John vii. 38, 39.

(5.) The Spirit enables men to keep the word of God, and yield obedience unto it. 2 Tim. i. 14, "That good thing which was committed unto thee keep by the Holy Spirit which dwelleth in us." Timothy, saith Paul, thou hast that which is of great concernment committed to thy keeping, viz. the gospel, the form of sound words, and thou hast a great Helper to enable thee thereunto, even the Spirit of God which dwells in thee; see therefore that thou keep it by the enabling power of the Spirit, which helps not only to remember truth, but also to obey truth: for Peter assures us, that the believing Jews did obey the truth through the Spirit; that is, through the assistance of the Spirit. This is that which follows in the next words to be opened.

"And cause you to walk in my statutes." The Hebrew word for "cause" is, אניני I will make, effect, or bring to pass by the operation of that Spirit I put into you, that you shall walk in my statutes. Vatablus renders it, efficiam, which imports, influence of power. David, Psal. cxliii. 10, prays unto the Lord to teach him to do his will; and, Psal. cxix. 35, he saith, "Make me to go in the path of thy commandments:" both these the Spirit, being put into man, performs; it teaches him to do the will of God, and causes him to go in the path of his commandments.

To walk in God's statutes implies several things.

1. The making of godliness and religion our chief work in this life. Other things are to be done as inferior things, this is to be the principal, no work should be so minded as this: saith Joshua, chap. xxiv. 15, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord," that shall be our great and chief business in this world. He remembered what God had commended to him and all men: Deut. vi. 6—9, "These words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart: and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates." God would have us to be godly inwardly and outwardly, at home and abroad, night and day, and to make our families religious: and they are repeated again, Deut. xi. 18—20, that so they might take the deeper impression upon the hearts of men. David looked at this work above all others: Psal. cxix. 97, "O how I love thy law! it is my meditation all the day." To be godly and religious was his principal care: that is the one thing necessary; and Solomon hath drawn it up into this conclusion, "Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man." Eccles. xii. 13.

2. Taking delight in the ways of God. His statutes, commands, and ways are grievous to men, naturally they walk not in them. When men walk in any way, they are delighted with and in that way; so here, walking in God's statutes notes delight: Psal. cxix. 14, "I have rejoiced in the way of thy testimonies, as much as in all riches." Some rejoice in fine houses, some in fertile lands, some in great flocks, some in silver and gold; but David rejoiced in the way of God's testimonies, and as much as any of them, or all of them, in their riches; he found more sweet in them, than they in their wealth: ver. 143, "Thy commandments are my delights;" they were his chief, his satisfying, his sole and soul delights. It was meat and drink to Paul to be doing the will and work of the Lord, Acts xx. 24; as it was unto Christ, John iv. 34.

3. It imports motion and progress. They should not stand still in contemplation, nor sit still in meditation, but they should proceed and go on in the ways of God, they should get nearer their journey's end, be daily more knowing, more holy, more gracious, and godly. The Thessalonians' faith did grow exceedingly, and their charity abounded, 2 Thess. i. 3; they walked from faith to faith, and from love to love. When Paul was converted, and brought into the way of Christ, he increased in spiritual strength, Acts ix. 22; he reached forward, and pressed towards the mark, Phil. iii. 13, 14; he put on mightily for to get the knowledge of Christ, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings; he did not only walk, but ran oft, in the way of truth and godliness, 1 Cor. ix. 26.

4. Walking in God's statutes imports perseverance in them; they shall not apostatize and turn back from them, but continue in them. Of a wicked man destitute of God's Spirit, it is said, "He hath left off to be wise, and to do good," Psal. xxxvi. 3; but of a righteous man it is said, he "shall hold on in his way," Job xvii. 9. He knows he is in a safe and good way, a way that will recompense him fully at the end, whatever hardships or storms he meets withal, and therefore will neither sit still nor go back; he may be beside the way sometimes, but never turning back again.

"Ye shall keep my judgments and do them." Statutes and "judgments" are comprehensive words, and sometimes are used promiscuously, as hath formerly been showed in chap. xviii. 9; but here they may be thus differenced; statutes to signify the duties of the first table, the things of God's worship and manner of the same, whether under the law or gospel; and "judgments," the duties of the second table, matters of equity and justice between man and man.

The word for "keep" is, שמר, which imports, keeping with care and diligence; they should not keep them in their houses or memories only, but they should keep them practically, they should "do them."

Obs. 1. God's Spirit differs from all other spirits. Angels are spirits, souls of men are spirits, but these are below God's Spirit. "I will put my Spirit," God's Spirit is a Spirit of holiness, Rom. i. 4; the power of the Highest, Luke i. 35; a Spirit of truth guiding into all truth, John xvi. 13; a spirit of grace, Zech. xii. 10; the oil of gladness, Heb. i. 9; the Comforter, John xiv. 16; a spirit of glory, 1 Pet. iv. 14; a Spirit, that is the Lord, Isa. xi. 2; רוח יהוה The Spirit of Jehovah, shall rest upon him. Whatever excellences may be in souls or angels, they are infinitely short of that that is in the Spirit of God; Psal. cxliii. 10, "Thy Spirit is good;" that is, Thy Spirit, O Lord, is transcendently good. My own spirit is naught, and all other spirits are nothing compared with thy Spirit; that, and that only, is good, good originally, good transcendently, good infinitely.

Obs. 2. The putting in of the Spirit into the sons of men, is a free act of God. He doth it not upon the account of the covenant of works, but by virtue of the covenant of grace. This verse is a branch of the covenant of grace, and agrees with that in Jer. xxxi. 33, "I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts;" that God doth, when he puts in his Spirit; 2 Cor. iii. 3, for the Spirit being within, writes divine truths in the heart. Adam had the law written in his heart by the Spirit, but not as it is written by the Spirit in the hearts of believers, who are under the new covenant: the Spirit wrote the law in Adam's heart as concreator with the Father and the Son, not by virtue of any covenant; but believers receive the Spirit, and have the law written in them, by virtue of covenant. God hath covenanted to put his Spirit in them, and they have the Spirit from Christ and the Father. Christ purchased of the Father the mission of the Spirit, therefore saith, he will send the Comforter unto them, John xvi. 7; and that he will pray the Father, and he shall send the Comforter unto them, John xiv. 16; so that believers now have the Spirit from God, as a Father in Christ, from Christ, as Head of the church, and both these by virtue of the new covenant. Adam had not the Spirit so; and for those that had the Spirit under the law, (for some had it, as you may see, Psal. li. 11; Neh. ix. 20; Numb. xxvii. 18; Hag. ii. 5.) they had it not by virtue of the covenant of works, "Do this, and live;" for none were able to keep the law, but by virtue of the covenant of grace. There was gospel in the law, yea, the whole ceremonial law was so. The apostle tells us that the Galatians received not the Spirit by the works of the law, but by the hearing of faith, Gal. iii. 2; and look how the gentiles received the blessing of Abraham, viz. the Spirit, which was through faith, and through Christ, ver. 14; so did the Jews likewise.

Neither Jews nor gentiles do bring any preparations or qualifications towards the reception of the Spirit: God gives his Spirit freely where there are no such things. When men are in a state of sin and wickedness, the Spirit is put in; first it is there, and then it works grace; before they have new hearts, new spirits, the stone be taken out of the heart, and there be a "heart of flesh," the Spirit is put in and acts: he finds not qualifications or dispositions, but brings them, works them. The bees, when they (come to the hive, find no wax, no honey there, but they bring the wax and honey; so the Spirit, when it comes to men's hearts, it finds no wax, no honey, no graces nor gracious dispositions there, but brings them: when the Spirit comes to regenerate and sanctify, it finds nothing in men but darkness, unbelief, unholiness, and enmity, by which it is no more defiled than an angel by coming into the world, which lies in wickedness, or the sun shining upon a dunghill; but when it comes to be an inhabitant, a Comforter, a Spirit of glory to rest upon a man, then it finds the heart prepared, and made meet for its entertainment and abode.

Obs. 3. The gift of the Spirit is a great and excellent gift. "I will put," or give, "my spirit within you." The greatness and excellency of it appears in these following particulars:

(1.) It is the person of the Spirit which is a fundamental mercy, and more considerable than all his gifts and graces, which flow from him: the tree is better than all the fruit, the sun is of more worth than all his beams.

(2.) It is the procreator of all grace in the soul. Gal. v. 22, "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, faith." Take but those four graces, and see how they are exalted: faith is styled precious, 2 Pet. i. 1; peace is said to pass all understanding, Phil. iv. 7; joy to be glorious and unspeakable, 1 Pet. i. 8; and love is magnified by Paul above all gifts and other graces, 1 Cor. xiii. What a gift, then, is the Spirit, which is the parent, not only of these, but of all graces and all gifts! Eph. v. 9, "The fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness."

(3.) It is the conservator of all grace and good things in us. As God conserves the world, which is his creature, so the Spirit conserves grace, which is its creature: the Spirit, as it gives being to all graces, so it preserves them in their beings and operations. It is the Spirit which mortifies lusts, Rom. viii. 13; and it is the Spirit maintains graces. John iii. 6, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh: and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." As flesh brings forth flesh, so it maintains the same, and as the Spirit brings forth spirit, so it maintains the same; each maintains their own offsprings. The Spirit is the nurse of all those graces it hath brought forth in the heart of any: 2 Cor. iv. 13, it is called "the Spirit of faith," not only because it creates faith in the heart, but keeps it there. So it is called "the spirit of grace," Zech. xii. 10, not only because it works grace in men, but also because it keeps grace in them: hence those who are after the Spirit, are said to mind the things of the Spirit: their graces are maintained by the provision of the Spirit.

(4.) The Spirit is he who actuates and consummates our graces. The Spirit doth not content itself to beget and preserve graces in men's hearts, but improves and perfects them: we and our graces would act very poorly, did not the Spirit assist us. John xv. 5, "Without me, saith Christ, ye can do nothing;" that is, without my Spirit concur with your graces, and actuate them, "ye can do nothing." The mill may have all things fit for motion, the sails may be spread, but if the wind blow not the mill goes not; so a man may, through grace, be prepared and fitted to every good work, but if the Spirit blow not he moves not. John vi. 63, "It is the Spirit that quickens;" it quickens us and our graces also. 2 Cor. iii. 6, "The Spirit giveth life;" life to men's persons, and life to their graces: it is the Spirit makes lively, and sets grace to work. It is the sun and influences of heaven which draw up the sap, and make the tree grow; and it is the Spirit and its influences which draw out our graces into act, they lie still unless fresh blasts of the Spirit come upon us and them. And as the Spirit acts our graces, so it perfects them, it adds supplies unto them, Phil. i. 19; and changes us into further glory day by day, 2 Cor. iii. 18. And what is said of Christ, Heb. xii. 2, that he is "the author and finisher of our faith," the same Christ doth by his Spirit, and so the Spirit is the author and finisher of all our graces.

(5.) The Spirit is a great and excellent gift, in that it doth facilitate, sweeten, and make delightful unto us all the ways of God. They are hard and harsh to flesh and blood, as to deny a man's self, to pass by wrongs, to forgive enemies, to bear the cross cheerfully, &c.; these are things corrupt nature cannot digest; but where the Spirit is given, they become easy: the Spirit is the oil of gladness, and makes the soul cheerfully fall in with whatever is of God. When a child hath the father to go before, and lead it by the hand, though the way be stony, dirty, uphill, it goes willingly; so the soul that hath the Spirit to lead it, let the way be what it will, followeth willingly. Psal. cxix. 32, "I will run the way of thy commandments when thou shalt enlarge my heart." The Spirit doth enlarge the heart; 2 Cor. iii. 17, where that is there is liberty. Let the Lord command things hard, David will run to do them; they are suitable to the Spirit, and the work of the Spirit in the heart.

(6.) The Spirit is an excellent gift, in that it makes them excellent who have it. Dan. v. 10, 11, saith the queen to Belshazzar, "There is a man in thy kingdom, in whom is the spirit of the holy gods," he is an excellent man, none like him in all thy provinces, he hath the spirit of the gods in him, which others have not. Where the Spirit of God is put into a man, that man is an excellent man; he hath an excellent person in him, more excellent than his soul, than all souls, than all angels; he hath excellent graces, and is honourable above others. 1 Sam. ix. 6, "There is in this city a man of God, and he is an honourable man," said Saul's servant; so every one that hath the Spirit, be he in the city or out of it, is a man of God, and an honourable man.

Obs. 4. There is a union between the saints and the Spirit of God. "I will put my spirit within you." It is not said, I will put my Spirit upon you, but "within you;" so that by virtue of those graces it works in you, there shall be a union between you and my Spirit. This union is not such as is between the three John speaks of, 1 John v. 7, for they are one essentially; nor such as is between the Deity and Christ's human nature, Col. ii. 9, for that is personal; but it is a mystical union, a union of persons, not a personal union. It is,

(1.) Real. There is a true oneness between the Spirit and those it is put into: 1 Cor. vi. 17, "He that is joined unto the Lord is one Spirit;" he saith not, is one body, or, one soul, or, hath one spirit with the Lord, but "is one Spirit;" there is as real a union as is between soul and body, he is so one with the Spirit as he is denominated spirit: John iii. 6, "That which is born of the Spirit is spirit."

(2.) It is a wonderful union. The Spirit of God, who is one with the Father and the Son, to be one also with man, and not with one man, but all he is put into, even thousands of men, is wonderful. John tells us, it was a great wonder to see a woman clothed with the sun, Rev. xii. 1; but it is a greater wonder to see a man or woman united to the Spirit of God, which is in our souls and bodies, the faculties and members of them, as the sap is in the root, vine, and branches; and here is the wonder, the same sap to be in every one of these, and in all other vines.

(3.) It is a most glorious union. When the Lord came into the temple, it was filled with glory, 1 Kings viii. 11; and when the Spirit is put into a man, and the union made between them, the man is filled with glory. When the sun shines into a house, it fills it with glory; when the fire is in the iron, how glorious is it! the union between the fire and the iron makes the iron a thick, dark, solid body, as glorious as the fire itself.

(4.) It is a strong and intimate union, which cannot be dissolved: "I will put my spirit within you," that is, into their inward parts. The Spirit is deeply seated, and strongly united unto these it is in. 2 Cor. vi. 16, "I will dwell in them." The Greek is, I will indwell in them; there is such an indwelling of God's Spirit in the hearts of his, that he will neither leave, nor be thrust out of his habitation. John xiv. 16, "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever." I am leaving you, saith Christ, but when I am gone, I will intercede with the Father for you, and he shall send the Spirit, the great Comforter; and he shall never leave you, he shall abide with you for ever, none shall be able to dispossess or drive him out of you.

Object. But both these seem contrary to Scripture: 1 Sam. xvi. 14, "The spirit of the Lord departed from Saul;" and David did drive away the Spirit, when he committed his great sins of murder and adultery.

Answer. 1. Wicked men have the Spirit from God as a Lord, by virtue of the covenant of works, and so sinning the Spirit departs from them. Thus was it with Saul, he rebelled against God, vexed his Spirit, and so that left him; but David, who was a godly man, had the Spirit from God as a Father in Christ, by virtue of the covenant of grace; and so though the Spirit were grieved by his sins, it did not depart from him; for, Psal. li. 11, he prays unto the Lord, saying, "Take not thy holy spirit from me." Had it been gone, the tenor of his prayer had been for restitution, not against ablation of it.

Answer. 2. The Spirit which departed from Saul was the Spirit of prophecy, and those kingly endowments which he had received, 1 Sam. x. 6; they ceased. The Spirit is oft put for the gifts of the Spirit, and they do oftentimes fail in men.

Answer. 3. All men have the spirit of bondage to fear, but all have not the Spirit of adoption to cry, Abba, Father; whosoever have the same, it abides with them.

Obs. 5. That before the Spirit of God be put into men, they are without life or motion towards God, or spiritual things; they live not to God, they walk not in his statutes; they live to themselves, to the flesh, to the creatures, and wander from God and his ways. Naturally men are destitute of the Spirit, sensual, as Jude tells you, ver. 19, "Sensual, not having the Spirit." Those that have not the Spirit, at the best are but sensual or merely intellectual men; and those who had the best souls, most reason, understanding, knew not God, Acts xvii. 23; 1 Cor. i. 24. David tells us, Psal. xiv. 2, 3, that God looked down from heaven upon the children of men, that is, Jews and gentiles, to see if there were any that did understand, and seek God, that is, whether any did so know God as to set them at work to seek him, as being the highest good, beyond all creature excellency. But what was the issue of God's so looking upon men? "They are all gone aside," that is, from him and his ways; "they are altogether become filthy," their practices are such as make them stink; "there is none that doth good, no not one;" of so many millions of men as are upon the earth, there is not one doth good. There were men of excellent parts then in the world, men of soul, but not one of them did know God, or seek after God; Paul therefore hath laid it down for a universal maxim, That the animal, natural, or intellectual man, receives not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; whilst he is without the Spirit of God, they are no better than foolishness unto him, and so are rejected by him.

Obs. 6. The principle of spiritual life and motion is the Spirit of God. "I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk." Immediately upon the putting in of the Spirit into the heart of any, there is life and motion; men live and move spiritually. Some make grace the principle of life and motion, but all grace flows from the Spirit, Gal. v. 22, 23; Eph. v. 9; and why should grace have that honour which is due to the Spirit? It was the entrance of the Spirit which quickened the dead bodies of the witnesses, and caused them to move, Rev. xi. 11; and it is the entrance of the Spirit which quickens dead souls, and causes them to move. We must beware of an error here, which hath seized upon divers of late, viz. that because the Spirit is in us, and the principle of life and motion, that therefore the Spirit doth all; Matt. x. 20, "It is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you;" so it is not you that do, but the Spirit in you; and if the Spirit speak and do all, we must sit still and leave ourselves to the Spirit's motions and actings. This is a dangerous error: know therefore, that though the Spirit be in men, and the principle of life and motion, yet it doth not act or work without us: in the putting in of the Spirit we are passive, John iii. 6; we concur no more to our birth than a child doth to its generation; but when the Spirit is in us and hath quickened us, then there is the co-operation of man with the Spirit; Rom. viii. 16, the Spirit beareth witness to our spirit; ver. 26, it helpeth our infirmities: the Spirit acts us, and we co-act with it. If the Spirit did all, then the Spirit should repent, believe, and not man; but what cause hath the Spirit to repent or believe? it never sinned, it stands not in need of help or mercy. That place, Matt. x. 20, is not absolutely to be taken, that they did not speak, for so it should be false; Luke xii. 12, "The Holy Spirit shall teach you in the same hour what ye ought to say:" they spake, and the Spirit taught them to speak. The place is to be taken comparatively, not you, but the Spirit; that is, it is rather the Spirit than you, the Spirit is the principle which sets you on. For men to sit still, and leave all to the Spirit, is a grieving of the Spirit, and contradicts what the Spirit hath given out: Matt. vii. 7, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and you shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." The Spirit would have us use means, and doth most vigorously assist us when we are most diligent in the use of them, Prov. ii. 3—5; 2 Chron. xv. 2.

Quest. If the Spirit be put into us, dwell in us, and be the principle of life and motion, what need the soul look unto Christ for fresh or further supply?

Answer. 1. It is granted there is a sufficiency and fulness in the Spirit, yet because it is the will of God that we should look unto Christ, we are bound to do it: Heb. xiii. 2, "Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith;" 2 Tim. ii. 1, "Be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus;" and Paul himself, 2 Cor. xii. 8, 9, looked up to Christ for more help, notwithstanding he had a fulness of the Spirit within him, Acts xiii. 9.

Answer. 2. The Spirit is not the head of the body, though it be in the body; that honour is Christ's: Col. i. 18, "He is the Head of the body, the church;"

and from it the whole body receiveth influence, Eph. iv. 15, 16; Col. ii. 19. It is requisite, therefore, that every member in the body should look up to the head.

Obs. 7. God first makes men good, and then they do good; first he puts his Spirit into them, and then they walk in his ways. It is said of God himself, he is good, and doth good, Psal. cxix. 68; he is first good, and then good comes from him. So God makes men good by the infusion of his Spirit, and then they bring forth spiritual fruit: Eph. ii. 10, "We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works." Since man's fall, amongst all the sons of men God finds none good: Rom. iii. 10, "There is none righteous, no not one;" if any be so, he is πίσμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, the workmanship of God; God hath made him so by his Spirit, he hath made him a new creature, and so fitted him for good works. The tree must first be good, before the fruit be good: amongst men good actions are first done, and then men are reputed good; but with God it is otherwise, he makes men first good, and then they do good actions: they do not make themselves good by their free will, by frequent acts of good, but God puts in his Spirit, towards which they contribute nothing, and thereby they are made good, and act answerably; then their actions have life in them, worth in them, and are suitable to God, who is a Spirit, and must be worshipped in spirit and truth. Let men look heedfully to themselves, and not stand upon their actions; men may do many actions outwardly glorious, and magnified by men, themselves being corrupt and naught. If men have not the Spirit of God in them, their actions are no better than corrupt fruit of a corrupt tree, they do not please God: "and if any have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his;" he is neither good, nor doth good.

Obs. 8. In what heart soever the Spirit dwells, there will be outward and visible manifestations of it. Grace within will appear without. "I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, to keep my judgments, and to do them." The Spirit is like the sun in the firmament, which cannot be hid long, though it may be clouded for a season. The cough, and grace, are of such natures as will not be concealed; and the Spirit is of that nature, as it will discover itself in the man it is within, causing him to change his courses, and to walk in other ways than ever he walked in. When the Spirit is put into a swearer, a liar, an unclean person, an extortioner, a bloody persecutor, it makes the swearer fear an oath, the liar speak truth from his heart, the unclean man to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour, the extortioner to make satisfaction, and give half of his goods to the poor, and the bloody persecutor to love and preach the gospel he persecuted, so demonstrating itself to be in them. The Spirit in Scripture is compared to fire, Matt. iii. 11; to a mighty wind, Acts ii. 2; to a fountain or spring, John vii. 38, 39; to an ointment, I John ii. 27; to the oil of gladness, Psal. xlv. 7. All which things will be seen, heard, and set out the Spirit's manifestation of itself. The Spirit is an active thing, and makes its inbeing known by men's outward actions, as the inbeing of the soul is by speaking and walking; the sap keeps not always in the root, but ascends, disperseth itself into every branch, and by leaves, blossoms, and fruit, declares the life and nature of the tree. Many whose lives do testify what they are, cleave their own souls with this delusion, they have honest hearts, and are inwardly good, though they be not so gracious and holy outwardly as others; yea, though corruptions do break out sometimes, inwardly they are good. But let such know it is impossible there should be grace, Christ, or the Spirit within them, and these not appear in their tongues and lives; for out of the abundance of the heart the tongue speaks, and the hand acts: the corruption that breaks out testifies there is a corrupt, graceless, Christless, and spiritless heart within.

Obs. 9. When men have received the Spirit of God, they are assisted and enabled by it to proceed and persevere in the ways of God. "I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments." As the stoniness of their hearts, and power of their wills, could not hinder God from putting in his Spirit; so the stoniness being removed, the liberty or power of the will cannot hinder the Spirit from carrying on the men in whom it is in the ways of God, it complies and co-operates with the Spirit therein. Man's will, after the Spirit's infusion and work upon it, neither doth, nor can, hinder his proceeding and persevering in the ways of God; for if so, man's will should frustrate the promise of God, and make him in one part of it unfaithful; for he that said, "I will put my Spirit within you," said also, "I will cause you to walk in my statutes, to keep my judgments and do them:" he saith not, If man will it shall be so, but, I will have it so. The Spirit of God is stronger than Satan, 1 John iv. 4: stronger than men's wills and corruptions; and will put forth his strength to maintain the truth and faithfulness of him who put him within men for that end, that he should assist them against whatever should hinder their progress and perseverance in his ways. The Spirit writes the law of God in the hearts of men, 2 Cor. iii. 3; teaches them to understand the same, 1 John ii. 27; and enables them to obey all truth; 1 Pet. i. 22, they obeyed the truth through the Spirit; that caused them to walk in the way of truth, notwithstanding Satan's temptations, the strength of their own corruptions, and liberty of their wills. Those that have the Spirit are led by it, and cannot be under the dominion of sin or Satan, Rom. vi. 14. They are under grace, under the conduct of the Spirit, which will never let them apostatize and perish, 1 John iii. 9. There is a seed in them which will never suffer them so to degenerate, as to become the seed of the serpent.

Obs. 10. Those that have the Spirit in them, do make godliness and the ways of God their business and delight here in this world. They walk in his statutes, that is their work, trade, recreation; no business lies more upon them than to be godly. The world they are dead unto it, Gal. vi. 14, and use it as if they used it not, 1 Cor. vii. 29—31; and sin they are dead unto, they have nothing to do with the unfruitful works of darkness, Eph. v. 11; but they are alive unto God, Rom. vi. 11; they spend their time and strength for him, they live to his praise and glory. So Paul, Phil. i. 21, saith, "To me to live is Christ;" my life is employed and laid out in the service and interest of Christ. Those that have the Spirit in them, live in the Spirit, and walk in the Spirit, according to Gal. v. 25; they show forth the virtues of him that hath put in the Spirit within them, and the virtues of the Spirit being within them. David had the Spirit of God within him, and he made godliness his principal business, and the statutes of God his delight: Psal. cxix. 164. "Seven times a day do I praise thee;" ver. 62. "At midnight will I rise to give thanks unto thee;" ver. 97. God's law was his "meditation all the day;" Psal. lxxi. 15. "My mouth shall show forth thy righteousness and salvation all the day;" Psal. xxv. 5. "On thee do I wait all the day;" Psal. lxxxiv. 10. "A day in thy courts is better than a thousand. I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God, than dwell in the tents of wickedness;" Psal. xxvii. 4. "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that I will seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple." Where is a king, where is a christian, that mindeth godliness as David did, or delights in the ways of God as he did? May it not be taken up for a lamentation, that most christians declare, that neither Christ nor the Spirit is in them, because they neither seek the things of the one, nor savour the things of the other? Phil. ii. 21; Rom. viii. 5.

Obs. 11. A man endowed with the Spirit, must walk in God's statutes, and in his only. "I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes:" they must not worship God any other way than he hath appointed in his word. Inward and outward worship must be appointed by God; for who knows what will please God but himself? he is a glorious and holy Spirit, infinitely and only wise, and that only must we stick unto as pleasing unto him which himself appoints. Men's inventions and appointments in worship defile men's souls, and provoke Divine Majesty; a godly man therefore is very tender in point of worship, and will practise nothing therein but what he hath found a clear foundation for out of the word of God. He knows that when Nadab and Abihn brought strange fire before God, it brought a strange judgment upon them from God, Lev. x. 1, 2; he knows that all worship after the commandments and traditions of men is in vain, Matt. xv. 9; he knows no coin is current in the court of heaven, but that which hath the image and superscription of God himself upon it; he knows what God hath said, Ezek. xx. 18, 19, "Walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers, neither observe their judgments, nor defile yourselves with their idols: I am the Lord your God; walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them." He knows that "to fear God, and keep his commandments, is the whole duty of man," Eccles. xii. 13.

Obs. 12. That man that hath the Spirit of God, is for righteousness as well as holiness. He is a second table man, as well as a first table man; he is conscientious towards man, as well as towards God; he keeps the judgments set between man and man, as well as walks in the statutes which are between God and man; as, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself;" Rom. xiii. 9; not to defraud thy brother in any matter, 1 Thess. iv. 6; to do to others as we would be done unto ourselves, Luke vi. 31; to condescend to those of low estate, to recompense to no man evil for evil, but to overcome evil with good, Rom. xii. 16, 17, 21; blessing them that curse you, and praying for them that despitefully use you, Matt. v. 44; to forbear and forgive one another, Col. iii. 13; to bear one another's burdens, Gal. vi. 2; every man to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour, 1 Thess. iv. 4; to speak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, but gentle, showing all meekness unto all men, Tit. iii. 2; to put away all bitterness, wrath, anger, clamour, and evil speaking, with all malice, and to be kind and tender-hearted one to another, Eph. v. 31, 32; not to lie, but speak the truth every man with his neighbour, ver. 25; to distribute to the necessities of saints, Rom. xii. 13; to lend, looking for nothing again, Luke vi. 35, &c. These are judgments God hath set in his infinite wisdom between man and man; and whosoever hath the Spirit of God dwelling in him, keeps these and many other mentioned in sacred writ. David had respect to all the commandments of the Lord, Psal. cxix. 6; those which concerned men, as well as those which concerned God, for they are all of equal authority, being from the same God, and branches of his infinite wisdom; the one tending to man's good, and God's glory, as well as the other, which David knew, and therefore kept. So Paul, his care was not only to mind the duties of holiness towards God, but those of righteousness towards men; Acts xxiv. 16, "Herein," saith he, "do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men." Had he not kept the judgments set of God between man and man, his conscience had not been innocent; but because he did keep them, therefore he could say, Acts xxv. 10, "To the Jews have I done no wrong;" and to the Corinthian gentiles, "We have wronged no man, we have corrupted no man, we have defrauded no man," 2 Cor. vii. 2. He had the Spirit within him, which carried him forth strongly to do just, righteous, and equal things, and to move others thereunto: Phil. iv. 8, "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." He wrote these words unto the Philippians as his last words, that so they might take the deeper impression in them, knowing that if second table duties were not done, first table duties would be in vain. See how the Lord with indignation takes up the Jews for failing in their duties towards men, though they did their duty towards him: Jer. vii. 6, 9, 10, "Will ye oppress the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow? will ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and come and stand before me in this house? What! do you come hither for to pray, to hear the law, to offer sacrifice, and think I am pleased with these duties? No, no; I will destroy the temple where ye worship, and I will cast ye out of my sight as I have done all your brethren, even the whole seed of Ephraim, ver. 14, 15. It is in vain to be religious, if we be not righteous: such religion is a dreadful provocation of God, as you may read, Isa. i. 10—17. "Many are religious in these days, but where is a righteous man? "He that doth righteousness," just and equal things, "is righteous," 1 John iii. 7. Let us learn, as to walk in God's statutes, that is to be religious, so to keep his judgments and do them, that is to be righteous; for of the three great things which God requires of man, this is the first: Micah vi. 8, "What doth the Lord require of thee, O man, but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"

Ver. 28. And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God.

This verse comprehends in it both temporal and spiritual mercy, as repossession of their land, and God's renovation of covenant with them.

"And ye shall dwell in the land which I gave to your fathers." God had long before this time given Canaan unto Abraham and his posterity, who through their sins were driven out of the same, and made captives in Babylon, but he would bring them back again and set them in it, which resembled God's gathering of his people out of all nations, and bringing them into the church of Christ, the city of God, the spiritual Canaan.

"And ye shall be my people, and I will be your God." Like words to these we had, Ezek. xi. 20; xiv. 11; xxxiv. 31; and therefore shall not stand upon them. The sense of them is this: You being in Babylon, think yourselves cast off of God, and that ye shall never again have the honour to be his people, and to have him for your God; but your thoughts are not as mine, for ye shall come again to Canaan, and there I will own you for my people, and ye shall own me for your God: ye shall be my people to worship me, and I will be your God to bless you; ye shall be my people to depend upon me, and I will be your God to protect you; ye shall be my people to obey my commands and do my will, and I will be your God to exalt and honour you; ye shall be my people to love, fear, honour me, and to stand for me and my glory, and I will be your God to counsel, comfort, delight in, and to deliver you, and to plead your cause against all your enemies.

Obs. 1. There is nothing difficult or impossible to God, though it be so in the eye of man. The Jews thought it a hard, if not a thing impossible, for them to get from under the Babylonish yoke into their own country; but God thought not so; saith he, "Ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers;" I will break off every yoke which hinders, and remove every mountain which lets. And this he did with ease, for he did but stir the heart of Cyrus king of Persia to make a proclamation to this purpose, That whoever among the Jews had a heart to go up to Jerusalem, might do it, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 22, 23, and it was done. The getting Peter out of prison seemed a thing impossible; he was in two chains, between two soldiers, keepers at the door, a first and second ward after these to pass by, and then an iron gate to open: all these things were as nothing to God; he sent an angel, who brought Peter out of prison, notwithstanding all these difficulties, and, as to men, impossibilities, Acts xii. God saith, Jer. xxxii. 27, "I am the Lord, the God of all flesh: is there any thing too hard for me?" Many things are too hard for you, but is there any thing in heaven or earth too hard for me? What! cannot I bring the Jews again to Canaan? ver. 37, "I will gather them out of all countries, whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in my fury, and in great wrath; and I will bring them again unto this place," viz. to Jerusalem.

Obs. 2. Lands are at the disposal of God. "Ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers." Canaan God first gave to the Canaanites: for their iniquities God took it away, and gave it to the Jews; they provoking God by their idolatries and oppressions, he took it from them and gave it to the Chaldeans; who having possessed it for some years, he took it from them, and restored it again to the Jews. Not only the land of Canaan was disposed of by the Lord, but all lands and nations are his, and given to whom he pleases: Jer. x. 7, he is "King of nations;" he rules in the kingdoms of men, and gives them to whom he will, Dan. iv. 32. All kings are God's copyholders, and he can turn them out of their tenures at pleasure: Jer. xxvii. 5, 6, "I have made the earth and given it unto whom it seemed meet unto me; and now have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon." He turned out the king of Moab, the king of Edom, the king of the Ammonites, the king of Tyre, the king of Zidon, and gave all their lands into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar.

Obs. 3. No condition of God's people is so grievous, but it shall have a comfortable issue. That the Jews were in captivity, deprived of all those sweet enjoyments they had in the land of Canaan, was grievous; that they were amongst idolaters, blasphemers, in a polluted land, and made to serve the enemies of God, this was exceeding grievous unto them; yet this condition was not to last always, it should have a comfortable end, they should return and dwell in the land of their fathers, and enjoy their ancient, honourable, and comfortable privileges. In the apostles' days the church was under great persecution and many suffered, Acts viii. and ix.: but the persecution and suffering of the saints had an end, yea, a comfortable end; for, chap. ix. 31, it is said, "Then had the churches rest throughout all Judæa and Galilee and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied." Here was a blessed conclusion of a sad persecution; this blustering winter had a sweet spring following of it.

Obs. 4. It is an act of grace in God to take any people to be his, and a renewed act of grace to fall in again with those that have revolted from him and he hath cast off. What was in this people of the Jews at first to move him to mind them, to take them for his people? they had that enough in them, and as all other nations have, to make him abhor them, but nothing to incline his heart towards them, Ezek. xvi. 5, 6, 8, When thy person was loathed, and thou wast polluted in thy blood, I said unto thee, Live; I entered into covenant with thee, and thou becamest mine. Here was an act of grace: it was God's pleasure made them his people, 1 Sam. xii. 22, and nothing else; and when they had forsaken God, Jer. ii. 13, and he had cast them out of his sight, Jer. vii. 15, which was done when they were cast into Babylon, to fall in again with these, to own them for his people, and to become their God again, this was a renewed act of grace, height of mercy, strength of love. God might have said, Ye are weary of me, and I am weary of you; I know your thoughts and what comes into your mind, that you would be as the heathen, as the families of the country, to serve wood and stone, Ezek. xx. 32; but God would not suffer it, he would bring them out of Babylon, be their God, and take them to be his people; which sets out the freeness and fulness of divine grace: he would not let his people become heathenish, and worship heathen gods.

Obs. 5. All nations have not an equal interest in God, his favour and grace is not alike dispensed unto all. God said not to the Babylonians, "Ye shall be my people, and I will be your God." This was spoken to the Jews, and to no other nation: therefore saith God of that nation, Amos iii. 2, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth," you have I taken into nearer relation than any other; you have I known by way of covenant, you have I known so as to record my name among you, and to dwell among you; but so I have not dealt with other nations: they were "without God in the world," Eph. ii. 12; they were "far off" (ver. 13) from God, from the means of grace and salvation. The gentiles had not such interest in God as the Jews had; they had common favour as they were his creatures under the covenant of works, these had special favour as they were his people under the covenant of grace. Isa. xliii. 3, "I am the Lord thy God, the Holy One of Israel, thy Saviour; I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee." God exposed them to destruction for the safety of the Jews.

Obs. 6. That people is honoured and happy, whom the Lord owns to be his, and vouchsafeth to be their God. "Ye shall be my people, and I will be your God." What greater honour could the Jews have in the world, than be taken by the infinite, holy, great, and glorious God, to be his people? It is a great honour when poor beggarly people are taken into great men's and princes' services; much more is it so when a sinful nation is taken in by God to be his people. And not only is it an honour, but a happiness: Psal. cxliv. 15, "Happy is that people whose God is the Lord." Is not that people happy which have peace, and plenty of all good things? Yes, it is a human, a conceived happiness, but it is not a real, a true happiness; that lieth in having God our God, our Lord: propriety in a Deity makes a nation or person happy; Psal. xxxiii. 12, "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord; and the people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance." David, who was a prophet, and a man after God's own heart, fixeth not happiness upon riches, honours, peace, parts, multitudes of soldiers, subjects, or counsellors; but in mutual relation between God and a people, the one owning the other. When God owns a people to be his inheritance, and a people own God to be their God and portion, this is true happiness; such a people may plead with God for great things in prayer, and expect them, as Jehoshaphat did, 2 Chron. xx. 12; and as Asa did, 2 Chron. xiv. 11; and Moses, Exod. xxxii. 11—14.

Ver. 29, 30. I will also save you from all your uncleannesses: and I will call for the corn, and will increase it, and lay no famine upon you. And I will multiply the fruit of the tree, and the increase of the field, that ye shall receive no more reproach of famine among the heathen.

These two verses hold out two more great promises unto this people; which are,

I. Ablation of evils, as "uncleannesses, famine, reproach."

II. Collation of good things, "corn, fruit, and increase of the field."

Ver. 29. "I will also save you from all your uncleannesses." This is a special promise, and of great concernment. Some refer it to justification, and make it to be God's free taking away the guilt and punishments deserved by their uncleannesses. Some refer it to sanctification, and make it to be God's cleansing them from the filth and delivering them from the power of sin. They are mistaken who interpret the words of Babylonish uncleannesses, as if God would deliver them out of Babylon, and save them from the pollutions thereof; if that had been the sense, the words should have run thus, I will save you from all their uncleannesses, not, "from all your uncleannesses." To let that exposition pass, we may take in here both their justification and sanctification, and so make the sense full; I will save you from all your uncleannesses by my pardoning grace, that shall acquit you from the guilt and punishment of all your sins; and I will save you from all your uncleannesses by my sanctifying grace, that shall purge out all your defilements and spots. The word for "uncleannesses" is, טמאִוּת which notes not only ceremonial uncleanness, but moral also, as Lev. xviii. 27.

"I will call for the corn, and will increase it." The Hebrew is, I will call to the corn, I will command the corn to grow and bring forth; I will give but a word of power, and as that hath caused all things to be and bring forth, so shall it do with the corn, and not only cause it to grow, but to increase, so that there shall be plenty, and plenty continued; for it follows, "And lay no famine upon you." The Jews had oft been under grievous famines, as appears, 2 Sam. xxi. 1; 2 Kings vi. 1; 1 Kings xviii. 1; Joel i.; Amos iv. 6; 2 Kings xxv. 3. The Lord called for and hid famines upon them; but here he promises not to lay any famine upon them; they should be freed from that judgment, and live in the abundance of good things.

Ver. 30. "And I will multiply the fruit of the tree." Not only should the corn thrive and bring forth, but the trees also they should be fruitful, yea, very fruitful; God would multiply the fruit of all the trees which used to bear fruit. Some trees are for ornament of the earth, some for timber, some for fire, but most for fruit, and those that were for fruit should bear fruit in abundance.

"The increase of the field." These words are spoken of those things which do grow of themselves without setting, sowing, or planting, they are properly the increase of the field.

"That ye shall receive no more reproach of famine among the heathen." The heathens took occasion from the famines the Jews met with, to reproach them, and say, What! do you want bread? is your God the chiefest and best of gods, and will he see you want? is he hard-hearted, and will not afford you necessities to live? Surely our gods are better and more merciful than the God of the Jews; they suffer us not to want any thing, we have no such famines as you Jews have; you are hunger-starved wretches, and beholden to us for bread. These were grievous reproaches, which the Lord promised here to take away by giving unto them plenty of all things for their maintenance. They had upbraided the Jews, ver. 13, that their land was a land which devoured men; God therefore now told them, their land should bring forth corn, fruit, and other good things, and so maintain the inhabitants of it.

Obs. 1. When God enters into or renews covenant with a people, he will do much for them. "I will be your God; I will also save you from all your uncleannesses; and I will call for the corn, and increase it, and lay no famine upon you, and I will multiply the fruit of the tree," &c. Here God renewed covenant with them, and promised them spiritual and temporal mercies, which in due time he gave them in. So when he first entered into covenant with them, Ezek. xvi. 8—14, what great things did God do for them! "Then washed I thee with water, yea, I thoroughly washed away thy blood from thee, and anointed thee with oil; I clothed thee also with brodered work, and shod thee with badgers' skin, and I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with silk," &c. When God is once engaged to a people, he doth much for them, and great things, he lays out himself and his attributes for their good.

Obs. 2. God is a perfect Saviour. "I will save you from all your uncleannesses." They had many and variety of uncleannesses, ceremonial and moral impurities, inward and outward pollutions; they had much guilt and much filth, but God saved them from them all; he doth perfectly justify, and will perfectly sanctify in due time: there is not one inherent corruption within, cleave it never so fast unto the spirit of man, but God will work it out. He will "take away all iniquity," Hos. xiv. 2, the guilt of sin, the power and pollution of sin, yea, the very being of sin: ver. 25 of this chapter, "I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean; from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you." God will do his work of this nature thoroughly and perfectly: David acknowledged it, Psal. ciii. 2, 3, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits: who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases."

Obs. 3. It is no difficulty unto the Lord to make plenty of things, he can easily do it. "I will call for the corn, and will increase it." It is but calling for it, and it comes; if he call for fruitfulness of the field or tree, or both, they come: as servants come at the call of their masters, so any creatures, corn, wine, oil, come at the call of God; if God do but say,

Let the earth bring forth, it will bring forth: there is power in his word, it is the word of the greatest King: no earthly king hath fertility or sterility at his command as God hath. Hag. i. 11, he called for a drought upon the land, and it came: 2 Kings viii. 1, he called for a famine, and it came and sojourned seven years with them. If God call for a judgment or a mercy, it comes presently. Let us fear to offend him, lest he call for a famine, the pestilence, or a sword; let us improve mercies for his honour, that he may call for the corn and fruit, and continue the same unto us.

Obs. 4. Whatsoever plenty is in a land, it is from the power, blessing, and bounty of the Lord. "I will call for the corn, and increase it." Though the land have kept her sabbaths, hath not been ploughed or sown in many years, yet I will cause it to bring forth, and that richly; I will multiply the fruit of the tree; the vine, fig tree, and the olive shall be laden with fruit, and that ye take no pains for the tender grass and herbs, the increase of the field. These, even all these, are from the call, benediction, and bounty of God, which we should take notice of, and be thankful for. All the corn we have for bread, all the fruit we have for delight, all the herbs we have for physic, and all the grass and fodder we have for cattle, are all from the Lord; and if we do not use all for his glory, but abuse the same, as Ephraim did, God will deal by us as he did by Ephraim, Hos. ii. 8, 9, even take all from us; "I will take away my corn in the time thereof," &c.

Obs. 5. God takes notice how wicked ones reproach his children being under his judgments, and will cause their reproachings to cease. "Ye shall receive no more reproach of famine among the heathen." It was a vile thing for the Babylonians to cast it in the Jews' teeth, that their land was a land of famine, and so to reproach them for that judgment which God for their sins did oft lay upon them; this was inhuman, barbarous, to add affliction to the afflicted: God observed it, and to comfort them against so sore an affliction, he gives in a promise of a plentiful maintenance, I will call for the corn, and multiply all things, so that there shall be no occasion for an enemy, for any Babylonian, to say so any more; "ye shall receive no more reproach of famine among the heathen."

Ver. 31. Then shall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and shall lothe yourselves in your own sight for your iniquities and for your abominations.

This verse is the last of the special promises made here unto this people, and it is a promise of repentance. Something like part of this verse we had chap. vi. 9, almost the same words we had chap. xx. 43.

"Then shall ye remember." When I have broken the Babylonish yoke off their necks, brought you into your own land, and done great things for you, then ye shall remember; that is, not simply to call to mind what ye have done, but to roll up and down in your thoughts seriously, to muse upon and ponder, for so much the word רָמַז signifies, and so to ponder as to do something thereupon.

"Your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good." In chap. xx. 43 it is, "your ways, and all your doings, wherein ye have been defiled;" and here it is "your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good." What their ways and doings were, you may see, Ezek. xxii. throughout the whole chapter. They did speak and do evil as they could, Jer. iii. 5; they were worse than the nations and countries round about them. Ezck. v. 6, than Sodom and Samaria, chap. xvi. 47.

“And shall loathe yourselves in your own sight.” Montanus renders the Hebrew thus, ye shall reprobate yourselves in your own sight, ye shall judge yourselves worthy to be cut off, and to be made a curse. The Vulgate is, your iniquities shall displease you: there is more in the word than displeasing; ye shall be for a disdain, a loathing to yourselves. Saith Cecolampadius, ye shall be pricked at the heart, ye shall see yourselves so defiled and deformed through sin, that ye shall loathe and abhor yourselves.

“For your iniquities and for your abominations.” “Iniquities” are perverse, crooked, and unrighteous actions; “abominations,” things disaffecting and loathsome to the senses.

Obs. 1. God’s loving-kindnesses and mercies do work more with sinners than his judgments do. All the time they were in Babylon, their hearts were never so affected for their sins, as after God brought them out, settled them in Canaan, and showed much love unto them; then they should remember their evil ways, before they minded them not; then they should loathe themselves. Mercies in Zion are more efficacious with sinners than judgments in Babylon; God’s favour sooner melts hard hearts than the fire of his indignation; his kindness is very penetrative, it gets into the hearts of sinners sooner than his threats and frowns; it is like a small soaking rain which goes to the roots of things, whereas a dashing rain runs away, and does little good. It was David’s kindness brake the heart of Saul, 1 Sam. xxiv; and it is God’s kindness which breaks the heart of sinners. The milk and honey of the gospel affect the hearts of sinners more than the gall and wormwood of the law; Christ on mount Zion brings more to repentance than Moses on mount Sinai.

Obs. 2. When God brings his people out of Babylon into Canaan, out of the world and antichristian ways, into near relation to himself, and into gospel order, then he will frame their spirits so, that they shall review their former ways, be ashamed of, and loathe themselves for them. Ver. 28, “Ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God; and then shall ye remember your doings that were not good, and shall loathe yourselves in your own sight for your iniquities and abominations.” When people are delivered from the power of darkness, and translated into the kingdom of Christ, then they come to see what works of darkness they committed, and so to abhor and loathe themselves for the same. When men come out of popish darkness, or the profane courses they have lived in, and are brought near to God, how do they judge, condemn, and loathe themselves for the same! When Paul was translated from his pharisaism into Christ’s unity, then God moulded his spirit so, that he saw and confessed what a blasphemer, persecutor, and injurious person he had been, and loathed himself, saying, he was the chief of sinners, 1 Tim. i. 15. And when the Jews shall be brought out of that Babylonish condition they now are in, and become a people near to God, being in the church of Christ, then they will remember their evil doings, their bitterness against christians, and bloodiness against Christ, and loathe themselves for the same, Zech. xii. 10; Rev. i. 7.

Obs. 3. Where repentance comes, it makes a change in men’s judgments, affections, and lives. They should loathe themselves in their own sight for their iniquities and for their abominations. What they approved of before, delighted in, and practised, that they should look upon as abominable, loathe, and turn from. Repentance begins in men’s minds and judgments, altering them; and when they are altered, the affections and conversation will alter; when the prodigal repented there was a change inward and outward.

Ver. 32. Not for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord God, be it known unto you: be ashamed and confounded for your own ways, O house of Israel.

In this verse is comprehended the ground of all the gracious and great promises specified in the words before and following; and,

I. It is expressed negatively, It is “not for your sakes.”

II. Implied affirmatively, It is for the Lord’s sake, “Not for your sakes do I this.” God saw nothing in them to move him to bring them out of Babylon, or to do aught for them in Babylon; but he beheld that in them, which might have moved him to destroy them; he saw how they profaned his holy name among the Babylonians, ver. 21; he saw how they intended to turn heathens, and worship wood and stone, chap. xx. 32. Being God’s people they thought God was bound to do much for their sakes, and that he should not deal justly with them, if he did not mind them, and do for them; see how they expostulated with God, Isa. lviii. 3, “Wherefore have we fasted, and thou seest not? wherefore have we afflicted our soul, and thou takest no knowledge?” They did in effect tell God he dealt not well with them, they deserved better things at his hands than they had; therefore said the Lord here, “Not for your sakes do I this.”

“Be it known unto you.” Take notice that what conceits soever ye have of your own worth or deserts, because ye are my people, and of the seed of Abraham my friend, yet I do not bring you out of Babylon for your worth or merit’s sake, I do nothing upon that account, and proclaim it openly unto you and all the world.

“Be ashamed and confounded for your own ways.” Your ways are so far from meriting at my hands, that they merit not at the hands of men, they are of that nature as you ought to be ashamed and confounded for them. Of the words “ashamed and confounded” was spoken, chap. xvi. 52, 54, 61.

Obs. 1. Men are apt to think they deserve something at God’s hands. The house of Israel thought she had suffered a long and sore captivity; and having fasted and mourned every fifth and seventh month throughout the seventy years, Zech. vii. 5, she conceived God now should deal unkindly, yea unjustly, if he should not do some great thing for her; now it was just for him to remember all her tears, sighs, prayers, fastings, and sufferings, to set her at liberty, and give her re-possession of her land, rewarding her with old and new privileges. Matt. vii. 22, “Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have not we prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?” They thought they had merited heaven by their doings, and looked for some wonderful reward for their wonderful works. The labourers which came into the vineyard at the third and sixth hours, thought they deserved more of the lord of the vineyard than they that went in at the ninth and eleventh hours, Matt. xx. Prone is corrupt nature to conceit it merits somewhat at the hands of God. But,

Obs. 2. Men’s ways are such as they ought to be ashamed of themselves, and fear destruction from God for them. "Be ashamed and confounded for your own ways, O house of Israel;" they are such as you should blush at, and loathe to behold, and make you fear lest my judgments should seize upon you for them. Neh. ix. 30, 31, what saith he of them? Lord, "thou gavest them into the hand of the people of the lands;" that is, thou didst cast them into captivity for their own ways; and what then? "Nevertheless for thy great mercies' sake thou didst not utterly consume them." They had cause to fear consuming; had not mercy, and great mercy, stepped in, they had been utterly consumed. So Jeremiah, Lam. iii. 22, "It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed." If it be mercy that our persons are not destroyed, what do our works or ways deserve from him?

Obs. 3. The promises God makes unto, and the mercies he bestows upon, his people are free, and for his own sake. "Not for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord God, be it known unto you:" I have promised to sprinkle you with clean water, to put a new heart into you, to give you my Spirit, to save you from all your iniquities, to bring you again to Zion, to give you many mercies there, and to do you much good; but these I do not for your sakes, you deserve them not, but for mine own sake, for mine own honour and name; as ver. 22, "I do not this, O house of Israel, for your sakes, but for mine holy name's sake." For man's sake come judgments: the earth was cursed for Adam's sake, Gen. iii. 17; for Achan's sake the Israelites fell and fled, Josh. vii.; for Jonah's sake the sea was tempestuous, Jonah i. 4, 12. But when mercies come at land or sea, it is for the Lord's own sake: he "made all things for himself," Prov. xvi. 4, for his own name's sake; and what good soever he doth to any nations or persons is not for your sakes, but for his own holy name's sake. When the Jews were near destruction, he wrought for his name's sake, Ezek. xx. 9; so when we were near to destruction oftentimes in these nations, the Lord wrought for his own name's sake, not for our sakes. Let us give God the glory of what he hath done for our nation, and for ourselves, and say, "Help us, O God of our salvation, for the glory of thy name, and deliver us, and purge away our sins for thy name's sake."

Ver. 33—35. Thus saith the Lord God; In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be builded. And the desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by. And they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are become fenced, and are inhabited.

In these verses the Lord proceeds in temporal promises, and tells them what he will do for them after he hath cleansed them from their sins.

- I. Their cities and waste places shall be re-edified.
- II. Their cities shall be inhabited.
- III. Tillage of the land.
- IV. Such a choice blessing upon the land, that it should be thought like Eden.

Ver. 33. "In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities." He spake of cleansing them from all their filthiness in ver. 25, and of saving them from all their uncleanness, in ver. 29. "Iniquities" here imports the same that "filthiness" and "uncleanness" do there. The sense is this, In the day that I shall forgive your sins, free you from the guilt and punishment of them, by bringing you out of captivity into your own country, then will I do such things for you.

"I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be builded." The cities and places which by war and length of time were wasted and decayed, should be built again, repaired and inhabited.

Ver. 34. "And the desolate land shall be tilled." Canaan had lain desolate many years, and kept many sabbaths, there being none to till it; but now God promises it should be ploughed, sown, and yield increase, as it is ver. 29.

"Whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by it." There being no husbandman to plough the land, to dress the vines, nor others to repair the waste places, all lay desolate, and the desolateness thereof was seen by strangers. Doubtless many travellers turned aside to see the desolations of Jerusalem, the temple, and Canaan, which had been so famous in the world, and when they came they saw all overgrown with thorns, briars, and nettles.

Ver. 35. "This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden." God would so bless the land of Canaan, and their labours in it, that it should be like the garden of Eden for order, plenty, and pleasure. They who wondered before at the desolateness of it, should wonder at the great alteration made there; they should see order where was confusion, plenty where was barrenness, and pleasure where was nothing but abhorrence.

"And the waste and desolate and ruined cities are become fenced, and are inhabited." Many cities had been in the land of Canaan, which Nebuchadnezzar's army and forces had laid waste, made desolate, and utterly ruined; but after their return from Babylon, they were not only built, but fortified and fenced with walls.

Obs. 1. When God pardons the sins of his people, then he vouchsafeth them other mercies. "In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be builded, and the desolate land shall be tilled;" God would bless them with liberty, commodious habitations, and plenty of all things. 2 Chron. vii. 14, "I will forgive their sin, and heal their land." Pardon of sin is a fundamental mercy, and hath many other mercies following of it. Jer. xxxiii. 8, 9, "I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against me; and I will pardon all their iniquities, whereby they have sinned, and whereby they have transgressed against me. And it shall be to me a name of joy, a praise and an honour before all the nations of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them: and they shall fear and tremble for all the goodness and for all the prosperity that I procure unto it." When God forgives his people their iniquities, he will take delight in doing them good, count it his honour, get himself a name throughout the earth by blessing and prospering them, and Jerusalem, or the church, which is meant by it; so that the enemies shall be afraid of that God and that people.

Obs. 2. The best of lands may be laid desolate. Canaan was a land which flowed with milk and honey, "the glory of all lands;" Ezek. xx. 6; and here it is called "the desolate land;" it was deprived of men and beasts, of cities, towns, and houses, it was become a wilderness. For the sins of the people it was brought into that condition: Zech. vii. 11, 12, they were stubborn, hard-hearted, rebellious; and therefore God "scattered them with a whirlwind among all the nations whom they knew not. Thus the land was desolate after them, that no man passed through nor returned: for they laid the pleasant land desolate," ver. 14. It was their sins which made that land of desire a land of desolation.

Obs. 3. Desolate lands shall not always lie in that condition. "The desolate land shall be tilled." If Canaan lie desolate seventy years, at the end thereof she shall be tilled; as she had her time of lying fallow, so should she have her time of ploughing and sowing. "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will sow the house of Israel and the house of Judah with the seed of man, and with the seed of beast. And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, and to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict; so will I watch over them to build, and to plant, saith the Lord," Jer. xxxi. 27, 28. As God hath his days and times to lay waste and to pluck up, so to build and plant. He compares men and beasts here to seed, not only because they do multiply themselves, but also because men by the help of beasts should till the land and sow it, whereupon it should bring forth abundantly. And as God deals with desolate lands, so he doth with desolate hearts, he hath his times to till and sow them; as ver. 15—17, Rachel wept and refused to be comforted; but what said God to her? "Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eye from tears; for thy work shall be rewarded," &c. God sowed in her heart seeds of hope and comfort.

Obs. 4. What a great and wonderful change God can make in a little time. God can make a desolate land like a garden, and the best of all gardens, viz. "the garden of Eden," which was of God's own planting, Gen. ii. 8. The strangers that saw Canaan in its desolateness, even they should see the change, and wonder at it, saying, "This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden;" now there is beauty, plenty, and pleasure in it. God can bring order out of confusion, abundance out of barrenness, and delight out of desolation. When the famine was so sore in Samaria, that women did eat their own children, what a change did God make in a day! "To-morrow about this time shall a measure of fine flour be sold for a shekel, and two measures of barley for a shekel, in the gate of Samaria;" and it proved so, notwithstanding that the nobleman said, viz. "If the Lord would make windows in heaven, might this thing be?" yea, it was, and his eyes saw it, 2 Kings vii. The Syrians fled, left their provisions, which were brought into Samaria, and made such plenty there. When the Israelites wanted flesh to eat in the wilderness, did not God send quails two cubits high upon the face of the earth? Num. xi. 31. He can make a desert to blossom, and that abundantly, Isa. xxxv. 1, 2.

Ver. 36. Then the heathen that are left round about you shall know that I the Lord build the ruined places, and plant that that was desolate: I the Lord have spoken it, and I will do it.

God having through his grace pardoned his people, brought them to Zion, and bestowed many blessings upon them; here the end of all is set down, and that is, the glorifying of God, not only by the Jews, but also by the very heathens.

"Then the heathen that are left round about you." After Nebuchadnezzar had laid Jerusalem and Judea waste, he fell upon the Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, Philistines, Tyrians, and Egyptians, and spoiled them; therefore our prophet saith, "the heathen that are left;" some escaped and remained until the Jews' restoration.

"Shall know that I the Lord build the ruined places." They should be so convinced by the return of the Jews, and the mercies they enjoyed, that they should acknowledge it to be the hand of God, that he was faithful in making good his promise to his people, able to save, and bountiful in bestowing such mercies upon them. The word to "build" is, בנין which signifies to build a house, distinguished into its several rooms and parts: the cities, towns, and houses every where had been ruined, and God raised them up again.

"And plant that that was desolate." The word נָטַע to "plant," signifies the putting of trees, vines, shrubs, or any plants, into the earth, and to cover them so with earth, that they remain fixed therein. The orchards, gardens, vineyards, olive-yards, places of pleasure and profit, were laid desolate; the trees, plants, herbs, and flowers, were all cut down, or pulled up by the roots: those places God did replant, and made as useful and delightful as ever.

"I the Lord have spoken it, and I will do it." I have purposed it in myself, I have spoken it by Ezekiel, and I will do it. The Hebrew is, I have done it, a preter tense for a future, which is frequent; as Isa. xlvii. 11, "I have purposed;" the Hebrew is, tatzarti, I have formed, I have created, the preter tense for the future, as the former and following words do show, "I have spoken it, I will also bring it to pass," I will form or create it, "I will also do it."

Obs. 1. That though judgment begin at God's house, yet it ends not there. The Babylonians first fell upon the Jews and destroyed them, and after proceeded to the heathens, they cut off many nations of them. The sword first did eat the flesh of Jews, and then the flesh of Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, &c. When the green trees are lopped, then the axe cuts down the dry trees. Wicked men and nations are glad when it goes ill with the church and people of God, but usually when God hath corrected his own, he breaks the horns, the back, and bones of their and his enemies. The cup of God's fury began at Jerusalem, but it stayed not there; it passed thence to Egypt, to the mingled people, to Uz, Philistia, Ashkelon, Azzah, Ekron, and Ashdod, &c.; to all the kings of the north, and to all the kingdoms of the world upon the face of the earth, Jer. xxv. 15—26. It were an unrighteous thing if God should judge his friends and spare his enemies; and this he acknowledgeth, ver. 29, "Lo, I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and should ye" (the heathens) "be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished, for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth, saith the Lord of hosts."

Obs. 2. Some works of God are so convincing, that they cause even heathens to see and acknowledge the hand of God in them, and so to glorify him. The bringing the Jews out of Babylon, the replanting them in Canaan, the rebuilding of their waste places, peopling of them rebuilt, and making their country like the garden of Eden, convinced the heathens, so that they said and acknowledged, it was the Lord had done these things, which was a glorifying of his name; Psal. cxxvi. 1, 2, the Babylonians and others said, "The Lord hath done great things for them," when he turned their captivity. There is so much of God's wisdom, power, mercy, bounty, in some of his works, that they constrain all that behold them to acknowledge him in them; see Neh. vi. 16; Psal. cxviii. i. 2; Isa. lii. 9, 10.

Obs. 3. That architecture and husbandry are the work of the Lord. "I build the ruined places, and plant that that was desolate." There is no house, no city built, but the Lord hath the chief hand therein; Psal. cxxvii. 1, "Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it:" all is nothing without the counsel, assistance, and blessing of God; he teacheth the carpenters and masons their art, he enables them to work, and blesses them working. So for husbandmen, it is God that doth instruct them to discretion, and teach them, Isa. xxviii. 25; they have all their ploughing, sowing, and planting skill from him: "This cometh forth from the Lord of hosts, who is wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working;" ver. 29. If a land be well built with houses, cities, castles, it is the Lord that builded them; if it be well tilled and planted with orchards, gardens, vineyards, and nurseries of young trees, it is the Lord that hath tilled and planted them; men's art and industry are nothing without him.

Obs. 4. God's purposes and promises shall take effect, and certainly be fulfilled; God is faithful in what he saith, and will perform the same. "I the Lord have spoken it, and will do it." He will not go back from his word, change his purposes and counsels, or falsify his promises. Isa. xxxi. 2, he "will not call back his words." Chap. xiv. 27. "The Lord of hosts hath purposed, and who shall disannul it?" Chap. xlvi. 10, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." Jer. xxii. 42, "I will bring upon them all the good that I have promised them." There is none wiser than God, to advise him so as to alter his purposes or counsels; there is none stronger than God, to hinder him from making good what he hath purposed and promised. Isa. xliii. 13, "I will work, and who shall let it?" All the Babylonians could not hinder God's setting his people at liberty; all the wild beasts, briars, and thorns in Canaan, could not hinder him from bringing them in, and making the land like Eden, plentiful and pleasant; all the policy and power of Tobiah, Sanballat, and others, could not hinder the building of the temple and walls of the city: God had promised Jerusalem should be rebuilt and fenced, that the Jews should have their temple to worship in again, and they had them.

Ver. 37. Thus saith the Lord God; I will yet for this be enquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them; I will increase them with men like a flock.

The word אדרש is from דרש which signifies, to make diligent and careful inquiry. The Vulgate is, Moreover, in this shall the house of Israel find me; when they pray and seek me, I will be found of them, they shall prevail with me to do this for them. Vatablus in his notes hath the words thus, I will be required by the house of Israel, they shall come and mind me, and entreat me to do this for them. Junius is otherwise, I will be exposed to the house of Israel, that I will do this for them. Piscator is more plain, I will show myself to the house of Israel to be found of them, that I may do this for them.

What it is that God will be inquired of for, is next to be spoken of. Maldonate makes it, whatsoever they shall ask. Some refer it to all the promises mentioned before. But both these are too large, and the words would not have been "for this," but for these things, or these promises, will I be inquired of. Lavater makes "for this" to be, that they may be multiplied and increased again; or, For this, viz. which I have spoken and said, I will do: I have said I will return, rebuild, replant them, and make their desolate land like the garden of Eden, so that the heathens shall wonder at my dealings with them: now for this will I be inquired of by the house of Israel.

"I will increase them with men like a flock."

The Hebrew may be read thus, I will increase them like a flock of men. The Septuagint is, I will increase the men themselves, as sheep, I will so multiply them that they shall be like a flock. The Jews greatly desired issue always, and it is probable more strongly after their reduction from Babylon than ever, that so they might plant, build, and fill the land again.

Ver. 38. As the holy flock, as the flock of Jerusalem in her solemn feasts; so shall the waste cities be filled with flocks of men: and they shall know that I am the Lord.

In the Hebrew it is, As the flocks of holiness, or holy things. The Jews, besides other feasts, had three great solemn feasts every year at Jerusalem: 1. The passover; 2. Pentecost; 3. The feast of tabernacles; unto which the people came up from all parts of the land; and for their use at those times great flocks of sheep and herds of cattle were brought to Jerusalem. In Josiah's time there were thirty thousand lambs and kids, besides oxen and small cattle, which were for holy services, and therefore here are called, "the holy flock," and "flock of Jerusalem." John v. 2, you read of a sheep market, and by it a pool: great flocks of sheep were brought unto that market, and they were washed in that pool before they were used in holy services. Jerusalem at these feasts was filled with flocks of sheep and men, and God here promiseth, that the waste and desolate places of Judea should be filled with men, and made to abound with inhabitants again, how improbable soever it seemed to the Jews or heathens.

"And they shall know that I am the Lord." They shall acknowledge that my thoughts are not theirs, nor my ways theirs; and that I am faithful, and able to do great things.

Obs. 1. God expects that his people should seek to him for performance of those promises he graciously makes them. "I will for this be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them." It is tender mercy and loving-kindness in God to make promises unto sinners; and it is duty in man to mind them being made, and to sue them out by prayer. David did so: "Remember," saith he, "the word unto thy servant, upon which thou hast caused me to hope." Psal. exix. 49. And again, "Quicken me, according to thy word," ver. 154. He minded God of his word and promises, and pressed him by hearty prayer to make the same good. So Jacob; Lord, didst not thou bid me return unto my country, and saidst thou wouldst deal well with me; "deliver me, I pray thee, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau, for I fear him," Gen. xxxii. 9, 11. Had not Jacob improved the promise, he might have gone without deliverance. Promises, as they are foundations for faith, so they are incentives unto prayer, and provoke those to whom they are made to sue them out. "O Lord God," said Solomon, "let thy promise unto David my father be established," 2 Chron. i. 9. Thou didst promise him that I should sit upon the throne, Lord, make it good. Jeremiah holds out this truth most clearly, that God expects to be sought unto for the performance of what he promiseth: chap. xxix. 10, 11, "After seventy years be accomplished at Babylon I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you, in causing you to return to this place. For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end." Here is the promise; what now follows in ver. 12—14? "Then shall ye call upon me, and ye shall go and pray unto me, and I will hearken unto you," &c. See it put in practice, Dan. ix. 2, 3, &c. God tells them, Isa. xliii. 25, that he blots out transgressions for his own sake, and will not remember their sins; but then it is added, "Put me in remembrance," ver. 26.

Obs. 2. That the increase of children is the blessing of God, and he can increase them in a short space to become like a flock. They multiplied and filled the land after their return, and were as the stars of heaven, the sand of the sea-shore, and dust of the earth. The key of the womb is in God's hand, and "he maketh the barren woman to keep house, and to be a joyful mother of children," Psal. cxliii. 9; and he makes the fruitful woman to be more fruitful. He multiplied his people as the bud of the field, Ezek. xvi. 7.

Obs. 3. How desperate soever the conditions of men and things are, the Lord can restore them to their pristine estate, yea, to a better. They were in a low and lost condition in Babylon, all their cities laid waste in their own land, and never like to be built or inhabited; but God delivered them, and restored them to their primitive state, and made all their waste cities populous. Jerusalem formerly was filled with men, now the waste cities should be also filled, abounding with men, now their land should be planted and inhabited; things in that land were often at the point of ruin, and incurable in the eye of men, but God relieved them, raised and restored them. When Sennacherib was there with his great army, and all seemed lost, did not God destroy his army, and relieve them publicly and privately? Though there were now no cities left, God could and did raise them up many cities; though there were no people to inhabit those cities raised, God could raise them up men, and did make them exceeding populous, even as populous as Jerusalem was at her solemn feasts, more populous than ever.

Obs. 4. The end of God's deliverances, works, and mercies, is, that God may be acknowledged and glorified. When I have brought them out of Babylon, planted them in Zion, built their cities, filled them with inhabitants, and blessings of all sorts, then shall they know that I am the Lord; that I am not like the heathenish gods and lords, but that I am faithful, omnipotent, gracious, and merciful, worthy to be honoured and adored by the house of Israel.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Ver. 1, 2. The hand of the Lord was upon me, and carried me out in the spirit of the Lord, and set me down in the midst of the valley which was full of bones, and caused me to pass by them round about: and, behold, there were very many in the open valley; and, lo, they were very dry.

In the form of chapter he spake of the Jews' return out of Babylon, and likewise of the kingdom of Christ: in this chapter, also, he proceeds to comfort the Jews, assuring them of their return, who well-nigh despaired thereof, and of the union of the two houses, Judah and Israel.

The parts of this chapter are,

1. A vision of dry bones presented to the prophet, ver. 1—10.

II. The interpretation and application of this vision, ver. 11—14.

III. A type of two sticks, and the uniting of them, ver. 15—19.

IV. The explication of the type, ver. 20, to the end.

Ver. 1. "The hand of the Lord was upon me." By "hand of the Lord," the Chaldee understands, the Spirit of prophecy, which did enlighten and affect the mind of the prophet; so also do divers others. But some take it for the power of God upon him; or a divine instinct, which, like a hand, pulled or moved him to some other thing, as chap. viii. 3. It was the Spirit of God came upon him, as chap. iii. 14; and why it is called the hand of God, see chap. i. 3.

"And carried me out in the spirit of the Lord." The Hebrew may be read thus, and is by Montanus, and the Lord carried me out in the spirit; that is, I was rapt out of myself, and my spirit was carried by the Lord to have a sight or view of bones. If we take the words as they are, the sense is this; The Spirit of God being upon me, carried me out in the Spirit of prophecy, which is the Spirit of the Lord. His body was not carried from place to place; he had a prophetic vision.

"And set me down in the midst of the valley." The prophet seemed to himself to see a hand, and to be led out by that hand into a certain valley; all which was visional, not real. He names no particular valley. A Lapidist saith, it was in Campo Sennar. Mesopotamia and Chaldea were plains; but whether it were in either of them, is not specified. In valleys prophets were wont to have visions. Our prophet's first vision was by the river Chebar, and rivers are always in valleys; and in this valley, it is conceived by some, as Lavater observes, was this vision: but it is safer to judge, that this valley was also visional.

"Which was full of bones." This valley or plain was no burying-place, for then the bones would not have lain upon the face of the earth, and been exposed to view. Some make these bones to be the bones of all mankind being dead, and to respect the general resurrection; but they are out, nothing of that is here intended. Some make them to be the bones of the Babylonians; but the prophet's scope here is not to comfort them; it is the Jews' condition he points at, and therefore by "bones" are meant the Jews, as is clear, ver. 11. These bones were visional also, not real, for then they should not have lain unburied, suffering reproach. Some Jews have an opinion, that these bones were the bones of those Jews that died in Babylon; and one rabbi Jose, a Galilean, saith, that Ezekiel raised those dead Jews, many of which returned into the land of Israel, and had children there; that when this fell into controversy among the Jews, one rabbi Juda the son of Bathira stood up and said, I am of that race which Ezekiel raised; and showed the phylacteries his parent put upon him, and had received from those that were raised.

Ver. 2. "And caused me to pass by them round about." The Lord would have the prophet to take exact notice of them, and therefore made him to pass on every side, that so he might observe the number and quality of them, and where they lay; which he did, for it follows,

"And, behold, there were very many in the open valley." The number of these bones was great, passed number, and they lay in open view, in an open valley, where he had a full sight of them.

"And, lo, they were very dry." These bones were not clothed with flesh, juicy, and full of marrow, which had been more easily raised to life if so; but they were dry, all the moisture was out of them; they had lain long, nigh seventy years, in that condition, and were almost become earth.

Obs. 1. It was the Spirit of God moved the prophets to give out those truths which are now extant in the Scriptures, that directed and enabled them to do what they did. "The hand of the Lord was upon me, and carried me out in the Spirit" to see and give out what you have here. The prophets might not speak or act at their own pleasure, but, as the Spirit of God moved them, 2 Pet. i. 21, so they spake, so they acted. It was the Spirit in the prophets that testified against the Jews, Neh. ix. 30; the words of the Lord of hosts were in the hand and mouth of the Spirit, before they were in the heads and mouths of the prophets. The apostles had the Spirit falling upon and filling them, before they gave out divine truths, Acts ii. 4; which verified what Christ had said of the Spirit, John xvi. 14, "He shall receive of mine, and show it unto you." All the truths Paul hath given forth for the instruction, edification, and consolation of the church of Christ, he received from the Spirit of Christ. Hence he saith, 1 Cor. xi. 23, "I received of the Lord that which I delivered unto you:" and chap. xiv. 37, "The things I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord;" he had them all from his Spirit, chap. ii. 12, 13.

Obs. 2. The true messengers and servants of God come not only with the word of God, but in the Spirit and power of God. Ezekiel had the hand of God with him. So Paul, 1 Cor. ii. 4, 5, his "preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." False teachers may come with the letter, but only those are the true prophets, the true messengers of Christ, that come in the Spirit, and with the Spirit, are carried out by the Spirit.

Obs. 3. God honours his servants sometimes so as to make them of his council, and copartners with him in his works. God makes known his mind here to Ezekiel, and uses him in the work he was about. Samuel was thus honoured, God made him of his privy-council, and told him what he would do to the house of Eli, 1 Sam. iii. So he dealt by Abraham, not only in the business of Sodom, Gen. xviii. 17, but in that of his posterity, telling him, his seed should be a stranger in a land not theirs four hundred and thirty years, and that afterwards they should come out with great substance, Gen. xv. 13, 14. The prophets and apostles were cabinet men, and knew the secrets of the Lord, and were co-workers with God. The apostle Paul is expressly for it, 2 Cor. vi. 1, they are συνεργοὶ Θεοῦ, men that work together with God in the same work. This is great honour, and such honour as have not all the saints.

Obs. 4. Our God calls and moves his servants, by his Spirit, to do difficult things: he orders them so as to do them safely. It was somewhat averse to nature to go among dead bones, and dangerous to the prophet, being many and scattered up and down the valley; for had he accidentally touched but one of them, he had been unclean, according to the law, Numb. xix.: but God caused him to pass by them, so as he was preserved from pollution: he saw the bones, he touched none of them. It was a sad and dangerous work God called Abraham unto, viz. the sacrificing of his son: but he ordered it so, that Abraham came off, not only without imputation of sin, but with great honour for his obedience.

Ver. 3. And he said unto me, Son of man, can these bones live? And I answered, O Lord God, thou knowest.

This verse is a dialogue between God and the prophet, as Polanus calls it.

1. God propounds a question.

3 R 2

11. The prophet answers it.

The question is this,

"Son of man, can these bones live?" Ezekiel, thou hast had a full view of them, thou seest how dry they are, in what condition they lie; tell me thy thoughts, what thy judgment is of them, I am desirous to know thy mind. Hast thou any art, skill, or power to quicken them? or, knowest thou any creature that hath? To this question the prophet answers in the next words.

"And I answered, O Lord God, thou knowest." The prophet's answer is suitable unto the Lord's question, which was concerning the present life of these bones, not future life at the general resurrection, which he doubted not of, therefore he confesseth his ignorance: I do not know, O Lord, what thy pleasure is; thou art able to put life into these dry bones in a moment, though neither myself nor any other creature can do it; our power is finite, thine is infinite, and thou canst do whatever thou pleasest, but thy pleasure is held from me and others; therefore, "O Lord God, thou knowest."

Obs. 1. Divine interrogations argue not ignorance in God, but are instructory to the interrogated. God knew what these bones could do, before he propounded the question to Ezekiel: it was therefore propounded for his instruction, to acquaint him with the power of God, and his own weakness, that so, knowing the one, and being sensible of the other, he might be the fitter instrument in the hand of God to work by. Christ's question to Peter, John xxi. 15, was of this nature, "Simon, lovest thou me more than these?" It was not so much to prove him, as to instruct and mind him of his former failing, and to fit him for action, viz. the feeding his lambs and sheep.

Obs. 2. God can easily non-plus or silence wise and holy men with a short question. Here he puts Ezekiel to it, "Can these bones live?" The prophet could not tell. When God propounded some questions to Job, was he able to answer him? Job xxxviii. 3, 4, &c. He professes he was not able to do it, but must be silent, chap. xl. 4. Did not Christ by a question put the chief priests, scribes, and elders to silence? He asked them, whether the baptism of John was from heaven or of men? This little question so perplexed them all, that they professed they could not tell, Mark xi. 30, 33.

Obs. 3. It is wisdom and duty in the servants of God to resolve all they cannot reach, or know not how to be effected, into the knowledge and good pleasure of the Lord. "O Lord God, thou knowest." He resolves the question into God's bosom; he had knowledge, power, and will to do whatever seemed good to himself. There are many things in the word mentioned, which man can say nothing unto, but, "Lord, thou knowest:" as, where the sepulchre of Moses was, Deut. xxxiv. 6; the spreadings of the clouds, how they are, Job xxxvi. 29; the wind, whence it comes, or whether it goes, John iii. 8; whether the seed sown in the evening or the morning shall prosper best, or be both alike, Eccles. xi. 6; what is the true interpretation of the number of the beast, "six hundred threescore and six," Rev. xiii. 18; or of the two witnesses, and the time of their prophesying in sackcloth "a thousand two hundred and threescore days," when it began, and when it ended, or shall, Rev. xi. 3. Of these and other things be it said, "Lord, thou knowest."

Ver. 4-10. Again he said unto me, Prophesy upon these bones, and say unto them, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord. Thus saith the Lord God unto these bones; Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live: and I will lay sinews upon you, and will bring up flesh upon you, and cover you with skin, and put breath in you, and ye shall live; and ye shall know that I am the Lord. So I prophesied as I was commanded: and as I prophesied, there was a noise, and behold a shaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone. And when I beheld, lo, the sinews and the flesh came up upon them, and the skin covered them above: but there was no breath in them. Then he said unto me, Prophecy unto the wind, prophesy, son of man, and say to the wind, Thus saith the Lord God; Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live. So I prophesied as he commanded me, and the breath came into them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army.

The quickening of the dry bones is the great thing considerable in these verses; and it is set out.

From the causes:

- I. The efficient.
 1. The instrumental, prophesying, ver. 4, 7, 9, 10.
 2. The principal, ver. 5.
- II. The formal; which is expressed,
 1. By coalition of bone to bone, ver. 7.
 2. By clothing of the bones with flesh, sinews, and skin, ver. 8.
 3. By the entrance of breath, ver. 10.

Ver. 4. "Prophecy upon these bones, and say unto them, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord." This seems an absurd thing, that the prophet should prophesy unto creatures insensible, unintelligible, void of life: it was as if God should bid a man preach unto a heap of stones, or dry chips, which are incapable of hearing. But though these bones were incapable of hearing Ezekiel's voice, yet they were not incapable of hearing God's voice, for all creatures, even the most senseless, hear the Lord when he speaks; the stormy winds fulfil his word, Psal. cxlviii. 8; the heavens and the earth, Isa. i. 2; whales and ravens, Jonah ii. 10; 1 Kings xvii. 4. The Lord intended to bestow life upon these bones, and, that they might have life, they must hear his word, which had enlivening virtue in it. There is an obediencial virtue in every creature to yield to the will and command of the Creator, and when it doth so, then it is said to hear the voice of the Lord: then properly men hear God when they do what he requires.

Ver. 5. "Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live." These words prevent an objection which the prophet might have made, saying, It is in vain for me to prophesy to these dry bones; whatever I shall say over them, or unto them, will come to nothing, and prove ridiculous if any take notice thereof. No, saith the Lord, it shall not be so; for, "behold, I will cause breath to enter into them, and they shall live." The Septuagint saith, Behold, I bring upon you the Spirit of life. Others render the words thus, Behold, I do make the Spirit to enter into you; or, I am about to bring the Spirit into you, and ye shall live: that is, I am ready to breathe life into you; or, I will breathe the breath of life into you. It is life that is here promised; which he mentions, first, to encourage the prophet, though it were performed last: for the bones must first be united, then be clothed with sinews, flesh, and skin, before the breath of life enters.

Ver. 6. "And I will lay sinews upon you." The Hebrew for "sinews" is, גידים which is from גדר to act upon, &c. The nerves in the body do concur into the duties of sense and motion. Some nerves are soft, some are hard; the soft are specially for sense, and they come from the brain; the hard are chiefly for motion, and they come from the marrow in the backbone. Here God would cause these visional bones to have visional sinews, which might fit them for sense and motion.

"And bring up flesh upon you." The word for "flesh" is, בשר which synecdochically signifies sometimes men, and sometimes other living creatures; but here it notes that part of man's body which is simple, soft, and ruddiest: such flesh would God bring up upon these bones. The Hebrew for "bring up" is, I will make to ascend: God would cause flesh to grow up and ascend out of those dry bones.

"And cover you with skin." When the bones had sinews, and flesh, God would not leave them so; it is unsightly to behold naked, raw flesh: he would give them a garment, viz. cover them with skin. Incrustabo vos cute, saith Montanus, I will crust you over with skin. Superextendam in vobis cutem, saith the Vulgate, I will stretch over you a skin. The word for "skin" is, עור, from עיר to be naked. Though the flesh were covered with skin, yet was not the skin covered with any artificial covering.

"And put breath in you, and ye shall live." These words are the same with those in the fifth verse. Now, when the bones had their sinews, flesh, and skin, and were fitted for the breath of life, they should have it. The Septuagint is thus, δώσω πνῆμα μοῖ ἐφ' ἑμάς, I will give my Spirit upon you, that shall beget life in you, and cause you to live.

"And ye shall know that I am the Lord." These dry bones, being so metamorphosed and raised to a living condition, should acknowledge the mighty hand of the Lord, and be convinced that he was able to do whatsoever he pleased.

Ver. 7. "So I prophesied as I was commanded." The prophet stood not disputing the ease with God: but he, understanding the mind of God, presently set himself to fulfil it.

"And as I prophesied there was a noise." What Ezekiel prophesied to these bones is not so much to be questioned; he had direction from God what to say unto them, even those words ye have in the 4th, 5th, and 6th verses. And as he was prophesying, before he had uttered all given him in commission, "there was a noise," not of thunder, or of angels, or of an earthquake, but of the bones themselves, which being many, dry, and stirring, could not but make a great noise. This noise was an evident demonstration of divine presence and power, put forth in this miraculous work.

"And behold a shaking." These bones, that were dead and dry, now began to stir and shake, they moved from their places. Maldonate thinks, that the earth was moved, that so the bones which were in the graves, and under the earth, might come forth; but these were bones which lay in an open valley, not under the earth. Their shaking or concussion was with force. It was divine power made them to shake and move. Some refer this shaking to the invasion of the Babylonians by the Medes and Persians, at what time the Jews obtained their liberty.

"And the bones came together, bone to his bone." As timber in a house, so are bones in the body, the strength and support of all. The Hebrew word for a bone is, עצם, etsem, from עץ to corroborate and make solid. Bones are the strength and solidity of the body. These bones came together, not promiscuously, the bones of one man or woman to the bones of another man or woman, but bone to his bone, that is, every bone of the same man to its right place, and every bone of the same woman to its right place; the rib-bones, thigh-bones, and ancle-bones came every one to its proper place, and so united together.

Ver. 8. "And when I beheld, lo, the sinews and the flesh came up upon them, and the skin covered them above." Here was a strange sight, to see dry bones come creeping together, every one to coalesce and join in his due place, making up a perfect skeleton; and out of that sinews, flesh, and skin, to ascend: this was such a sight that neither Ezekiel, nor any man, had ever seen before.

"But there was no breath in them." Here were perfect human bodies, as if they had been newly dead, or newly formed out of the earth, as Adam's body was; but there was yet no life in them, they were no other than dead carcases. The coalition of the bones, the ascension of sinews, flesh, and skin upon them, argued not life in them, but divine power acting and ordering them so.

Ver. 9. "Prophecy unto the wind, prophecy, son of man, and say to the wind." The word ruach, signifies several things. Sometimes, the Spirit of God, as 2 Sam. xxiii. 3: sometimes, an angel, as Job iv. 15; sometimes, the soul of a beast, Ecces. iii. 21; sometimes, the wind, as Job i. 19; sometimes, the breath of man, as Job xii. 10; and sometimes, the soul of man, Ecces. xii. 7; Zech. xii. 1. In what sense it is here to be taken, is the question. To let other senses pass, I conceive here it notes the soul or spirit of man, which is called "wind," or "breath;" here it expresses and declares itself by breathing, which is a "wind." When all other signs of life fail, as speech, sight, hearing, motion, &c. yet breath oftentimes remains, and so manifests the soul to be there, which is the breath of life, Gen. vi. 17. These bones being brought into the forms of bodies, lay destitute of souls, and so of life; the prophet, therefore, is commanded to prophecy unto their souls. If any will understand here by "wind," the Spirit of God, which is in Scripture compared to "wind," John iii. 8, and gives life to the dead, Psal. civ. 30, I shall not contend.

"Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live." The "four winds" note out here the four chief parts, or quarters, of the world, east, west, north, and south; and the prophet is commanded to call for the souls of these bodies to come from all quarters, wherever they were, to breathe upon them; that is, to enter into them, and to cause them to live. That he called "wind" before, he calls "breath" now. By "slain," are meant, the vidual carcases which lay dead.

Ver. 10. "So I prophesied as he commanded me, and the breath came into them." The prophet doing his duty, the effect followed; he said, "Come, O breath," and the spirit, soul, or breath came into those bodies which lay in his view; they were animated, and thereupon "They lived, and stood upon their feet." Immediately upon reception of their souls, they had life and motion. As every bone came to his bone, and made up a body, so every soul came to its own body, and made it to live, and to testify its life by standing up upon its feet.

"An exceeding great army." The bones were many, and they being quickened, and raised, made an army, yea, a great, an exceeding great army. The word for "army" is, צבא which signifies, virtue, courage; and so the words may be rendered, They stood upon their feet, being of very great courage.

Obs. 1. God sometimes puts his servants upon strange employments, even such as seem ridiculous, unseasonable, impossible. He set Ezekiel on work to prophesy over bones, and to say unto them, "O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord." This was as if one should water a dry, rotten stick, and say, Grow. God said to Moses, "Lift up thy rod, and stretch out thine hand over the sea, and divide it," Exod. xiv. 16. Here was a strange command, and strange work for Moses to do: could his rod or hand divide the sea? Was it not strange work God put Joshua, the men of war, and the priests unto, when he appointed them to go seven days round about Jericho, six days together once a day, and the seventh day seven times, with trumpets and rams-horns, Josh. vi. 2? So when God commanded Ezekiel to take a tile, portray Jerusalem upon it, and lay siege against it, with battering-rams, then to set an iron pan between him and the city for a wall; after these things, to lie upon his left side three hundred and ninety days, and after that on his right side forty days; were not these strange kinds of employment which God put the prophet unto? Ezek. iv. So Jeremiah must put bonds and yokes upon his own neck, and then send them to kings by their own ambassadors, which came to Zedekiah at Jerusalem, Jer. xxvii. In all these things there was depth of wisdom, however they seemed unto men.

Obs. 2. Whatsoever means are used, it is God doth all. Here was prophecy used, but that did not the work without God: "Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live." God could have done this without prophecy, but that was the means he would use and work in or by. We must not neglect means, and leave all to God, that is tempting the Most High; neither must we trust to means when used, that is to idolize a creature: but we must use means, and look unto God to be all in them (for without him nothing is done); and if we make him all in the means, we shall make him all after them.

Obs. 3. How low, deplorable, or desperate soever the creature be, God can alter it, and that easily. These dry bones were almost dust, and come to nothing, their condition was very deplorable and desperate, the prophet himself could not tell what to think of them; and did not God alter their condition quickly and with ease? He bids the prophet prophesy and say, "Hear the word of the Lord, ye dry bones;" and that being done, presently the bones shake, come together, are clothed with sinews, flesh, and skin, receive breath, live, and stand up. Here was a wonderful sudden change wrought with great facility. God can make the dry tree to flourish, Ezek. xvii. 24, Aaron's rod to bud and blossom, Sarah's dead womb to conceive, rivers in high places, and springs of water in dry lands, Isa. xli. 18. If God speak but the word, these things are done; Rom. iv. 17, he quickens the dead, and calls those things which be not, as though they were: let God only give a call, and things without life have life, and things without being have a being, Jer. xxxi. 15—17. Are we in bondage? he can easily set us at liberty, as he did Peter; are we sick unto death? he can easily cure us, as he did Hezekiah; are we poor and despicable? he can easily enrich us, and make us honourable, as he did Job when stripped of all; are we dead in sins and trespasses, that we cannot stir at all towards God? or, are we dead-hearted, that we stir poorly towards him? he can quicken us in a moment, as he did these dry bones, so that we shall live, move, and act vigorously.

Obs. 4. There is a mighty efficacy in God's word, when he is pleased to concur with it, and to be present with it in his own ordinance. Ezekiel prophesied sies, and as he prophesied there was a noise, a shaking of the bones, a coalition of them, a compassing them about with sinews, flesh, and skin, an entrance of breath, so that they lived, stood up, and were full of vigour. When God accompanies his word, it is a creating word, an enlivening word, yea, and a killing word; Ezek. xi. 14, "It came to pass, when I prophesied, that Pelatiah died." It is said of Elisha, that he should slay those that escaped the sword of Hazael and Jehu, 1 Kings xix. 17; but how should that be? for he was no sword-man: it was to be done by his prophesying, which was sharper than their swords.

Obs. 5. In the resurrection men shall have their own bodies and souls again. This vision of the dry bones is, by the fathers and others, held to be a lively representation of the resurrection. And see here, the bones came together, bone unto his bone, the same bones which were united before were united again in this resurrection; and the sinews, the flesh, the skin, which belonged to them formerly, the same came and covered them again; so the same souls, the same breath, came and entered them, and they lived: the father had not the soul or body of the son, or the daughter the soul or body of the mother, but every one had their own bodies and souls. Job was of this faith, saying, "Though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold," Job xix. 26, 27.

Obs. 6. The souls of men do not sleep with their bodies in the dust, nor vanish into nothing. The prophet calls for the soul of every body here to come from the "four winds," that is, from those parts where they were. Had they been in the bones or dust of the earth, or vanished into nothing, the Lord would not have directed the prophet to have called for them from all parts of the world.

Ver. 11—14. Then he said unto me, Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel: behold, they say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost: we are cut off for our parts. Therefore prophesy and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land: then shall ye know that I the Lord have spoken it, and performed it, saith the Lord.

The vision being related to the prophet, here application of it is made, by God himself, to the house of Israel.

And here we may consider,

1. The complaint of the house of Israel, ver. 11.

11. God's gracious promises unto the house of Israel, ver. 12, 14.

111. The event or sequel thereof, ver. 13, 14.

Ver. 11. "These bones are the whole house of Israel." The bones themselves were not the "house of Israel," but they signified and represented the condition of the "house of Israel," which being captive in Babylon, were like unto the dry bones in the open valley. To insist a little upon the resemblance between them:

1. The bones were many, very many, the valley was full of bones; when they were quickened, they made a great army. So were the Jews in the valley of Babylon, they were very many. Those that came out with Zerubbabel and Nehemiah were forty-nine thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven, or, fifty thousand wanting one hundred and three, Ezra ii. 64, 65; besides those that came with Ezra afterward, chap. viii.; and many there were which never returned. In those seventy years they were in Babylon, they multiplied into a great number.

2. The bones were without skin, flesh, and sinews, the worms, fowls, or wild beasts, had eaten up them. So the Jews were stripped of wealth and substance, the Babylonians had eaten up that. Lam. i. 10, "The adversary hath spread out his hand upon all her pleasant things;" whatsoever Jerusalem had desirable, the Babylonians laid their hands upon; and, ver. 11, "All her people sigh, they seek bread; they have given their pleasant things for meat to relieve the soul." The Chaldeans dealt hardly with them, in the time of their captivity. Jer. l. 17, 33, they broke their bones, they held them fast, and wearied them with burdens and taxes, they flayed off their skins, ate their flesh, and sucked their blood.

3. The bones were disjointed and separated from their places, one here, another there. So the Jews were rent from their habitations and country, and were scattered all over Babylon: Ezek. xxxiv. 6, "My flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth:" that is, chiefly, the Babylonish earth; they were forced out of Zion, and dispersed into all parts of Babylon. This made Jeremiah to say, chap. l. 17, "Israel is a scattered sheep." The princes, the nobles, the priests, the prophets, and the people, were all scattered one from another; the bones of that commonwealth were pulled all asunder, and thrown into several places.

4. The bones were dry, yea, very dry; they had no moisture or marrow in them. Such was the "house of Israel," being in the furnace of Babylon, their long captivity, with the evils attending it, had dried up their moisture and marrow. They wanted the milk and honey they had in Canaan for their bodies, and the manna they had for their souls; they were without a temple, and the ordinances of it, so that not only their bodies, but their souls also, were as dry bones, for they said they were without hope.

5. The bones being uncovered, lay exposed to the reproach and injury of any foot that passed by them; and the Jews, the time of their being in Babylon, were exposed to scorns and injuries from all sorts: see Ezek. xxxvi. 14, 15, 30; Lam. v. 1; Psal. cxxxvii. 3. The whole house of Israel was a derision and scorn to the Babylonians.

"Behold, they say, Our bones are dried." This speech, "Our bones are dried," is proverbial, and notes a most miserable and forlorn condition, such as those "dry bones" lay in: so far off were they from life, that the prophet could not see a possibility thereof. The Jews in Babylon were in such a condition, they saw no possibility of their returning. Captivity and servitude under enemies is a civil death; such men are like those that are dead, and their bones dried.

"And our hope is lost." "Hope" is the element by which the afflicted live, the anchor of the soul in a storm, the bladder which keeps up a man from sinking when in deep waters, and upholds a man in life when death knocks at the door; but these Jews had lost their "hope," and were at the brink of despair. They said, We hoped a long time to return to our own land, but we were deceived, here we are held fast, Jer. l. 33. Let who will hope to see Canaan again, our hope that way is dead, and in Babylon we must die.

"We are cut off for our parts." This is a proverbial and metaphorical expression, taken either from the branch of a tree cut off from the body, or from the whole tree cut off from the earth; which no sooner is done, but they wither, become fruitless, and without hope of recovering their pristine condition. So these Jews, who were once God's vine and olive tree, said now, we are cut off from Canaan, the land of the living, where we had such nourishment as made us grow and be fruitful; but here, in our captivity, we have no city, no temple, no sacrifice, and so we are as branches cut off, and trees cut down, never like to be replanted more: see chap. xvii. 9. Like hereto is that of Job, chap. xix. 10, "He hath destroyed me on every side, and I am gone; and mine hope hath he removed like a tree;" that is, as there is no hope of a tree cut off from the earth, so have I (saith Job) no hope of recovering my former condition.

Ver. 12. "Behold, O my people, I will open your graves." In this verse God promiseth unto them removal of impediments, and reduction of them into their own land. The first is in these words, "I will open your graves." Canaan was so dear unto the Jews, that they counted it death to live out of it; they esteemed it only the land of the living, and had rather have died than left their country: being therefore captives in a strange land, they were as dead men, and that land as a grave unto them. When a man is in his grave, he is cut off from the land of the living, laid in darkness, bound with grave-clothes, and pressed down with earth. So these Jews were cut off from their own land, had long been in Babylonish darkness, were bound up by Babylonish laws and power, and so oppressed and kept down by the tyranny of the Babylonians, that they were without hope of liberty. Hereupon the Lord saith, "I will open your graves;" I will remove all that hinders on the part of the Babylonians; their policy, power, law, oppression shall detain you no longer in captivity; yea, I will remove all that hinders on your part. Your despair and unbelief are like grave-stones, which keep you in a captive and dead condition; but they shall be taken away, and a door opened for your coming forth. It is not irrational to conceive some or many of them might be in prisons, and Babylonish families, whom God would set at liberty.

"And cause you to come up out of your graves," &c. When the graves are opened, the dead cannot rise or come forth, no more than the dry bones could move or stir of themselves. The Jews' deliverance out of captivity is likened to the raising the dead out of their graves. God causeth the dead to rise, Isa. xxvi. 19, and he would cause them to come out of Babylon; and not only bring them out thence, but also bring them into their own land; though they were cut off from their own olive tree, God would ingraft them in again.

Ver. 13. "And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves," &c. When God should do this wonderful and great work, viz. bring them out of their captivity, raise them from their dead condition in Babylon, and restore them to life in their own country, then they should know and acknowledge God in a special manner.

Ver. 14. "And shall put my spirit in you." By רוח "spirit," here, is not meant breath, or life, as ver. 9, 10; for they were first to be brought up out of their graves, and to have natural life, before the Spirit should be put into them. But by "spirit" here, we understand the Holy Spirit of God; even that Spirit spoken of, chap. xxxvi. 27, where are the same words. Lavater saith, I will put into you another Spirit. Oecolampadius saith, It is the Spirit of adoption, which moderates and acts the sons of God.

"And ye shall live." They lived before a natural life, a sad and melancholy life; but now they should live a spiritual life, a comfortable and heavenly life; they should forget their sorrows, and rejoice in their God. You have been in a dying condition these seventy years of your captivity, but henceforward ye shall live.

"I shall place you in your own land." The Hebrew is, I will make you to rest upon your own land. God would dismiss them from Babylon, carry them upon eagles' wings, and set them down in their own land, where they should be at rest. They had been disquieted and vexed in Babylon many years, and suffered grievous things; but God put an end thereto, and gave them rest in Canaan; which types out God's dealing with his people under the gospel, viz. the bringing them from under the antichristian state into Zion.

"Then shall ye know that I the Lord have spoken it, and performed it." Ye think it impossible that you should have the Babylonish yoke knocked off, be set at liberty, and planted in your own country; but if I can give life to dry bones, and cause them to stand up and become a great army, which is a more difficult thing, and thou Ezekiel hast seen it; then let the Jews be assured I can deliver them, and return them into their own land, and will do it; and when it is done, they shall know that I am a God of truth and power.

Something we shall observe in general from these words, and something more specially.

Obs. 1. That sense which God gives of visions, types, and parables, is sound and certain, yea, infallible. Ezekiel had a vision of dry bones, and who could tell the meaning of this vision? Many have mistaken about it; but God himself told the prophet, and so all others, what was the sense of that vision; Behold, the bones are the whole house of Israel. God, who is the Author of visions, types, and parables, knoweth best what is the meaning of them. He knew what the golden candlestick, and the two olive trees on the right and left sides thereof, meant, and interpreted them unto Zechariah, chap. iv. Daniel's vision of four beasts, chap. vii. did the Lord open and make known unto him. John's vision of the woman sitting "upon a scarlet coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns," the Lord interpreted and made known unto him, Rev. xvii. Christ uttered many parables which were dark, and when he gave the sense of them it was certain and infallible.

Obs. 2. Tropes and types are not in sacred Scripture to be taken literally. "These bones are the house of Israel;" they were not the house of Israel in a literal sense, but they signified the house of Israel. It is frequent, in the word, to give the name of the thing signified to the thing signifying; as 1 Cor. x. 4, "That Rock was Christ;" here the rock is called Christ, whereas the rock did only signify Christ. So Gen. xli. 26, "The seven good kine are seven years, and the seven good ears are seven years;" none of these were years, but all of them signify so many years. So Dan. iv. 22, the tree, which Nebuchadnezzar saw, whose top reached to heaven, and branches to the ends of the earth, is said to be Nebuchadnezzar himself, "It is thou, O king;" that is, it signified him, it was not him himself. The papists trouble the world with their absurd sense of those words, Matt. xxvi. 26, 28, "This is my body, and this is my blood;" they will have them to be taken literally, and make us lose our senses, that we may believe the bread and wine are the very flesh and blood of Christ; but we neither see nor taste any such thing; only we believe, that they represent the same unto us, and are to convey the fruit and benefit of Christ's death unto us.

Obs. 3. God's people are sometimes brought into great straits, they know not what to do, they are heartless and hopeless. "Our bones are dried, our hope is lost; we are cut off for our parts." They saw nothing but destruction before them, they saw no possibility of escaping, they thought their condition desperate. Such was Joseph's condition, when his brethren cast him into a pit, Gen. xxxvii. 24. Such was the Israelites' condition at the Red sea, when the Egyptians were behind them, the sea before them, and no door of hope left unto them, Exod. xiv.; their hope was gone, and nothing but death presented itself unto them, ver. 11. When the anchor of hope is broken, men are in a sea of troubles, tossed up and down, ready to sink every moment. Job himself was some time in this case, chap. vii. 6, "My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope;" he had neither hope of restoration to his former condition, nor of continuance of his life; he looked only to make the grave his house, and darkness his bed, chap. xvii. 13—15; his hope was gone, and he thought he must go to corruption and the worms.

Obs. 4. When men are in great afflictions, they manifest great weakness. These Jews being in such an afflicted condition, they forgot what promises God had made to them of returning after seventy years, Jer. xxv. 12, 13; xxxix. 10; they minded not God's power, or faithfulness, but said, "We are cut off for our parts;" God hath cut us off from our land, and cast us into this furnace of Babylon, where we shall be consumed. When Saul hunted David like a partridge upon the mountains, and his life was in jeopardy, did he not say in his heart, "I shall one day perish by the hand of Saul?" 1 Sam. xxvii. 1. Here he manifested his weakness greatly. God had told him he should be king, and sent Samuel to anoint him, chap. xvi.; but he forgot this, and gave way to the reasonings of flesh. Jeremiah being in a suffering condition, scorned and defamed by the people, he resolves to cast aside his commission, and speak no more in the name of the Lord; he curses the day of his nativity, and the man who brought tidings of his birth; wishes he had slain him from the womb, or that the womb had been his grave, &c.; thus did he declare his infirmities, chap. xx. 8, 9, 15—17, not considering what God had promised him, chap. i. 5, 8, 9, 17—19. The like did Job.

Obs. 5. There are states of men in this life which do resemble the dead; and they are two especially, both which are here held forth.

(1.) The state of great and long afflictions. These Jews, in their captivity, are likened unto dry bones, men in their graves. This made Jeremiah say, Lam. iii. 6, "He hath set me in dark places, as they that be dead of old." The state of death is a state of darkness, and so is the state of affliction. Isa. lix. 10, "We grope for the wall like the blind, and we grope as if we had no eyes: we stumble at noon day as in the night: we are in desolate places as dead men." They were in deep affliction, and destitute of all counsel; they saw no way or means how to get out of the same. David being under great calamities, goes further, and shows you, that such a state is not only a state of darkness, but of consumption, of being forgotten, and broken: Psal. xxxi. 9, 12, "I am in trouble; mine eye is consumed with grief, yea, my soul and my belly. I am forgotten as a dead man out of mind: I am like a broken vessel." So Psal. xlv. 19, "Thou hast sore broken us in the place of dragons, and covered us with the shadow of death." He calls great afflictions, the place of dragons, because they sting, bite, and endanger a man's life; and, the shadow of death; death is very near, and overshadows the man who is in them, his grave is designing, and he is ready to be put thereinto. This consideration made Heman say, his soul being full of troubles, "My life draweth nigh unto the grave. I am counted with them that go down into the pit: I am as a man that hath no strength: free among the dead, like the slain that lie in the grave, whom thou rememberest no more; and they are cut off from thy hand. Thou hast laid me in the lowest pit, in darkness, in the deeps;" Psal. lxxxviii. 3—6. He shows you clearly, that great afflictions, especially soul-afflictions, are a state of death.

(2.) The state of sin, which these Jews were in; for it is said, "I will put my spirit into you, and ye shall live." At that time they were dead, being in an unregenerate estate. Men being in their sins, are no better than in a state of death. They are in darkness, ignorant of Christ, the gospel, and mysteries thereof, Eph. v. 8. They are in bondage to their lusts, and to Satan, 2 Pet. ii. 19; Rom. vi. 16; 2 Tim. ii. 26; John viii. 44. They are senseless, eyes they have, and see not; ears, and hear not; hearts, and understand not, Matt. xiii. 14, 15. They have hearts of stone, and are past feeling, Eph. iv. 18, 19. They are corrupt and unsavoury, Eph. iv. 22; Rom. iii. 13. This is the condition of sinners, which the gospel accounts and calls, a state of death, Matt. viii. 22; John v. 25; Eph. ii. 5; Col. ii. 13.

Obs. 6. God is afflicted with the afflictions and sufferings of his people. O my people, you are in your graves here in Babylon, you are afflicted, reproached, oppressed; but I am sensible thereof, and do sympathize with you in that condition; not a word is spoken against you, not an unjust act done unto you, but I hear, I feel the same. The words are twice mentioned, "O my people, O my people," in the 12th and 13th verses, to show the Lord was much affected with their calamities and languishing condition. When the Jews were in Egypt, that house of bondage, and in the wilderness, they were like men in their graves, oft covered with the shadow of death; and did not God pity them? Psal. evi. 44, "He regarded their affliction;" he looked upon them and pitied them; yea, he made their enemies to pity them, ver. 46. In the book of Judges, chap. x. 16, you have a notable expression to this purpose: it is said there, "His soul grieved for the misery of Israel;" his soul was shortened. When things are laid to heart, they dry and shrink up a man's spirits. God laid their misery so to heart, that his soul was, as it were, shrunk up and shortened.

Obs. 7. There is no state of affliction, sin, or death, but God can and will raise his people out of the same. "O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves." Though they had lain seventy years in their graves, God would open them. When earth lies long undigged, when graves continue long unopened, it is the harder to remove the earth, and open the graves: what difficulty soever there was in the way, God would step over it, and do the thing. Job lay buried in the grave of affliction a long season, but at length God opened his grave, and led him out; Job xlii. 10, "The Lord turned the captivity of Job." David was in the grave of affliction, but God raised him out of it; Psal. xl. 2, "He brought me up out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay;" that is, out of the deepest and extremest misery. Mary Magdalene lay in the grave of sin, was in a state of spiritual death, and Christ quickened her, he forgave her sins, Luke vii. 48. The Ephesians did, among other gentiles, lie in their graves of sin, they were shut up under unbelief, that was a weighty grave-stone that kept them under; but God rolled away that stone, opened their graves, and brought them forth; Eph. ii. 1, "You that were dead in sins and trespasses, hath he quickened." Those who are in a literal sense dead, and in their graves, God can open their graves, and bring them forth also. Lazarus had lain four days in his grave, he was corrupted therein and stunk; yet, when Christ said, "Lazarus, come forth," the grave did open, the dead man heard, lived, and came forth, John xi. 43, 44. The keys of life and death are in the hand of Christ; be it a grave of affliction, a grave of sin, or a grave of the body, Christ can turn the key, open the grave, and bring out thereof: at last he will open the graves, and bring forth all the dead bodies.

Obs. 8. Nothing in men moves God to put his Spirit into them. These Jews were in a despairing condition, they said, "Our bones are dried, our hope is lost, we are cut off for our parts." They despaired, dishonoured God highly thereby, and deserved to be cut off and perish for ever; but see how God dealt with them, he promises to put his Spirit in them, ver. 14. The giving of his Spirit is an extraordinary mercy, and he gives it freely. Their goodness did not incline God to give, nor their sin hinder him from giving. God's choicest gifts are freest, as Christ, the Spirit, and gospel; they are the acts of his good pleasure.

Obs. 9. Spiritual life and comfort are from the Spirit's indwelling in men. "I shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live." They shall live, as they had never lived: they should live spiritually, comfortably. Natural life, in its kind, hath an excellency: but it is far beneath a spiritual life, which is called "the life of God," Eph. iv. 18. So the comforts of a natural life may have some sweet and preciousness in them; but they are comfortless comforts to those of the Spirit and spiritual life. Men destitute of the Spirit are dead men, and have but dead comforts; those who have the Spirit are living men, and have living comforts. The Spirit is a Spirit of life and comfort, and wherever it comes, it makes men lively and comfortable.

Obs. 10. When the people of God are gathered into Canaan, they shall have rest there. God would bring these Jews out of Babylon into their own land, which was Canaan, and there they should rest: there is no rest in Babylon. God is gathering his people out of Babylonish and antichristian conditions, and bringing them into Zion, where there is true rest, though not perfect rest; that will be in the heavenly Canaan, whither in due time we shall come.

Ver. 15—19. The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying, Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions; and join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand. And when the children of thy people shall speak unto thee, saying, Will thou not show us what thou meanest by these? say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand.

The vision of the dry bones, and interpretation of them, being ended, here the typical work of two sticks, and the uniting of them, succeeds. In the three first verses you have the author of the type, and the type itself: in the two last, direction what to say, upon inquiry made after the meaning of the type.

Ver. 16. "Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick." The prophet before had a vision, here he hath a command. He must take a stick: the Chaldee saith, a table; the Septuagint, a rod: the Hebrew is, wood. Wood, or stick, is, by a metonymy of the matter, put for a table, or tally, whereon something might be written. So it was here; he must write upon it,

"For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions." These were the words to be written upon the stick. In Numb. xvii. 2, the Lord commanded Moses to take twelve rods, according to the number of the tribes and princes, and to write every man's name upon his rod. To this doth the Lord allude here, commanding the prophet to take a stick, or rod, and write upon it, "For Judah;" that is, Let Judah, the royal and noble tribe, be signified thereby. "And the children of Israel;" by these the tribe of Benjamin is meant, which clave to the house of David, and fell not from Rehoboam to Jeroboam, 1 Kings xii. 23; 2 Chron. xi. 12, as the other tribes did. This tribe did wholly adhere to Judah, and some also out of other tribes did, some out of Levi, and some out of the rest, 2 Chron. xi. 13, 14, 16, 17; xv. 9; and these are called "the children of Israel his companions;" that is, Judah's companions, because they forsook him not, as others did. All these were represented by this first stick.

"Then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim." Having finished the first stick, he is bidden to "take another." The Hebrew is, take one stick; that is, one more, "and write upon it, For Joseph." As the other stick was for Judah, so this for Joseph; viz. to represent the tribe of Joseph, which was the principal of the ten tribes; and his stick was called "the stick of Ephraim." Ephraim was the son of Joseph, and the ten tribes are usually called in Scripture by the name of Ephraim, as Hos. iv. 17; v. 3, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14; but here the tribe of Ephraim is meant. The Chaldee saith, The stick of Ephraim is the tribe of Ephraim. Jeroboam, who made the great rent in the house of David, was of the tribe of Ephraim, and to him did the other tribes adhere.

"And for all the house of Israel his companions." This stick was for the whole ten tribes, which are called "the house of Joseph," Amos v. 6, "The seed of Ephraim," Jer. vii. 15, "Samaria," Hos. viii. 5, and here, "the house of Israel." All these did side with Jeroboam when he revolted, and so were companions with him, with Ephraim and Joseph. Long before this time, the ten tribes were carried into captivity by Shalmaneser king of Assyria; but here the Lord thought upon them, and ordered the prophet to take a stick for them.

Ver. 17. "And join them one to another into one stick." The Hebrew is, and make them come one to one to thee into one stick. Those two sticks he must join together, and make one stick of them. Some do make a miracle here, saying, That as Moses' rod was turned into a serpent, and Aaron's blossomed, Exod. iv. 3; Numb. xvii. 8, by a miraculous work of God; so did Ezekiel's sticks unite together in his hand. It is true, God, by his divine power, could unite them into one; but here he bids the prophet to join them one to another into one stick, which he might do by some artificial means, or else hold them together in his hand, which might suffice for the purpose intended.

"And they shall become one in thine hand." They shall be one in thy hands, so Montanus renders the Hebrew; not, they shall become, but, they shall be, one thing or stick in thine hand; they should no more appear to be two sticks, but one; and the characters written upon them, visible for every man to read. The old translation hath it, they shall be as one in thy hand. While he held them, they were as one, but, had he let them go, they had fallen asunder, and been two sticks as before.

Ver. 18. "And when the children of thy people shall speak unto thee, saying." In ver. 12, and 13, God had said, "O my people," he owned them for his: here he terms them the prophet's people, "the children of thy people." They were Ezekiel's people, because he was set of God a watchman over them, chap. iii. 17.

"Wilt thou not show us what thou meanest by these?" The Hebrew is, Wilt thou not show us what these things are to thee? So the Septuagint, What is thine intention in taking these sticks, and holding them in thine hand? what is the interpretation thereof? It is a riddle unto us; let us know the sense and meaning thereof.

Ver. 19. "Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows." "The stick of Joseph," that is, the tribe of Ephraim, which was in Jeroboam's hand, who was of that tribe; and not only that, but nine more were under him and his successors a long time, two hundred and sixty years, or thereabout. These ten tribes made up the kingdom of Israel, which was divided from the kingdom of Judah, and therefore are called Ephraim's fellows, not Judah's. All these represented by the stick God would take; and what would he do with them?

"And will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand." God would make these two sticks one, not one tribe, but one kingdom. They had been two kingdoms, at great enmity, and were at this time scattered abroad among the nations; but the Lord promises to gather them together, and to unite them so, that there shall not be a kingdom of Israel and a kingdom of Judah, but the stick of Ephraim shall be united to the stick of Judah: they should be but one stick, one kingdom, and one king, and that in the hand of the Lord; the Septuagint saith, in the hand of Judah.

Obs. 1. True types have God for the Author of them. God bade the prophet here take one stick and another stick, and write upon them; and thereby to type out the houses of Judah and Israel. Had he taken these of his own head, they had been nothing, bastardly types, not true types. When "Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah made him horns of iron," saying, "Thus saith the Lord, With these shalt thou push the Syrians, until thou have consumed them," 1 Kings xxii. 11: this was a bold presumption of him to make horns typical, without command from God. The event showed him to be a false prophet, and his type to be a lying type. It is peculiar unto God to make divine types.

Obs. 2. God can, and doth, make use of mean things to honourable purposes. Sticks are mean and contemptible things, trodden under foot; yet, God orders sticks here to be taken, written upon, to represent the two principal houses in the world, the house of Judah and the house of Israel, and their uniting together: here was high honour put upon these sticks. God made use of a tile to portray Jerusalem upon, Ezek. iv.; and of hair to type out his judgments, Ezek. v.; which was a great honour unto such despicable things. What honour did God put upon the brazen serpent, to represent Christ thereby? Numb. xxi. 9; John iii. 14. As God puts honour upon mean things, so upon mean persons; 1 Cor. i. 28, "The base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen; yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are." He exalted Gideon, and did great things by him, Judg. vi. God took Amos "an herdman, a gatherer of sycamore fruit," invested him with the honour of a prophet, Amos vii. 14, 15, and by him confounded Amaziah the priest of Bethel, and Jeroboam's chaplain.

Obs. 3. God hath a care of his people, be they in never so poor, broken, scattered, or despicable a condition. The house of Judah had been now in Babylon upon seventy years, the house of Israel two hundred and four years, if not more; they were despised of men, and seemed forgotten of God; but the Lord had them in remembrance, and bids the prophet write upon one stick, For Judah and his companions; and on another stick, For Joseph, Ephraim, or the house of Israel, and his companions; not one of them were out of God's thoughts. Their forefathers had been four hundred years in Egypt, were tyrannized over by cruel task-masters, looked upon as contemptible; but the Lord had an eye to them, cared and wrought for them. They have now lain sixteen hundred years in darkness, in a desolate and despised condition; yet doubtless they are not forgotten, God's thoughts are upon them to do them good again.

Obs. 4. Typical and obscure things will excite men to inquire after the sense of them. This is intimated in ver. 18, "When the children of thy people shall speak unto thee, saying, Wilt thou not show us what thou meanest by these?" God knew they would inquire. Common things are neglected; but things strange and mysterious are dived into, sought after. When Ezekiel was to dig through the wall, cover his face, and remove his stuff, then the people were stirred and said, "What doest thou?" chap. xii. 9. These typical actions bred inquisitiveness in their spirits. When the Lord Christ spake parables, they sought to him to know the sense and meaning of them.

Obs. 5. God is pleased to direct his prophets and servants what to say unto the people, when they come to question with them about things. If this people come to Ezekiel to know what he meant by the two sticks, his writing upon them, and holding them in his hand, the Lord tells him what he shall say unto them; "Say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim," &c. When God sent Moses unto the people, he was timorous lest he should not know what to say to the people, how to answer their questions; but see how God directs and instructs him. Exod. iii. 13, 14, "Moses said unto God, Behold, when I come unto the children of Israel, and shall say unto them, The God of your fathers hath sent me unto you; and they shall say unto me, What is his name? what shall I say unto them?" I know not how to answer that question. See what now follows: "And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM: and he said, Thus shalt thou say, I AM hath sent me unto you." Thus God taught him what answer to give the people. So, Ezek. xiv. when the elders came to inquire somewhat of Ezekiel, God told him what answer to give them. It was given in of God, by his Spirit, to the apostles, what answer to give governors and rulers, when they were brought before them, Matt. x. 19.

Ver. 20—22. And the sticks whereon thou writest shall be in thine hand before their eyes. And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all.

The explication of the typical sticks is laid down in these and the subsequent verses.

Ver. 20. "And the sticks whereon thou writest shall be in thine hand before their eyes." The prophet was not to do this privately, but to write upon the sticks, and to hold them in his hand, so that all might see them, and hereby be provoked to inquire what the mystery of them was, and so become partakers of the consolation intended thereby.

Ver. 21. "Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone." In this verse is promised the reduction of the twelve tribes, comprehended under these words, "the children of Israel," out of all countries where they were scattered into their own land. Not only Judah and Benjamin should be gathered up, and brought into Canaan again, but the rest of the tribes also. This is a great and gracious promise.

"And will gather them on every side." The ten tribes being carried away by Shalmaneser, were placed "in Halah and Habor by the river Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes," 2 Kings xvii. 6; they were seated in the utmost parts of his dominions, north and east; and the other Jews whom Nebuchadnezzar led away captive, were scattered up and down his manifold provinces, as appears, Esth. iii. 8. Now God would look on every side, and gather them up out of all quarters.

Ver. 22. "And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel." Being brought into their land, here God adds three great promises more. The first is, uniting of them into one nation, who had some hundreds of years been divided, and at bitter enmity one against another.

"And one king shall be king to them all." After the division made by Jeroboam, you read of several kings they had, kings of Judah, and kings of Israel. There were two kingdoms, and divers kings of them both; but the kingdoms being united into one, the Lord promiseth them not a succession of kings over them, but one king to rule over them both; they should be one kingdom, and have one king. This is the second great promise.

"And they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all." This is the third promise, and it is a great one also, viz. they shall continue a kingdom, one kingdom, and never be torn or rent in pieces any more; there shall be no Rehoboams or Jeroboams to cause divisions in it.

It will add some light to the words under consideration, if we make inquiry, Whether the type of the two sticks be fulfilled, by the incorporating of the two nations into one, and making of them one kingdom?

It is affirmed by some, that this hieroglyphical prophecy was fulfilled at the return of the two tribes out of Babylon. For then Cyrus king of Persia made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, to this purpose; "Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, All the kingdoms of the earth hath the Lord God of heaven given me; and he hath charged me to build him an house in Jerusalem, which is in Judah. Who is there among you of all his people? The Lord his God be with him, and let him go up." 2 Chron. xxxvi. 22, 23. The proclamation excepts no persons, no tribes, but gives full liberty unto all. The ten tribes having been two hundred and four years, or thereabouts, in captivity, it is likely were weary of their condition, and so willing to return into their own country, and so they took the opportunity before them. For it is evident, that some of the ten tribes did return to Jerusalem. Of the Levites there were seventy-four, Ezra ii. 40; Neh. vii. 43; and of the priests, who were of that tribe, as appears, 1 Chron. xxiv. 1, 2, 7; Exod. vi. 16, 18, 20; and Neh. vii. 39, there were nine hundred and seventy-three. Paul was of the tribe of Benjamin, Phil. iii. 5; "Anna, the daughter of Phannel, of the tribe of Aser," Luke ii. 36. And Paul speaks of the twelve tribes as present in his days at Jerusalem, Acts xxvi. 7. Others think not all this which is said sufficient to prove the union of the two sticks, and so of the two houses of Judah and Ephraim: for of all that returned, there were but forty-two thousand three hundred and sixty, beside servants and maids, whose number amounted to seven thousand three hundred and thirty-seven, as it is, Ezra ii. 64, 65; whereof both Hebrews and other authors observe, there were ten thousand out of the other ten tribes, which is an inconsiderable number for so many tribes, whereas there were thirty-two thousand out of two or three tribes. Besides, it is not clear that those ten thousand were out of the other tribes; for neither Ezra nor Nehemiah do specify so much in the catalogues they make of these returned. Doubtless, had such a number returned out of any, or each of the tribes, as had been considerable, they would have taken notice thereof, and mentioned the tribe, or tribes, and spoken of the uniting of them: for it is said here, "the sticks shall be in thine hand before their eyes;" the union would have been visible and observable by them all, had it then been. Some few of the tribes, it is possible, did return, and of them Paul speaks, Acts xxvi. 7. The bulk and body of them stayed behind, being increased in two hundred years to an innumerable company; and the Jews say, they are shut up in the Caspian mountains, from whence they shall come forth in due time. Manasseh Ben Israel, with Montezinus, say, the ten tribes were the first inhabitants of America, and that they lie hid behind the mountains of Cordillere.

It is the opinion, if not the faith, of many, that the two sticks representing the two houses of Judah and Israel, are yet to be united and made one; and the great reason for it is, because they have not had one king, one shepherd, viz. David, by whom is meant the Messiah, to reign over them. This is that Hosea points at, chap. i. 11, where he saith, "The children of Judah and the children of Israel shall be gathered together, and appoint themselves one head, and they shall come up out of the land." The "head" spoken of by Hosea, is not Zerubbabel, but the same that our prophet speaks of, viz. David, by whom is meant the Messiah; of which mind is Manasseh Ben Israel, who saith, The In his Epist. to the Hope of Israel. Sect. 25. ten tribes never returned to the second temple, that they there keep the law of Moses and the sacred rites, and at last shall return into their land, with the two tribes Judah and Benjamin, and shall be governed by one prince, who is the Messiah, the Son of David. - If it be said, this was made good when Christ was born, and lived at Jerusalem, this will not suffice; for, "He came unto his own, and they received him not," John i. 11. The people of Israel were against Christ, Acts iv. 27; they would not have him to reign over them, Luke xix. 14; they owned no king but Caesar, and cried, "Crucify him," John xix. And for their crucifying of him, they were scattered, and the wrath of God came upon them to the utmost, 1 Thess. ii. 16. Had the two houses been united, they would themselves have appointed and chosen Christ to have been their Head, continued still undivided and unscattered, submitting to his government, and observing his laws, as it is ver. 24 of this chapter; for, when Christ takes his government upon him, he must rule for ever, Luke i. 33.

There is a place in Zechariah very observable; it is in chap. x. 6-9, "I will strengthen the house of Judah." They of this house were come already to Judea, and Zechariah with them; they were upon building the second temple: now see what follows: "and I will save the house of Joseph, and I will bring them again to place them; for I have mercy upon them; and they shall be as though I had not cast them off: for I am the Lord their God, and will hear them. And they of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man, and their heart shall rejoice as through wine: yea, their children shall see it, and be glad; their heart shall rejoice in the Lord. I will hiss for them, and gather them; for I have redeemed them: and they shall increase as they have increased. And I will sow them among the people: and they shall remember me in far countries; and they shall live with their children, and turn again."

Here you may clearly see two things:

1. That the house of Joseph and Ephraim did not return with the house of Judah.

2. That God hath promised to gather and bring them out of those places where they are scattered; which must be accomplished in its time.

It is no heresy to say, Christ meant the ten tribes when he said, John x. 16, "Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd." Christ here alludes to this 37th of Ezekiel, ver. 22 and 24.

Obs. 1. The conversion of the Jews we may warrantably expect and pray for. God hath promised to gather the children of Israel, and to bring them to David their king, that is, Christ: I will gather them out of every side; I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen whither they be gone; and one king shall rule over them. Seeing God hath promised to do it, we may believe and pray for the same. This conversion of the Jews will be not of some few particulars, but national, though not of every one belonging to the nation. Hos. iii. 5, "The children of Israel shall return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days:" there will be a very general, glorious, and visible return of them; they will prove eminent christians, fearing the Lord and his goodness. Paul hints unto you, that there is a time when the veil shall be taken off the heart of the Jews, and they turn unto the Lord, 2 Cor. iii. 15, 16. And John in his Revelation tells you of a hundred and forty-four thousand which were sealed out of all the tribes of the children of Israel, chap. vii. 4. These were of the Jewish race, who were godly and converted; for, ver. 9, it is said, "A great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, people, kindreds, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands." These were of the gentiles, as the other of the Jews. If any one doubt this point, let him read and ponder thoroughly what is in Rom. xi. from the beginning of the 11th verse to the 32nd.

Obs. 2. When the Jews are converted they shall repossess the land of Canaan. God "will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land." Hos. i. 10, "It shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people, there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God." This is spoken of the land of Canaan; there he did disown them, and there he would own them again. Testimony to this truth gives Jeremiah, chap. l. 4, 5, "In those days, and in that time, saith the Lord, the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together, going and weeping: they shall go and seek the Lord their God. They shall ask the way to Zion with their faces thitherward, saying, Come, and let us join ourselves to the Lord in a perpetual covenant." That in Isa. ii. 2, 3, speaks to the same purpose; and most clearly that, Isa. xi. 11, "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Patiros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea." And in ver. 12, "And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." Here is mention of a second gathering of them from Assyria, which hath not yet been fulfilled; but shall, when the Lamb will stand upon mount Zion, with his one hundred and forty-four thousand sealed out of all the tribes, Rev. xiv. 1; vii. 4. Consider Isa. lxxv. 17-22.

Obs. 3. The Lord knows how to, and can, reconcile divided nations. "I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel." The Jews were divided into two nations, or kingdoms; there was the kingdom of Israel and the kingdom of Judah; and they were at great enmity, such enmity that they would have no commerce one with another, John iv. 9. The ten tribes went under the name of Samaritans, the other were called Jews. They were of divers religions, ver. 22. They had their calves at Dan and Bethel; the true worship was at Jerusalem. The enmity grew so great between them, that they were at open wars, and sought the destruction of one another. Those of Israel and Samaria slew in Judah one hundred and twenty thousand valiant men in one day, and carried away captive of their brethren two hundred thousand women, sons and daughters, and those they slew was in a rage which reached up to heaven, 2 Chron. xxviii. 6, 8, 9. Now, notwithstanding all the rage, fury, enmity, bitterness which was in them, one against another, God knows how to reconcile them, and make them one nation, one people; so that "Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim." Isa. xi. 13, but they shall agree, and cordially love one another. The Jews and gentiles were at a greater distance than the Jews amongst themselves, yet God knew how to reconcile them, and did it, Eph. ii. 12-16.

Ver. 23. Neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions; but I will save them out of all their dwelling- places, wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them: so shall they be my people, and I will be their God.

In this verse there lieth before us,

I. The renouncing of their idolatrous ways and other evils.

II. Deliverance of them from the places they were captive in.

III. Spiritual cleansing, or sanctification of them.

IV. Renewal of the covenant between them and God.

"Neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols." The Jews were much addicted to idolatry; no sooner were they out of Egypt, but they parted with their earrings to make a calf, Exod. xxxii. 24. When they were in the wilderness they joined themselves to Baal-peor, Numb. xxv. 3. In time of the Judges, when in the land of Canaan, they served other gods, Judg. x. 13. And after the rent of Jeroboam, the ten tribes did worship the calves at Dan and Bethel, 1 Kings xii. 29, 30. Judah also trod in the same steps, committing adultery with stones and with stocks, Jer. iii. 8, 9. But when they should be united into one nation and kingdom again, Israel should cease from her calves, and Judah from her idols; they should no more go a whoring after them, whereby they defiled themselves and the land.

"Nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions." Sanctius thinks these three words, "idols, detestable things, transgressions," to signify one and the same thing, to set forth the sinfulness of idols and false religions; they are detestable, and cause the greatest breaches between God and men. The word for "transgression" is, pesha, which notes apostasy, rebellion, a proud and malicious violating of a command. We may by "transgressions" here, understand not only their idolatries, but their other capital and crying sins. When God pleases to call and convert the Jews, and form them into one nation, then they shall loathe themselves and their former doings.

"But I will save them out of all their dwelling-places, wherein they have sinned." They were scattered up and down into divers countries, and into several parts in those countries, where they settled themselves, and sinned by conforming to the heathen amongst whom they dwelt, Ezek. xx. 32; Jer. xlv. 8. But in what countries soever they were, the Lord would have an eye to them and deliver them.

"And will cleanse them." The word in Hebrew for cleansing is, טָהַר, which is contrary to טָמַא signifying to defile, pollute; and, because a thing defiled hath lost its beauty, some make taher to import shining or beautiful cleansing; for, when the filth of things is taken away, there is a splendour and beauty. God saith here, he will cleanse them; that is, from their idolatry, and other sins, by the blood of Christ, and by his Holy Spirit.

"So shall they be my people, and I will be their God." Now they lie in a desolate condition, and are looked at as cast off of God: yea, themselves conclude, they are cut off from me, ver. 11. But when they are gathered out of the countries where they are dispersed, and cleansed from their iniquities, then will I manifest to all the world, that they are my people, and that I am their God. They themselves shall see and know it; they shall acknowledge me to be their God, and I will acknowledge them to be my people. The covenant between us shall be renewed and manifested.

Obs. 1. From the two verses before this, and the next, That when God begins to show mercy to his people afflicted, he multiplies mercies upon them. He would take them from among the heathen, bring them into their own land, make them one nation, set one king over them, continue them in the same condition, take their hearts off from idols, cleanse them from their defilements, take them into covenant with himself, give them David to be their king, and keep them in doing of his will. Here is a series of many and great mercies. The like you had, chap. xxxvi. 24—30; so Jer. xxxii. 37—41. When God is in a way of judgments, he adds judgment to judgment, plague unto plague, as you may read, Lev. xxvi. 18, 21, 28. And when he is in a way of mercy, he adds mercy to mercy, as appears in the same chapter, ver. 4—13.

Obs. 2. False religious ways of worship are so far from advantaging men, that they do defile them. The Jews thought to better themselves by conforming to the religion and worship of the heathens; but thereby they defiled themselves. And what is the favour or wealth of heathens, when the conscience is defiled before God? Many, among papists, when they have sinned, run to their golden, silver, brass, stony, and wooden gods, thinking by offering unto them to be purged from their sins, whereas thereby they do more deeply defile themselves.

Obs. 3. When people afflicted receive choice mercies from God, then they will take heed of and renounce former defilements. "Neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions." When I shall show them kindness, and load them with mercies, they will consider what offended me, and cease from it: then they will know me and my ways, and walk in the same, abhorring idols. Hos. xiv. 8, "Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols?" When mercy comes, it melts the heart, makes a divorce between it and its idols, its beloved sins; then it will have to do no more with heart or house idols, nor with any transgressions.

Obs. 4. God knows the dwellings of men, wherever they dwell, and the sins they commit in their dwellings. These Jews were some in Egypt, some in Babylon, some in Media and Persia, 2 Kings xvii. 6; yet he took notice of all their dwelling-places, wherein they had sinned. There is not a cottage in the wilderness, nor a closet in the city, nor a dungeon in the earth, but the Lord knows the same, and what sins are acted there night and day. Rev. ii. 13, "I know thy works and where thou dwellest:" so saith God of Pergamos, and may say it of every man, family, church, and nation, I know thy sins, and where thou dwellest. Neither we nor our sins are hid from God, dwell we in Canaan or in Babylon. Let us look well to ourselves and to our ways: for, wherever we dwell, whatever we are or do, God's eye is constantly upon us.

Obs. 5. Deliverance out of afflicted and sinful conditions is from the Lord himself. "I will save them out of all their dwelling-places, wherein they have sinned." They were captives in Babylon, and other places; there they sinned, and sinned greatly; and who but God could deliver them either from their sins, or their captivity? Amos ix. 14, "I will bring again the captivity of my people." God could break their bonds, change the laws of the Medes and Persians, alter times and seasons, remove all impediments, and set his people at liberty. Psal. cvii. 19, "He saveth them out of their distresses." When men are distressed at sea, or land, if ever they get out of those distresses, it is by the hand of the Lord, he saveth them. He is the Saviour of Israel in the time of trouble, Jer. xiv. 8. He saveth from uncleanness, Ezek. xxxvi. 29. Salvation from affliction, or from sin, belongs to God, and to him alone, and he challengeth it to himself: Isa. xliii. 11, "I, even I, am the Lord; and beside me there is no Saviour."

Obs. 6. It is the Lord who makes defiled persons clean. They were defiled with idols, detestable things, and transgressions; and what saith the Lord? I will cleanse you. When a house was defiled with leprosy, the priest was to cleanse it with blood and water, Lev. xiv. 52. And when men are defiled, the Lord cleanseth them with blood and water; with the blood of his Son, 1 John i. 7, and with the water of his Spirit, John vii. 38, 39: these are the hyssop with which God cleanseth sinners. Pharisees may cleanse the outside, but it is God that cleanseth inside and outside. Jer. xxxiii. 8, "I will cleanse them from all their iniquity whereby they have sinned against me; and I will pardon all their iniquities, whereby they have sinned." When God justifies and sanctifies a sinner, then is a sinner cleansed indeed, inwardly and outwardly, 1 Cor. vi. 11.

Obs. 7. God takes pleasure in a cleansed people, and owns them for his. "So shall they be my people, and I will be their God;" that is, when they should be cleansed. God hath no delight in polluted ones; he is a holy God, and delights in holy ones. David assures you hereof, when he propounds the question, Psal. xxiv. 3, "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his holy place?" and gives answer, ver. 4, "He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully." Such a man, and such a people, God delights to have in his presence; but the wicked, whatever they be, he puts away like dross, Psal. cxix. 119. The refiner takes pleasure in the pure metal cleansed from the dross; the one he prizeth, the other he rejects.

Ver. 24, 25. And David my servant shall be king over them; and they all shall have one shepherd: they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them. And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children for ever: and my servant David shall be their prince for ever.

Great promises are made unto the house of Judah and house of Israel, being united.

I. Of a king, called "David," ver. 24.

II. Of holiness, "they shall also walk," &c. ibid.

III. Of inheriting the land for ever, ver. 25.

IV. Of having the same king rule over them for ever.

Ver. 24. "And David my servant shall be king over them." By "David" Zerubbabel cannot be meant, for he was not a king; and had he been so, yet he was not their prince for ever, as it is said of this "David." "David" is here put for Christ, which the Holy Scripture doth frequently, as Ezek. xxxiv. 23; Hos. iii. 5; Isa. xxxvii. 35; 2 Kings xix. 34; Jer. xxx. 9. And that you may clearly see it is so, compare Isa. lv. 3, where mention is made of "the sure mercies of David," with Acts xiii. 34, and there it is interpreted of Christ: so that, in Amos ix. 11, "The tabernacle of David," refers to Christ, Acts xv. 16. So then, this "David" is the Lord Christ, who is so called, both because he descended from his loins, Rom. i. 3; whereupon he is oft called "The Son of David," Matt. i. 1; xv. 22; Mark xii. 35; and because David was a type of him in his slaying Goliath, and in his kingly and prophetic office. It is not said here, Abraham my servant, or

Jacob my servant, shall be their king, although Christ descended from their loins, as well and really as from David's; but it is said, "David my servant shall be their king;" and the reason is, because David was king over Israel and Judah, which they were not, and the first godly king they had.

"My servant." David did serve the Lord, and fulfilled all his will, Acts xiii. 22; and so Christ was his servant, Isa. liii. 13, "Behold, my servant shall deal prudently," and he did so; for he fulfilled all righteousness, Matt. iii. 15; and did the will of him that sent him, John iv. 34; being in the form of a servant, Phil. ii. 7.

"And shall be king over them." The Jews had many kings: some were very good, as David, Solomon, Jehoshaphat, Hezekiah, Josiah, &c.; but none of them like unto this king, the Lord Christ. The sceptre of his kingdom is a sceptre of righteousness, Heb. i. 8. Other kings had crooked sceptres, and much oppression was in their government; but Christ's sceptre is a righteous sceptre, and none shall be oppressed thereby: "Righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins," Isa. xi. 5; "he will break in pieces the oppressor," Psal. lxxii. 4. The Lord tells you in Jeremiah, what a king this king should be: chap. xxiii. 5, "I will raise unto David a righteous branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute justice and judgment in the earth;" so, Psal. xlv. 4, "In thy majesty ride prosperously, because of truth and meekness and righteousness." Most kings of the earth, because they were false, rigid, unrighteous, did not prosper; but Christ, because of truth, should be trusted; because of meekness, should be loved; because of righteousness, should be honoured, and so should prosper.

"And they shall have one shepherd." Of these words hath been spoken, chap. xxxiv. 23. King and shepherd are here equivalent. They should not have many shepherds, as formerly, who destroyed them, Jer. xii. 10, but "one shepherd;" that is, one better than them all: one transcendent, and incomparable, a Shepherd after God's own heart, who should "feed them with knowledge and understanding," Jer. iii. 15; who should "gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and gently lead those which are with young," Isa. xl. 11.

"They shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them." In chap. xxxvi. 27, you had these words: only here "judgments" are mentioned before "statutes," and there "statutes" are set before "judgments." The meaning is, They shall no more live after the courses of men, or imaginations of their own hearts, but they should consult with the word of God, and frame their lives according to it; they shall trust no longer in their legal performances, but look at David their king, and call him "The Lord our righteousness."

Some look upon this promise of David to be king over the Jews, as accomplished in the reign of Christ the Messiah when here on earth; for he gave out his commands then, and required obedience unto them. Matt. xxviii. 18—20, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Christ manifests himself here to be King of the Jews, and of all nations.

Others are of a different judgment, and do believe that this great promise made here to the two houses of Judah and Israel, remains yet to be performed:

I. Because the two houses are not yet united into one, as hath formerly been shown, which may further appear from that in Hosea, chap. iii. 4, 5, "The children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without teraphim. Afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days." This prophecy refers to the latter days, which are the days after Christ, not before Christ; and if the two houses were united before Christ's coming in the flesh, and so he King over them, as the promise is here, how did the "sceptre depart from Judah, and a lawgiver from between his feet?" In Gen. xlix. 10, the promise is, it should not be so till Shiloh, that is, the Messiah, should come, and then it should; but if the Messiah were King in Israel, King over both houses united into one, the sceptre did not depart, but was advanced. This knot must be untied, before we can be of their mind who say, this prophecy and promise was at Christ's first coming fulfilled.

2. Because the Jews do not own Christ; neither one house nor the other do it; neither Judah nor Israel acknowledged Christ to be the Messiah. The Jews said, he had a devil, John viii. 52; they sought to kill him, chap. vii. 1; they counsel together to put him to death, chap. xi. 53; when Pilate said, "Behold your king!" they cried, "Away with him, crucify him," chap. xix. 14, 15; they persecuted all them who did adhere unto him, 1 Thess. ii. 15, 16.

3. The Jews have been, and are still, under many kings and shepherds. Some are under heathenish, some under christian kings; but when this scripture is fulfilled, they shall be under none but Christ: "one king shall be king to them all," ver. 22; "David my servant shall be king over them, and they shall have one shepherd."

4. They shall then walk in the ways of Christ, not in the ways of Moses. The Jews every where, to this day, stick unto Moses, and reject the gospel, as in the apostles' days, Acts xiii. 45; xviii. 5, 6; but when this promise is fulfilled, then "they shall walk in my judgments, observe my statutes, and do them, saith the Lord;" that is, those laws and rules which God should give out by Christ for their government: and so the name and worship of God and Christ should be one, Zech. xiv. 9; that is, between Jews and gentiles.

For the scripture, and argument used out of it, Matt. xxviii. 18—20.

1. Take another scripture showing Christ came not to be a king, and reign, at his first coming; it is, Matt. xx. 28, "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister;" he came not to sit in a throne, to take upon him the state of a prince, to exercise dominion and authority, to be attended with a life-guard and ministers of state; he came not to assume any thing king-like: but he came in the "form of a servant," Phil. ii. 7, to minister unto, and serve others; yea, to do the meanest office belonging to a servant, as, the washing of his disciples' feet, John xiii. 12.

2. The place in Matthew speaks of that power which was given unto Christ after his death and resurrection, and so was the fruit and purchase of the same. He speaks not of that power which he had as God, nor of that which he had as man; but of that he had as Redeemer of men, and obtained by his sufferings and resurrection, saith Maldonate. It is clear, then, Christ was not King over the Jews before his death, because he had not his power then; and how he was their King afterward, when he quickly left the world and went up into heaven, I desire to learn.

3. The power and laws here mentioned, are spiritual, and refer to the spiritual kingdom of Christ, viz. his church; as, "Teach all nations, and baptize them in the name," &c. These are spiritual laws and ordinances, proceeding from that power Christ had given him, to gather out of all nations those he had redeemed by his death. Here he appoints means for the gathering, preserving, and ruling his church. But this is not the power our prophet speaks of; that is a political power, such as David had, and therefore it is said, He shall sit in the throne of David his father, Luke i. 32; Acts ii. 30. David's throne was an external, visible, political throne: Christ's throne in heaven, his throne in the hearts of believers, his throne in the church, is not the throne of David. You may judge what kind of throne David's was, by Jer. xiii. 13; xvii. 25; xxii. 4, 30; 1 Kings ii. 12, 24. When David, Solomon, and others, sat in that throne, they put men to death, and made wars, which Christ did not when he was here on earth.

Ver. 25. "And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt." This is spoken of the ten tribes, together with Judah and Benjamin, who should return from their captivity, and repossess the land of Canaan. That Judah and Benjamin did, is clear from the Scriptures, and granted on all sides; but that the ten tribes returned is generally denied, and expected to this day to be made good. The promise here is, That the whole body of the Jews, even the house of Judah, and the house of Israel, shall come thither and dwell there: Jer. iii. 18, "In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers:" see Jer. i. 45; Ezek. ix. 9; Jer. xxx. 3. Let not man think, because Christ hath said, Matt. xxiii. 38, "Your house is left unto you desolate," that therefore there is no hope of their returning to their land; for this is not spoken of the ten tribes; they were not there at Jerusalem: and, Rev. xiv. 1, "The Lamb stood on mount Zion, with an hundred forty and four thousand," which were gathered out of all the tribes of Israel; and the time is coming when the Jews shall see Christ, and say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord," Matt. xxiii. 39.

"And they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children for ever." Not only will God bring them into their land, but continue them and theirs therein for ever. The house of Judah, after her return from Babylon, continued in the land of promise some six hundred years: for, from the time of Cyrus's proclamation to Christ was five hundred and sixty; and about forty years after the death of Christ, was Jerusalem destroyed, and the Jews wholly scattered. These six hundred years the house of Judah and her children enjoyed, but they fall short of what is promised here unto both houses, viz. inheriting of the land for ever.

"And my servant David shall be their prince for ever." David was dead long before. Messiah, the Lord Christ, is pointed out by "David," who should be their prince, and rule them as David did. David was meek and gentle in his government, 1 Chron. xxviii. 2; faithful and wise, Psal. lxxviii. 72; righteous and just, 2 Sam. viii. 15. Such a king shall Christ be, Psal. xlv. 4; Isa. xi. 4, 5; Jer. xxiii. 5. And whereas David's kingdom was for a time, some forty years, the kingdom of Christ shall have no end, he shall be their Prince for ever. All the kings the Jews ever had reigned not five hundred years, it was about four hundred and ninety-three; but this Prince should exceed them all, Luke i. 33.

Obs. 1. There is a time wherein Christ must reign over the Jews, they must be gathered into one body, and Christ must be their King. "David my servant shall be king over them;" not only in a special way, which hitherto he hath not been, but also in a visible, political way, for he must sit in the throne of David. Hence it is that Christ said, Luke xxii. 29, unto his apostles, "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me;" he doth not say he had a kingdom, but that a kingdom was appointed them, and such a kingdom as should be visible; for, ver. 30, it follows, "that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." There are no tables, no eating, no drinking, no tribes, no judging of them in heaven. In Matt. xix. 28, Christ speaks of twelve thrones, wherein the apostles shall sit and rule the twelve tribes of Israel, together with himself, being in the throne of his glory. And when shall this be? In the regeneration, when the Jews shall be regenerate, when the time of restitution of all things shall be. For the words should be rendered thus, They which have followed me, and there stop: "In the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory," &c. then shall the twelve tribes be there, I be their King, and you judges or rulers under me. Grotius reads the words so, and conceives them to be spoken of the kingdom of Christ, whose kingdom shall not be of Jews only, but of gentiles also; they shall be under this King: Psal. lxxii. 11, "All kings shall fall down before him; all nations shall serve him;" so that "the Lord shall be king over all the earth," Zech. xiv. 9.

Obs. 2. There shall be no changes and alterations in the kingdom of Christ by succession of princes; there they all shall have one Shepherd, one Prince. We see great changes in kingdoms, where they have king after king, be it by election or succession. When Rehoboam succeeded Solomon, what tumults and stirs were then in the house of David! so afterwards in the house of Joseph, when Baasha and Jehu were chosen kings. There shall be no such thing here; one Shepherd shall they have, who shall rule them with righteousness, and feed them with knowledge, Isa. xl. 11; he shall deal like a good shepherd by them, Ezek. xxxiv. 23.

Obs. 3. The subjects of Christ's kingdom shall be holy: "They shall walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them." They who do the will of God, they who keep his laws, they are innocent, undefiled, Psal. cxix. 1; they are holy ones. The one hundred and forty-four thousand which stood with the Lamb on mount Zion were virgins, without guile, without fault before the throne of God, Rev. xiv. 1, 4, 5. Isa. lx. 21, "Thy people shall be all righteous;" see Zech. xiv. 20, 21, "There shall be no Canaanites then in the house of the Lord of hosts." Then shall be the "new heavens and new earth, wherein shall dwell righteousness," 2 Pet. iii. 14; that is, righteous persons, such as shall do righteous things; for there shall be no exacting, no violence, no destruction, but salvation and praise, Isa. lx. 17, 18; there shall "the righteous flourish," Psal. lxxii. 7.

Obs. 4. We ought to think and speak honourably of the patriarchs, prophets, apostles, and saints of God. God thought and spoke honourably of David, of Jacob; he calls them his "servants;" that is an honourable title which he gives them.

Obs. 5. The Jews and their posterity shall inherit their land again, become a kingdom, and continue so under Christ for ever. "They, and their children, and their children's children, shall dwell in the land, and my servant David shall be their prince for ever." All other kingdoms have been shaken, broken, but this shall abide. Daniel speaks of it in his 2nd chapter, ver. 44, "The God of heaven shall set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever." Rev. xi. 15, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever."

Ver. 26, 27. Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them; and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore. My tabernacle also shall be with them: yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

Here are more promises given forth to the houses of Judah and Joseph, being gathered out of the nations, and united into one house. As,

- I. Of a "covenant of peace."
- II. Of placing or disposing them.
- III. Of multiplying of them.
- IV. Of God's dwelling amongst them.

Ver. 26. "Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them." The Hebrew is, I will strike or cut a covenant with them. כרת signifies, to cut, and to cut off by death: 1 Sam. xxxi. 9, the Philistines cut off Saul's head; and, 1 Sam. xxviii. 9, Saul cut off those who had familiar spirits, and the wizards out of the land; also to cut off from place and power, as 1 Sam. ii. 33; but when it is joined with כרת it always signifies, to strike or make a covenant; because it was a custom when they made covenants to kill some beast or other, cut it in the midst, and pass between the parts thereof; manifesting, by so doing, that if they break covenant, they deserved to be cut in pieces, Gen. xv. 9, 10, 17; Jer. xxxiv. 18. This practice was among the heathens, who cut a swine in pieces, passed between them, and so made covenants. The covenant here which God would make with the two houses, was a "covenant of peace."

The word for "peace" is, שלום by which the Hebrews understand not only outward quietness, but all kind of outward happiness. Whatsoever they count in the number of good things, and desirable, that they comprehend under the name of peace; and when they wish all happiness to a man, they wish him peace. Maldonate tells us, that the "covenant of peace" here, is the gospel, wherein we see Christ hath pacified all things by the blood of his cross, Col. 1. 20. And Lavater saith it is called a "covenant of peace," because by the merit of Christ peace between God and us was effected; not only outward but inward peace. The Jews had some peace at their return out of Babylon, but, in the time of the Maccabees, they had long, bitter, and bloody wars. When Christ came, there was peace for a time, but not long after his death, they and their nation were destroyed by the Romans. The "covenant of peace" here is promised to the two houses, who were not then, but still are to be united; and when they shall be united, God will make good his promise, he will strike a "covenant of peace" with them, which shall not be for a few years; but, as it follows,

"It shall be an everlasting covenant with them." God will not make a truce with them for days, months, and years, but a covenant for ever. The Jews opposed Christ when he came first, and had little outward or inward peace; but, when he shall peace. Verg.

Æneid, lib. 8.

reign over both houses, they shall have everlasting peace.

“And I will place them.” In the original it is, I will give them. Piseator confesses he doth not understand the sense of these words. Ghappe saith this is it, I will place them in the holy land. Vatablus is of the same mind, interpreting them thus, I will place them in my land. The Chaldee is, I will bless them. And Mariana, to that purpose, saith, I will give them a blessing. The Vulgate is, fundabo eos; which Pinus expounds thus, I will place them in a firm land, where they shall have a solid foundation. Œcolampadius more fully, I will give them to Christ, whom I have promised to be a blessing to the nations; which sense I conceive the best, for he spake in the verse before of dwelling in the land where their fathers dwelt: in that land God would give them to Christ.

“And multiply them.” This multiplication is not only in a natural sense to be taken, but in a spiritual also. Their increase will be great, and they shall be believers. Suitable to which is that in Isa. liv. 13, “All thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children.”

“And will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore.” The word for “my sanctuary” is, מקדש which Montanus renders, my sanctification; the Chaldee, and others, call it, my sanctuary; the Septuagint hath it, my holy things; Mariana saith, my church. After the return of Judah and Benjamin from captivity, they had the temple rebuilt, which in process of time was utterly destroyed; but here the Lord speaks of setting his sanctuary in the midst of the two houses; being united, God will have his church and worship eminently amongst them. Œcolampadius saith, They shall not be without a divine temple, viz. Christ Jesus, he shall be the temple amongst them, Rev. xxi. 22; and as he shall be their prince for ever, so shall he be their temple and sanctuary for ever.

Ver. 27. “My tabernacle also shall be with them.” My dwelling shall be with them. משכן signifies, habitaculum, a dwelling-place. God assures them here, that though the temple should be destroyed, yet, when Judah and Israel should be united, they should have a temple and tabernacle not subject to destruction. These words receive light from John xxi. 1—3, that when he “saw the new heaven and the new earth, and new Jerusalem coming down from God,” then he “heard a voice saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them.” What John had in vision lies yet under expectation for fulfilling.

“Yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people.” The Hebrew is, I will be to them for a God, and they shall be to me for a people. Now, I am as no God unto them, and they are as no people unto me; I have no true worship from them, they have no special favour from me; but I will be to them for a God eminently; and they shall be to me for a people eminently: they shall own me for their God in a singular manner, and so will I own them for my people.

From these two verses I shall only give you this observation, That there are great and precious promises, which concern the Jews, yet unperformed. The everlasting covenant of peace, Christ's being their king and temple, with many other, the Jews expect the fulfilling of; and so may we, for God is faithful and will make good his word; and the performance of them may be nearer at hand than is apprehended by most: for one saith understandingly, “God hath, in our days, arrested the Turk's greatness; and abated the formidableness of the German-Austrian beast; revealed in a good measure the hypocrisy and lies of the false prophet, who hath his seat at Rome, and hath brought to light the subtleties of Satan, who had shifted himself into several dresses of pretended reformation. He is risen up like a mighty giant against his enemies; amongst us, and elsewhere, he hath pleaded his people's cause so signally, that all those but whose judgment it is to be wilfully blind, will say, ‘The Lord is on our side,’” &c.

Ver. 28. And the heathen shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them for evermore.

The end of God's dealing so with the Jews, is here laid down, viz. conviction of the heathen.

“I the Lord do sanctify Israel.” God is said to sanctify, 1. When he separates things from a common to a holy use, as time, Joel i. 14, and the vessels of the temple itself. 2. When he makes persons really holy, as Lev. xxi. 23, “I the Lord do sanctify them;” that is, I do make them holy. Both these ways of sanctifying may be the sense of this place. God would separate them from the heathens, take them to be his people, give them the means, and make them effectual to their sanctification.

“When my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them for evermore.” The Hebrew is, when my sanctification. The Septuagint, when my holy things shall be in the midst of them. When Christ shall be their King, set up his ways and worship amongst them, then they shall be sanctified. So Œcolampadius, When Christ is with his, and gives them his word, there all are sanctified which belong unto him.

Obs. When the two houses are united, and have Christ amongst them with his word and worship, they shall be holy; and so holy, that heathens shall be convinced that God is their Sanctifier, that he doth sanctify Israel: see Zech. xiv. 20, 21; Joel iii. 17; Rev. xxi. 27.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

Ver. 1—7. And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, set thy face against Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal, and prophesy against him, and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal: and I will turn thee back, and put hooks into thy jaws, and I will bring thee forth, and all thine army, horses and horsemen, all of them clothed with all sorts of armour, even a great company with bucklers and shields, all of them handling swords: Persia, Ethiopia, and Libya with them; all of them with shield and helmet: Gomer, and all his bands; the house of Togarmah of the north quarters, and all his bands: and many people with thee. Be thou prepared, and prepare for thyself, thou, and all thy company that are assembled unto thee, and be thou a guard unto them.

This chapter and the next do treat of “Gog” and “Magog,” who were nations against the people of God. This chapter is a prophecy against “Gog;” wherein is set forth,

Mr. Wall, in his Considerations of the Jews' Conversion.

I. What, and by whom, the people of God were to suffer, to the 18th verse.

II. God's dealings with "Gog," and the event thereof, to the end of the chapter.

Lest the Jews should presently have looked for the fulfilling of those great promises in the former chapter, concerning the uniting the two houses, and Messiah to be their King, and the great privileges they should have thereby, he tells them here of great calamities which they must look for, of sad times, and heavy judgments which should befall their enemies. This in general: now to things more particular.

Ver. 2. "Son of man, set thy face against Gog." There are great variety of opinions concerning Gog and Magog. The Jews affirm them to be the Scythians, which live near Caucasus, and the Caspian mountains: some understand by them the Roman emperors and empire: some, the pope: some, the Turks and Saracens: some, the Goths: some, heretics: some, all the persecutors of the church: others, antichrist: some interpreters understand the affliction of the Jewish nation, by the successors of Alexander, which possessed Asia Minor and Syria. Junius hath laboured to give light here, and tells us, that Gog is the name of a nation, derived from Gyges, or Gog, the servant of Candaules, king of Lydia, whom he killed and married his queen, naming the land Gygaia, or Gog's land, which, saith he, is Asia the Less, and Syria, where was a city called Gog's city: these nations should infest the Jews, which were held by Antiochus, Seleucus, Demetrius, and Nicator. Bibliander and Bullinger interpret this prophecy literally of Alexander and his successors, especially of Antiochus Epiphanes king of Syria, who, as you find in the Maccabees, did greatly afflict the Jews; and specially of antichrist and his members. A Lapidus denies this prophecy to concern Alexander, the kings of Syria and Egypt, because the Jews never conquered them, though they had some notable victories over them; and had they had such a destruction as is spoken of in the end of this chapter, Josephus, who was an exact observer of Jewish affairs, would have mentioned it. Neither did Josephus Gerionides speak any thing thereof, who wrote the history of Gog. Sanctius leans to that opinion which conceives Gog to be Antiochus, in whom antichrist was prefigured, and the great troubles of the church by him; so do many expositors: yet, Maldonate and Vatablus think this prophecy not fulfilled; of which mind are divers who write upon the 20th of the Revelation, where John, in the 8th and 9th verses, alludes to this prophecy. By "Gog" here, understand, the name of a man, not of a province; for he is said to be a "prince," ver. 3; to come "out of the north," ver. 14; and he with his multitude shall be buried in "the valley of Hamon-gog," chap. xxxix. 11: these things cannot be spoken of a province, but of a person. The prophet must set his face against him; that is, he must prophesy constantly and firmly against him.

"The land of Magog." Gog is the name of a king, which rules over Magog; that is, the Scythians, saith Vatablus. "Magog" was one of the sons of Japheth, Gen. x. 2; of whom came the Scythians, or Sarmatians, saith Ainsworth on the place. Josephus saith, Magog dwelt amongst those who were called Magogins, and by the Greeks, Scythia, who dwelt in Colo-Syria.

Antiq. l. 1 c. 7.

Vid. Martin. Lex. in verbo Magog.

Mareus Paulus Venetus saith, in Tartary are the regions Gog and Magog, which they call Gug and Mungug.

"The chief prince of Meshech." In Hebrew it is, prince of the head; that is, principal head, or chief prince. This Gog was not only prince of Magog, but of Meshech, that is, Cappadocia; and of Tubal, that is, Iberia, not Spain or Italy, but a country near the Scythians.

"Prophecy against him." Thou hast been prophesying of deliverance and great mercies to my people, now prophecy against Gog, and all his assistants, open or secret. Had Magog, Meshech, and Tubal, been princes with Gog, the Lord would have said, Prophecy against them.

Ver. 3. "Say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Gog." This is a dreadful message which the prophet must deliver against this great prince. He must declare unto him that there is a greater Prince than himself, even one that is king of nations, that hath all power in his hand, and bringeth princes to nothing, Isa. xl. 23; and that he is against him. Thou thinkest to have thy will upon God's people, to do terrible things unto them; but their God, who is a God of power and wisdom, is against thee. The Hebrew is, Behold, I to thee; that is, I come to thee to destroy thee for thine iniquities and enmity against my people.

Ver. 4. "And I will turn thee back." Lavater and Œcolampadius read these words, I will crush thee; the Vulgate, I will lead thee about: some rabbies, I will deceive thee: others, I will bring or turn thee back. Thou thinkest to have thy pleasure on mine, but I will have my pleasure on thee, and turn thee which way seems good to me. I will bring thee out.

"And put hooks into thy jaws." What the Lord saith here of Gog, he said, chap. xxix. 4, of Pharaoh: "I will put hooks in thy jaws." The Septuagint is, I will put a bridle in thy jaws: thou art like a pampered jade, and thinkest to tread down all, but I will hold thee in. Montanus reads the former words thus, I will bring thee out, and if thou holdest off, I will put my hook in thy jaws, and draw thee out as a fish is drawn out of the waters; which sense is best.

"And I will bring thee forth, and all thine army." I will cause thee to go forth; thou shalt not stay in thine own territories, how little or large soever they be, but shalt muster up thy forces, and lead out all thine armies.

"Horses and horsemen." The word for "horses" is, סוס, which notes, any horse of common use. Sus signifies both a crane and a horse. The rabbies say he is so called, because a horse is a cheerful creature, and by his mettle and neighing cheers up his rider. פרש is, horsemen, from פרוש which, in Hiphil, signifies, to prick; that is, parash is, a horseman, because he pricks forward his horse with his spurs.

"All of them clothed with all sorts of armour." They were armed completely from head to foot. The Hebrew is, clothed with all, or with perfection; nothing was wanting requisite to military undertaking.

"Even a great company, with bucklers and shields, all of them handling swords." Gog's army was a great army, and well accommodated. A buckler is a piece of armour to cover and defend the body; and so is a shield: in Hebrew, מגן from נגן to cover. צנב is a buckler, or shield, sharp or piked, which the Latins call scutum; the other, clypeus. Shields were for footmen, and bucklers for horsemen, saith Servius. These soldiers of Gog were skilful in military affairs, Vide Martin. they all were expert at their swords.

Ver. 5. "Persia, Ethiopia, and Libya with them." Here is shown what countries and people should join with Gog, viz. those of the east, Persians; those of the south, the Ethiopians; and those of the west, the Moors, whom Œcolampadius understood by those of "Libya." Of Persia, Ethiopia, and Libya, was spoken, chap. xxvii. 10; xxx. 5.

"All of them with shield and helmet." Whoever joined with Gog were well armed. The Hebrew is, all of them shield and helmet. כִּנְיָץ is, a helmet. Some were made of leather, some of brass, 1 Sam. xvii. 5.

Ver. 6. "Gomer, and all his bands." Under this Josephus Anti. word "Gomer," are comprehended Galatia, Phrygia, and Bithynia, principal parts of Asia Minor, which were inhabited by Gomer, the son of Japheth, from whom they were called Gomarians, or Gomeriter.

"The house of Togarmah of the north quarters, and all his bands." By "the house of Togarmah," Junius understands Paphlagonia and Cappadocia; others, Armenia the Less. Doubtless by Gomer and Togarmah, all those parts which lay north from Syria, where Antiochus reigned, and so north from Judea, are meant thereby. From these and the forementioned places, had Gog auxiliary forces: for fear, hire, or out of enmity to God's people, they helped him.

"And many people with thee." There were people with him from all quarters, from the east, west, south, and north; which being come together, must make a numerous army.

Ver. 7. "Be thou prepared," &c. Jerom thinks there is an irony in these words; that God exhorts Gog to gather up his forces to strengthen himself, and hasten his design, with what expedition he could; but all his preparations and undertakings should be in vain, he should not escape the vengeance of God, which hung over his head. But here, under a command, is declared what he would certainly do: he would not be wanting to get a great army from all parts, to assault and destroy the people of God; and not knowing what the hazard of war might be, he would prepare for himself, consider, and fit things for himself.

"Thou, and all thy company that are assembled unto thee." Where there is a great army, there had need to be great preparations for their pay, quarters, and protection: they know not what obstructions and enemies they may meet withal.

"And be thou a guard unto them." Princes have great power, and it lies much in them to keep their armies safe. The eye of the general is a special thing to keep an army in order. The Vulgate reads the words thus, Esto eis in præceptum, Do thou show thyself an emperor amongst them, command and rule them: or thus, Thou wilt do thy endeavour to preserve them. Junius thinks these words refer to the Jews: that Gog with all his forces compassing about the mountains of Israel, and concluding he had the Jews in his power, as a bird in a cage, to destroy at his pleasure, he should be a guard unto them. God can make those a defence to his people, who seek their destruction. But the other sense is more genuine.

Obs. 1. That after prophecies of grace and mercy, come tidings of affliction and judgments. In the former chapter the Jews heard altogether of mercies from God; here they hear of afflictions from enemies. There, they heard of David their king, and shepherd, who should do great things for them: here, of Gog, a tyrant, their enemy, who should seek to destroy them. God, in his infinite wisdom, orders it so, that his church and people should hear of, and meet with, not only good, but evil; not only comforts, but crosses. Should we only hear of comfortable things, we should presume: and should we only hear of sad things, we should despond. God presents some of both sorts unto us, that so our faith and fear may be exercised, and we kept in a more even frame.

Obs. 2. The great princes of the earth, being no friends to the church of God, have God for their enemy. Gog was prince of Meshech and Tubal, an enemy to the Jews; and, "Behold, I am against thee, O Gog;" how great soever thou art, I, the great God, am against thee; thou wilt oppose my people, and I will oppose thee. Most of the princes of the earth have been against Christ and his kingdom, Psal. ii. 2; and God hath been against them, and vexed them in his sore displeasure. God was against the prince of Tyre, and against Pharaoh king of Egypt, Ezek. xxviii. xxix. Kings generally are proud, profane, tyrannical, false to the trust committed to them, obstructing the way and work of Christ in the world what they can; therefore God is against them: "He is terrible to the kings of the earth," Psal. lxxvi. 12; and their ends have been dreadful. Some have had their bones burnt to lime, Amos ii. 1; some have been eaten with worms, Acts xii. 23; some have been hanged up, Lam. ii. 12; Josh. x. 26; some have died of strange diseases, 2 Chron. xxi. 18.

Obs. 3. The Lord at his pleasure can bring enemies and armies upon his own people. God would bring Gog forth, and all his army, horse and horsemen, a great company; all of them armed with bucklers, shields, and swords. God is the Author of wars, he calls forth what princes and nations he will, to assault and vex the church. The ten tribes, who brought enemies upon them? was it not the Lord? 1 Chron. v. 26, "The God of Israel stirred up the spirit of Pul king of Assyria, and the spirit of Tilgath-pilneser king of Assyria, and he carried them away," &c.: see 2 Kings xv. 19; xvii. 6. It was God stirred up the spirit of the Philistines against Jehoram king of Judah, so that they came and spoiled him of all his substance, of his wives and sons, 2 Chron. xxi. 16, 17. Let God's people take heed how they provoke God, for he is the Lord of hosts, and hath all nations at his command, and can call, yea, bring them forth to trouble Israel itself, and that sorely.

Obs. 4. The Lord can easily bring men to do his work and service, whatever the difficulty or danger be. Here was hard work for Gog, to gather the nations, east, west, south, and northward together, to come out of his country and to invade Judea: a business which required much consultation, admitted many objections and demurs: but God would bring him to it, and make him do it, as easily as a man pulls up a fish out of the water: "I will put my hook in his jaws." Let God put an instinct into a prince or state, once stir their spirits, to make war upon others, the work will go on with facility and expedition. God hath hooks to draw on princes to war, and hooks to draw them off, to draw them back from them, 2 Kings xix. 28.

Obs. 5. From all quarters of the world there are enemies ready to combine and act with Gog and antichrist against the church, truth, and Christ himself. Those of the east comprehended under Persia, those of the south intended under Ethiopia, those of the west included in Libya, and those of the north contained under Gomer and the house of Togarmah, were all at the beck of Gog, to go against Jerusalem, the servants and worship of God therein. The whole world, saith Oecolampadius, contradicts, and observes antichrist. When Christ doth any eminent thing in his church, the nations are quickly misled, and join with some grand enemy to vent their malice: see Rev. xx. 7—9.

Obs. 6. The enemies of the church do make great preparations against the same. "Be thou prepared." This shows and assures that Gog would neglect nothing which might conduce unto the carrying on his desigus against the Jews. Isa. viii. 9, 10, those expressions, "Associate yourselves," "Gird yourselves," "Take counsel together," "Speak the word," do hint to us the activity of the church's enemies. Psal. lxxxiii. 2-5, see if there to the life: "Thine enemies make a tumult; they have lift up the head; they have taken crafty counsel against thy people. They said, Come, let us cut them off from being a nation," &c. How did Zerah the Ethiopian, and the commanders of his army, bestir themselves, when they brought an army of a thousand thousand against Judah, and with them three hundred chariots, 2 Chron. xiv. 9.

Obs. 7. Princes, notwithstanding all their preparations, cannot secure themselves, nor those under their command. "Prepare for thyself, be a guard to them." Gog's number, power, policy, preparations, did not advantage himself or his; they went forth to their own ruin and destruction.

Ver. 8. After many days thou shalt be visited: in the latter years thou shalt come into the land that is brought back from the sword, and is gathered out of many people, against the mountains of Israel, which have been always waste: but it is brought forth out of the nations, and they shall dwell safely all of them.

This verse prophesies of Gog's invading the mountains of Israel, the destruction of Gog, and the time of both.

"After many days thou shalt be visited." The Scripture speaks of a double visitation.

1. One in mercy and favour; as Exod. iv. 31, when Moses and Aaron were sent to deliver the Jews out of Egypt; and when Sarah conceived and bare Isaac, Gen. xxi. 1. These were God's merciful visitations of them.

2. One in judgment; as Numb. xvi. 29, "If these men," viz. Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, "be visited after the visitation of all men;" that is, they shall not die a common death, have a common judgment, but some extraordinary punishment: so Psal. lxxxix. 32, "I will visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes," I will punish them. This is the sense here, "After many days thou shalt be visited," that is, punished. The time when it should be is not punctually, but indefinitely, set down, "after many days." If we take Antiochus to be Gog in the type, it was in the Maccabees' days; if we look at the antitype, the time is yet to come.

"In the latter years thou shalt come into the land." From the time of this prophecy unto the death of Antiochus Epiphanes, chronology tells us there were four hundred and twenty or four hundred and thirty years; whereupon expositors do account the years that he came to Judea, and took Jerusalem, and defiled the temple with idols, to be the latter years. Junius saith, In the following years. Piscator hath it, In the after days or times. In the after or latter years, in the time of Christ, saith Vatablus. The Hebrew is, כְּאַחֵרֵי הַיָּמִים which Montanus and the Vulgate render, in novissimo annorum, in the last of years; which, according to John, is after the one thousand years, Rev. xx. 6-8. And so Mariana, he makes the visitation of Gog to be, in the end of the world, after the thousand years. Then shall Gog come into the land, compass the camp of the saints about, and the "beloved city," ver. 9.

"That is brought back from the sword, and is gathered out of many people." The Jews were driven by the sword into captivity, by it scattered into many provinces, and held under slavery, and so they are at this day: but the time is coming that the two houses, as well as the two tribes, shall be brought back from the sword, and gathered out of many people. "Land" is put for the inhabitants of the land.

"Against the mountains of Israel." The Hebrew word בְּ signifies, to, upon, against. Some, therefore, render these words, to, or upon, the mountains of Israel; and in that sense they refer to the Jews, who were brought back and gathered out of all people to the mountains of Israel, that is, the land of Judea. We read them, "against the mountains of Israel," and so they refer to Gog, who should come against Judea.

"Which have been always waste." The Hebrew word for "always" is, תָּמִיד which signifies, a long time; and so the French translation hath it, deserted, or wasted, for a long time. Seventy years were they desolate, all the time the Jews were in captivity; and shortly after Christ his days were they left desolate, and are so to this day. Some make "the mountains of Israel" to signify, the church; the "sword" and wastings, to be the persecutions which it hath always endured.

"But it is brought forth out of the nations." By "it," the prophet means the "land;" and by "land," the people, who being driven into Egypt, Babylon, Persia, and other places, were to be brought forth to the land of Israel. The words import the thing done, because of the certainty of it.

"And they shall dwell safely; all of them." When the Jews returned out of Babylon, repossessing their own land, they dwelt safely, confidently, without fear or disquietment therein, for four hundred and thirty years, saith Sanctius; after which time Antiochus did sorely vex them, and interrupt their peace, which they thought would be everlasting. So did Demetrius, Nicanor, and others, as in the Maccabees is evident. The time remains for the complete fulfilling of these words.

Obs. 1. God bears sometimes with the worst of men a long time. "After many days." God bears with Gog and antichrist, the grand enemies of his church, worse than whom cannot be found or expected. His patience is large, he is a God long-suffering. He bare with Antiochus, that vile person, Dan. xi. 21, many days. Vessels of wrath are endured by him with much long-suffering, Rom. ix. 22.

Obs. 2. Though wicked men be spared long, yet at last they shall suffer. "After many days thou shalt be visited." God may stay a thousand, yea ten thousand days, and then visit. As there is a time for wicked men to fill up the measure of their iniquities, so there is a time for God to fill up the vials of his wrath; and when they are once full, then they shall be poured out. God sometimes is long before he hears the prayers of his people, but at length he remembers them, Luke xviii. 7, 8; and sometimes he is long before he punisheth the wicked, but at last he visits them, he hath his time for it, Jer. xlix. 8.

Ver. 9. Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm, thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land, thou, and all thy bands, and many people with thee.

The manner of Gog's proceeding is here set down; and that,

1. Under the similitude of a "storm."

11. Under the similitude of a "cloud."

"Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm." A storm comes suddenly, violently, with noise, and doth much hurt, breaking and bearing down all before it: such should the coming of Gog be. Dan. xi. 40, 41, it is said, "The king of the north shall come against the king of the south like a whirlwind. He shall enter also into the glorious land, and many countries shall be overthrown." This is spoken of Antiochus, whom divers expositors make to be Gog. The word גּוֹג for "a storm," is from גּוּג which signifies, to make a noise, to spoil, and to amaze; and so do storms.

"Thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land, thou, and all." &c. Clouds are vapours drawn up by the heat of the sun into the middle region of the air, where by the cold they are condensed, and so spreading, make the heavens black, and intercept the light. Gog with his forces should be as a cloud spreading over the face of the land, interrupting the peace and comforts of the godly, and by his hostile acts cause fear, sorrow, and mourning. By these two metaphors are set out the tumult, violence, spoil, and multitude of Gog's army: or, by the storm, their threats and cruelty; and by the cloud, false opinions, flatteries, and allurements which they should use to pervert the faith of the saints.

Obs. 1. The church and people of God are subject to calamities. He shall "come like a storm." Winds, clouds, storms, do trouble and terrify men, and so do great armies of heathens, of vile and desperate persons, of Gogites and antichristians; when they come with fury and violence, they plunder, spoil, and fill all with darkness, they cover the land: Jer. iv. 13, "Behold, he shall come up as clouds, and his chariots shall be as a whirlwind; his horses are swifter than eagles. Woe unto us! for we are spoiled:" it is spoken of Nebuchadnezzar and his forces, who were to come up against Jerusalem. The church is oft afflicted and tossed with tempest: but here is some comfort; storms, tempests, and clouds last not long, they cease after a little time, and the sun shines again.

Obs. 2. The goodness of God in foretelling the church what shall come upon it, viz. a storm, and clouds, and perplexity. Gog and all his bands, and many people with him, shall come as a storm, and be as a cloud covering the land. It hath been usual with God to foretell his people what should befall them, as Gen. xv. 13; Jer. xxxii. 28, 29; Dan. x. 14; Matt. xxiv. And in the book of the Revelation, Christ doth tell them what sad things are to come upon his people, how potent, violent, subtle, and destructive their enemies will be: which he doth not to discourage them, but to awaken them unto prayer, holiness of life, and living by faith.

Ver. 10—13. Thus saith the Lord God; It shall also come to pass, that at the same time shall things come into thy mind, and thou shalt think an evil thought: and thou shalt say, I will go up to the land of unwalled villages; I will go to them that are at rest, that dwell safely, all of them dwelling without walls, and having neither bars nor gates, to take a spoil, and to take a prey; to turn thine hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited, and upon the people that are gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the midst of the land. Sheba, and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof, shall say unto thee, Art thou come to take a spoil? hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey? to carry away silver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil?

In these words we have,

I. The decree and purpose of Gog, ver. 10, 11, which was, to invade.

II. The inviting causes, ver. 11.

III. The end of his invading, ver. 12.

IV. His assistance and confederates in the work, ver. 13.

Ver. 10. "At the same time shall things come into thy mind." In Hebrew it is, words shall ascend, or come upon thy heart, which is an hebraism, and imports a man's thinking and consulting with himself. When men are meditating, various thoughts do rise in their minds, as Luke xxiv. 38. "Why do thoughts arise in your hearts?" חַשְׁבוֹת signifies, words and things; thoughts are the words and things of the mind.

"And thou shalt think an evil thought." The Hebrew for to "think" is, חָשַׁב, chashab, which notes such a thinking as takes in the intention of the mind, and exercises a man's head and heart. Gog should bend himself to excogitate something, and it should be an evil thought, or purpose.

Ver. 11. "I will go up to the land of unwalled villages." This was the wicked thought Gog had in his mind, he purposed in his heart to go and invade the land of the Jews; and that which invited and encouraged him so to do was,

I. Their unfortifiedness, they had no walls about their villages. Thought Gog, I shall easily conquer and subdue the Jewish nation, and add it to my territories, for they have no places of strength: some villages they have built, but none of them are walled. The Jews were but lately returned out of Babylon, newly replanted in their land, and could not fortify towns or cities as formerly they were, before Nebuchadnezzar demolished them: being therefore without walls, they lay open to enemies, and obvious to all incursions.

"I will go to them that are at rest, that dwell safely."

2. Their security. The Jews, being wearied with their seventy years' captivity, and come again to their land, had rest and safety, according to what God had promised them, Jer. xxx. 10; xvi. 27; Ezek. xxxiv. 25, 28; and so manifested their dependence upon God, trusting in him to protect them, though destitute of walls and military defences. Well might they be at rest, and dwell confidently, as the word signifies, to whom God had said, "None should make them afraid." It is to be feared many of them abused his promise, degenerating into a sinful security.

"All of them dwelling without walls, having neither bars nor gates." Where there is fear of enemies and invasions, people do fortify themselves; they wall about their towns and cities, they make strong gates and bars unto them, and set guards to look unto them. The Jews, being fearless, did none of these things; they observed not the counsels and actings of their bordering enemies, which they should have done; and for want thereof, they exposed themselves to imminent dangers.

Ver. 12. "To take a spoil, and to take a prey." The Hebrew is, to spoil a spoil, and to prey a prey. This was the end Gog propounded, viz. to impoverish the Jews, and enrich himself: to deprive them of their land, and add it to his own. Of the words, "spoil," and "prey," hath formerly been spoken.

"To turn thine hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited, and upon the people that are gathered." &c. Nebuchadnezzar had made the land of Judea desolate for many years, and the Jews being returned from their captivity, inhabited the desolate places of the land, rebuilt them, began to get something about them to live comfortably on; but Gog now intended to come and lay his hand upon them that were spoiled before, and to make another spoiling of them, and to bring them again into bondage: this was the aim of Gog.

"Which have gotten cattle and goods." The Jews dealt much in cattle, and by the increase of them, they got not only necessaries to support them, but also wealth, and became rich, which made them envied.

"That dwell in the midst of the land." For "midst of the land," in Hebrew, it is, the navel of the land: נֶבֶל signifies, a navel, also a high place, and the Jews would have the land of Judah called The navel of the earth, because it is the highest of lands; but others, because it is in the midst of the earth, as the navel is in the midst of man's body. It is said of Jerusalem, that she was set in the midst of nations and countries, Ezek. v. 5; hence the salvations God wrought in Judea and Jerusalem are said to be in the midst of the earth, Isa. vi. 12. Whether Jerusalem or Judea be in the middle of the world is doubted. By navel or "midst of the land" here is meant, the higher or more inward parts of the land, where was most security.

Ver. 13. "Sheba, and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish." These were auxiliaries unto Gog, and helped forward that damnable design he had to destroy the church of God. By "Sheba" and "Dedan," Polanus understands the Ethiopians and Arabians; Junius, the men of the south and east; and by the merchants of Tarshish, the Tyrians, Zidonians, and maritime coasts, which lay westward. These all confederated with Gog, who lay northward from Judea. In the 27th chapter Sheba, Dedan, and Tarshish, were spoken of.

"With all the young lions thereof." The Septuagint saith, all the villages thereof; the Chaldee, all the kings or princes thereof: but נְכִיָרִים is, the whelp of a lion, or a "young lion." Junius, Piscator, and Polanus, make these young lions, the merchants, who were as greedy of gain as lions are of their prey: others make them sea-pirates and robbers. But it is not improbable that by "young lions" should be meant the young men of those parts, who are like lions for strength and courage, as greedy of prey as lions are.

"Shall say unto thee, Art thou come to take a spoil? hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey?" Seeing, O Gog, thou gatherest up forces to war against the Jews, to spoil them, and to make a prey of their wealth and land, lo, we are for thee, we will join with thee. Some would have it, that they envied them, and were against them; but 1 Mace. iii. you shall find that the nations joined with Lysias, who was general of Antiochus his army, ver. 24, and how he took away silver, gold, women, children, cattle, and goods, chap. i. 22, 23—35; he robbed the sanctuary, and fired the city. This Antiochus do expositors make to be Ezekiel's Gog.

Obs. 1. God foreknows and determines things to come, even those things which seem most free and contingent, as the thoughts of men's hearts. He saith of Gog, long before his existence in the world, "It shall come to pass, that at the same time shall things come into thy mind, and thou shalt think an evil thought." Some would have God to permit only things to come, not to determine them, and conceive that God's decree of permission supposes a necessity of their futuration and coming to pass; but if God did only permit a thing to come to pass, how could it come to pass without some action, and God's concurrence to that action? for there is no action or cause producing any effect, with which God doth not concur, Lam. iii. 37; Prov. xxi. 1; xvi. 1. Effects are permitted by God, not effects; he concurs to the production of them: be they thoughts, words, or actions, God's wisdom, power, and providence, hath influence into them.

Obs. 2. God doth not only foreknow, but pre-discovers, the purposes, counsels, and plots of his church's enemies, to evidence his care thereof. He made known the design of Gog many years before it came to pass: "Thou shalt think an evil thought; and say, I will go up to the land of unwalled villages." The enemies of Zion are full of evil thoughts and designs to root out and destroy the inhabitants thereof, but God sometimes discovers them beforehand, and oft prevents them. Neh. iv. 11, "Our adversaries said, They shall not know, neither see, till we come in the midst among them, and slay them, and cause the work to cease:" these thoughts and designs of theirs were discovered and prevented by the Lord. Herod thought and purposed to kill the Lord Christ when he was in the cradle, but the all-knowing God revealed it to Joseph, and disappointed it. God is very vigilant over his church, lest any hurt it; he keeps it night and day, Isa. xxvii. 3.

Obs. 3. The enemies of the church do watch, and take advantages against the church; they wait for and seek occasions to ruin the same. "I will go up," saith Gog, "to the land of unwalled villages; I will go to them that are at rest, that dwell without walls, bars, or gates." Because he saw them unarmed and secure, a naked people destitute of human helps, therefore he resolved to invade, plunder, and destroy them. When Saul was pursuing of David, the Philistines invaded the land, 1 Sam. xxiii. 27; and when Elisha was dead, the Moabites did so, 2 Kings xiii. 20: so Haman, because Mordecai would not bow to him, sought advantages to destroy all the Jews, Esth. iii. 6. The wicked are so strong, spiteful, and vigilant to seek and take advantages against God's people, that it were impossible for them to be in safety, had they not a gracious God to take care of them: they are weak, and look not to arms of flesh, but unto "Jehovah, the Rock of ages," who is their shield and safety: they dwell without walls, but God is "a wall of fire round about them," Zeeh. ii. 5.

Obs. 4. Wicked ones will undertake great matters, and venture their lives to satisfy their lusts. Gog and the rest undertake a war, march many a mile, and put their lives in their hands, and wherefore? "To take a spoil, to get the prey, to carry away silver, gold, cattle, and goods:" all was to satisfy a base, covetous humour. The lust after ruling, and desire of riches, hath stimulated many to attempt great matters, to hazard their lives and souls to all eternity. Wherefore did the children of Ammon, Moab, and mount Seir, undertake a difficult and dangerous war? Jehoshaphat tells you, it was for dominion and wealth, 2 Chron. xx. 11.

Obs. 5. The wicked confederate and combine together to mischief the church of God. Sheba, Dedan, the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof, fall in with Gog and his design. The seed of the serpent are unanimous to destroy the seed of the woman. Psal. lxxxiii. Edomites, Ishmaelites, Moabites, Hagarenes, Gebalites, Ammonites, Amalekites, Philistines, Tyrians, and Ashurites, joined all together against God's people, and said, "Come, let us cut them off from being a nation." Ezra iv. 7—10, Bishlam, Mithredath, Tabeel, Rehum the chancellor, Shimshai the scribe, and the rest of their societies, the Dinaites, the Apharsathchites, the Tarpelites, the Apharsites, the Archevites, the Babylonians, the Susanehtes, the Dehavites, the Elamites, and the rest of the nations, did all conspire together to hinder the building of Jerusalem, and the walls thereof. Wicked men are thorns, and they cleave together, to scratch and vex the righteous.

Ver. 14—16. Therefore, son of man, prophesy and say unto Gog, Thus saith the Lord God; In that day when my people of Israel dwelleth safely, shalt thou not know it? And thou shalt come from thy place out of the north parts, thou, and many people with thee, all of them riding upon horses, a great company, and a mighty army: and thou shalt come up against my people of Israel, as a cloud to cover the land; it shall be in the latter days, and I will bring thee against my land, that the heathen may know me, when I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes.

In these words we have the place whence Gog should come, the manner of his coming, the persons he should come against, the author, and event of his coming.

Ver. 14. "In that day when my people of Israel dwelleth safely, shalt thou not know it?" When my people are come to their land, dwell safely in towns, without walls, gates, or bars, "shalt thou not know it?" Yes, thou wilt take notice thereof, and be encouraged thereby to come against them. The Septuagint saith, Thou wilt be stirred up; this sense of the words some make: others thus, Thou hast a wicked thought in thy heart, and dost purpose to invade my people, being unarmed, and dwelling safely, and shalt thou not know? that is, Thou shalt know what it is to invade my people, thou shalt feel my judgments, my fury will appear and fall upon thee, to thy destruction, ver. 16, 18. Piscator renders the word thus, Shalt thou not have experience?

Ver. 15. "Thou shalt come from thy place out of the north parts, thou, and many people with thee," &c. Some conceive that Gog, with his great army, came out of Scythia, others, out of Babylon, which lay northwards from Jerusalem. That he came from those parts, is not clear; but most certain, that he came from the northern parts, or sides of the north; and having drawn many to his assistance, they all came riding upon horses: they were all horsemen for speed. The charges of such an army, being all horsemen, must be exceeding great. This army came into the land of Israel, and covered it like a cloud, as we heard, ver. 9.

Ver. 16. "It shall be in the latter days." In the 8th verse it was said, "In the latter years," and here it is said, "In the latter days," or, as Montanus reads them, in the last days. "In the latter days" did Antiochus vex the Jews, and in the last days shall antichrist vex them and the church.

"When I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog." God is said to be "sanctified," when he manifests himself to be a holy and just God, by inflicting punishment upon evil-doers, whereby others are made to fear and say, Oh what a holy, what a just, what a dreadful God is he who executes such judgments! Ezek. xxviii. 22, we had the same words.

Obs. 1. When God's people are in Canaan, then have they safety. In Babylon they had none, in Egypt they had none, in the wilderness they had little; but when in Canaan, then they had their greatest safety. "In that day when my people Israel dwelleth safely." They had a day, a time of safety, which was when they were settled in Canaan.

In Canaan was the church; and where that is in safety, there God is city, walls, gates, and bars himself. He is the Keeper of Israel, Psal. cxxi. 4, 5.

Obs. 2. Those that design and attempt mischief against the people of God, they shall experimentally know that God is their Protector, and the Revenger of their wrongs. Gog thought evil against Israel, and came up against it: and what saith God, "Shalt thou not know it?" This I will make thee to know, that I am Israel's Keeper, and that thou hast done wickedly to invade them. God made Sennacherib know what it was to design and attempt evil against Jerusalem, when he smote one hundred and eighty-five thousand of his soldiers in one night, Isa. xxxvii. 36. When the Ammonites, Moabites, and Scirites thought and attempted mischief against the Jews, viz. to cast them out and possess their land, did not God avenge his people of them, and manifest himself to be their Protector? 2 Chron. xx. 23, 24.

Obs. 3. The secret plots and deep designs of men do at length break out into action. Gog had long thought of invading Israel, and at length he comes from his place out of the north parts, and puts his design into execution. Hidden things of dishonesty sleep not always; they may be dissembled long, but at last they issue into action. The Spanish plot lay in the dark long, but at last it visited our English coasts, where they were made to see that their Armada was not invincible. The massacres of France and Ireland were secret, though plots, at first, but in process of time they came to blood.

Obs. 4. The great enemies of the church have many helpers and adherents, and those fitted to further their wicked designs. Gog had many people with him, and all of them riding upon horses, a great company, and a mighty army: so numerous they were, that like a cloud they covered the land. So antichrist now hath many assistants to promote his wicked and bloody designs against the saints: Rev. xix. 19, "I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army;" that is, against Christ and his church.

Obs. 5. Though all people and lands in the world be the Lord's, yet some people and lands are his in a more peculiar manner. "Thou shalt come up against my people, and against my land." Where God is owned, his ordinances and worship set up, maintained in purity and power, his interest and glory advanced, there is a people God calls his people, and a land God calls his land: there God dwells, peculiarizing both people and land to himself.

Obs. 6. God takes occasion, from the attempts of the wicked, to execute his just judgments upon them, and so to get glory to his name even from heathens. Gog took occasion, from the Jews' weakness, (they were in unwall'd villages,) to invade and destroy them; and God takes occasion from his unjust invading the Jews to inflict dreadful judgments upon him and his, that the heathen might know him, when he should be sanctified in Gog. They seeing such just judgments upon Gog, should fear the God of Israel, and learn righteousness: God is known by executing of judgment, Psal. ix. 16; thereby he is known to be the Most High over all the earth.

Ver. 17. Thus saith the Lord God; Art thou he of whom I have spoken in old time by my servants the prophets of Israel, which prophesied in those days many years that I would bring thee against them?

The things concerning Gog were neither novelties nor uncertainties, but such as God foreknew would be, and the prophets had prophesied of, and that long before; and not once or twice, but often, even many years. It is of grand importance to inquire what prophets have spoken of Gog and his proceedings. Some would have Moses to speak of him, Numb. xxiv. 7, where it is said, "His king shall be higher than Agag," that is, Jacob's king shall be higher than Gog. The Septuagint reads it, Gog, and so doth Symmachus: his king shall be exalted above Gog; though Gog be great, yet shall he be greater. But in the original it is, Agag, not Gog. Jerom hath it, Gog, and interjrets it of antichrist. Some make David to be the prophet prophesying of Gog; Psal. ix. 5, "Thou hast destroyed the wicked one;" that is, thou shalt destroy Gog, that, or the wicked one, called by some antichrist, whom Gog was a type of. To this accords that in Isa. xi. 4, "With the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked;" Gog in the type, and antichrist in the antitype, 2 Thess. ii. 8. Besides this place in Isaiah, some fix upon Isa. xvii. 12—14, and make that a prophecy of Gog. Some took Psal. lxxviii. 14, "When the Almighty scattered kings," i. e. Gog and Magog; Rivet, in [Lat.] in locum. Jer. i. 14, "Out of the north an evil shall break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land;" it is granted Gog was to come out of the north quarters, Ezek. xxxviii. 15, and so was Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. x. 22; he speaks rather of Nebuchadnezzar than of Gog. Moreover, his prophesy was but a little before Ezekiel's days, and much of it in his days, whereas here it is said, "Of whom I have spoken in old time by my servants the prophets of Israel." Others therefore refer it to the prophesy of Enoch, mentioned Jude 14, who spake of the Lord's coming with ten thousand of his saints; but nothing of Gog is there specified. That in Joel iii. is more satisfying as to the business in hand, viz. ver. 2, 9, 11, 14, "I will gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people and for my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and spoiled my land," &c. This we may conceive was prophesied of Gog.

1. Because the Jews were to come out of captivity into their own land, before this was done. It is probable that therefore Gog and the nations conspired together to invade and destroy them, because they were settled safely in their land, ver. 1.

2. Because Gog was to fall upon the mountains of Israel, to perish in the land of Judea. Ezek. xxxix. 4, "Thou shalt fall upon the mountains of Israel, thou, and all thy bands, and the people that is with thee." To which agrees that of Joel iii. 12, 13, "Let the heathen be wakened, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat: for there will I sit to judge the heathen round about. Put ye in the sickle; for the harvest is ripe," &c.

3. Because of the like effects. Ezekiel saith, when Gog and his army shall be destroyed, there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel, ver. 19. So Joel iii. 15, 16, at the destruction of the nations and their princes, "The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining. The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem: and the heavens and the earth shall shake: but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel."

If it be said, Joel is but one prophet, and the text speaks of prophets, and so of them, as if it were a common thing amongst them to prophesy of or against Gog; to this may be answered, That most of the prophets might speak of Gog, though they wrote not of him: for all which the prophets prophesied did neither themselves nor others always pen; and here it is said, "by whom I have spoken," not, by whom I have written. Moses spake what was not written, Heb. xi. 24—27; so Enoch, Jude, ver. 14, 15; as Christ himself did, John xxi. 25. "By my servants," in Hebrew is, In or by the hand of my servants; and for, "In those days many years," it is, In the days of those years they did prophesy of Gog, that God would bring him upon the Jews.

Obs. 1. The Lord doth infallibly know things to come. He revealed to the prophets of old this Gog here spoken of hundreds of years before he was; neither was God deceived, for in the time appointed he came. He whose understanding is infinite, Psal. cxlvii. 5, must needs know all things, past, present, and to come; and should any thing be unknown to God, his understanding could not be infinite. Man's knowledge is borrowed from creatures, to which he gives neither being nor operation; but God's knowledge is from himself; he knows all that is possible in his power, and all that is future in his will. Creatures can neither be, nor operate, without him. He hath such clear vision of all things, that his knowledge must needs be certain. Should he be deceived in any particular, there should be darkness in him; but, "He is light, and in him there is no darkness at all," 1 John i. 5.

Obs. 2. The prophets delivered many things which were not recorded. The prophets of Israel spake of Gog, and yet we cannot find any direct satisfying place in holy writ concerning him. In Matt. xxvii. 9, you have words cited for Jeremiah's which you cannot find in all his prophecies: the words are these, "Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremiah the prophet, saying, And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of him that was valued, whom they of the children of Israel did value:" Matthew saith not, That which was written, but, "That which was spoken." Jeremiah had delivered these words, and many other, doubtless, which are no where to be found. And if any ask, How came Matthew by them? He had them by tradition, say some: others, by revelation, which is safest to say. Solomon, he spake of trees, from the cedar tree that is in Lebanon, even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall; he spake also of beasts, and of fowls, and of creeping things, and of fishes, 1 Kings iv. 33; but what he said of these is not to be found or known. Had not Paul helped us to that blessed truth of Christ, "It is more blessed to give than to receive," Acts xx. 35, we had never met with it.

Obs. 3. Those whom God sends to make known his mind to men, he owns, honours, and protects. "My servants the prophets of Israel." Those who had spoken against Gog, and made known his mind, teaching him, God owns for his servants, honours them with this title, "prophets of Israel;" and being his, he hath a special care of them; Psal. cv. 15, "Do my prophets no harm." If the servants and ambassadors of earthly princes be honourable, and have protection from them, much more are the servants and ambassadors of the King of glory honourable and under divine protection. If David would not put up the wrong done to his servants he sent to Hanun, 2 Sam. x. neither will God let the wrongs done to his servants, the "prophets of Israel," go unpunished, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16.

Obs. 4. It is not an accidental or casual thing that enemies do come against the church. The Lord brought Gog against this people, and the prophets had prophesied many years that God would do so; they made it known to the world what God had decreed to do. Gog could not have stirred or moved one foot towards the land of Israel, unless God had appointed and commanded it to be so. Lam. iii. 37, "Who is he that saith, and it cometh to pass, when the Lord commandeth it not?"

Ver. 18—22. And it shall come to pass at the same time when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord God, that my fury shall come up in my face. For in my jealousy and in the fire of my wrath have I spoken, Surely in that day there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel; so that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the field, and all creeping things that creep upon the earth, and all the men that are upon the face of the earth, shall shake at my presence, and the mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places shall fall, and every wall shall fall to the ground. And I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord God: every man's sword shall be against his brother. And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone.

The time and manner of God's proceedings with Gog is set forth in these five verses.

Ver. 18. "At the same time when Gog shall come against the land of Israel." "Time" is not to be taken strictly for a day, or an hour; as if God should that very day Gog set out, or invaded the land, fall upon him by his judgments, and destroy him; but largely, for the time of that enterprise, whilst he should be upon that design, when he had filled up the measure of his iniquities.

"My fury shall come up in my face." Some read the words thus, My anger shall come up in my face; that is, I will be furious, and manifest hot displeasure; for fury is the heat and height of anger: we read the words, "My fury shall come up in my face." זע signifies, anger, the face, the nose also, because anger appears chiefly in them: God speaking here after the manner of men, saith, "My fury shall come up in my face." Luther, by "fury," or anger, understands Gog himself, who was the vessel of divine anger, by whom God poured out wrath upon the Jews. Maldonate also makes the fury here mentioned to be against the church; but rather it is against Gog; for at the same time that Gog should come against Israel, at that time should God's fury come up in his face, he would be exceedingly displeased with Gog for attempting the destruction of his people; and ver. 21, God will call for a sword against him.

Ver. 19. "For in my jealousy and in the fire of my wrath have I spoken." The Lord being jealous over his people for their good, and seeing what malicious designs Gog and his confederates had against them, was provoked much thereby, and said in his jealousy and fury, that is, promised, or rather threatened the destruction of Gog; and not only so, but confirmed it with an oath in the next words.

"Surely in that day there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel." These words, אשׁ-עשׂ carry the form of an oath with them, as thus, If not, that is, if there be not a great shaking, let me not be God, let me not be faithful; so sure as I am God and faithful, so sure and certain it is that "there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel;" רעעו signifies, a commotion, an earthquake, and in that day when Antiochus invaded Canaan, there was a great commotion, a great shaking. And so there will be when antichrist, who is Gog mystical, shall invade the church, which Maldonate saith will be in the end of the world.

Ver. 20. "So that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the heaven, the beasts of the field, and all creeping things that creep upon the earth, and all the men that are upon the face of the earth, shall shake at my presence." Here is shown the greatness of his shaking, it should be such as should affect and astonish all creatures, even the sensible and senseless. As Gog should come like a storm, so God's judgments should come upon him and his like a storm. When storms are, the winds blow terribly, so that the air, and fowls in it, are troubled, the sea works and rages, so that the fishes in it are disquieted; yea, some storms do so afflict the earth, that beasts, creeping things, and men themselves, are made to quake. When God comes in a way of judgment, it is grievous. All these expressions are to signify the greatness of calamity. God would appear in some dreadful judgment against Gog, and thereby shake all.

"The mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places shall fall." Sometimes in Scripture by "mountains" are meant men in eminent places, as Dan. ii. 35; Isa. xl. 4; sometimes the church and kingdoms, as Isa. ii. 23; but here some take it literally, and affirm there should be such an earthquake as should shake down "mountains." Lavater by "mountains" understands towers built upon mountains, which then should be demolished. The word for "steep places" is, הַמַּרְרֵמֵת which, Cant. ii. 14, is translated, "stairs;" the Septuagint hath it, valleys; the Vulgate is, the fences; the translation Vatablus follows saith, bulwarks; Piscator and the French say, towers; Cœcolampadius and Lavater render it, the steps, stairs, or ascents, whereby they went up. Junius varies from them all, and renders the word, steep places, by which he intends rocks hanging as it were in the air. The sense is, that all places of refuge and safety, seemed they never so strong, should fail.

"And every wall shall fall to the ground." So terrible shall be the shaking, that the walls of cities shall be overthrown; all the towers, forts, and defences whatsoever, shall be levelled with the ground and made useless. Some understand this of Gog's prevailing against the church, laying all waste, so that the people of God shall be in that distress, till God come and execute judgment upon Gog and all his company.

Ver. 21. "And I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord God." "Sword" here is put for swordmen. God would call forth men, and stir up their spirits to oppose Gog and his company, who, filling all with fear, thought to swallow up all; but throughout Judea, that mountainous country, he should meet with those who would give check to his proceedings. Judas Maccabeus, Jonathan, Eleazer, and others, withstood Antiochus and his forces, as you may see in the book of the Maccabees, and therein was this prophecy made good, say interpreters.

"Every man's sword shall be against his brother." Those of Gog's army should, through the just judgment of God upon them, change their thoughts, counsels, intentions; and, instead of killing their enemies, they should sheathe their swords in one another's bowels. God would order it so, that one should destroy another, as the Philistines did; 1 Sam. xiv. 16, "Behold, the multitude melted away, and they went on beating down one another;"

and ver. 20, "Every man's sword was against his fellow." They being full of discontent and perplexity, thought it more honourable to die than to fall into the hands of enemies.

Ver. 22. "And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood." He shows here what judgments God would bring upon Gog and his armies, judgments from beneath, and judgments from above. The first sort here are "pestilence and blood," by the sword and slaughter. The Hebrew is, I will be judged with him by pestilence and blood; they shall declare that I am a strong and just God.

"And I will rain upon him, and upon his bands," &c. "an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone." The second sort of judgments are, rain, hailstones, fire, and brimstone. These words, "overflowing showers" and "great hailstones," we had, chap. xiii. 11, 13. In the tenth chapter of Joshua, we read how God did cast down great stones from heaven upon the Amorites, and slew more with hailstones than the Israelites slew with the sword, ver. 10. To this place it is conceived our prophet alludes, foretelling that the Lord would deal with the Gogites as he did with the Amorites, slay them with extraordinary great hailstones from heaven; and not only so, but with fire and brimstone, which is the punishment of the damned in hell, and was the punishment of Sodom and Gomorrah.

Some, by these expressions, understand manifold and grievous calamities, which befell Gog and his; and will not have them to be understood literally, that so the verification of them may fall upon Antiochus and his forces, who suffered very sad things; for he was smitten by God with an incurable and invisible plague and torment in his bowels, he fell from his chariot, and was bruised with his fall; worms came out of his body in abundance, his rottenness and stink was such as none could bear the same; and while he was alive his flesh fell off for pain, 2 Macc. ix. Let it be granted that these words are not to be taken literally, but metaphorically for heavy judgments befalling Gog and his companions, it will not follow thereupon that Antiochus was the man, though he suffered such grievous things; for it is said of Gog, that he should fall upon the mountains of Israel, he and all his bands, that he and his slain should have graves in Ezekiel, Ezek. xxxix. 4, 11. But as for Antiochus, he died in his bed, and that either in Babylon, as 1 Macc. vi. or at Ecbatane in India, as it is 2 Macc. ix. Neither was there any such vast destruction of Antiochus' forces, which came into Judea under Lysias, as these words hold out, and is more clearly expressed in chap. xxxix. 12. "Seven months shall the house of Israel be burying of them." There must be a wonderful great slaughter, which required so much time for their burial. I conceive, therefore, that these words may be taken in the literal sense, and are yet to be fulfilled; and that which induceth so to judge, is what you have, Rev. xx. 8, 9, where it is said, "Satan shall gather Gog and Magog together to battle, the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from heaven and devoured them." John saw this in vision, and spake of it as to come, and puts it after the saints' rising and reigning a thousand years with Christ: that time being expired, some grand enemies shall arise against the Jews and people of God, whom he will destroy, not only in an ordinary way, but miraculously also by fire from heaven.

Obs. 1. When wicked men are plotting and attempting the ruin of the church, God's wrath is kindled against them. When Gog comes up against the land of Israel, God's fury comes up in his face. Gog manifests himself to be an enemy to Zion, and God manifests himself to be an enemy to Gog. Wicked men plot, act, proceed far oftentimes, and afflict the servants of God greatly; but, when they think to carry all, God appears, and that in fury. In Nah. i. 2. it is said, "He reserveth wrath for his enemies;" and when they declare their enmity against him and his, he discovers his wrath against them. Zerah had been long plotting against the Jews, at last he comes against them with a thousand thousand, and three hundred chariots, and thought to devour Asa, his army, and land in a day; and whilst he had such apprehensions, the Lord smote him before Asa and Judah, 2 Chron. xiv. 8, 12.

Obs. 2. When mischief is intended against God's people, his love and indignation are manifested then; his love to his people, his indignation towards their enemies. "In my jealousy and in the fire of my wrath have I spoken." When God's armies were to harm the Jews, then was he jealous. In jealousy there is ardent love, and vehement indignation; the one is towards his people, the other towards them that wrong his people. Zech. viii. 2, "I was jealous for Zion with great jealousy, and I was jealous for her with great fury." He had stroug love to Zion, and great fury against the enemies of Zion; as a man hath ardent love to his wife, and indignation against any that should offer her violence. God is jealous over his church, and therefore will never suffer it to be made a prey of by the wicked. God's love and indignation at such a time are so ardent, that he swears he will be avenged on them that would wrong his people, "Surely in that day there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel;" Gog and all his forces shall fall.

Obs. 3. The judgments of God are dreadful, they affect all creatures, the fishes of the sea, the fowls of heaven, the beasts of the field, all that creeps upon the earth; all men upon the face of the earth shall shake; mountains, rocks, walls, shall fall. This judgment upon Gog shall be such, as to astonish and trouble all sensible and insensible creatures; so much of God shall be seen in it. When the Lord destroyed Tyrus, it was a dreadful judgment; the isles did shake at the sound of her fall, the princes of the sea did tremble and were astonished, Ezek. xxvi. But at the destruction of Gog, heaven, earth, sea, all men, other creatures, shall shake. There will be more of God seen in that judgment than in most before; his presence, power, and severity will appear eminently in that judgment; it will speak aloud, and fill the world with astonishment.

Obs. 4. God can easily raise forces against his and the church's enemies, he can do it without any trouble. "I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountains." The mountains of Israel were the Lord's, and all the inhabitants of them, and if he did but call, they came to his stand-ard presently. The princes of the earth find it a hard business to get a great army together, and wait long for it after great consultation how to effect the same; but the Lord only calls, and it is done; he is the Lord of hosts, he hath command of spirits, and can with ease in a little time gather a vast army. The centurion when he said to his servant, Come, he came; and when God shall say to men, Come, they will come, they must come, out of all parts, from all mountains.

Obs. 5. As God can easily gather armies for the good of his church, so he can as easily ruin armies which are against his church: he can mingle a perverse spirit amongst them, so divide them that they shall execute one another. "Every man's sword shall be against his brother." One Gogite should destroy another; they thought to have destroyed God's people, and they fell one upon the other. 2 Chron. xx. 22, 23, the children of Ammon, Moab, and mount Seir, came against Judah, and thought to destroy them, and take their possessions, but God soon ruined their enemies, he set them one against another: "For the children of Ammon and Moab stood up against the inhabitants of mount Seir, utterly to slay and destroy them; and when they had made an end of the inhabitants of Seir, every one helped to destroy another;" the Ammonites destroyed the Moabites, and the Moabites the Ammonites. This "great multitude," for so they are called, ver. 2, did the Lord cause to fall by their own swords. How easily did God scatter the army of the Syrians, which besieged Samaria! He made them to hear a noise of chariots and horses, whereupon they fled for their lives, and left bag and baggage, 2 Kings vii. 6, 7. Did not God at the prayers of a christian legion, in the army of Marcus Aurelius, emperor, scatter and destroy that vast army of the Marcomanni and Quadi, which consisted of nine hundred and seventy-seven thousand? He sent rain at the same time to relieve the emperor's army, which was in danger of perishing by thirst; and also thunder, lightning, and fiery hail, which ruined the enemies. God can with great facility overthrow the greatest armies.

Obs. 6. God hath variety of means and ways whereby to destroy armies and punish enemies. He hath the "pestilence, blood, an overflowing rain, great hailstones, fire and brimstone," to do the same by. He had an angel to destroy Sennacherib's army, Isa. xxxvii. 36; stars to fight against Sisera, Judg. v. 20. The shining of the sun upon the water undid the Moabites, 2 Kings iii. 22—24; the sound in the tops of the mulberry trees did the Philistines no good, 2 Sam. v. 24. God hath natural, casual, and divine means, to plague his enemies with, though they be in great armies.

Obs. 7. Those who join with great ones in wicked enterprises, must look to suffer grievous things with them. "I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him." They thought themselves safe under Gog, that they should get honour and wealth in that enterprise; but the undertaking was unwarrantable, Gog could not justify his act, nor protect them: they were co-actors in wickedness, and so should be co-sufferers. It is dangerous to adhere to greatness in wicked designs. "Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished," Prov. xi. 21. Let multitudes take Gog and great men by the hand; let them follow their counsels, tread in their steps, do their wills; this cannot secure them, they shall be punished. God is no respecter of persons; in every nation he that doth wickedly, and they that join with him, shall be punished.

Ver. 23. Thus will I magnify myself, and sanctify myself; and I will be known in the eyes of many nations, and they shall know that I am the Lord.

This verse shows the end of God's destroying Gog, and in such a manner, viz. that God may be honoured and known.

"Thus will I magnify myself." The Septuagint and some others read the words passively, I will be magnified; but the Hebrew is, I will magnify myself, or, I will make myself great; and that is done, when God doth such things as declare his power, his faithfulness, and his justice. When the Lord should execute his dreadful threatened judgments upon Gog, then his great power would appear, that he had the command of all creatures, that vast armies are nothing to him; so, his faithfulness to his people, who owned him for their God, and his justice in destroying those who would have destroyed his people.

"And sanctify myself." God is not unholy or polluted at any time; but he is said to sanctify himself, when he declares himself to be not impotent, not unfaithful, not unjust, but a powerful, faithful, righteous, and holy God.

Obs. The end of God's judgments upon the wicked is, that he may be known and acknowledged among the nations, and so have a great and holy name. God is known by executing of judgments, Psal. ix. 16: known not to be like unto men, as they conceived, Psal. l. 21; or, a God that sees not, as they said, Ezek. viii. 12; or, a God countenancing and preferring evil-doers, as they affirmed, Mal. iii. 15: but, to be a dreadful God, as when he visited Ananias and Sapphira for their sins, great fear came upon all that heard thereof, Acts v. 11; to be a holy God, as 1 Sam. vi. 20, when he smote the Bethshemites, fifty thousand of them, with sudden death, it was said, "Who is able to stand before this holy Lord God?" By his judgments he hath made his name dreadful among the heathen. What a great and holy name did the Lord make to himself, by the destruction of Pharaoh and his host in the Red sea!

CHAPTER XXXIX.

Ver. 1—7. Therefore, thou son of man, prophesy against Gog, and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal: and I will turn thee back, and leave but the sixth part of thee, and will cause thee to come up, from the north parts, and will bring thee upon the mountains of Israel: and I will smite thy bow out of thy left hand, and will cause thine arrows to fall out of thy right hand. Thou shalt fall upon the mountains of Israel, thou, and all thy bands, and the people that is with thee: I will give thee unto the ravenous birds of every sort, and to the beasts of the field to be devoured. Thou shalt fall upon the open field: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God. And I will send a fire on Magog, and among them that dwell carelessly in the isles: and they shall know that I am the Lord. So will I make my holy name known in the midst of my people Israel; and I will not let them pollute my holy name any more: and the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, the Holy One in Israel.

EZEKIEL having begun a prophecy concerning Gog and Magog in the former chapter, he proceeds in this also therein; and tells you,

1. Of the severe dealings of God with Gog, ver. 1—24.

11. Of his gracious favour and goodness to his people, ver. 25, to the end.

In these verses we have,

1. The great enemy of Gog, and author of his overthrow, ver. 1.

2. The manner of it, ver. 2, 3, 6.

3. The place where it should be, ver. 4, 5.

4. The greatness of it, ver. 4.

5. The certainty thereof, ver. 5.

6. The end of God in so doing, ver. 7.

Ver. 1. "Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal." These very words we had in the former chapter, ver. 2, 3. He was a great prince, had great command, many confederates to take his part; yet, being wicked and an enemy to God's people, God declares himself to be an enemy to him.

Ver. 2. "I will turn thee back, and leave but the sixth part of thee." These words, "and leave but the sixth part of thee," are variously interpreted. Some say, I will kill five parts of thine army, and leave but a sixth. Some, I will seduce thee. Others, I will judge thee with six judgments, viz. the plague, blood, rain, hailstones, fire, and brimstone, as it is in the former chapter, ver. 22. The Hebrew Montanus renders, I will sixth thee. For the meaning whereof, consider what has been said, chap. xxxviii. 4. "I will turn thee back, and put hooks into thy jaws;" the sense whereof was this, I will not turn thee back, but bring thee out; and because of objections, difficulties, and delays, I will draw thee forth, I will put hooks in thy jaws, and deal by thee as men do by fish in the seas, or things fallen into wells, draw thee out by hooks. The reason it is conceived of this expression is, for that they used irons with six hooks upon them, to catch hold of things fallen into waters, and to draw them out thereby. Hence it is, that the Lord saith, I will sixth thee, as the word signifies, or, draw thee out with hooks, as the sense is.

"And will cause thee to come up from the north parts, and will bring thee upon the mountains of Israel." Of Gog's coming from the north parts we heard, chap. xxxviii. 15. God would cause him to come out of those parts unto the mountains of Israel; which we may take literally, though some do take them metaphorically for the places where the church of God should be.

Ver. 3. "And I will smite thy bow out of thy left hand, and will cause thine arrows to fall out of thy right hand." Bows and arrows were much used in former days, both amongst the Jews and heathens also, as Isa. lxvi. 19; Jer. xli. 9; 1 Chron. v. 18; and when they handled them, they held the bows in their left hands and arrows in their right ones. Now when these Gogites should attempt to shoot, and do execution by shooting, God would disappoint them; causing a fear and faintness to fall upon them, so that not only their bows and arrows, but all their military instruments, should be useless; for by these mentioned, are meant all the rest. To smite or break the bow, imports the weakening of forces, or making of warlike instruments inefficacious, as Psal. xxxvii. 15; xli. 9; Hos. i. 5; Jer. xlix. 35; in these places, breaking of the bow notes, blasting of their power, and making frustrate all military instruments.

Ver. 4. "Thou shalt fall upon the mountains of Israel, thou, and all thy bands, and the people that is with thee." Not in places conspicuous to the whole church, as some would have it, but in the land and on the mountains of Israel; which Antiochus Epiphanes did not, as I showed formerly. And this verse gives warrant to depart from our translation of those words in the 2nd verse, "And leave but the sixth part of thee;" for Gog, and all his bands and confederates, were to fall upon the mountains of Israel; no sixth part of them were left.

"I will give thee unto the ravenous birds of every sort, and to the beasts of the field to be devoured."

When great armies are overthrown, sometimes their carcasses lie unburied, and so are exposed to the fowls of heaven, and beasts of the field, which prey upon them; so should it be with Gog and his for a season: after they had lain a season, they had burial, as appears, ver. 11. The word for "ravenous bird" is, עֵיט which signifies, a bird of prey, and differs from צִיפור which is, a small bird.

Ver. 5. "Thou shalt fall upon the open field." The Hebrew saith, Thou shalt fall upon the faces of the field, that is, the superficies, and so lie in open view. We had the same words in chap. xvi. 5, and xxxii. 4.

Ver. 6. "And I will send a fire on Magog." Some by "Magog" understand the land of Gog; when others, a distinct person and prince from Gog. Let "Magog" denote a place or person, God would send a fire, not metaphorical fire only, but material fire, and so it is said, Rev. xx. 9.

"And among them that dwell carelessly in the isles." Pliny saith, there are many islands in the Scythian sea, and it is likely such people as dwell therein are careless, secure, fearing no dangers; yet God would visit them with fire. But there are islands nearer than those upon the Egæan and Mediterranean seas, which dwell confidently, as the word is.

Ver. 7. "So will I make my holy name known in the midst of my people Israel." When great men go forth to war, and obtain some eminent victory, thereby they become famous; so God, by smiting Magog and all his forces, would make his holy name known, that his people should confess him to be a holy God, and his name a name of holiness; for so it is in the original.

"And I will not let them pollute my holy name any more." When men say those things which are derogatory to the name of God, as that he sees not, he hath forsaken the earth, that he is unfaithful, unjust, &c.; or do such things as cause others to blaspheme and speak dishonourably of himself, his word, worship, and providences; then are they said to pollute his holy name. After the destruction of Gog and Magog, God would order things so, that his name should not suffer.

Obs. 1. Those who are enemies unto the church, God is an enemy unto them. Gog's thought and design was to invade the land of Israel; and what saith the Lord? "Behold, I am against thee, O Gog;" hadst thou been a friend to my church, I would have been a friend to thee; but seeing thou art malicious and intendest mischief against the saints, lo, I, even I, the Lord of hosts, that can shake heaven and earth, and destroy the most puissant and politic army in a moment, am against thee. When thou touchest my people, thou touchest the apple of mine eye, and I neither can nor will bear it. Exod. xxxiii. 22, "I will be an enemy unto thine enemies, and an adversary unto thine adversaries;" whoever set themselves against Israel, have the God of Israel against them.

Obs. 2. Wicked men may be in great honour and have great power. Gog here, one whom the Lord declared himself against, was a prince, a chief prince of Meshech and Tubal. Ahasuerus, a heathen idolater, had honour and power enough, when he had one hundred and twenty-seven provinces under his command, Esth. i. 1.

Obs. 3. There are seeming contradictions in holy scriptures. In one, God saith, "Behold, I am against thee, O Gog;" in another, "I will cause thee to come up from the north parts," or sides, "and will bring thee upon the mountains of Israel." God was with Gog, and against Gog; with him by his providence, to bring him forth to manifest his spleen and gall against the land of Israel, and against him by his power and justice, to destroy him for his cruelty and bloodiness. Gen. xiv. 14, it is said, Abraham pursued the enemies "unto Dan;" and, Josh. xix. 47, there was no Dan in Abraham's days, for it was so called from Dan the son of Jacob, who was long after him: Moses, who wrote the book of Genesis, speaks of it as it was called in his days, not as it was called in Abraham's days. John i. 21, when John was asked the question, whether he were Elias? he said, "I am not;" but, Matt. xi. 14, Christ saith of John, "This is Elias, which was for to come:" John denies himself to be Elias personally, which was the sense of the questionists, and Christ affirms that he was Elias mystically, that Elias Malachi spake of, chap. iv. 5. There are many scriptures seeming to destroy one another; but if rightly understood, they do sweetly comply and shake hands together.

Obs. 4. God's hand is in the undertakings of enemies against the church. "I will cause thee to come, bring thee upon the mountains of Israel;" and if thou lingerest, I have a sixth-hooked hook to draw thee. Wars are not fortuitous, but by a special hand of God; he brings forth enemies as to correct his church by them, so to destroy them in the presence and view of his church, being corrected. Were not God's hand there, they would ruin the church; and because his hand is in such things, therefore are they ruined. After Pharaoh had afflicted the Jews the time appointed, God drew him on into the Red sea, and there, in the face and view of them, sunk him like lead into the bottom of the deeps.

Obs. 5. It is in the Lord to disable and disappoint warriors when they are ready for battle. When Gog and his soldiers should have the bow in the left hand, and the arrow in the right hand, then I will smite the bow out of the one, and the arrow out of the other hand, saith the Lord. All military strength he can easily blunt, and make all weapons of war inefficacious. He can take off the wheels of chariots, Exod. xiv. 25. He breaks the bow, he blunts the sword, and makes all weapons formed against Israel unprosperous at his pleasure, Isa. liv. 17. God stopped Rehobam when he was going with a great army to fight Jeroboam, and bring the ten revolted tribes to himself, 1 Kings xii. God hath oft put such fear into the hearts of soldiers, that, when it hath come to a pitched battle, they have presently thrown down their weapons and called for quarter.

Obs. 6. That in the same place where God shows rich mercy to the godly, even there he executes severe judgments upon the enemies. "Thou shalt fall upon the mountains of Israel." Upon those mountains in that land the Lord had showed marvelous kindness to his people, Psal. lxxvi. 1—4, and there should Gog fall. In the Red sea God preserved the Israelites, and destroyed the Egyptians; where the one met with signal mercy, there the other had severe judgment. So Joel iii. 2, "I will gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people;" God would punish them even there where he had done much for his. 2 Chron. xx. 26, the valley where Jehoshaphat blessed God for a victory, it is conceived to be here meant, and called "the valley of Jehoshaphat." The powers of darkness have oft and still do invade the mountains of Israel, the places and persons among whom God doth record his name, and there God overthrows them.

Obs. 7. That armies and others are exposed to public shame and miserable ends, is of God. "Thou shalt fall upon the open field, and I will give thee to the ravenous birds of every sort, and to the beast of the field to be devoured." Want of burial is amongst God's judgments, Jer. viii. 2; xiv. 16. To lie in open view dead, and to be mangled, torn by fowls, beasts, swine, and dogs, is a dishonourable and lamentable thing; but how dishonourable or lamentable soever it be, it is the Lord's doing. He makes wicked armies and persons sometimes as dung upon the face of the earth; they lie unburied.

Obs. 8. What the Lord speaks, that shall certainly take place. "Thou shalt fall upon the open field; for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God." With God is not yea and nay; what he saith is truth, and must infallibly be effected. As nothing can be done unless the Lord speak, so nothing can fail of being done when the Lord hath spoken. Josh. xxi. 45, "There failed not ought of any good thing which the Lord had spoken unto the house of Israel; all came to pass." God promised them to root out the nations, to plant them in Canaan, and to do much for them; and all God had spoken was made good. So, when God threatens evil, whatsoever he speaks in that kind must be fulfilled, because he is faithful, and able to make good his word, whoever opposes.

Obs. 9. When God begins to visit the enemies of his church, he makes progress therein. Not only shall Gog fall, and all his bands and people, but God will send a fire on Magog also, and upon the isles that dwell carelessly; they thought themselves invincible, being fortified by the sea; but when God arises to punish the inhabitants of the earth, who are enemies to his people, he goes from country to country at land, and from isle to isle at sea. When God draws the sword, and gives it commission, it proceeds from place to place, and is restless till all at sea and land be cut off, who are numbered out for destruction. Jer. xvii. 6, 7, "O thou sword of the Lord, how long will it be ere thou be quiet? put up thyself into thy scabbard, rest, and be still. How can it be quiet, seeing the Lord hath given it a charge against Ashkelon, and against the sea shore? there hath he appointed it." God appoints the sword to visit at land and at sea; when he begins with the enemies of his people, he will make an end with them.

Obs. 10. When God shows mercy to his church, and destroys the enemies of it, then he provides for his own honour, sanctifies his name, and makes himself to be known, distinct from all other gods. When the Jews' church shall be at peace, Gog and Magog be destroyed, then God will be glorious, all speak honourable of him, and acknowledge him to be the Holy One of Israel. When God led the Israelites through the Red sea, and took off the wheels of the Egyptian chariots, the Egyptians said, "Let us flee from the face of Israel, for the Lord fighteth for them against the Egyptians." Here they acknowledged God's power, and that he was a God distinguished from all their idol gods: a God fulfilling his promises and threats, a God able to save and destroy, even the Holy One of Israel.

Ver. 8. Behold, it is come, and it is done, saith the Lord God; this is the day whereof I have spoken.

Here the certainty of Gog's overthrow, and the rest, with the time thereof, is pointed out. "It is come, it is done," i. e. this prophecy is so certain, as if it were come and done already. It is usual among the Hebrews to put preter tenses for future, and to speak of things as past which are certainly to come.

"This is the day whereof I have spoken." God had spoken of Gog and Magog by his prophets formerly, as was showed from the 17th verse of the 35th chapter, that they should come against Israel, and utterly be destroyed in that attempt; which the Lord speaking of here as done, saith, "This is the day," not designing the prefixed day when it should be: it shall be, but when, that is hid.

Obs. 1. There is a certain time determined for the destruction of the church's enemies, which God looks upon as present, and done. "Behold, it is come, it is done;" that is, the day of Gog and Magog's ruin. God foresees things to come as if they were present, not by a presence of existence from eternity, but in his decree, on that his foreknowledge and the certainty of things is founded; we should therefore firmly believe the same, and not give way to dubious opinions thereabout.

Obs. 2. The particular time is hidden from men, and known only unto God. Man cannot say, "This is the day," but the Lord can; he knew the very moment when Gog and his should be destroyed, and the church set at liberty. The thing and time indefinitely were revealed to the prophet, but not the particular, punctual time; the Lord kept that in his own breast, his infinite wisdom saw it not meet to particularize the time. The prophets had spoken of a day that would be for Gog's invading the land of Israel, and of his falling upon the mountains thereof, but the exact time they knew not. John, unto whom the Lord Christ revealed much, tells you, that after one thousand years' reign of the saints with Christ, it shall be, Rev. xx. 7—9.

Ver. 9, 10. And they that dwell in the cities of Israel shall go forth, and shall set on fire and burn the weapons, both the shields and the bucklers, the bows and the arrows, and the handstaves, and the spears, and they shall burn them with fire seven years: so that they shall take no wood out of the field, neither cut down any out of the forests; for they shall burn the weapons with fire: and they shall spoil those that spoiled them, and rob those that robbed them, saith the Lord God.

The great victory over Gog and Magog begins in these verses, which is set out by the burning of the weapons, and spoiling them of their goods. Who obtained the victory is not mentioned; it is only said, the Jews shall go out of their cities and gather up the weapons, and burn them, &c. It is conceived the Lord will deal with Gog and his forces in some extraordinary way. Ver. 3, it is said, "I will smite thy bow out of thy hand;" and Rev. xx. 9, "Fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them:" but notwithstanding God's extraordinary dealing with them, the Jews were used of the Lord in this victory; for, chap. xxxviii. 21, "I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord God;" so that all Israel shall be in the field against him, and be the conquerors.

Ver. 9, "They that dwell in the cities of Israel shall go forth, and shall set on fire and burn the weapons." After this great and famous victory, the citizens which dwell in the cities of Israel will go forth, to see the slain, and to get spoil; and among other things, they should take of their weapons, and make themselves fire thereof. The word for "weapons" is, קֶשֶׁת, which notes any kind of weapon to oppose the enemy. It is not from קָרַע to burn, but from קָרַע to arm.

"Both the shields and the bucklers, the bows and the arrows, and the handstaves, and the spears." These latter were combustible; but how they should burn the shields and bucklers is not apparent, they being of solid metals; it is like something combustible was annexed unto them.

"And they shall burn them with fire seven years." It must needs be a numerous, or rather numberless army, whose weapons should suffice the Jews seven years for firing. John saith, their number shall be as the sand of the sea, Rev. xx. 8, which exceeds all arithmetic. Some make it a hyperbolical expression, to show the greatness of their overthrow, and multitude of their warlike instruments. Others mind us of a certain time put here for an uncertain, viz. "seven years" put for a long time. The Jewish writers do take the words literally, concluding they shall have such a victory over their enemies, as that for seven years they shall need no other materials to burn than their weapons; and think their Messiah not come, because they have not yet obtained such a victory. Sanctius thinks not that they were seven years in burning the weapons, but that they had such store which might have served them for seven years' fuel; great store, and therefore it is said, they should "burn them with fire seven years." How this was verified in Antiochus, is hard to show. It is nearer to truth, to judge that this scripture remains still to be fulfilled.

Ver. 10. "So that they shall take no wood out of the field, neither cut down any out of the forests." These words taken absolutely, do strengthen the literal acceptance of the former. We may take them comparatively, thus, That in respect of what they did use to take out of the field, and cut out of the forest, they should now cut and take little: and why?

"For they shall burn the weapons with fire." They should so supply them for fuel, that little other wood should serve. This burning of enemies' weapons conduceth much to peace. Where warlike weapons are broken and burned, not reserved, there wars cease and peace follows.

"They shall spoil those that spoiled them, and rob those that robbed them." It is incident to all people and nations to spoil and rob the people of God; and so these Gogites and their confederates, they "compassed the camp of the saints, and the beloved city," saith John, Rev. xx. 9. In all ages, the church hath been made a prey of by one or other; but the time shall be when it shall spoil her spoilers, and rob her robbers.

Obs. 1. God will give victories to his church and people which seem incredible. Here is pointed out such a victory as is full of wonders and matters incredible. Their number is as the sand of the sea, and all of them horsemen, and clothed with all sorts of arms, chap. xxxviii. 4, yet conquered. Their weapons serve for seven years' firing, and their bodies are seven months in burying, as it follows in ver. 12. Will not this be a wonderful victory? Do not these things seem incredible? God of old gave great and strange victories to his people, as the drowning of Pharaoh in the Red sea, the slaying of Sennacherib's vast army in a night by an angel. Great victories since Christ his time have been. The Christians have had signal victories against the Turk; and Sanctius tells you of a wonderful victory which the Spaniards had against the Saracens, when at one battle they slew two hundred thousand of them, and lost but twenty-five men; but whenever this overthrow of Gog shall be, it will exceed all former victories.

Obs. 2. The Lord makes that advantageous to his people, which their enemies intended to damnify and ruin them by. The bows, arrows, handstaves, and spears, shall serve the saints for fuel, with which the Gogites thought to destroy them. The sword of Goliath, with which he thought to have slain David and many Israelites, was afterwards given into the hand of David, and serviceable unto him, 1 Sam. xxi. 9. The wise and wonderful providence of God so overrides and orders things, that it makes instruments of death the comforts of life. The chariots of Siserah that came for destruction, were to the Jews for use and recreation.

Obs. 3. After the overthrow of Gog and Magog, antichrist and his adherents, the church of God shall have great peace. All their weapons of war shall be burnt; they shall make head no more against the saints. After the devouring of Gog and Magog by fire from heaven, Rev. xx. 9, the gates of the new Jerusalem were never shut, chap. xxi. 25. They feared no enemies, they had great peace.

Obs. 4. The people of God shall have a day of recompence for the wrongs and injuries they have sustained. They shall spoil those that spoiled them, and rob those that robbed them. The Gogites of the world do fleece the servants of God, eat their flesh, suck their blood, and gnaw their bones; but the day is coming, when the wicked shall be a spoil and prey unto them; which sets out the righteousness of God in his ways and judgments. What can be more equal than that he who spoils should be spoiled? See Isa. xxxiii. 1, "Woe to thee that spoilest, and thou wast not spoiled; and dealest treacherously, and they dealt not treacherously with thee! when thou shalt cease to spoil, thou shalt be spoiled; and when thou shalt make an end to deal treacherously, they shall deal treacherously with thee."

Ver. 11—16. And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will give unto Gog a place there of graves in Israel, the valley of the passengers on the east of the sea: and it shall stop the noses of the passengers: and there shall they bury Gog and all his multitude: and they shall call it The valley of Hamon-gog. And seven months shall the house of Israel be burying of them, that they may cleanse the land. Yea, all the people of the land shall bury them; and it shall be to them a renown the day that I shall be glorified, saith the Lord God. And they shall sever out men of continual employment, passing through the land to bury with the passengers those that remain upon the face of the earth, to cleanse it: after the end of seven months shall they search. And the passengers that pass through the land, when any seeth a man's bone, then shall he set up a sign by it, till the buriers have buried it in the valley of Hamon-gog. And also the name of the city shall be Hamonah. Thus shall they cleanse the land.

Having spoken of the great overthrow which Gog and his should have, and the great spoil the Israelites should get thereby; now the burial of the dead carcases and their bones comes under consideration; where we have, the place of the burial, the time how long they shall be burying, the persons by whom the name of the place.

Ver. 11. "And it shall come to pass at that day, that I will give unto Gog a place there of graves in Israel." When Gog and his forces shall be slain, lie exposed to the fowls of heaven and beasts of the field for a season, then will the Lord give unto them a burying-place; they shall not always lie putrifying above-ground, but they shall be laid in graves;

so that they shall neither be a prey to fowls and beasts, nor offensive to man, always. This was favour, that God should give his enemies sepulchres in Israel. The Vulgate and Septuagint have it, A place of name or renown, putting עַם for עַד. It was honour enough for them to have graves there in Israel. This honour had not Antiochus.

"The valley of the passengers on the east of the sea." What valley this was, is not agreed upon by interpreters. Some affirm it to be a valley near unto the lake of Gennesareth, or sea of Tiberias; others inform us it is about Jordan; some say it is on this side Jordan, some say on that side. It is most probable to be a valley near the Salt or Dead sea, where the five cities, Admah, Zeboim, Segor, Sodom, and Gomorrah, were consumed by fire and brimstone; now called Lacus Asphaltites. There, as Junius notes, men passed from Syria, Mesopotamia, Babylon, and other countries, into Arabia Felix, and Egypt; whereupon it was called "the valley of passengers," and lay eastward from Jerusalem, as the next words show: "on the east of the sea," that is, on the eastern sea. The sea of Tiberias lay northward, but Mare Mortuum lay eastward.

"And it shall stop the noses of the passengers." Such a stink shall be in that valley as shall cause the passengers to stop their noses or mouths, or both. The Spirit of God may have some respect unto the lake Asphaltites, which sent forth poisonous and suffocating vapours; so should the dead bodies of Gog and his send out such a loathsome infecting savour, as travellers should stop their noses as not being able to endure the same.

"There shall they bury Gog and all his multitude." Though Gog had a burial in the land of Israel, yet it was not in the sepulchres of the kings or prophets: it was in "the valley of passengers," near the place of God's remarkable judgment upon the sinful cities.

"And they shall call it The valley of Hamon-gog." In Jeremiah, you read of a "valley of slaughter," Jer. xix. 6; vii. 32; and it was so called from the persons slain there by Nebuchadnezzar's forces, when Jerusalem was besieged and taken. And here is a valley called "the valley of Hamon-gog," that is, of the multitude of Gog; so great a multitude were slain and buried there, as gave denomination to the valley. This valley, Joel in his days was pleased to call "The valley of decision," or threshing, as the word imports, Joel iii. 14.

Ver. 12. "And seven months shall the house of Israel be burying of them." Not some few, but the house of Israel, who were a great number, should be employed seven months in burying of them; which sets out the greatness of the victory; such a number slain as should set many thousands on work so long to bury them; seven years in burning their weapons, and seven months in burying their dead. If a certain number be put here for an uncertain, as some will have it, yet they were a long time about this work.

"That they may cleanse the land." When a multitude are slain, their putrified bodies are apt to corrupt the air and earth, and so to endanger the living. The Israelites therefore, to prevent such a mischief, shall take great pains to bury them, and that without any intention of honouring the dead thereby. When men bury the dead, usually it is for an honour to them, but not so here; the end was, to cleanse the land, which was defiled with the carcases of these Gogites.

Ver. 13. "Yea, all the people of the land shall bury them." Before he had said, "the house of Israel;" now he adds, "all the men of the land:"

some should give counsel, some should dig the graves or pits, and some should bring and put the dead bodies into them. Some understand by "the house of Israel," and "people of the land," christian people; who shall extinguish the name of antichrist, and bury it, with all his offensive errors, in the grave of oblivion; and that they make the sense of burying Gog and his.

"And it shall be to them a renown." The Hebrew is, for a name. They shall be renowned for this victory, and for their humanity in burying of the dead; their enemies shall speak honourably and well of them.

"The day that I shall be glorified." The Tigurine translation hath it thus, That day, wherein I shall be glorified, shall be famous unto them; they shall have cause to remember that day for ever. What day I shall destroy Gog and Magog with all their forces, and so get glory to myself, that day shall be a day of name, of renown, and of memorial unto them; that day shall be put into their chronicles. The Hebrew stands thus, In the day of me to be glorified; and so may point at their glorifying God for that great destruction of their enemies.

Ver. 14. "And they shall sever out men of continual employment." Gog, and his, being beaten, divers were scattered up and down the land, and by reason of their wounds, fell and lay unburied in many places; whereupon they chose out men of continuance, (so the Hebrew is,) who might go up and down from one part of the land to the other, to find out the dead.

"To bury with the passengers those that remain upon the face of the earth, to cleanse it." As those searchers went up and down, they met with passengers, whom they caused to assist them in the burial of the dead they found. It is probable they made the passengers to take the bodies or bones of the dead, and to bury them; because it was matter of defilement unto the Jews to touch dead bodies; Numb. xix. 14. they that did so, were unclean seven days. These being to cleanse the land, would not d. file themselves.

"After the end of seven months, shall they search." Seven months were the people of the land in burying their enemies, they were busied about those that fell by heaps. When these months were at an end, they sent out their searchers to examine woods, hills, caves, valleys, highways, and ditches, where any dead corpse might lie; so careful were they to prevent infection.

Ver. 15. "When any seeth a man's bone, then shall he set up a sign by it." Some bodies lying long, the fowls of the heaven, or beasts of the field, devoured their flesh, ate their bones, and left some fragments of them, which if the passengers and searchers found, they were to set up a sign or mark by them, to give notice thereof. "Man's bone," is a singular number put for a plural, men's bones. The word "a sign" is, אֵימָן which signifies a statue, a title, or sign, setting near to a grave, or a way-mark: as Jer. xxxi. 21, "Set thee up way-marks," the word is, אֵימָן and they were to direct people; so here, they set up signs to direct the buriers what to do concerning those bones.

"Till the buriers have buried it in the valley of Hamon-gog." Those appointed to bury, were to take the bones of men so discovered, and to carry them to the valley of Hamon-gog, and bury them there. There were the multitude of the slain buried, which gave that denomination to the place; and with them must the scattered and collected bones be buried.

Ver. 16. "Also the name of the city shall be Hamonah." What city shall be so called is not set down, and therefore interpreters do vary thereabouts. Some believe there was a city near that valley which had another name, and upon this occasion of slaying Gog and his multitude, lost that, and had this imposed, "Hamonah," her multitude, because a multitude of enemies were slain there. Upon occasions names have been given to places, as appears, Gen. xvi. 14; xxvi. 20—22; Hos. iv. 15; 2 Sam. v. 9; vi. 8. Others judge this city to be Jerusalem, reading the words thus, And her multitude shall be a name (or for a name) to the city; so Junius: or, The name of the city shall be from her multitude; that is, the city Jerusalem: or, The church shall be famous for her inhabitants, which slew such a multitude of Gogites; so Piscator. This sense hath more of truth in it than the other; for we find not any city called Hamonah, since this prophecy: yet those of that opinion say, it was fulfilled in the time of Antiochus.

"Thus shall they cleanse the land." The words are read by some, After they have cleansed the land; by others, When they have cleansed the land, which is the same for sense. God's giving them so great a victory over such a multitude of enemies, and their not abusing, but cleansing the land after it, should be to them for a name, for their great glory and renown.

Obs. 1. God disappoints the expectation of the wicked while living, yet sometimes affords favour when they are dead. Gog, and all his, expected to have had the land of Israel in possession, with all the desirable things thereof; but God disappointed his expectation; slays him and his; and after death, gives him and the rest a place of burial in that land, which was favour. Though they had not what they hoped for, yet they had more than they deserved: for such grand enemies to have a burying-place in that land, which was Emmanuel's land, out of which they would have driven his people, was no small favour; especially, if we add to it, that the place was named after his name, "The valley of Hamon-gog," and this recorded in the book of God, and to remain for ever.

Obs. 2. After great victories, wherein many are slain, people should for public good be careful to bury the dead; though it require time, be troublesome, and chargeable. Here they were seven months in burying the dead carcasses; they appointed men to go throughout the land to search for corpses and bones, which was a chargeable business; and wherever they found any, to bring them unto "the valley of Hamon-gog," which was very troublesome. These things they were to do for public good, that the land might not be infected with those bodies, and so infect the living.

Obs. 3. By great victories over enemies, God honours his own name, and makes his people to have a name. "It shall be to them a renown the day that I shall be glorified." That day my power, my faithfulness, my justice, my mercy, will be seen, acknowledged, and so I shall be praised, made glorious; and in that day my people will be spoken of for their valour, faith, and humanity in burying the dead, and so will be renowned. When God destroyed Sennacherib's army, God did not only make himself a name, but he also made Hezekiah a name; 2 Chron. xxxii. 23, "He was magnified in the sight of all nations from thenceforth;" and that which was his magnification was the magnification of all his people. The honour of the head is the honour of the whole body. How renowned will new Jerusalem be, when God and Magog, antichrist and all that adhere to them, shall be taken away! When the Lord shall destroy them by fire from heaven, and multitudes be cut off by the sword, then shall those multitudes be for a name to the city.

Obs. 4. After conquering, there ought to be cleansing. When Gog and his shall be subdued, then they must cleanse the land; not a dead corpse, not a bone, must be left in it; such things did defile. We have had many victories; but what cleansing hath there been in this land? Dead bodies, limbs, and bones of men have been buried; but what dead works are cleansed out of this land? Do not all sorts of sins abound, yea, superabound? Had we cleansed the land for each victory God hath given us, but of one common sin, by this time we had been spotless, we should not have had any visible iniquities amongst us; but now we are like Golgotha, a place of sculls and dead men; like Sodom and Gomorrah, or the valley of Hamon-gog; we stink so through our blasphemies, errors, and wicked practices, that passengers stop their noses and shake their heads.

Ver. 17—20. And, thou son of man, thus saith the Lord God; Speak unto every feathered fowl, and to every beast of the field, Assemble yourselves, and come; gather yourselves on every side to my sacrifice that I do sacrifice for you, even a great sacrifice upon the mountains of Israel, that ye may eat flesh, and drink blood. Ye shall eat the flesh of the mighty, and drink the blood of the princes of the earth, of rams, of lambs, and of goats, of bullocks, all of them fattings of Bashan. And ye shall eat fat till ye be full, and drink blood till ye be drunken, of my sacrifice which I have sacrificed for you. Thus ye shall be filled at my table with horses and chariots, with mighty men, and with all men of war, saith the Lord God.

These verses speak of a great feast, and the invitation of guests unto the same: strange guests! the fowls of the heaven and the beasts of the field; and they have as strange dishes provided for them, even the flesh of mighty men and princes.

Ver. 17. "Speak unto every feathered fowl, and to every beast of the field." The Hebrew for "every feathered fowl" is, כָּל־עוֹף־בְּמִנְיֹתָא, to the fowl of every wing; that is, to what fowl soever hath wing, let that fowl be invited to come and eat of the feast prepared; and likewise, "every beast of the field," which is a beast of prey.

"Assemble yourselves, and come, gather yourselves on every side." The fowls and beasts being void of reason, could not understand what the prophet said; but God, who had command over them as well as other creatures, would cause them to come, as if they had had reason and understanding. This shows the certainty and greatness of the victory; the fowls and beasts are called to come, and their coming shall not be in vain; they must come "on every side," and therefore great provision shall be made for them.

"To my sacrifice that I do sacrifice for you, even a great sacrifice upon the mountains of Israel." The Hebrew word for "sacrifice" is, זֶבַח, zabach, which signifies, a sacrifice of a slain beast. When a beast was killed and to be offered up to God, that was a sacrifice properly. Sometimes it notes the killing of men and beasts, as here, which metaphorically is called a sacrifice. Gog with his men and horses were slain, and these God calls his sacrifice, a great sacrifice which he prepared for the fowls and beasts, a great feast or supper; and the place where this should be is, "upon the mountains of Israel."

"That ye may eat flesh, and drink blood." In the former verse he spake of Gog's funeral, and those that were slain with him, even the dead bodies and the bones; how is it now that he speaks of eating their flesh, and drinking their blood, after the seven months were expired, and the searchers had gone through the land? It is not probable, that some were left unburied, and so the fowls and beasts invited to eat their flesh and drink their blood; but having touched a little upon this in the 4th verse, he re-assumes the argument again in this and the three next verses, and speaks more fully to it.

Ver. 18. "Ye shall eat the flesh of the mighty." The Septuagint saith, of giants; by these mighty men, or giants, the chief ones in the army are pointed out, men of power and command.

"And drink the blood of the princes of the earth." In this vast army of Gog, there were the princes of divers countries his confederates, chap. xxxviii. 5, 6. Their blood should the fowls of heaven and beasts of the earth drink, being shed and spilled upon the ground. They should feed upon not the vile and base ones, but the chiefest, and so drink their blood.

"Of rams, of lambs, and of goats, of bullocks, all of them fattings of Bashan." By these metaphorical expressions are set out the dead carcases of men, who were of several dispositions and qualities; some were like rams and lambs, others like goats and bullocks; some were sweeter and more tender flesh than others. Rams and goats, or grags, as goats, as the Hebrew word signifies, were leaders; lambs and bullocks were those under the leaders. All of them were well fleshed and fat like the king of Bashan. Bashan was a high hill, Psal. lxxviii. 15, beyond Jordan, which yielded strong oaks, and fat cattle, Ezek. xxvii. 6; Amos iv. 1.

Ver. 19. "And ye shall eat fat till ye be full, and drink," &c. The fowls of heaven and beasts of the field are resembled unto men at a feast, where having meat and drink which likes them, they eat and drink plentifully. The fat, flesh, and blood of men is sweet, and so pleasing to fowls and beasts, which should cram and fill themselves therewith.

Ver. 20. "Thus ye shall be filled at my table." The word for "table" is, שֻׁלְחָן, from שָׁלַח to send, because it is sent out, or extended at length; so that it may contain many dishes, and guests may sit down thereat to feed upon those dishes. The mountains of Israel were the table here, the carcases of men were the dishes, the fowls of heaven and beasts of the field the guests. Such plenty and variety of dishes they should have, as had not been seen at any table before; every guest should be filled.

"With horses and chariots, with mighty men, and with all men of war." In the Hebrew it is, with horse, with chariot, with mighty man, and all man of war, all singulars, put for plurals; here it is declared who are meant by rams, lambs, goats, and bullocks in the 18th verse, horsemen, chariot-men, men of might, yea, all men of war.

"Saith the Lord." Lest it should be thought an incredible thing, the Lord ratifies it, saying, Thus saith the Lord God. Jehovah, who is able to make such preparations for the fowls of heaven and beasts of the earth, hath said it, and will do it.

Obs. 1. That all creatures are at the command of God, and ordered to do this or that, according to his wise providence. "Speak to every feathered fowl, and to every beast of the field." Were not these creatures at the beck of the Lord, and subject to his overruling providence, it had been in vain for Ezekiel to have spoken so unto them. In 1 Kings xvii. 4, God commanded the ravens to feed Elijah, and they did come and bring him meat, morning and evening duly, ver. 6. Psal. l. 11, it is said, God knows "all the fowls of the mountains;" and he calls them to what service he pleases. He called for quails to satisfy the lustings of the Israelites, Numb. xi. 31. God asked Job the question, whether the eagle mounted up at his command? Job xxxix. 27; implying, that though man hath no command over the fowls of heaven, yet himself hath. And so over fishes and beasts; Jonah i. 17; ii. 10, the whale came and went at God's command, and did the service he appointed. Lev. xxvi. 22, "I will send wild beasts amongst you, which shall rob you of your children;" and this he did; 2 Kings ii. 24, the Lord caused two she-bears to come out of the wood and destroy forty-two of their children. God is the Lord of hosts, and can command an army of creatures at his pleasure, to benefit his servants, or to plague their enemies.

Obs. 2. God doth execute some great and signal judgment, when he summons the creatures to eat the flesh and drink the blood of the slain. Ofttimes the bodies of Jews and gentiles have been given for meat unto the fowls and beasts, as Jer. vii. 33; xxxiv. 20; Ezek. xxix. 5; but they have not been summoned and called by open proclamation, as here it is. The prophet must "speak to every feathered fowl, and to every beast of the field, and say, Assemble yourselves, and come, gather yourselves on every side." Such a proclamation you have but twice more in all the Scripture: once in Jer. xii. 9, "Come ye, assemble all the beasts of the field, come to devour;" he speaks of that great destruction of the Jews by Nebuchadnezzar. The other place is Rev. xix. 17, 18, "I saw an angel standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God; that ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great." This place runs parallel with Ezekiel, and sets out the greatness and signalness of God's judgments upon the enemies of the church. And it is conceived by some to be the very same judgment Ezekiel speaks of, viz. that of Gog and Magog.

Obs. 3. It is matter of delight and pleasure unto God, to destroy the enemies of his church and people. "Come to my sacrifice that I do sacrifice for you." The Jews took great pleasure in sacrificing of creatures unto God, 1 Chron. xxix. 21, 22; and God was well pleased with sacrifices, Gen. viii. 20, 21. Here he calls the destroying of Gog and Magog his sacrifice, his feast, or table; he took as much delight in their slaughter as in any sacrifice, or in any feast. Wicked men are briars and thorns, and God hath as much pleasure in the cutting down the one, as the husbandman hath in cutting down the other. God delights in acts of judgment, as well as in acts of mercy. Isa. xlviii. 14, "He will do his pleasure on Babylon, and his arm shall be on the Chaldeans;" the destruction of Babylonians and Chaldeans God calls, "his pleasure;" the Hebrew is, תענוג his will. It is God's will to destroy all the enemies of Zion; and the doing of it pleases him.

Obs. 4. God is impartial in his judicial dispensations, he puni-eth the great delinquents as well as the lesser. Mighty men, princes, those that ride in chariots, rams, great goats, are slaughtered and given to the fowls and beasts, as well as the inferior sort, the men of war, lambs, and bullocks; they were all in the same confederacy, in the same war against the kind of Israel; and God winked not at the greatest, nor spared the meanest, but made them all a sacrifice. God is a righteous God, and executes his judgments without respect of persons. Let not great men flatter themselves, they will not be exempted when God comes forth to judgment, though they be princes.

Obs. 5. Great men, and vulgar ones also, may be a prey to the creatures, and lie without burial for a season. Princes, mighty men, and others, after their death, lay upon the mountains of Israel, and had their flesh eaten and blood drunk by fowls and beasts, which was another judgment added to the former; and the greater to the heathen, because they thought their souls did wander up and down upon the earth, unless their bodies had been buried, as Tertullian saith. The Athenians had the burial of the dead in such honour, that if a captain neglected to bury the dead which fell in war, they punished him with death for it. It is a great ignominy to lie unburied. Hence the beast, when the witnesses were killed, would not suffer their bodies to be buried, but let them lie in the streets, that so they might be the more ignominious.

Obs. 6. God provides for the brute and dumb creatures, and that abundantly. "Every feathered fowl, and every beast of the field," shall be filled at my table. God doth not only feed the creatures, but sometimes feasts them. This world is God's family wherein are millions of living creatures, and not one of them is neglected of God. Psal. cxlv. 15, 16, "The eyes of all wait upon thee, and thou givest them their meat in due season;" they have their breakfast, dinner, and supper; and lest we should conceit one hath too much, another too little, it follows, "Thou openest thine hand, and satisfiest the desire of every living thing;" he satisfies the fishes of the sea, the beasts of the earth, and fowls of heaven. How should this teach men to depend upon God, not giving way to distrust, or discontent! Matt. vi. 26, "Behold the fowls of the air," saith Christ, "for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?" He saith not, the fowls of the house, they are cared for; but, "the fowls of the air," that have none to look after them, unless it be fowlers to take away their lives; neither do they know where to get the next meal when they have gotten one, nor what hole or bush to lodge in at night, yet their heavenly Father provides for and feeds them. Does he take care of such creatures, and will he not take care of you? Yes, certainly he will; and why? ye are better than they; ye are rational, they irrational; ye are his sons, they his servants.

Ver. 21, 22. And I will set my glory among the heathen, and all the heathen shall see my judgment that I have executed, and my hand that I have laid upon them. So the house of Israel shall know that I am the Lord their God from that day and forward.

The Lord having declared what destructive judgments he would bring upon Gog and Magog, he comes here to make known the end of his so dealing with them, viz. the manifestation of his glory amongst heathens and his own people.

Ver. 21. "I will set my glory among the heathen." I will give my glory, saith the Hebrew, that is, I will cause it to be evident amongst them. By "glory" understand the glory of his justice and power.

"All the heathen shall see my judgment that I have executed." These words give light to the former. The heathen seeing the dreadful judgments of God upon Gog and his, should acknowledge the justice and power of God.

"And my hand that I have laid upon them." They shall not only have a bare sight, but experimental knowledge: they shall find themselves concerned therein, and feel the hand of God heavy upon them: for the strength, wealth, liberty, and glory of the heathen will be much impaired, if not totally ruined, by the overthrow of Gog.

Ver. 22. "So the house of Israel shall know that I am," &c. They did know the Lord to be their God before; but this signal stroke of God upon their enemies, being a signal mercy unto them, should so engage them unto God, that from that time forward they should afresh and eminently acknowledge God to be their God, and none to be like unto him; that he will not desert them in their straits, but be their deliverer.

Obs. 1. The great end of God's judgments upon sinful men is, his glory. "I will set my glory among the heathen, and all the heathen shall see my judgment," &c. God doth therefore execute judgment, that he may be glorified. When sinful people will not give glory to God for his mercies, he will fetch glory out of them by his judgments. They are the work of his hand, and whatever that be, it is "honourable and glorious," Psal. exi. 3; not only his works of creation, but those of judicial providence. Upon what nation soever, army, or navy, the Lord shall lay his hand, he will work out his glory thereby; that is the end of all his works and judgments.

Obs. 2. Dreadful judgments upon the wicked, are engaging mercies unto the godly. "So the house of Israel shall know that I am the Lord their God from that day and forward." The hand of God upon Gog and his should so affect their hearts, that they should experimentally know, and say, The Lord is our God, he hath laid low our enemies; he hath freed us from their insultings, threats, oppressions: he is our Deliverer, our Saviour, our Redeemer. Isa. xxv. 9, "It shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." When God executed severe judgments upon the enemies of his people, then were their hearts thus affected, and engaged unto the Lord; then they rejoiced in God their Saviour, and said, "He will save," he hath saved us, and he will save us. When the godly see that great judgments upon their enemies are great mercies unto them, their faith is advanced thereby, and they are persuaded God will never leave them; their hearts are warmed, and they cannot but own and praise him.

Ver. 23, 24. And the heathen shall know that the house of Israel went into captivity for their iniquity: because they trespassed against me, therefore hid I my face from them, and gave them into the hand of their enemies: so fell they all by the sword. According to their uncleanness and according to their transgressions have I done unto them, and hid my face from them.

The heathen had base and blasphemous thoughts of God, they imagined he was not able to keep his people out of the hands of Nebuchadnezzar and his gods: to vindicate himself, therefore, the Lord tells them the true cause why they were carried into captivity, namely, for their iniquity. It was not impotency in God, but iniquity in them which caused it.

Ver. 23. "The house of Israel went into captivity for their iniquity." The Hebrew is, the house of Israel were led into captivity in their iniquities.

God took them in their iniquities, and carried them away into captivity in them, or for them. The Septuagint says, for their sins, their crooked and perverse doings.

"Because they trespassed against me." The word Syr maal, signifies, stubbornly and contemptuously to sin; to oppose him one ought to be subject unto: such transgressors were the Jews; they opposed God.

"Therefore hid I my face from them." To hide the face from them imports, 1. The denying of them his favour, his counsel, his help; and, 2. Declaring his anger and severity by sharp judgments. Psal. lxxx. 3, "Cause thy face to shine, and we shall be saved." God's face was clouded, and hid from his church, so that it had neither favour, counsel, nor help from him, but sad afflictions and judgments; for he was angry with the prayers of his people, he fed them with the bread of tears, and gave them tears to drink in great measure: therein he sorely afflicted them.

"And gave them into the hand of their enemies." This followed upon God's hiding his face: they felt acts of his displeasure; he gave or delivered them up into the hands of their enemies: he caused Nebuchadnezzar to come, besiege Jerusalem, and to take it: and then God gives into the hand of others, when his providence acts and orders things so, that men come under their power.

"So fell they all by the sword." Some were carried into captivity, some fled, some were left in the land after Nebuchadnezzar and his forces returned to Babylon; how then is it said, "they all fell by the sword?" The sense is, they were all brought under by the power of the sword, not all killed that were made subject; and some of all sorts killed.

Ver. 24. "According to their uncleanness and according to their transgressions have I done unto them." Here God anticipates what Jews and gentiles might object, viz. that he dealt very harshly, yea, cruelly with them, in breaking them to pieces, in unchurching and unstating of them: but he tells them, what he did was "according to their uncleanness and their transgressions," he did nothing but what they had deserved.

Obs. 1. God doth withhold mercies from his people, and lay sad judgments upon them, for their sins. "The house of Israel went into captivity for their iniquities." Because they trespassed against God, therefore did he hide his face from them, give them into the hand of their enemies: they fell by the sword, and were brought into subjection. If God's own people sin, they shall smart for it: he will not countenance them, hear their prayers, give them counsel, nor put forth his hand to help them. Isa. lix. 1, 2, "Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear: but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear." Sin is of that nature, that it turns away God's face from his own people, that it stops his ear against their prayers, and shrinks up his arm, so that there is no help for them; and not only doth it keep good things from them, Jer. v. 25, but draw evils upon them, Neh. xiii. 18. It was Israel's sins brought judgment upon them and their city.

Obs. 2. God will convince his enemies of the true cause of his executing dreadful judgments upon his people. "The heathen shall know that the house of Israel went into captivity for their iniquity." They thought there were other grounds for it: that God could not preserve them against such a potent adversary as Nebuchadnezzar was; that his power and wisdom was not such, as was in their gods; but the Lord made them know these were not the grounds why the house of Israel suffered such grievous things, but that it was their iniquities, transgressions, and uncleannesses which brought judgments upon them. When heathens saw what was done to Jerusalem, and being unsatisfied, asked the question, "Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this great city?" What! is he unfaithful to his people? Could he preserve it no longer? Are our gods stronger than the God of Israel? No, no; these things are not the cause. Tell them, saith he, what is the true cause; it is, "Because they have forsaken the covenant of the Lord their God, and worshipped other gods, and served them," Jer. xxii. 1, 9.

Obs. 3. None have just ground of complaint, whatsoever judgments are upon them, howsoever God deal by them. "According to their uncleanness and according to their transgressions have I done unto them:" their sins have been great, and I have executed great judgments upon them; they filled up the ephah with wickedness, and I filled up the vial with wrath; they drove me out of my sanctuary, and I drove them out of my land; they turned their hearts from me, and I hid my face from them. God's judgments are righteous; he wrongs no man, no nation; men have cause to complain of their sins, not his judgments: see Lam. iii. 39; Psal. cxlv. 17.

Ver. 25—29. Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob, and have mercy upon the whole house of Israel, and will be jealous for my holy name; after that they have borne their shame, and all their trespasses whereby they have trespassed against me, when they dwelt safely in their land, and none made them afraid. When I have brought them again from the people, and gathered them out of their enemies' lands, and am sanctified in them in the sight of many nations; then shall they know that I am the Lord their God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen; but I have gathered them unto their own land, and have left none of them any more there. Neither will I hide my face any more from them: for I have poured out my Spirit upon the house of Israel, saith the Lord God.

The gracious goodness of God towards his people appears in these verses; where we have,

I. The reduction and gathering of them into their own land, ver. 25, 27, 28.

II. The causes moving God to do so; which are, his mercy, and his jealousy, ver. 25.

III. The time when they shall be reduced, ver. 26.

IV. The events following the same; which are,

1. Acknowledgment of God to be their God, ver. 28.

2. The light of God's countenance, ver. 29.

3. Pouring out of the Spirit.

Ver. 25. "Now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob." If we refer these words to the captive Jews in Babylon, the time was drawing nigh of their deliverance, and then fore the Lord saith, "Now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob," that is, the posterity of Jacob being in captivity; but, if we refer these words to what went before in the chapter, the sense is, Gog and Magog being destroyed, and their funeral over, "now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob," the dispersed Jews, or believers, who were the seed of Jacob. A spiritual reduction is here understood by some.

"And have mercy upon the whole house of Israel." Then God will have mercy, not on two tribes, but all the tribes, on "the whole house of Israel;" hitherto it hath not been, but it shall be. God will forgive the sins of the Jews in general, and bring them out of their forlorn condition to glorious enjoyments and liberty. This word רחמי is from רחם which signifies, to embrace one with a most inward affection of bowels, mercy, or compassion. God would be as merciful to them as a mother to the fruit of her womb.

"And will be jealous for my holy name." In the Hebrew it is, I will be jealous, or zealous, for the name of my holiness, I will not suffer my name to be polluted, as it is ver. 7. The mercies I have promised shall be performed, whatever obstacle is in the way, my holy name is engaged for it, and the jealousy I have for my name will provoke me to do the same. Jealousy is such an ardent affection as will break through all that would retard or frustrate an undertaking. It is given to God after the manner of men, and nothing shall let him from accomplishing what he hath promised.

Ver. 26. "After that they have borne their shame." The Jews being a people distinguished from other nations by their laws and worship, should have so lived, as never to have given God occasion to have cast them off; but they sinning above the nations, were scattered of God into several parts of the world, and there they were reproached by the heathens for their God, their worship, and their laws, and so did bear shame. Or thus, shame may be put for the punishment of their shame, viz. their sin, that was their shame; and sad judgments did they bear for the same, which was also their shame.

"And all their trespasses whereby they have trespassed against me." "Trespasses" here notes punishment; they trespassed against God in Canaan, and he punished them for those trespasses in Babylon, and other places. After they had borne their shame and punishment the appointed time, God would visit them in mercy, bring them back to Zion, and do great things for them.

"When they dwelt safely in their land, and none made them afraid." They had much peace, were secure, feared no enemies nor judgments, and thereupon sinned freely, and multiplied transgressions without number. The word for making afraid is, chamad, which signifies to be moved in body or mind. Fear doth distemper both; but the Jews had none to disaffect either, by frightening of them.

Ver. 27. "When I am sanctified in them in the sight of many nations." In chap. xxxviii. 23, God saith, he will sanctify himself, that is, declare himself to be a holy God; and here the word is passive, "When I am sanctified," that is, when I am openly acknowledged to be just in punishing of them, and merciful in delivering of them. Piscator carries the words actively thus, I will demonstrate my holiness and majesty, both by afflicting and by freeing of them.

Ver. 28. "Then shall they know that I am the Lord their God, which caused them to be led into captivity among." &c. After their suffering grievous and long afflictions, and receiving choice mercies, they shall know and confess that it was the hand of God which led them into captivity, and not the hand of man; before, their eyes were upon men, Nebuchadnezzar and his forces, they looked not at God; but when they should be thoroughly purged in the furnace of affliction, and be brought out thence to partake of special mercies, then they should see, know, and acknowledge that God did all, that it was his hand did it; that Nebuchadnezzar could not have done aught against them, nor Cyrus aught for them, without his commission. So, when the Jews shall be gathered out of all parts they are now in, they shall know it to be the hand of God. The Hebrew for "which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen," is, in my transferring them, or causing them to be transferred to the heathen.

"And have left none of them any more there." At the first gathering of the Jews out of Babylon, many were left there; Ezra i. 5, not all the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, but the chief of the fathers, and such whose spirits God had stirred, came thence; not the rest. But here is mention of such a gathering, as that none shall be left. None of those predestinated, saith Maldonate. Not any one willing to return into the country, saith Mariana. But these senses do not come up fully to the words, which are, I will not leave of them any more; formerly, many have been left, but there shall be such a gathering as none shall be left: whole tribes were then left in captivity.

Ver. 29. "Neither will I hide my face any more from them." God hid his face seventy years from them in Babylon; and, since their crucifying of Christ, he hath hid it from them sixteen hundred years. But he hath a time to let them see his face again, and never more to hide it from them; they shall have his favour, his counsel, his help, and protection. They shall not be under severe judgments, but enjoy sweet mercies.

"For I have poured out my spirit upon the house of Israel." Jaminus hath the words, When I shall pour out my spirit upon them. In the Hebrew it is a preter tense for a future, which is usual therein, to show the certainty of the thing. The Septuagint saith, Because I have poured out my wrath upon them. Their sense is, Seeing I have uttered and accomplished all my displeasure against them, they shall henceforth have my face and favour. The word for "my spirit" is, רוחי the same with that in chap. xxxvi. 27, which the Septuagint renders there, my spirit; and it is so to be taken here. God makes the house of Israel a great promise, he will pour out his Spirit upon the same. It shall have all spiritual blessings in abundance, and the continuation of them.

Obs. 1. The afflictions of God's people may be long and sharp, yet they shall not be always, they shall have an end. There is a time when they shall cease: "Now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob." God brings his people into captivity, and out again in due time. Some vessels must be longer in the fire than others, their dross and rust is so incorporated into them, that they must not only be made hot but melted; and, when they are melted, then they are taken out of the furnace and new moulded. The Jews were long in the wilderness, but at length they were brought into the land of the Amorites, Josh. xxiv. 7, 8. The gentiles must tread down the holy city forty-two months, or twelve hundred and sixty days, and then it shall be freed, Rev. xi. 2, 3. God may be wroth with the sheep of his pasture, his wrath may be hot, may be long, but it shall not be for ever, Psal. ciii. 9. Let us be patient under long afflictions, and wait for deliverance: it is drawing nigh daily, and the set time will come ere long, Heb. x. 37.

Obs. 2. There is a day of mercy to come for the Jews, even all of them. "I will have mercy upon the whole house of Israel;" not one tribe, two, or ten, but "upon the whole house of Israel;" I will pardon their sins, gather them out of the nations, and make them a glorious people. This promise was but in part fulfilled, when Judah, Benjamin, and some of Levi, returned out of Babylon: the complete fulfilling of it remains yet. The Jews do expect the making of it good to this day, saying, they are in a most shameful and distressing captivity; and look for such a gathering as none shall be left. Doubtless there is a time when God will smile upon the Jews, show them mercy, and bring them unto Christ, and make him salvation unto them, Hos. i. 10, 11; Rom. xi. 15—27; Zech. x. 6, 7.

Obs. 3. The great things God doth for his people, are not done for their worth, or merits, but for his holy name's sake. The bringing Jacob out of captivity, and having mercy upon the whole house of Israel, is upon that account: I will be zealous, or jealous for my holy name. God doth all for his name's sake. Ezek. xxxvi. 32. "Not for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord God, be it known unto you:" lest they should think there was something in them deserved at God's hands, and moved him to do for them, he only declares against it; "Be it known unto you," and to all the world, that it is not for your sakes, for any excellency or good I see in you; but it is for mine own sake, for the honour of mine own holy name, which is so dear and precious unto me, that I am jealous of any thing that tends towards the disparagement of it, and zealous to do whatever I have promised, and may promote the glory thereof. Isa. ix. 7. "The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this:" רָצַף the zeal, or jealousy, of the Lord will do it: he had made many great promises before, of Christ and his government for ever; and if any thing should rise up to hinder the same, the Lord of hosts would be zealous to see it performed, otherwise his holy name would suffer. God's name is the great motive to him to do for his. This Jeremiah knew full well, and therefore presseth God to do for them upon that account: chap. xiv. 7, "O Lord, though our iniquities testify against us, do thou it for thy name's sake:" there was a great famine, and they deserved not a drop of rain, or bit of bread; but God's name was a strong argument to provoke him to do for them.

Obs. 4. Sin brings men to shame and punishment, which they must undergo one where or other. "After they have borne their shame and trespasses." They sinned in Canaan, and were ashamed and punished in Babylon, and other places. It is only sin which makes men blush and smart.

Obs. 5. In times of peace and safety, usually men forget God, and sin against him. When the Jews dwelt safely, and none made them afraid, then they trespassed against God. At such times, men are scornful and proud, Psal. cxxiii. 4; they trust in mountains, Amos vi. 1; they live sensually, ver. 4—6; they increase the afflictions of the afflicted, Zech. i. 15. When men are in peace, and without danger, they have opportunities for hearing of God's word by his servants; but, Jer. xxii. 21, saith God, "I spake unto thee in thy prosperity; but thou saidst, I will not hear." Jerusalem and her children had deaf ears, and obstinate hearts, in their prosperity. Solomon, who "had peace on all sides round about him," 1 Kings iv. 24, forgot the Lord, married strange wives, and did strange things for them: he built high places for their idol gods, and went himself after other gods, 1 Kings xi. 1, 5, 7, 9. Great is the danger of prosperity, yet all desirable. That caution which God gave his people, when they were to come into Canaan, where they should have peace and plenty, is needful for all in a prosperous condition, Deut. vi. 12, "Beware, lest thou forget the Lord:" men are very apt then to forget him.

Obs. 6. The Lord by openly delivering of his people from an afflicted condition, doth sanctify his own, name, and bath it sanctified by others. His gathering them out of enemies' hands, declared his power, his faithfulness, his mercy; and thereby he sanctified his own name; and these attributes being acknowledged by those that are delivered, and by the nations from whom they are delivered, his name is sanctified. God's people are oft under great and long afflictions, and whenever he sets them at liberty, he sanctifies his name, and his name is sanctified; he declares himself, and is declared by others, to be a gracious God. When the Jews were brought out of Babylon, they said, "The Lord hath done great things for us;" and the Babylonians said, "The Lord hath done great things for them," Psal. cxvii. 2, 3. Thus did God sanctify, and men sanctify: the one, by declaring his omnipotency, faithfulness, and goodness; the other, by acknowledging the same.

Obs. 7. There is a time when the Jews shall not only have mercy, but abundant and lasting mercy. God will gather them, pour out his Spirit upon them, and never hide his face from them any more. This time will be a happy and glorious time. For the house of Israel to be enriched with the gifts and graces of God's Spirit, which are excellent, and to have the light of God's countenance shining upon them, and that always, what can be more desirable? This condition, as Paul saith, will be "life from the dead," Rom. xi. 15. Now they are like dead trees, without any sap in them; but then they will be like trees well-rooted, full of sap, and in their greatest glory: full of branches, leaves, blossoms, fruit, and the sun shining upon them.

CHAPTER XL.

THAT there be ἐπιπέματα, things hard to be understood, in the sacred Scriptures, these nine last chapters, as well as the beginning of Ezekiel, do abundantly testify: and such difficult things are in these last, that they have made many men of the greatest parts to tremble at the thought of interpreting them. The rabbins say, that the first of Ezekiel, and these last chapters, are inexplicable secrets, and understood by none; and therefore forbid their disciples to read them, adding, When Elias shall come, he will explain all things. Jerom, that great light in his time, professes his trepidation hereat, that he did knock at a closed door. Gregory the great, when he went about this work, said, We pursue a midnight journey. Maldonate affirms, that this last prophecy of Ezekiel is so difficult and dark that it appears scarcely possible to be understood. Oecolampadius tells us, that in chap. xlii. there is the grand difficulty, which ancient expositors understood not; and he brings in rabbi Solomon, who wrote upon the whole Talmud, saying, that he thinks there is not any thing extant which aids the understanding of it; and professes, that neither by his own study, aid of ministers, or by his own reading, he attained any help in understanding the meaning of this building, but only what he had from Heaven: and of himself he saith, chap. xlv., In this passage, above all others, I feel the weakness of my own understanding, yet silently I adore its mysteries. It is good to tremble at the word of God, both what we understand, and what we understand not, for all is of equal authority; and to him that trembles thereat, the Lord looketh, and will let in light. The vision is dark, but God dwells in darkness; the temple and city are dark, but Jehovah-Shammah, "the Lord is there," whom we most humbly desire to let out some beams of light, whereby we may come to understand something of the incredible sweetness of these dark and deep things.

It is not to be expected that I should proceed here, as in the former chapters, by speaking to every verse. Some I shall pass over, and say (Ecol. in c. 42.) with Jerom, I know my own ignorance.

Some would have this temple, represented to Ezekiel, to be that built by Zerubbabel and the Jews, after the captivity; but there is much to be said to prove it not to be so.

1. That temple was built in Jerusalem, in the place where Solomon's temple stood; but this temple Ezekiel saw, was to be without the city, as interpreters observe from the 45th and 48th chapters.

2. That temple was for the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin. This of Ezekiel is for the whole body of the Jews, all the tribes are mentioned, chap. xlvii. xlviii.; and strangers had inheritance here amongst the Israelites, chap. xlvii. 22; which was not so in Moses', Solomon's, or Zerubbabel's time.

3. In Zerubbabel's temple there was no such river, nor trees yielding new fruit every month, as is spoken of Ezekiel's, chap. xlvii. 12.

4. God promised, chap. xliii. 7, to dwell among the Israelites of this temple for ever, which cannot be verified of Zerubbabel's temple and city; for the Lord forsook both, and delivered them up to the Romans, who destroyed them.

5. The temple our prophet speaks of, was not to be defiled, nor the holy name of God, by the house of Israel, which should then be, chap. xliii. 7, 8. But Zerubbabel's temple was defiled, as you may read in the Maccabees; and the Jews who returned from Babylon defiled the name of God by their iniquities, as appears, Neh. xiii.

6. The twenty-five thousand reeds, being the length of the holy portion offered to the Lord, and the breadth ten thousand reeds, Ezek. xlv. 1, cannot be understood of any city or temple which the Jews should build after their captivity; for the twenty-five thousand reeds make forty-five miles in length, say some; fifty and upwards, say others; and the ten thousand, sixteen or eighteen miles in breadth: never was any such city built.

There are many other things differing from what was in Moses', Joshua's, and Solomon's days. The measures differ much from those of the tabernacle and temple. The land was not divided in Joshua's time, as here it is to the tribes. The priests and Levites had no portion of land, as here they have. There was no such portion or oblation for the prince. Their sacrifices and oblations are not after the same manner. The altar, chap. xli. 22, differs from the altar of incense, Exod. xxx. 2. The cleansing of the sanctuary, and putting the blood of the young bullock upon the posts and corners of the settle of the altar, chap. xlv. 18, 19, is a new ordinance, not to be found in Moses' law. In Ezekiel's division of the land were no cities of refuge appointed, there would be no need of them, Ezek. xlv. 25.

This vision, therefore, points out the introduction of a better hope, viz. the church of Christ under the gospel. A Lapidé tells us, that many rabbins and Jews refer this temple and city to the Messiah, expecting that he should build them; and, because this third temple and new city are not yet built, they think the Messiah is not yet come. This argument was objected by the Jews to Galatinus, who answers it in his 5th book, chap. 10, and concludes thus, The Jerusalem and temple con-

Quod Messias
nondum venierit quia tertium

dum est aedifi-candum.

In Apoc. 12. concerning which Ezekiel speaks, are to be understood mystically. Of that mind is Viegas.

It is conceived, therefore, that in this vision is represented the restitution of the Jewish church, their temple, city, and worship, after the captivity, not simply, but as they were types of the church under the gospel; for, as we must not exclude these, so we must know, this is not the principal thing intended. That which the vision doth chiefly hold out unto us is, the building of the christian temple, with the worship thereof, under Jewish expressions, which began to be accomplished in the apostles' days, Acts xv. 16. And that the spiritual temple, consisting of believing Jews and gentiles, is chiefly intended, we may see from that correspondency between Ezekiel and John in his Gospel and Revelation. There are many parallel places in them; as,

Ezek. xxxvii. 22.	compared with	John x. 16.
— xxxvii. 27.	—	Rev. xxi. 3.
— xxxviii. 2, }	—	— xx. 8.

— xlviii. 1—7.	—	— xxi. 12, 13, 16.
— xlviii. 31—34.	—

There is one thing more also intended, viz. the restoring of the christian church after its apostasy and suffering in spiritual Babylon under antichrist. Many are the breaches, rents, and ruins of the christian church to this day; and we may see the tabernacle of Christ is fallen. But it is expected that he "whose appearance was like the appearance of brass, with a measuring line in his hand," Ezek. xl. 3, should come and raise it up, and build the ruins thereof, bringing in the fulness of Jew and gentile, that so the state of the church may answer those prophecies made of it, Isa. lx. 17, 18; Ezek. xlv. 8. There shall be no violence, no oppression by princes, or others. Hitherto there hath been little else but oppression in all lands; and the new heaven, and new earth, wherein dwells righteousness, have not yet been created, but are to be expected as things intended in this vision.

Ver. 1—4. In the five and twentieth year of our captivity, in the beginning of the year, in the tenth day of the month, in the fourteenth year after that the city was smitten, in the selfsame day the hand of the Lord was upon me, and brought me thither. In the visions of God brought he me into the land of Israel, and set me upon a very high mountain, by which was as the frame of a city on the south. And he brought me thither, and behold, there was a man, whose appearance was like the appearance of brass, with a line of flax in his hand, and a measuring reed; and he stood in the gate. And the man said unto me, Son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears, and set thine heart upon all that I shall shew thee; for to the intent that I might shew them unto thee art thou brought thither: declare all that thou seest to the house of Israel.

We are come now to the last part of Ezekiel's prophecy, which is a typical prophecy concerning Christ and his church, set forth under the vision of the new temple, city, and kingdom, comprehended in these nine last chapters. In which we have,

I. The building of the new temple, with the several appurtenances thereof, in chapters xl. xli. xlii. xliii.

II. The ministry, worship, and ordinances of this new temple, in chapters xliiii. xliiv.

III. The restitution or reformation of the whole land, the commonwealth, kingdom, and city, with several ordinances for the prince and people, in chapters xlv. xlvi. xlvii. xlviii.

In describing of these, the prophet useth, saith Hufenrefferus, words and phrases suitable to the state of the Jews; he describes, as it were, the temple, worship, and land of the Jews; when as he aims at no such thing, but intends the spiritual kingdom of Christ and the gospel.

The scope of this vision was to comfort the afflicted Jews, who, being in captivity, lamented the desolation of the temple, city, and commonwealth of Israel. To the prophet, therefore, the Lord shows in a vision the restoration of them again; and not only so, but greater things are held out and promised under them, as the greatness and glory of the church under Christ in time of the gospel, of which John speaks, Rev. xxi. 22. It is not an earthly city, temple, Jerusalem, we are to look at here; but a spiritual city, temple, Jerusalem, viz. the church of Christ, whose name is Jehovah-Shammah.

In this chapter you have,

1. A preface, or introduction to the vision.

2. A narrative of the wall, several courts, gates, the porch, of this new temple, and the measures of them.

In the preface are five things: the time, the manner, the place, the Author, and end of the vision.

Ver. 1. "In the five and twentieth year of our captivity, in the beginning of the year, in the tenth day of the month." Here the time is pointed out when this vision was presented to Ezekiel, which was in the twenty-fifth year of his captivity; so long it was since he, with Jehoiakim, was carried into Babylon, and kept there. His first vision was in the fifth year of his captivity, Ezek. i. 2; and this his last vision was twenty years after, in the beginning of the year, the tenth day of the month; which some make to be in the autumn, others in the spring.

"The fourteenth year after the city was smitten." After Jehoiakim had been eleven years in captivity, the city was smitten and utterly laid waste, which was in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, 2 Kings xxv. 2; Jer. xxxix. 2; lli. 5. From this period, or epocha, is the vision reckoned; fourteen years after the desolation of the city, Ezekiel had it. Some would prove this year to be the year of jubilee, because it was the fiftieth from the eightieth of Josiah's reign, when the book of the law was found; but that year appears not to be a jubilee year. Mestlinus makes the year of jubilee to be in the tenth of Zedekiah's reign; and if so, this year of the prophet's vision was but sixteen years after the year of jubilee, and thirty-four years before the next jubilee.

"In the selfsame day." The Hebrew is, עַל הַיּוֹם בְּהַיּוֹם in the bone, or essence, of the day, in the body of the day, or in the strength of the day, when the heat and light were greatest. The same words are in Gen. vii. 13, where the words are rendered, "the selfsame day," being a Hebrew form of speech.

"The hand of the Lord was upon me." &c. The Chaldee saith, A prophetical Spirit from the face of the Lord resided upon me; others, The strength, or divine virtue of the Lord was upon me. These words we had in chap. i. 3, where they were opened. Here the manner of the vision is set forth; it was by the Spirit of God upon the prophet, enlightening and informing his mind.

"And brought me thither." I was brought in mind, not in body, by the Spirit, thither, that is, to the city that had been smitten, but now seemed to be rebuilt; and so it follows,

Ver. 2. "In the visions of God brought he me into the land of Israel." In those great, glorious, and wonderful visions of God, wrought in the prophet by the Spirit of God, he apprehended that he was in the land of Israel, beholding not only with the eyes of his mind the things presented unto him, but also with the eyes of his body.

"And set me upon a very high mountain." The place where the prophet had this vision was in the land of Israel, and upon mount Zion, or mount Moriah, where the temple was built. Moriah is from מרה to see; this mount is the mount of vision, and on it had Ezekiel this glorious vision. Kimchi saith, This mountain is the mountain of the temple, and this city is Jerusalem on the south, Lightfoot on the Temple, chap. iv. ver. 13. The rabbins conceive the land of Israel to be the highest of all lands, and mount Zion, or Moriah, the highest of all the mountains in that land. It was a type of the church of Christ, Heb. xii. 22; and therefore it is represented here to be a very high mountain: and so it was unto John also, Rev. xxi. 10, which words allude to these of Ezekiel. The Hebrew for "set me," is, caused me to rest; when the prophet was brought to this mountain, he had rest: there is no true rest but in the church, in the mount of vision.

"By which was as the frame of a city on the south." The mount itself was south from Babylon, and the city was on the south side of the mount, which was smitten there. Now the prophet sees in vision, as it were, the model or frame of a city; he had seen before the ruin of the city, and now he sees the raising of it.

Ver. 3. "And he brought me thither." That is, the Spirit of God carried him in vision to that mountain, where he saw an idea of a city.

"And, behold, there was a man, whose appearance was like the appearance of brass." Here the author of the vision is specified and described from his appearance, the instruments he had, and the place where he stood. This "man" is made by some an angel, by others, Christ. It was the Son of God appeared in the first vision unto Ezekiel, and so he doth in this last: he was a Master-builder, and appointed of God to build the house: Zech. vi. 12, 13, "Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, Behold the man whose name is The Branch," that is, Christ, "he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the Lord; even he shall build the temple of the Lord; and he shall bear the glory." And that this man was Christ his appearance declares, for it "was like the appearance of brass;" and so Christ, Rev. i. 15, is said to appear, "his feet were like unto fine brass;" and here his countenance, or whole body, appeared like unto brass, that is, free from spot, beautiful, bright, and shining. Christ was without blemish, or spot, 1 Pet. i. 19; he was holy, harmless, undefiled, Heb. vii. 26; he was "fairer than the children of men," Psal. xlv. 2.

"With a line of flax in his hand, and a measuring reed." These are the instruments which this man had, "a line and a measuring reed." Such instruments are proper to architects and master-builders; and being in the hand of Christ, do demonstrate him to be the chief Builder of the church. The "line of flax" was to measure the great spaces of the ground, viz. the floors, court, and compass of the buildings and walls. The "reed" was to measure the buildings, the thickness, length, and breadth of them. Of such a line and reed is spoken in Zech. ii. 1, 2; Rev. xi. 1, xxi. 15. A reed is smooth, round, and light, and therefore fit for measuring: they were plentiful in those parts.

"And he stood in the gate." The Hebrew is, he standing in the gate; his posture was standing, his place was "in the gate." He stood there to direct the prophet, to show him the measures of the temple, and other things; to manifest he hath command of the temple, and may keep out, and let in, whom he pleased.

Ver. 4. "And the man said unto me, Son of man, behold with thine eyes," &c. In this verse the end of the vision is held forth, which is, that Ezekiel, thoroughly understanding the things comprehended in it, might communicate them to others. Here the Lord Christ is called "man," for that in time he was to be incarnate; and the Son of man speaks to Ezekiel, and commands him two things:

1. To give the most diligent and best attention as possibly might be, and therefore calls for not only the eyes and ears, but the heart also; "Behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears, and set thine heart upon all that I shall show thee;" his heart must go with his senses, and seriously ponder what was presented. Some things were to be seen, some things were to be heard, and all to be considered: and why? he was brought thither for that end.

2. To make known what he should see, hear, and observe; "Declare them to the house of Israel." He must not keep things to himself, but publish them to others, to the church and people of Israel.

Obs. 1. The Lord keeps an exact account of the time of his church and people's sufferings. He is the best and most punctual chronologer of all in heaven and earth. Men and angels may mistake, misreckon, but the Lord doth not, cannot. "In the twenty-fifth year of our captivity, in the beginning of the year, in the tenth day of the month, in the fourteenth year after the city was smitten, in the selfsame day;" here the years, the months, and days of the Jews' captivity was observed of the Lord. When we are in misery, and suffering conditions, we think God forgets us, Psal. lxxix. 5; lxxxix. 46; but he takes notice of every hour, day, month, and year.

Obs. 2. When the church is low, in the worst, most desperate, and deplorable condition, even then the Lord hath a care of his church. Now the temple, city, and land of Canaan were utterly laid waste, the people many of them destroyed, the rest in Babylon without hope of ever seeing their own country, chap. xxxvii. 11. In this condition the Lord appears to Ezekiel, and gives him a most singular and excellent vision concerning the restoration of the church, the extent, dignity, and glory of it, whereby he showed both the prophet and the people, whose hearts were filled with sorrow. When the church is in the wilderness, under persecution, in Egypt, or Babylon, the Lord is solicitous for it: Zech. i. 14, "I am jealous for Jerusalem and for Zion, with a great jealousy."

Obs. 3. The church is mount Zion, or mount Zion is the church, wherein God makes known his mind for the comfort of his people. Ezekiel was carried in Spirit into the land of Israel, and set there upon a very high mountain, viz. mount Zion, which typed out the church of God: and there he had this glorious vision, there sweet consolation was given forth for the afflicted. The church is sometimes called a garden, and fountain sealed, as Cant. iv. 12; sometimes a vineyard, Matt. xx. 1; sometimes a house, 1 Tim. iii. 15; sometimes a city, Psal. xlv. 4; Isa. lx. 14; sometimes a mountain, Psal. ii. 6. And it is so called for the height, the glory, and the strength of it. Mountains are high, conspicuous, and strong, and so is the church; on mountains is good air, so likewise is in the church; hills are nearer heaven than other places; they are below, the church is above the world.

Obs. 4. The church is well seated and well ordered. "Upon which was as the frame of a city." It is seated upon a mountain, the mountain of God's decree, power, and truth; it is well ordered, for it is as the frame of a city, where every thing is in its right place, and all fitly joined together: Psal. cxxii. 3, "Jerusalem is builded as a city that is compact together;" and the church is a body fitly joined together, and compacted, Eph. iv. 16. Hence strength and beauty are to the church, it being so seated and so united. The one made Christ say, "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it," Matt. xvi. 1, and the other made Solomon to say, "It was beautiful as Tirzah, and comely as Jerusalem," Cant. vi. 4.

Obs. 5. The Man Christ, who is sinless and glorious, is the chief Builder and exact Measurer of the church, and things belonging to it. "Behold, a man, whose appearance was like the appearance of brass, with a line of flax in his hand, and a measuring reed." Christ, without spot, full of glory and wisdom, is the Master-builder: Matt. xvi. 18; xxi. 33; Heb. iii. 3, prophets, apostles, ministers, are his servants, under-officers, instructed, directed, and rewarded by him: he is the Master-builder, the line and reed are in his hand, he measures all the trees and stones used in this building, the outward and inward courts, with all their appurtenances. He was the son of Joseph, a carpenter, and some mystery might lie in that.

Obs. 6. The way into Zion, and unto the Father, is by Christ: he stands in the gate of the temple, ready to receive any that should come and be found fit for entrance: he had his line and reed in his hand to measure them. None unmeasured might enter. Hence it is that Christ saith, John xiv. 6, "I am the way, and no man cometh to the Father, but by me:" and, John x. 9, "I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture." Christ is the Lord of the fold and field; by him they enter in, by him they are led out to the good pastures, and led in again: he will not suffer any thing that defileth to enter into the fold, the temple, the new Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. 27.

Obs. 7. The Lord Christ, when divine things are presented unto us, would have us attend, intent, and apply the whole heart unto them. Such things as are of weight, slightness and trifling about them are intolerable; therefore it is said here, "Son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears," let thy senses be wholly taken up with these things, "and set thine heart upon all that I shall show thee;" thine heart also must be fixed upon every thing shown thee, thou must let nothing pass without due observation. As Ezekiel was to do thus about the things of his vision, so should all ministers and christians about the things of the gospel, which are revelations of the mind of God by Christ. It is oft said therein, "Who hath ears to hear, let him hear," Matt. xiii. 9, 43; Mark vii. 16; Luke xiv. 35, and in other places, intimating, that if men have either inward or outward ears, they should hearken to the things of God. They are divine, and may infinitely advantage or infinitely prejudice us, if they be not well heeded; if we be not attend unto them, intent upon them, and heartily closing with them, better we had never had them: "it will be easier for Sodom and Gomorrhah at the day of judgment, than for such." Let us mind, therefore, and mind to purpose, all things shown us of Christ; let us set our senses and whole hearts upon them.

Obs. 8. What the Lord Christ reveals unto his servants the prophets and ministers, they must not reserve to themselves, but communicate to others for their instruction, edification, and comfort. "Declare all that thou seest to the house of Israel." He must not see, hear, observe for himself, but for "the house of Israel," for the church and people of God. Matt. x. 27, saith Christ to his disciples, "What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light; and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the house-tops:" whatever I have imparted unto you that do ye impart unto others, take the best advantages ye can to make the same known. The servants of God and Christ must not only utter what they receive, but utter all they receive: Acts xx. 27, Paul kept back nothing that was profitable for them, but "declared to them all the counsel of God."

Ver. 5. And behold a wall on the outside of the house round about, and in the man's hand a measuring reed of six cubits long by the cubit and an hand breadth: so he measured the breadth of the building, one reed; and the height, one reed.

Great houses and cities have walls, 1 Kings iii. 1; vi. 5; so this house had a wall round about it. By this wall we may understand the wall of God's protection, which is round about the church. This wall was in height and thickness alike, six cubits high and six cubits thick; it was strong, securing the house Ezekiel saw. God, who is stronger than all, is the defence of the church, Psal. cxxv. 2. Babylon's wall, which was one hundred cubits high, and thirty feet broad, sufficed not to preserve her from ruins; that wall was battered and levelled with the ground; but Jehovah, the Lord of hosts, is the wall about this building, and such a wall as all the powers of the world and hell cannot shake or batter: Zech. ix. 8, "I will encamp about mine house;" and, chap. ii. 5, "I will be unto Jerusalem a wall of fire round about, saith the Lord." The church of God, having such a wall, is secure and invincible.

The church is called a house, not a tabernacle, because of God's inhabitation of it, and his fixed abiding there: Psal. cxxxii. 13, 14, "The Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest for ever; here will I dwell; for I have desired it." Zion notes the church in all ages; there is God's house, there is the desire of his soul, there he rests, he hath no rest in all the world but in Zion.

The measuring reed in the hand of the man is the same with the reed in John's hand, Rev. xi. 1. Those that exercise architecture use lines and reeds to measure things therewith, and so doth Christ here. The line and reed in his hand, is the word, or everlasting gospel, which, Rev. xxi. 15, is called "a golden reed," right, strong, and flexible; with this he measures the church, and all things belonging unto it. By the word he sets out the nature, greatness, power, privileges, and characters of the church: by this he measures out the qualifications, liberty, and power of members and officers therein. Hence the word is called a rule, or canon, Phil. iii. 16.

The Hebrew is, a reed of measure of six cubits in a cubit, and of an hand breadth. Whether these words, "an hand breadth," should be joined to the six cubits taken jointly, or to each cubit distinct by itself, is doubtful: that in chap. xliii. 13, seems to make the hand's breadth to be added to each cubit, for it saith, a "cubit is a cubit and an hand breadth." This we may understand of the legal or sanctuary cubit, not the common one, which was less by a hand's breadth than the other, this being five, the other six hands' breadth. Hence some deny that the hand's breadth must be added to each cubit, for then there will be seven cubits, those six hands' breadth making another cubit. They will have the reed six cubits long, and a hand's breadth over, the sixth part of a cubit more. A cubit is that length between the elbow and top of the middle finger: now this space being longer in some men, and shorter in others, no certainty can be determined, especially, when men differ in their heads more than in their arms; for some make a cubit to be five hand's breadth, some six, some a yard, and some an ell, or ells, some a foot and half.

The line and reed are in Christ's hand, the virtue and benefit of them is from him. This line and reed being the word, hath its efficacy from Christ; out of his hand it is unefficacious, unbeneficial; but being in his hand, his power and Spirit going with it, it measures out and fits materials for this spiritual building. The book written within, and sealed with seven seals, could none open but Christ, Rev. i. 3, 5; and as none could open it but he, so none can make it efficacious besides him. All the efficacy of the word is from Christ by his Spirit: 2 Cor. x. 4, "Our weapons are mighty through God."

All things in the church must be exact, and according to divine order; things must not be jumbled, but fitly framed and joined together, Eph. ii. 21; iv. 16. Nothing is left in this house to the wills, inventions, and humours of men; all things must be measured, and measured by the line and reed of Christ; no men may bring their own reeds or lines to measure aught: Matt. xv. 9, "In vain do they," &c.; this is dangerous. Matt. xvii. 5, "Hear him;" Acts iii. 23, "Every soul that will not," &c. Timothy must not do what he pleased in the house of God, but he must proceed according to rule, according to what Paul, the servant of Christ, had written unto him, 1 Tim. iii. 14, 15.

"The breadth of the building, one reed; and the height, one reed." Here were small beginnings at first; the building was but one reed in breadth and height. This seems to point out the smallness of the christian church at first, it was only in Judea and Jerusalem. Of little breadth, and low in gifts and graces, it knew little of the mysteries of the gospel; and so as little in height, but after it extended in breadth and height.

Ver. 6. Then came he unto the gate which looketh toward the east, and went up the stairs thereof, and measured the threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad; and the other threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad.

There is frequent mention of the gates belonging to this temple, and the courts of it; as the east gate, ver. 6, 32, 44; the north-gate, ver. 20, 35, 40, 44; the south gate, ver. 24, 27, 28. And there were divers east gates, north gates, and south gates, as there were divers walls and courts; so in Solomon's temple, and in that built after the captivity.

Christ came from the gate of the outward wall where he first stood, ver. 3, 5, and came to an inward gate, which expositors make to be the gate of the temple. He passed through the first court, which some call the court of the gentiles, and came unto the next gate.

Why Christ came to the east gate rather than to the north gate, this being nearer the gate of the wall which he entered by than the other, is questioned. It is probable it was, because the face of the house looked that way, as it is, chap. xlvii. 1, "The forefront of the house stood towards the east;" and that gate is counted the principal which stands before the face of a house.

The outward wall had but one gate, the other walls of the inward courts had three gates apiece, one eastward, one northward, and one southward, but no gate was westward. The Jews called the east the forefront of heaven, and the west, the back-part of heaven: by the first, they note spiritual things; by the second, temporal and earthly things. Those that come into this temple must mind spiritual things, they must not let out their hearts unto the world and worldly delights, they are western things, and there was no door in the west. They must go upwards, not downwards; keep within, not go out.

The prophet being to measure the gates, was brought first to those of the outward court, and first to the east gate, then to the north gate, and lastly, to the south gate; but when he came to the gates of the inner court, he begins with the south gate, then the east gate, and last of all the north gate. There was a differing order in measuring these gates, ver. 28, 32, 35.

These gates do hint unto us the readiness in Christ and God to receive comers, and the confluence of them from all parts. This temple hath many gates, and those looking to the several quarters of the world. If men come from any of them, there is a gate before them, and admittance for them: Isa. lx. 3—8, "The gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising. Lift up thine eyes round about, and see: all they gather themselves together, they come to thee: thy sons shall come from far, and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side," &c. He goes on there, and shows what flowing and flocking shall be to the church, even as doves to a window; and ver. 11, it is said of this Jerusalem, "Her gates shall be open continually; they shall not be shut day nor night;" and that this is meant of new Jerusalem, John satisfies us, Rev. xxi. 25, where he brings in these words, speaking of the new Jerusalem, "The gates of it shall not be shut." It had twelve gates, ver. 13, and not one of them should be shut.

"Went up the stairs thereof." There are stairs and steps spoken of in ver. 6, 22, 26, 31, 34, 37, 49. The temple being upon a mountain, the ascent must needs be by stairs and steps. For the number of them, in the 6th verse, the Septuagint saith they were seven, but the Hebrew mentions not the number in that place. In the 22nd and 26th verses you hear of seven steps, and in the 31st, 34th, and 37th, of eight steps; but these were in several places, and served for several ascents; for that is the use of stairs and steps.

Three things I conceive are hereby held out unto us:

1. That we come to the knowledge of spiritual things by degrees; they are not known at once, but successively. Temple mysteries we come unto by steps. Christ leads his people on from one thing to another, from faith to faith, from strength to strength. Those that come to the temple proceed by degrees, first one step, then another: Ezekiel was carried on in the sight of his vision gradatim; he had not the sight of all at once, but one thing after another.

2. The knowledge of divine things is not attained without labour and difficulty. There are steps and stairs in this temple, and those that will behold the glory and understand the mysteries of it, must go upward, first one step, and then another: and it is difficult to go up stairs and steps: it hath cost many hot water who have been going up these steps to find out the secrets comprehended in this vision.

3. In temple work we must make progress. It is not sufficient to go up a step, a stair, or two, and then stand still, or descend; we must go forward, go up higher, to the top. It is not enough to go up two or three rounds in Jacob's ladder, and look about; but if ever men will get into heaven, they must go to the top of the ladder: Rev. iii. 21, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Christ overcame the difficulties, he went up all the stairs, and, persevering to the end, was crowned.

"And measured the threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad; and the other threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad." Here were two thresholds, the lower and upper, which the Grecians call ὑποθέρσιον, and ὑπερθέρσιον; that the foot goeth over, and that the head goeth under; and they were very broad, each a reed, or six cubits, broad, and were to adorn and strengthen the gate. Christ is the gate and door of the church, his human and divine natures are the ornament and strength thereof.

Ver. 7. Very little chambers.

In this verse, and ver. 10, 12, 13, 16, 17, 21, 29, 33, 36, 38, 44, 45, 46, of this chapter, you read of chambers. In Middoth, it is said the chambers were one above another, and so it is evident they were, chap. xli. 6. Ecolampadius saith, they were little lodgings, made for the use of those who served in the temple. Their number was great. In some of them, those that either kept the temple, or ministered, dwelt; in others were laid up those things which pertained to the service of the temple.

In the chambers "they laid the meat offerings, the frankincense, and the vessels, and the tithes of the corn, the new wine, and the oil, which was commanded to be given to the Levites, and the singers, and the porters; and the offerings of the priests," Neh. xiii. 5; the tithes were laid up in treasuries and storehouses of the courts, or in the chambers thereof, Mal. iii. 10.

Ezek. xlii. 13, 14, the use of chambers northward and southward is said to be for the priests; "They be holy chambers, where the priests who approach unto the Lord shall eat the most holy things: there shall they lay the most holy things, and the meat offering, and the sin offering, and the trespass offering; for the place is holy. When the priests enter therein, then shall they not go out of the holy place into the outer court, but there they shall lay their garments wherein they minister: for they are holy; and shall put on other garments, and shall approach to those things which are for the people."

These chambers may represent unto us, 1. The mansions which are in heaven: John xiv. 2, "In my Father's house are many mansions," saith Christ: he showed Ezekiel these chambers in this visional temple, and he told his disciples of those celestial mansions which he would prepare for them.

2. That entertainment, rest, and comfort, the saints enjoy, and shall have in the church under Christ. If a man come to his friend's house, and he have never a chamber for his repose, it is poor entertainment, cold comfort, and little ease, if he must lie on the ground; but if he have variety of chambers and beds for him, his entertainment, rest, and comfort will be good; he shall not need to fear wind or weather. When men come to the new Jerusalem, and are citizens thereof, they shall have good accommodation, sweet rest, and sound comfort: there shall be no voice of weeping or crying, Isa. lxx. 19; there shall be no tears, no death, no sorrow, no crying, no pain, Rev. xxi. 4. In the world is tribulation, but in Christ is peace, in Zion is peace; under the new Jerusalem, the devils shall be bound up, and there will be great peace, and spiritual comfort in abundance.

3. These chambers, less and greater, may note out the several congregations, or churches, of the gospel times, be they little or great, all which are in the church of Christ, as these chambers were in this visional temple.

Ver. 8. He measured also the porch of the gate within, one reed.

The thresholds, and the porch, were all of one measure, viz. six cubits and a hand's breadth. The word for "porch" here is, עֲשָׂה and in ver. 10, is rendered "posts;" it signifies both. Porches were for the dignity of the house and accommodation of strangers.

Ver. 9. Then measured he the porch of the gate, eight cubits; and the posts thereof, two cubits.

In the verse before it is said, the porch was one reed, that is, six cubits; and here we find the measure of it eight cubits. In the former verse he spake of the breadth, here of the length of it. The posts were the pillars, artificially placed on the one side and on the other.

"The porch of the gate was inward." It was within the wall, looking towards the house itself.

Ver. 10. And the little chambers of the gate eastward were three on this side, and three on that side; they three were of one measure: and the posts had one measure on this side and on that side.

The eastern gate, as it had its porch and pillars on each side of it, so it had its three chambers on each side of it, and they were uniform, as the posts or pillars were.

Ver. 11. And he measured the breadth of the entry of the gate, ten cubits; and the length of the gate, thirteen cubits.

The Hebrew word for "entry" is, עָדָה and rendered, a door, ver. 13; and so it is mostly taken in Scripture. If by "entry," be meant the door, how is it said that it is ten cubits in breadth, when the door is never wider than the threshold? which in the 6th and 7th verses is said to be but one reed broad, or six cubits: either it was some other door, or the posts to which the door was fastened and shut to were added to the measure. If we hold to the word "entry," it may be the breadth of the space between the outward gate and the inward.

"The length of the gate thirteen cubits." "Length" here is the height of the gate, it was thirteen cubits high.

Ver. 12. The space also before the little chambers was one cubit on this side, and the space was one cubit on that side, &c.

There was סָבִיב a border, or space of a cubit, on each side of the chambers, and yet before them; and the chambers on each side were alike, six cubits apiece.

Ver. 13. He measured then the gate from the roof of one little chamber to the roof of another: the breadth was five and twenty cubits, door against door.

These chambers were not continued, nor contiguous, there was the space of five cubits between them; and of twenty-five cubits, in that breadth, was between them, as they stood opposite one to another.

Ver. 14. He made also posts of threescore cubits, even unto the post of the court round about the gate.

Posts of this length some think incredible, and therefore divide these cubits between the posts on each side the porch, which reach up unto the posts of the outward court, making them thirty cubits apiece. Some make these posts of sixty cubits to be the cloister, which being supported by posts was sixty cubits long.

Ver. 15. From the face of the gate of the entrance unto, &c.

From one gate to the other were fifty cubits, and the porch of the inner gate ten cubits. We are to make progress in the temple, and not to stand still.

Ver. 16. Of the windows.

There were several windows in this structure which was presented to our prophet, as appears, ver. 16, 22, 25, 29, 33, 34; and chap. xli. 16, 26. These windows "were narrow windows," that is, narrow without and broad within, that they might receive and let in the light more fully. Such windows were in Solomon's temple, 1 Kings vi. 4; skewed windows.

By these windows is signified the spiritual light which should be in the church of Christ. He is called, Mal. iv. 2, "The Sun;" Isa. ix. 2, "A great light;" John viii. 12, "The light of the world;" and by those windows, the apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, he hath, and still doth, let in light into the church. The promise was, that "the earth should be full of the knowledge of the Lord," Isa. xi. 9; that he would "pour out his spirit upon all flesh," Joel ii. 28, 29; so that their sons and daughters should prophesy, their old men dream dreams, and their young men see visions; yea, servants and handmaids should have the spirit, and be full of light. This is in part fulfilled, and shall be more and more; for when the "new Jerusalem comes down from God out of heaven," as it is Rev. xxi. 2, then will the light be greater, "and the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it," ver. 24; then will the Lamb be the light thereof.

Also, that spiritual joy which should be in the church; Acts xiii. 52, "The disciples were filled with joy;" chap. ix. 31, "The churches walked in the comfort of the Holy Ghost."

"To the little chambers." The least churches, and least saints, shall not be without windows; they shall have light and joy, teaching and comfort.

In the 17th and 18th verses of this chapter, and 3rd verse of chap. xlii. mention is made of the pavement of the outward court. The Hebrew word for "pavement" is, רצפה which signifieth, a burning coal; Isa. vi. 6, the seraphim had a live coal, רצפה in his hand: the pavement was of stones that seemed like burning coals. If the pavement of this temple were so glorious, what was the temple itself! Solomon's chariot was paved with love; this temple with love and zeal. These stones which made the pavement may show what the meanest and lowest in the christian church should be, viz. shining, living, and lively stones; humbly submitting to the cross, and content to be under, as a pavement.

Of the outward and inward court.

Thirty-five times the terms of court, "outward and inward court," are repeated, in chapters xl. xli. xlii. xliii. xlv. xlv. and xlvii.

The outward court was for the people, the inward court was for priests, and was holy; Ezek. xlii. 14, it is called "the holy place." There was another court, it is observed by some, viz. "the court of the gentiles;" which, it may be, Ezekiel points at, when he distinguisheth the sanctuary from the profane place, chap. xlii. 20. But it is evident from the Scripture, that Solomon's temple had an "outward and inward court," and so had this. The outward court there was great, 2 Chron. iv. 4; and the compass of this temple and city which Ezekiel saw, "was eighteen thousand measures," chap. xlvi. 35.

The courts of Solomon's temple were very large, which comprehended most of the people of Israel, who came thrice a year into them to worship, 2 Chron. xxiii. 5, "All the people shall be in the courts of the house of the Lord." This court, called also "the great court," 2 Chron. iv. 9, was between the court of the gentiles the outward court, and the court of the priests the inward court, and that great court, or court of Israel, was the court of aid; so the word העזרה signifies. Thither they came, there they prayed for aid, and had it from the Lord, 2 Chron. xx. 4.

There seems to be another court belonging to the temple of Solomon; for, 2 Chron. xx. 5, mention is made of a "new court." Some think this the priests' court; so called, because of the altar renewed therein by Asa, 2 Chron. xv. 8; but others make it to be the court of the women, the great court of the people being divided into two, one for the men, and the other for the women. It was not so from the beginning.

In "the outward court" the people stood; and it represented the nations, which are out of the church. In "the inward court," where was the candlestick, the shew-bread, and altar of perfumes, were the Levites and priests; and this court represented the church, where the word of God doth enlighten and nourish us, and Christ is our altar of perfumes. The holy of holies represented heaven, into it the high priest only entered; typifying our High Priest, the Lord Christ, his entrance in there alone by his own power, to bring us thither. So that the first signified the state of nature; the second the state of grace; the third the state of glory.

Hereby the greatness of the church in the time of the gospel, and especially in the time of the new Jerusalem, is pointed out. These courts were of great compass, and had gates looking to the several parts of the world. In Peter's time, many thousands were added to the church; there were Grecians as well as Jews, Acts vi. 1. The extent and largeness of the church is set out fully by Isaiah in his 60th chapter. So Rev. vii. 4—10; and xxi. 24—26, "The nations of them that are saved shall walk in the light of it; and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all," &c. This church must needs be great, "for from the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same my name shall be great among the gentiles; and in every place incense shall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering: for my name shall be great among the heathen, saith the Lord of hosts," Mal. i. 11.

In Solomon's time many gentiles came to the Jewish church; a hundred and fifty-three thousand six hundred were found there at once, 2 Chron. ii. 17; which shadowed out the great access which should come to the christian church.

Of the palm-trees.

There were many "palm-trees" seen by Ezekiel in this temple, ver. 16, 22, 26, 31, 34, 47.

Palm trees are trees of great height, and sink not with the weight of burdens; but they are carried upwards, and being cut down, grow up again from the root. The branches are fair, and always green. It was the sign of victory. When Theseus instituted games in Delos, he gave the conquerors palms. The proverb among the Latins, To obtain the palm, was used to mean victory. It notes out a flourishing condition.

These "palm trees" were for ornament of this temple; and the saints in gospel times, being victorious and flourishing, are to be the ornament of the church. Rev. vi. 9, "I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands." Psal. xcii. 12, "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree." Rev. iii. 12, "Him that overcometh, will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out."

Ver. 19. An hundred cubits eastward and northward.

The floor, or pavement, of the people's court was a hundred cubits square.

Ver. 20. The measures of the north gate, the chambers, windows, and arches thereof, were after the measure of the first gate, ver. 21; that is, after the measure of the gate that looketh toward the east, ver. 22.

Ver. 23. The gate of the inner court was over against, &c.

There were gates in the priests' court, and gates in the people's courts; and they were one over against the other, and a hundred cubits distant each from another.

Ver. 24. After he brought me toward the south.

When we are in temple work, we must move according to the mind of the Master-builder, and not of our own heads.

"Behold a gate toward the south." The measures of this gate, the posts, windows, and arches, ver. 25, 26, were as the former measures of the gates, they were uniform.

Ver. 26. The south gate had seven steps to go up to it, and so had the north gate, ver. 22; and the east gate had its stairs: see before, ver. 6.

Ver. 27, 28. The prophet from the outward court is brought to the inner court, and first to the south gate; and the measures from gate to gate, as before, were a hundred cubits; and the measures of the little chambers, posts, arches, and windows belonging to the south gate, ver. 19, 30, 31, to the east gate, ver. 32, 33, 34, and to the north gate, ver. 35, 36, were the same, and without difference. There was neither defect nor excess in these measures, but equality.

Ver. 37. The going up to the north gate of the inner court had eight steps, so had the east gate, ver. 34, and the south gate, ver. 31. The gates of the outward court had but seven steps.

The people that came thither were to be holy, but the priests, who came into the inner court, were to be more holy. They who are nearest God should be most holy; they are to be a step, at least, above others.

Ver. 38. The burnt offering was washed.

Some, by this washing of the burnt offering, do think baptism to be prefigured; which denotes the washing away the filthiness of sin by the blood of Christ. It may note out to us the purity of that which is to be presented to the Lord; nothing unclean will be acceptable to him.

Ver. 39. Of the table offerings and sacrifices.

From the beginning of the 39th verse to the 44th, Ezekiel tells you of the tables seen in this temple; their number, situation, description, and use: their number was eight, some make them twelve: their situation was by the side of the porches and gates, four on one side, and four on another side: for the description of them, they were of hewn stone, a cubit and half long, a cubit and half broad, and one cubit high: the use of them was, to slay the burnt offering, the sin offering, and the trespass offering thereon, and to lay their flesh thereon.

It is not to be imagined, that, under the times of Christ, the Jewish worship should be revived. These expositions of tables, offerings, and sacrifices, import some other thing, viz. the good and plentiful provision which should be in the gospel church. Isaiah speaks of the same, chap. xxv. 6, "The Lord of hosts shall make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined;" and, chap. lv. 1, 2, Christ hath water, wine, milk, bread, and fatness in his house. The gospel is called "a great supper," Luke xiv. 16; there was variety of dainties to satisfy the souls of his people. Psal. xxii. 26, "The meek shall eat and be satisfied." Christ hath a table well furnished, Prov. ix. 2; Luke xxii. 29, 30, "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom." It is a "marriage supper" Christ prepares for his people, Rev. xix. 9. In the new Jerusalem is a tree of life, which bears twelve manner of fruits, and yields her fruit every month.

Of the singers.

In the 44th verse, and only there, the singers of this temple are mentioned. There were chambers of singers.

There were singers in Solomon's temple, 1 Kings x. 12; 2 Chron. v. 12; and the number of them was great, 1 Chron. xxv.; and they were to sing praises daily, 1 Chron. xxiii. 30.

Some played on instruments, some sang with voices. Some conceive the Israelites had a part in the instrumental music, but none in the vocal, that was performed by the Levites only. Lightfoot on the Less than twelve their number was people. not at any time, but they might be as many as they would above twelve.

These set out the spiritual joy and songs which should be in the church of Christ: Isa. lxv. 14, 17, 18, "Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart. For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth. Be ye glad, and rejoice for ever in that which I create: for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy;" her walls shall be Salvation, and her gates Praise, Isa. lx. 18. In this Jerusalem will be an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual praise, 1 Pet. ii. 5. The Revelation speaks of singers: chap. xiv. 1, 3, there were a hundred and forty-four thousand stood on mount Zion, singing as it were a new song; and, chap. xv. 2, 3, "Those that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, sung the song of Moses, and of the Lamb." Conquerors are full of joy, and much in singing praises, especially spiritual conquerors. Such are they, who, the apostle John saith, shall reign with Christ a thousand years, for they shall be priests of God and of Christ, Rev. xx. 6. And wherefore priests? but to offer up spiritual sacrifices, to sing forth the praises of God and Christ, who hath advanced them to a reigning condition.

Ver. 45, 46. Of the priests.

This temple had its "priests," who were "the keepers of the charge of the house," ver. 45; "and keepers of the charge of the altar," ver. 46. In time of the tabernacle there were men appointed to take charge of it, and the things pertaining to it, Numb. iii. 25; there were eight thousand six hundred to keep the charge of the sanctuary, ver. 28; and what many of them did you may see 1 Chron. ix. 27—32; xxiii. 27—32. So, in the temple of Solomon, the priests had the charge of the things thereof, 2 Chron. xiii. 10, 11. When Uzziah went into the temple to burn incense, the priests who had the charge of things thrust him out, 2 Chron. xxvi.; these are said to be the sons of Zadok. Zadok was the first high priest who served in the temple of Solomon, 1 Kings ii. 35; and of such worth was he among the priests, and of such esteem with God, that all in this temple are called the sons of Zadok, both priests and Levites, Ezek. xlv. 15.

By these "priests" may be understood the ministers of the gospel, who have the charge of the holy things and persons. 1 Tim. vi. 13, 14. "I give thee charge in the sight of God, that thou keep this commandment without spot:" all the rules he had given him concerning the house of God, the offices, officers, and inhabitants thereof, he calls a "commandment," and lays upon him the charge of keeping of it. So in Acts xx. Paul calls for the elders of the church of Ephesus, ver. 17, and charges them to take heed to all the flock, ver. 28. They are the watchmen, the charge of souls is committed to them, and they must be accountants for them, Heb. xiii. 17.

Or, by these "priests," all the godly (Isa. lxi. 6, "Ye shall be named the priests of the Lord") may be pointed out, who are the sons of Zadok, that is, of the just one. Christ, our High Priest, is Zadok, the Just One, Acts vii. 52; xxii. 14; and he hath not only made us sons, John i. 12, but priests also, Rev. v. 10. So that true christians are priests in this temple, and have some charge of the holy things and persons therein.

Ver. 45, 46. The chambers towards the south and north were for the priests, they were peculiar to them; they had their garments and anointing oil, which others might not meddle with; and so their chambers.

Ver. 46. This coming near of these priests unto the Lord, to minister unto him, points out the priestly office of Christ, who drew near to the Father, to make atonement, and to intercede for us.

Ver. 47. So he measured the court, &c.

The Lord Christ lets nothing pass without measuring, he doth all things exactly in his house, and his servants should imitate him.

Ver. 48. He brought me to the porch of the house.

This porch joined to the doors of the temple, into which none might enter but the priests; saith A Lapidé, it was covered, that they might be secure from rain and heat. Christ is a porch to his people, Isa. xxxiii. 2. It is Jeron's judgment, that whilst we are in this life we are in a porch state. Here we have a body of death, see all things imperfectly; but when we enter into the heavenly temple, we shall be free, and know as we are known.

CHAPTER XLI.

Ver. 1—7. Afterward he brought me to the temple, and measured the posts, six cubits broad on the one side, and six cubits broad on the other side, which was the breadth of the tabernacle. And the breadth of the door was ten cubits; and the sides of the door were five cubits on the one side, and five cubits on the other side: and he measured the length thereof, forty cubits: and the breadth, twenty cubits. Then went he inward, and measured the post of the door, two cubits; and the door, six cubits; and the breadth of the door, seven cubits. So he measured the length thereof, twenty cubits; and the breadth, twenty cubits, before the temple: and he said unto me, This is the most holy place. After he measured the wall of the house, six cubits; and the breadth of every side chamber, four cubits, round about the house on every side. And the side chambers were three, one over another, and thirty in order; and they entered into the wall which was of the house for the side chambers round about, that they might have hold, but they had not hold in the wall of the house. And there was an enlarging, and a winding about still upward to the side chambers: for the winding about of the house went still upward round about the house: therefore the breadth of the house was still upward, and so increased from the lowest chamber to the highest by the midst.

The measuring of the outward and inward court being finished, here our prophet is brought to it, and showed the measures of the temple itself, and the things pertaining thereunto.

Ver. 1. "He brought me to the temple." The gates, courts, and porch, hitherto had taken up the prophet, but now he is at the temple; from lower things he is carried to more sublime.

"The posts, six cubits broad." The posts themselves could not be so broad, but the posts, together with the cloisters, which they supported, were so.

The word "temple" is chiefly used in this chapter; once it is mentioned in chap. xlii. 8; here seven times, in ver. 1, 4, 15, 20, 23, 25. It is convenient, therefore, to speak in this place of the temple.

There are three considerable parts of the temple. 1. The porch. 2. The body, or temple itself. 3. The holy of holies.

1. For the porch, of that Ezekiel speaks in the two last verses of the 40th chapter, "And he brought me to the porch of the house," &c. This porch was twenty cubits in length and eleven in breadth; of the same length was the porch of Solomon's temple; and Ezekiel's exceeded it in the breadth thereof one cubit; 1 Kings vi. 3, for the breadth of Solomon's temple was but ten cubits. Nothing is spoken of the height of this porch: Solomon's was one hundred and twenty cubits, 2 Chron. iii. 4; and, doubtless, this was not short of it. The Hebrew calls the porch שַׁלְטָן.

2. The body, house, or temple itself, (it is in the 1st verse,) was that part which stood between the porch and the holy of holies. The length of this was forty cubits, and the breadth twenty cubits.

Solomon's was sixty cubits long, twenty cubits broad, and thirty cubits high, 1 Kings vi. 2; but when it is said, Solomon's was sixty cubits long, the length of the holy of holies is reckoned in, for that was twenty cubits long, and so upon that account Ezekiel's temple was sixty cubits long. They call the temple הֵיכַל.

3. The holy of holies. "Then went he inward, and measured the most holy place," ver. 3; so it is called: and it was twenty cubits in length, and ten cubits in breadth; so that the temple being as long again as broad, was quadrangular; and this being as broad as long, was a perfect square. This they call הֵיכַל oraculum.

As the court before the temple was four-square, one hundred cubits long and one hundred cubits broad, chap. xl. 47; so the temple itself, taken with all the appendices of it, was so. The breadth of the temple courts, and thickness of the walls, &c. make one hundred cubits; and likewise the length of the temple courts, &c. make one hundred cubits, as Hafsenrefferus exactly demonstrates.

Of the signification of this temple.

Some make the court belonging to it to represent the world, and the temple to represent heaven. It may be considered, whether the porch do not point out the common professor; the temple, true saints, who are temples of the Spirit; and the holy of holies, the saints in glory, the condition of those made perfect.

The true representation of this temple, I take it, is the body of our Lord Jesus Christ; both his body natural, and his body mystical, viz. the church.

1. It is a representation of his natural body: Solomon's temple, and Zerubbabel's, or the second temple, was so. John ii. 19. saith Christ, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up." And why Ezekiel's temple should not type out Christ, I see no cause. There are many things wherein it fity doth so.

(1.) This temple was holy: ver. 4, "This is the most holy place;" hence it is evident the other part of the temple was holy. The hecal was holy, though not so holy as the devir: and the body of Christ was holy; Luke i. 35. "That holy thing," &c. Acts xiii. 35. "Thou shalt not suffer thine Holy One," &c. 1 Pet. ii. 22; i. 19; Heb. vii. 26, "He was holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners."

(2.) It was very lightsome and beautiful within. It was adorned "with cherubims and palm trees, ver. 18, 19. So the Lord Christ was full of light; Col. ii. 3, "In him were hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." He was adorned with all the graces of the Spirit; he was full of grace and truth, John i. 14. Cant. v. 10; Psal. xlv. 2, "Thou art fairer than the children of men."

(3.) By the temple, they came to know the mind of God. One part of it was called devir, the word, or oracle; there God spake. So by Christ we come to know the mind of God. John i. 1, he is the Word. He brought the mind of God to us, and declared it to the world: Heb. i. 2, God "hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." Christ was an Ambassador sent from God, to acquaint us with the mind of the King of nations, and he did it faithfully: John xv. 15, "All things which I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you."

(4.) The temple was God's delight. It is called a house, for God dwelt in it, and manifested his glory there: Ezek. xlvi. 4, 5, "The glory of the Lord came into the house;" yea, "the glory of the Lord filled the house." And Psal. xxix. 9, "In the temple doth every one speak of his glory;" there

God's glory is seen. Is not Christ such a temple? did not God come into the temple of his body? 1 Tim. iii. 16; Col. ii. 9. There the glory of God was seen fully: John i. 14, "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth." The glory of God never appeared so evidently as in this temple, and God delighted therein: Matt. iii. 17, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." See Rev. iii. 12, "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem." God is establishing, and will establish, new Jerusalem with pillars daily more and more; and therein is strength to be found; not in the world, or in Babylon, 1 Tim. iii. 15.

(5.) There were cherubims and palm trees in the visional temple, ver. 18, 19, 20, 25, 26; and in the church of Christ there are cherubims and palm trees. These cherubims may note the presence of the angels in the church: 1 Cor. xi. 10, there were angels in the church of Corinth; and so in the temple John speaks of, Rev. xiv. 15, 17. Each cherubim had two faces, one of a man, another of a young lion; to signify the wisdom, strength, and zeal of the angels, which are employed for the good of the church. Or, by cherubims, understand those christians who were wise, stout, and zealous for the truth, and cause of God, such as "loved not their lives unto the death," Rev. xii. 11; "but were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God," Rev. xx. 4. These cherubims looked to the palm trees, they were patient under all crosses, afflictions, in hope of certain victory: Rom. viii. 35—37, "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?" &c. "Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors," &c.: their eyes were upon the palm trees. And, Rev. ix. 7, they had palms in their hands, they were certain of victory, whereof palms and palm trees are emblems.

Remark, there are several things wherein the saints do resemble palm trees.

[1.] They are always green, and growing; so are the saints: Psal. xcii. 12, 14, "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree: they shall still bring forth fruit in old age."

[2.] Palm trees cannot endure dung. So the saints, they hate superstition, idolatry, and all sin, as dung; they will die rather than worship the beast or his image, rather than receive his mark in their foreheads or their hands, Rev. xx. 4; they watch, and keep their garments undefiled.

[3.] The palm tree bears up against all weight laid upon it; and the saints do the like in all their troubles and afflictions. Paul met with sharp trials, yet he fainted not, but found more strength, 2 Cor. iv. 16. And chap. vii. 4, he saith, "I am filled with comfort, I am exceeding joyful in all our tribulation:" and Rom. v. 3, "We glory in tribulations."

[4.] These cherubims and palm trees were the ornaments of the temple: and christians, who are wise, courageous, and patient under all trials, are the ornaments of the church of Christ.

[5.] This temple, with the porch and buildings belonging to it, was great and large; ver. 12—15, one hundred cubits in breadth, one hundred cubits in length; so the church of Christ is great and large. In the apostles' times there were thousands of the Jews believed, Acts xxi. 20. It was prophesied in Isaiah's days, that all nations should flow unto the mountain of the Lord, that is, the church, Isa. ii. 2. And in Daniel's days, chap. vii. 14, "That all people, languages, and nations, should serve Christ." And John, in the vision, saw it made good: Rev. vii. 9, "I beheld a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, kindred, people, and tongues, which stood before the throne, and the Lamb."

2. It is the representation of Christ's body mystical, and that in several things.

(1.) All things in this temple were measured, as appears in chapters xl. xli. xlii. xliii. xlvi.; so in the church, the mystical body of Christ. Eph. ii. 21, Paul tells the Ephesians that the saints are a building; and such a building as is fitly framed together; and so framed together as to make a temple: all which could not be done without measuring. Psal. xlv. 10, 11, "Hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear; forget also thine own people, and thy father's house. So shall the king greatly desire thy beauty: for he is thy Lord; and worship thou him:" here was measuring of the church and fitting of her for her Beloved. So Rev. xi. 1, John must "measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein." All in the church must be measured by the word.

(2.) Christ was in this temple, and did all therein, and showed all to the prophet (as in reading the former, this, and subsequent chapters, is clear). So in the church, Christ is there, and doth all; Col. i. 18, "He is the head of the body, the church," and the head doth all: all influence, all dominion, all direction, is from him. Christ is "in the midst of the golden candlesticks," and walks up and down, doing and declaring what he pleases there, Rev. ii. 1: xxi. 3, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God."

(3.) In this temple were chambers, galleries, and stories, one above another, as ver. 6 and 16 of this chapter, and ver. 3 and 6 of the 42nd chapter. So in the church, there are several ranks and degrees of officers and members, 1 Cor. xii. 28: Eph. iv. 11, there are apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers; elders, 1 Tim. v. 17; deacons, 1 Tim. iii. 8. So for members, some are babes, 1 Cor. iii. 1; some are little children, some young men, some fathers, 1 John ii. 12, 13. In the church of Christ some are higher than others in gifts and graces.

(4.) In this temple were posts and pillars, strong and great, chap. xl. 9, 10, 14, 16, 21, 24, 26, 29, 31, 33, 34, 37, 48, 49; xli. 1, 3, 21; xliii. 8; xlv. 19; xlvi. 2. In Solomon's temple there were pillars, Jaclin and Boaz, by which was noted God's establishment of the temple, and the strength that was in it, 1 Kings vii. 21; 2 Chron. iii. 17. And in the church of Christ are posts and pillars. James, Cephas, and John were pillars, Gal. ii. 9. And was not Paul a great and strong pillar, who had "the care of all the churches" upon him? 2 Cor. xii. 28. Are there not many posts and pillars in the church of Christ?

Of the most holy place.

In the 4th verse it is described to be twenty cubits long and twenty cubits broad: parallel to the most holy place in Solomon's temple, 2 Chron. iii. 8, which was twenty cubits broad, and twenty cubits long, and twenty cubits high, 1 Kings vi. 20. And though there be no mention of the height of this most holy place, it is probable it was of the same height with Solomon's, as well as of the same breadth and length. This was called the inward, or inward house, or "house within," 1 Kings vi. 15; Ezek. xli. 3; "the oracle," 1 Kings vi. 20; and "the most holy place," 1 Kings vii. 50, "the inner house, the most holy place."

This place leads us to the consideration of heaven, which is the most holy place, Psal. xx. 6. Deut. xxxv. 15, heaven is holy, and God's holy habitation, and our happiness is there. Into this place "the high priest entered once a year, and made intercession for the people," Heb. ix. 7. And Christ is passed into the heavens, and there intercedes for his people, Heb. ix. 24; chap. vii. 25. From the most holy place was the mind of God revealed: Psal. lx. 6, "God hath spoken in his holiness," in his sanctuary, or most holy place. Some render it, There God dwelt, "between the cherubims," and opened himself unto them, Psal. xcix. 1. Numb. vii. 89, Moses "heard the voice of one speaking to him from off the mercy-seat that was upon the ark of testimony, from between the two cherubims." So from heaven, the most holy place, God makes known his mind: Neh. ix. 13, "Thou spakest with them from heaven;" Dan. iv. 31, "There fell a voice from heaven;" so Matt. iii. 17, "Lo a voice from heaven." From thence came both law and gospel, which is called "the word of God," Rev. xx. 4.

In the most holy place the glory of God appeared most, between the cherubims; and in the highest and most holy heavens, there the glory of the Lord is most conspicuous, most eminent, among the angels and glorified saints.

Again, they used to pray, and lift up their hands towards the most holy place: Psal. xxviii. 2, David prayed, and lifted up his hands towards the holy oracle, that was, the most holy place; as is clear from 1 Kings viii. 6. And do not the saints in their worship, especially in prayer, lift up their hands and eyes unto heaven, that holy place? Psal. cxli. 2, "Let my prayer be set forth before thee as incense; and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice."

Or, this most holy place may prefigure the new Jerusalem, which was to be so holy, that nothing defiled might come there: Rev. xxi. 27, "There shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." When Aaron entered into the holy place, he must be washed with water, and be clad with holy garments, Lev. xvi.: and all those that enter into the new Jerusalem must be cleansed from their sin, and clothed with righteousness. Rev. xiv. 4, those that stood with the Lamb were not defiled ones, but such as were "clothed with white robes," Rev. vii. 9.

Ver. 5—7. The side chambers were in three ranks, one above another, and the breadth of the house increased upward; there were winding stairs, and the higher they ascended, the wider was the house. Those in the church are not all of one rank, whether officers, or others; some are of the lower rank, some in the middle, and some uppermost; there are children, young men, and old men; and the higher any get, the more enlargement, and greater breadth, do they see in the things of God and this temple; and notwithstanding this difference among them, there is a sweet harmony between them, and they serve one another.

Ver. 8. The foundations of the side chambers were a full reed of six great cubits.

Of the great cubit, see before, chap. xl. 5. Here was good measure: in things belonging to the temple, the Lord should have not common cubit measure, but the great cubit measure.

of it, also,
chap. xlv.
13, 45.

Ver. 9. The thickness of the wall was five cubits.

The breadth or thickness of the wall, say some, was so many cubits from the wall of the house, not so thick in itself. But the Hebrew is, the thickness of the wall was five cubits. It was substantial, and so should temple work be.

"That which was left." Saith Montanus, the empty, or void, place. There will be some void and empty rooms in the church of God.

Ver. 10. Between the chambers was the wideness of twenty cubits.

Not between the side chambers themselves, but between them and those over against them. Some had better entertainment than others; some were to be in the chambers, others in the wideness, or empty place.

Ver. 11. Toward the place that was left.

See before, ver. 9. It was five cubits round about.

Ver. 12. The building that was before the separate place.

Piscator makes the separate place to be, spatium resectum. The Hebrew is, ante faciem segmenti, before the face of the partition; for it was particula respecta e suo atrio.

"Toward the west." Hebrew is, the sea; that is, the Mediterranean sea, which lay westward.

Ver. 13—15. Containing the measures of the house, the building before the separate place, the walks, galleries, and porches of the court, and they were a hundred cubits in length, and a hundred cubits in breadth. Every thing here was measured, and nothing neglected; so exact was the Lord in temple work.

Ver. 16. The windows were covered.

Solomon made for the temple windows of narrow lights, but not covered. Sanctius saith they were covered, Quia in retis modum erant fabricatæ cancellato ordine, aut in pertuso ligno frequentibus perfossæ foraminibus. They might be covered with lattices, shuttings, or curtains, which might be removed at pleasure.

Ver. 17. Within and without, by measure.

Hebrew is, measures. Not only the outside, but inside also is measured, the height, breadth, and length. The Lord Christ will measure christians, of what height, breadth, and depth they are; their actions, affections, and graces, will be measured, Rev. xi. 1.

Ver. 18. And it was made with cherubims.

The cherubims import the presence of the angels in the church, 1 Cor. xi. 10; their communion with the saints in worship, 1 Cor. x. 20; Rev. v. 11; vii. 11, 12; their ministration unto, or for them, Heb. i. 14. They are for the Lord of the temple, and those that wait upon him there; they look towards the palm trees, and their wisdom and strength is laid out for their good.

Ver. 19. So that the face of a man was toward the palm tree on the one side, and the face of a young lion, &c.

Of the cherubims' faces, see chap. i. 10, what is said there. In ver. 18, 20, 25, 26, the palm trees are mentioned again, which are ever green, growing, tending upwards though pressed down with weight, and signs of victory and great joy, being carried in the hand, or worn on the head; and are ornaments to the place where they are, figuring what the persons in this temple should be, Psal. xcii. 12—14; John xii. 13; Rev. vii. 9. By sufferings and pressures they mount upwards, overcome, are filled with joy, 2 Cor. i. 5; Acts v. 41; and so are great ornaments to the church of God.

Of the altar.

In the 22nd verse it is said, "The altar of wood was three cubits high, and the length thereof two cubits; and the corners thereof, and the length thereof, and the walls thereof, were of wood: and he said unto me, This is the table that is before the Lord." This altar was the altar of incense, and stood before the oracle, or most holy place. Such an altar was in Moses' days made for the tabernacle; Exod. xxxvii. 25, "He made the incense altar." In the temple of Solomon, also, there was an altar of incense: 2 Chron. xxvi. 16, Uzziah "went into the temple of the Lord to burn incense upon the incense altar."

1. This altar was a representation or type of Christ, who is said to be our altar, Heb. xiii. 10; and in many things it did represent him.

(1.) Though it were of wood, yet it was "of shittim wood," Exod. xxx. 1; which the Septuagint renders, of incorruptible wood. So Christ his human nature was incorruptible, it saw no corruption, Acts xiii. 35.

(2.) This altar of incense which Ezekiel saw was larger than that under the law: it was two cubits in length, that but one; it was three cubits in height, that but two; as appears, Exod. xxxvii. 25. This held out that the worship of God in Christ's time should be enlarged; it was among the Jews only before, but then it should be among the gentiles also: Mal. i. 11, "From the rising of the sun unto the going down of the same my name shall be great among the gentiles; and in every place incense shall be offered to my name." 1 Tim. ii. 8, "I will that men pray every where:" under Christ, the incense altar was to be every where.

(3.) Sweet incense was offered up to God, pure incense, Exod. xxxvii. 29, upon this altar, chap. xxx. 7, 8. Where the people prayed, the priest offered incense, Luke i. 9, 10; and when we pray, Christ offers up our prayers, with the incense and perfume of his merits: Rev. viii. 3, 4, "The prayers of the saints ascend up before God out of the angel's hand," who was Christ, the golden altar, for so the altar of incense is called, Numb. iv. 11. Christ perfumes the prayers and services of his saints with his merits, and so presents them unto his Father. It is said, Eph. v. 2, "Christ hath given himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savour;" so that whatever he presents to the Father, or is presented in his name from the saints, is pleasing and acceptable to him: all the imperfections and impurities of them are done away by him.

(4.) Upon this altar was incense, morning and evening; it was a perpetual incense, Exod. xxx. 7, 8; so Christ, our Altar, offers up prayers perpetually for us; Heb. vii. 25, "He ever liveth to make intercession for his people."

(5.) This altar of incense had horns, Exod. xxx. 2, 3; at every corner thereof was a horn; which sets out the strength and power of Christ: Rev. ix. 13, "I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar," which was Christ, whose power is in all the quarters of the world. Christ's intercession with the Father is powerful to desery the enemies of his people, and to deliver them.

2. This altar is said to be the table that is before the Lord. There is something in this expression worthy consideration.

(1.) That poor, sinful, weak, unworthy creatures may come to Christ, not only as an altar, to have their prayers presented unto God, but as a table, to have refreshing for their souls. There the hungry may have meat, and the thirsty drink: he is the bread and water of life, his "flesh is meat indeed, his blood is drink indeed," John vi. 35, 55. He hath a kingdom and a table for his, Luke xxii. 30; he "feeds them, and leads them to living fountains of water," Rev. vii. 17. He hath hidden manna for his servants, and a tree of life to refresh them with, Rev. ii. 7, 17.

(2.) That the Lord himself is delighted, and satisfied in, and with, Christ; as we are with a table full of dainties, having the choicest meats and choicest drinks: Matt. iii. 17, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased;" with his person, with his graces, with his offices, with his actions, with his sufferings, with his merits, and with the prayers of the saints he presents unto me, "I am well pleased." Christ is the Altar, the Table, the Sacrifice, and the meat and drink upon the same. So is the Lord taken with the intercession and merits of Christ, that his soul delights in him, Isa. xlii. 1. If any of the children of God sin, and thirst for pardon, and peace, we have an Altar, a Table before the Lord: 1 John ii. 1, "If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: and he is the propitiation for our sins:" the Father is so pleased with him, that for his sake presently he grants us pardon and peace.

Of the doors of the temple.

Ver. 23. "The temple and the sanctuary had two doors," which are described in the 24th and 25th verses. These doors were to open and shut at pleasure, and by them the entrance was into the temple, and sanctuary, or most holy place. What else do these suggest unto us, but the means whereby we come to be in, and of, the church of God? The gospel, and its ordinances, faith, repentance, and baptism, are the means to salvation; by them we obtain entrance into the communion of saints, the favour of God, and the kingdom of heaven. Christ is said to be "the way," John xiv. 6; and "the door," John x. 7; because he hath given us the means, which are the way and door to the church, and unto life: these doors are to be open for the sheep, and to be shut against the goats. We may also understand by these doors, the ministers dispensing the gospel and the ordinances thereof; who are to be holy, vigilant, and zealous, as the cherubims; and constantly green, growing, and flourishing, as the palm trees, ver. 25.

Ver. 26. On the windows, posts, chambers, and thick planks, were palm trees, on the one side, and on the other.

They had palm trees wrought or engraven on them on both sides; implying, that the materials of Christ's temple must not be common, but curious and carved work. If all the walls of Solomon's house were carved round about with carved figures of cherubims and palm trees, and open flowers, within and without, 1 Kings vi. 9; much more must the house of Christ, and every thing in it, have carved work upon it, viz. the engravings of God's Spirit: see Psal. xlv. 13; Rev. xxi. 18, 19.

CHAPTER XLII.

Ver. 1—7. Then he brought me forth into the utter court, the way toward the north: and he brought me into the chamber that was over against the separate place, and which was before the building toward the north. Before the length of an hundred cubits was the north door, and the breadth was fifty cubits. Over against the twenty cubits which were for the inner court, and over against the pavement which was for the utter court, was gallery against gallery in three stories. And before the chambers was a walk of ten cubits breadth inward, a way of one cubit; and their doors toward the north. Now the upper chambers were shorter: for the galleries were higher than these, than the lower, and than the middlemost of the building. For they were in three stories, but had not pillars as the pillars of the courts: therefore the building was straitened more than the lowest and the middlemost from the ground. And the wall that was without over against the chambers, toward the outer court on the forefront of the chambers, the length thereof was fifty cubits.

In this chapter, progress is made in the description of the temple; chambers, walks, ways, galleries, walls, priests, garments, holy things, and the outward courts, are here spoken of.

Ver. 1. "Then he brought me forth into the utter court." Difference there is amongst expositors, what court this was; whether the utmost court of all, which was the court of the people, or the next court to that, which was the priests' court, or the court the temple stood in, where the separate building was; called the outer court, in respect of the temple, into which he was brought out of the temple. Ver. 7, 8, 9, 14, speak of the outer court, and this outward court was that where the temple stood, as Sanctus and others observe.

Formerly hath been spoken of the outward court, representing the amplitude of the church; here it is conceived to hold forth the visibility of the church; that which is outward is visible. The church, whilst it is in this world, is the outward court. It is not the outward court which is the profane place; it is not the world, but the outward court, which is a place separate from the world, yet visible in the world. The church of Christ is pre-figured in Scripture, and set out, by visible things. Sometimes by the ark of Noah, as 1 Pet. iii. 20; sometimes by a mountain, as Isa. ii. 2; sometimes by a vineyard, and vine, Isa. v. 1; Psal. lxxx. 8, 9; sometimes by a city, Psal. cxxii. 3; Rev. xxi. 2; sometimes by a ship, Luke v. 3; sometimes by a candlestick, Rev. i. 20; sometimes by a dove-house, Isa. lx. 8; sometimes by a garden, and by a spring, Cant. iv. 12; sometimes by a bird, Hos. xi. 11; sometimes by a flock, and a fold, Psal. lxxviii. 52; John x. 16; sometimes by a temple, 2 Cor. vi. 16. All these are visible things, and set out the visibility of the church eminently.

Ver. 3. "For the inner court." As the church visible is by the outward court represented; so the church invisible, the mystical body of Christ, is by the inner court.

Ver. 4. "Before the chambers was a walk of ten cubits breadth inward, a way of one cubit." There is a broad way, and a narrow way; a ten cubit way, and a one cubit way. The church in this world is under various dispensations: at one time it hath prosperity and freedom; it is in "a walk of ten cubits breadth," it is not straitened at all, as in Solomon's, Hezekiah's, and Josiah's days. So in part of the apostles' days, the church had "rest throughout all Judea, Galilee, and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Spirit, were multiplied," Acts ix. 31. At that time the churches had liberty and prosperity, they had "ten cubits breadth;" and, the time will come, when the church shall have greater latitude, liberty, and prosperity, than ever she yet had.

At another time the church is in straits, afflictions, darkness, temptations, persecutions, &c. It is in "a way of one cubit," ver. 4. Such a way is narrow and strait, and that is the way the church is oft, if not most, in. Was not the church in the way of a cubit, when Elijah could see none but himself in that way?

The Lord Christ told his disciples of such a way, Matt. vii. 14, "Narrow is the way which leadeth unto life," it is a way of one cubit, "and few do find it." There are sharp afflictions, fiery serpents, wild beasts, thorns, briars, pits, stones, rocks, thieves, and robbers, in this way; all which the church of God meets with sooner or later. Rev. vii. 14, "These are they who came out of great tribulation;" these suffered heavy and many things for Christ's sake; they were in the one cubit way.

Ver. 5. "The galleries were higher than these." The Hebrew is, did eat up, or prevail; that is, as Montanus renders the word, they took away some room from the uppermost chambers. There is difference between particular churches; some are higher, some are larger than others.

Ver. 6. "Had not pillars." The strength of this temple was not every where alike, some parts had pillars, some had none, or not equal to others; the chambers had not pillars, as the pillars of the court. So in the church of Christ, some parts of it have strong pillars, eminent teachers, whereas other parts are destitute wholly, or have such as are weak. The church at Jerusalem had strong pillars in it, all the apostles, who were full of the Spirit, and taught infallibly. Other churches had not such pillars. Those in Macedonia wanted help, and therefore Paul had a vision of a Macedonian in the night, begging of him to come thither, and help them, Acts xvi. 9. The primitive churches had able, gracious, and wise officers, such as were pillars of a truth: in them, and sometimes since, have been strong pillars in some parts of the church, pillars of marble, brass, yea, gold; but in others, none, or weak ones.

"The building was straitened more than the lowest and the middlemost from the ground." Some buildings are broadest at the top; this was not so, but more strait upwards. It is harder with some parts of the church than others. Those who are highest in the church, meet with more storms, troubles, temptations, than those who are lower; the upper parts of the house are more obnoxious to winds and weather. Paul was high in the church, and what hardships, what tempests did he meet with! See 1 Cor. iv. 11—13; 2 Cor. iv. 8, 9; chap. xi. 23—27.

These chambers were some greater, some lesser, ver. 5, 6: plainly intimating that in the church of Christ, from what part soever men came, there should be entertainment, and suitable accommodation for them. If the kings of the east come in, Rev. xvi. 12, there shall be chambers for them. Let men come from north, south, or west, there are gates to let them in, and chambers to receive them when they are in. Isa. lx. 8, men shall come flying from all parts, as doves to a dove-house, in which are many holes, or chambers, for all the doves. So in the church of Christ, when men come thither, they shall find chambers, good accommodation.

Ver. 7. "The wall over against the chambers, the length thereof was fifty cubits." This wall was answerable to the chambers, which were fifty cubits in length, ver. 8. The wall of God's protection extends as far as the church doth, or any part thereof.

Ver. 8. Before the temple were an hundred cubits.

Fifty cubits in the inner court, and fifty in the outer court, saith Junius.

Ver. 9. The entry on the east side.

Some read the words thus, When he that brought me from the east. The prophet was led by a divine hand, from one place to another, chap. xl. 3.

Ver. 10—12. There, chambers towards the east, north, and south are mentioned. These chambers were some greater, &c.

Ver. 13, 14. Then said he unto me, The north chambers and the south chambers, which are before the separate place, they be holy chambers, where the priests that approach unto the Lord shall eat the most holy things: there shall they lay the most holy things, and the meat offering, and the sin offering, and the trespass offering; for the place is holy. When the priests enter therein, then shall they not go out of the holy place into the outer court, but there they shall lay their garments wherein they minister; for they are holy; and shall put on other garments, and shall approach to those things which are for the people.

The chambers, and the priests, are the two principal things in these verses.

1. For the chambers, they are described,
1. From their situation; they were north, south, and before the separate place.

2. From their holiness; they were holy chambers.

3. From their use; which was,
(1.) For eating of holy things.
(2.) For custody of holy things.

11. For the priests, here is,

1. Their duty, which is,

(1.) To approach unto God.

(2.) To lay up the holy things.

2. A direction what garments they are to minister in, how to dispose of them, and what they must use at other times.

The building, where these chambers were, was very large, as appeareth from chap. xli. 12; it "was seventy cubits broad, and the wall of the building five cubits thick round about, and the length thereof ninety cubits;" and it "was before the separate place." Some make the separate place the temple, but it is better understood of the space of ground at the west end of the temple; and lay next to the chambers joined to the temple, or between those chambers and the priests' chambers.

In time of the gospel, great numbers in the western parts from Jerusalem, have come in to Christ, and embraced the gospel; which was prefigured by the great building, and the separate place, which were at the west end of Ezekiel's temple: and ever since the gospel came into these western parts, and Christ hath had a church here, there hath been a thick wall of protection about it, so that neither heathenish nor antichristian powers could destroy it.

Here are many things considerable about the ministers of the gospel, who are represented by the priests, what they did, and had.

The priests did approach unto the Lord; it was their office to do so, and to minister unto him, Ezek. xliii. 19. Aaron and his sons ministered unto God in the priest's office, Exod. xxviii. 1, 41, 43. And it is the office of the ministers under the gospel to approach unto the Lord, to offer up prayers unto him for the people, 1 Tim. ii. 1. They are so near unto God, that they are called his stewards, Tit. i. 7, his servants, Acts xvi. 17; they approach unto God as stewards and servants to their lords and masters. The elders were near the Lamb, and had "golden vials full of odours, which are the prayers of the saints," Rev. v. 8; they presented the requests of the saints unto the Lord. In all administrations of the gospel, the ministers approach near unto God; and in all their approaches, he looks to be sanctified by them.

The priests who were in God's service had good accommodations; they had chambers, and were to eat of the most holy things; this signified, the care God would have of the ministers in the days of Christ, and the good provision he would make for them, they should not be without accommodations and means. Gal. vi. 6, "Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." Here is large provision made for the gospel ministers; whatever good things people possess, they ought to communicate a part thereof to their teachers; something is due to the teachers, and it is duty in the taught to pay it. The ministers are to have meat, and chambers, accommodations to eat their meat in. 1 Cor. ix. 13, 14, "Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar, are partakers with the altar? Even so hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." Here is a divine ordinance for ministers' maintenance. It is also here hinted to us, that the priests were to eat of the best of the most holy things; that is, the tithes, and offerings, which were to be of the best, Mal. i. 8, 14. And certainly under the gospel, the ministers of it are not to be turned off with the meaneast and worst of things: if you have choicest spirituals from them, is it not equal they should have answerable temporals from you?

Holy things were to be laid in holy places; holy offerings, and holy garments, were not to be laid any where, but in the holy place. Under the law, some places were holy; but under the gospel, holiness of places is taken away, according to what was prophesied, Mal. i. 11, "From the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same my name shall be great among the gentiles; and in every place incense shall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering." And according to that Paul gave out, 1 Tim. ii. 8, "I will that men pray every where, lifting up holy hands:" he makes all places alike, for the outward celebration of worship; yet the truths and things of the gospel are to be laid up in holy places, that is, in holy hearts. James iv. 8, "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded." Holy hearts are fit places for God, Christ, Spirit, gospel, and all the ordinances of it. James i. 21; 1 Pet. ii. 1, 2; 1 Cor. xi. 28; Heb. x. 22; these places show that holy hearts are requisite for holy things. So, that of Christ, Matt. vii. 6, "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine;" their hearts are foul, and so incapable of holy things; they are not fit repositories for such things.

Here is, in the 13th verse, mention made of three offerings, "the meat offering, the sin offering, and the trespass offering."

1. "The meat-offering," it was of fine flour, oil, and frankincense, or only of fine flour and oil; and then it was to be baked, fried, or sodden: no leaven or honey was to be used therewith; but every meat offering was to be seasoned with salt; see Lev. ii. per totum. Or it was of ears of corn, "the first fruits, ears dried by the fire, even corn beaten out of full ears," ver. 14. Part of this meat offering the priests were to "burn upon the altar for a sweet savour," and the rest they were to eat in the holy place, Lev. vi. 15, 16.

2. "The sin offering," whether a bullock, or any other beast, was most holy, yea, whatsoever touched the flesh thereof was holy. Some of the blood of it was to be brought into the tabernacle of the congregation, to reconcile with in the most holy place, which was not to be eaten, but burnt. The priests, and all the males among the priests, were to eat of this sacrifice, &c. Lev. vi. 25—30.

3. "The trespass offering." There was one and the same law for this, and "the sin offering;" it was to be killed where the burnt-offering was, and the blood to be sprinkled round about upon the altar; what was to be burnt, and what to be eaten by the priests, you may see, Lev. vii. 1—7.

These offerings were types of Christ, who is our true meat offering, the bread of life, the nourishment of every hungry and thirsty soul. His flesh, and his blood, are meat and drink indeed; at his table we feed upon him crucified, and so our meat offering. He is our sin offering, and trespass offering; 2 Cor. v. 21, He was made sin for us, that is, a sin offering, "that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." See Heb. x. 12, 14.

In the 14th verse it is said, the priests must "not go out of the holy place into the outward court," which comprehends this mystery in it, viz. that the ministers of the gospel, those who have given up themselves to Christ and the church, ought not to go out from their spiritual employment unto the world, and worldly affairs, but to mind that great work they are called unto; for "who is sufficient for such things?" 2 Cor. ii. 16. Paul instructed Timothy, and, in him, all others in this truth; 2 Tim. ii. 4, "No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life, that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier." When men are called to be soldiers, they must mind their soldiery, not other things; it will not please their captains and commanders, they cannot discharge their trust. So ministers, having a great Captain and Commander, the Lord Christ, who hath chosen them to be his soldiers, they must mind their spiritual soldiery, they must not trouble or distract themselves with the cares or affairs of the world; if they do, they can neither be faithful to their interest, nor please their Lord and Master. Rom. xii. 7, those that minister, must wait on their ministering, and those that teach, on their teaching; they must not wait upon or meddle with other things; see Col. iv. 17. Soldiers might not entangle themselves about husbandry, cattle, merchandising, or other affairs, but they were to mind the public.

The priests when they approached to God had other garments on than at other times; they had holy garments on them; they might not come nigh God but in holy garments; afterwards they changed their garments, when they were to deal with the people. Which informs us, that the ministers of the gospel ought to have other frames of spirit in them, when they are nearer unto God in the duties of his worship, than at other times; then they are to put on holy garments, they should be clothed with zeal, fear, and other holy affections. They are to discharge their office with gravity, and authority, that their ministry be not despised. God will be sanctified in them that come near unto him; they must not come in their old garments, with old, ordinary spirits; but with holy garments, holy spirits, sanctifying God in their hearts, making him their fear and dread, and carry themselves as ambassadors of God, standing and pleading for him. But when they are out of public administrations, they may put on other garments; they must be clothed with humility, love, bowels of mercy, meekness, long-suffering, as 2 Tim. ii. 24, 25. In common conversation, and converse with the people, they ought not to be high and haughty, lording it over God's heritage, 1 Pet. v. 3; but to be ensamples to the flock of wisdom, charity, patience, faith, and holiness. They are to become all things to all men, that they may win some to Christ.

Ver. 15—20. Now when he had made an end of measuring the inner house, he brought me forth toward the gate whose prospect is toward the east, and measured it round about. He measured the east side with the measuring reed, five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed round about. He measured the north side, five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed round about. He measured the south side, five hundred reeds with the measuring reed. He turned about to the west side, and measured five hundred reeds with the measuring reed. He measured it by the four sides: it had a wall round about, five hundred reeds long, and five hundred broad, to make a separation between the sanctuary and the profane place.

The 15th verse shows us how exact a building the church is, it is a house measured within and without; when Christ had done measuring the inner house, he comes forth and measures the outward parts; nothing is left unmeasured. Solomon's house, or temple, was not so exactly built, and measured, as the church of Christ is; that is God's building, 1 Cor. iii. 9, and he exceeded Solomon in wisdom, and so in building. See what a structure the new Jerusalem is, Rev. xxi. 10, &c.; which makes good that, Psal. cii. 16, "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory."

There is difference among interpreters about the reeds, mentioned in ver. 16, 17, 18, 19. Some would have them to be so many cubits only, from that in Ezek. xl. 47, where it is said the court was "an hundred cubits long, and an hundred cubits broad." Others would not have five hundred reeds or cubits to be on any one side, but that all the sides measured made up the sum, be it five hundred cubits, or five hundred reeds. But most interpreters are of the mind that each side was not only of five hundred cubits, but five hundred reeds.

The words for "measuring reed" are בְּקֵנֵי הַמֶּדָּה which was the great reed, saith A Lapidé, of six cubits, whereas the vulgar reed was only of five cubits; that this reed was six cubits is clear from chap. xl. 5. So that the five hundred reeds were three thousand cubits, and the four sides came to twelve thousand cubits; which shows how spacious and vast the temple was. From these verses are

1. The extent and latitude of the church which should be, in all quarters of the world, under Christ. He measured the gate to the east, and the east side, to make known the eastern people should be of the christian church. He measured the north side, showing thereby that the northern parts should come thither. He measured the south and west sides, assuring us thereby, that the people of those parts should come unto Zion. Christ sent his apostles to all nations, Matt. xxviii. 19. They went east, west, north, and south, enlarging the borders of the gospel, inviting and bringing in the gentiles daily. Mark xvi. 15, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." The church of Christ is all the world over; the sound of the apostles "went into all the earth," that is, all parts of the earth, "and their words to the end of the world," Rom. x. 18.

2. The stability and firmness of the church. The temple here measured was a perfect square, five hundred reeds on the east side, five hundred reeds on the west side, five hundred reeds on the north side, and as many on the south side. Buildings which are four-square, are most stable, firm, and lasting. Such is the church, it is stable, and permanent; "the gates of hell cannot prevail against it," Matt. xvi. 18. It is built upon Christ the chief corner stone, Eph. ii. 20; and is established in righteousness, Isa. liv. 14.

3. The lustre and beauty of the church. Great buildings in the form of a square are beautiful and glorious; such was that Ezekiel saw, it was a quadrature, every side proportionable, holding forth beauty and glory. Cant. vi. 4, saith Christ of his church, "Thou art beautiful, O my love, as Tirzah, comely as Jerusalem." Tirzah and Jerusalem were chief cities in Canaan; for at one, kings of Israel kept their courts, 1 Kings xiv. 17; and at the other, kings of Judah dwelt. These cities had much beauty and comeliness in them, and unto them Christ likens his church. Certainly, the church is the most beautiful and glorious thing in the world, to them who have eyes to see it. Many saw no beauty in Christ, Isa. liii. 2; but Christ was beautiful and glorious to them who had eyes to see it, John i. 14. And many see no beauty, no glory in the church of Christ; but where spiritual eyes are, there they are seen. The church is set out by a golden candlestick, Rev. i. 20; and that hath lustre, beauty, and glory. It is set out by "a woman clothed with the sun," Rev. xii. 1; and what lustre, beauty, and glory can there be wanting? It is set out by a bride, the Lamb's wife. When the bride of a great prince hath on her royal apparel, and is decked with all her ornaments and jewels, is she not beautiful, glorious, and shining? Such is the church, "arrayed with fine linen, the righteousness of saints," Rev. xix. 8; such is the new Jerusalem, "having the glory of God," Rev. xxi. 10, 11.

4. The safety of the church. This temple had a wall round about, five hundred reeds long and five hundred reeds broad, sufficient for the defence of it on every side. And the church in the gospel times hath a wall about it, long and broad; a wall that reacheth from east to west, from north to south; a wall higher than the heavens, deeper than hell, and broader than the earth, viz. the power and providence of God. Isa. xxvii. 3, "I the Lord do keep it; lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day." Here is a wall better than that of wood, Ezek. xli. 22; than that of stone, Prov. xxiv. 31; than that of iron, Ezek. iv. 3; than that of brass, Jer. i. 18. Such walls have been battered, and broken, undermined, or climbed over; but this wall is not subject to any of them. The wall of the new Jerusalem is "great and high," Rev. xxi. 12, sufficient to secure all that are within.

5. The sanctity of the church. This wall, as it was a wall of security, so of separation; it was to separate between the sanctuary and the profane place, that those in the profane place might not come into the sanctuary, where the holy ones and holy things were. The church of God is a company called out of, and separate from, the world, who have given up themselves unto God and Christ. The Corinthians were called out of the world to be saints, 1 Cor. i. 2; and the Macedonian churches gave up themselves to the Lord, 2 Cor. viii. 5. So that all the churches of God "are a chosen generation, an holy nation," 1 Pet. ii. 9; Cant. iv. 7. Unholy ones, who are without in the profane world, should not enter into the church. God hath set a wall of discipline to keep them out, that the church may not be defiled by them. It is said of the new Jerusalem, that "there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth:" the angels will keep them out; for at the twelve gates thereof will be twelve angels, Rev. xxi. 12, who will let none in but saints, so that "all her people shall be righteous," Isa. lx. 21.

CHAPTER XLIII.

Ver. 1—6. Afterward he brought me to the gate, even the gate that looketh toward the east: and, behold, the glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the east: and his voice was like a noise of many waters: and the earth shined with his glory. And it was according to the appearance of the vision which I saw, even according to the vision that I saw when I came to destroy the city: and the visions were like the vision that I saw by the river Chebar; and I fell upon my face. And the glory of the Lord came into the house by the way of the gate whose prospect is toward the east. So the Spirit took me up, and brought me into the inner court; and, behold, the glory of the Lord filled the house. And I heard him speaking unto me out of the house; and the man stood by me.

This chapter and the next, in general, speaks of the ministry and sacred worship of the new temple: more particularly in this chapter we have,

1. A new vision, in the first six verses.
2. The speech of the Lord unto the prophet, from ver. 7, to the end of the chapter.

Concerning the new vision, the things considerable are,

I. The time when it was.
II. The place where it was.
III. The object of this vision: where we are to note,

1. The place whence it came.
2. The sign of it.
3. The effects of it.
4. The resemblance of it.
5. The receptacle of it.

IV. The consequents of it; which are,

1. The Spirit's raising up the prophet.
2. His leading him into the inner court.
3. The filling of the temple with glory.
4. The Lord's speaking to the prophet.
- V. The presence of Christ with the prophet.

I. When it was that Ezekiel had this vision. Not at his first coming to the temple, but after he had been led from place to place, seen the several gates, courts, chambers, parts, appurtenances, ornaments of the temple, and all exactly measured within and without; after those things he had this vision. Which insinuates thus much, that, after men have waited upon Christ, followed him, and learned the nature and condition of the church invisible and visible, then the Lord affords visions of himself and his glory. When men come first to Zion, enter into church fellowship, they must not think to see the glory of God, till they are acquainted with the inward glory and outward beauty of the church, till they understand the measuring of Christ therein. Those that are in the church, in due time see glory. It is good to be there, and to wait being there.

II. The place was at the east gate. He was brought from the west side of the temple to the east gate, where he had this vision coming out of the east. Christ is the Sun of righteousness; and the sun's motion is from the east, westward: so here, this glorious vision came out of the east, and entered by the east gate, which led directly to the most holy place. It is the Lord Christ brings us out of darkness to light, and shows us the way into the temple and most holy place.

III. The object, glory. "Behold, the glory of the God of Israel." That was, some figure, image, or manifestation, representing the glory of God. In chap. i. 26, 27, Ezekiel saw the likeness of a throne, of a man of fire. And chap. viii. 4; x. 18, there were visions, where he beheld the glory of the God of Israel, and the glory departing; that is, some representation of his glory, which was leaving the temple and them; signifying that God was wroth with them, and departing from them. But here the glory was coming to them, importing that God's wrath was laid down, their sins pardoned, and he graciously reconciled unto them. It was sin caused the glory to depart; man's wickedness draws the glory away, but nothing in or of man caused the glory to return. It is said, "the glory came;" it came freely, undeservedly, unexpectedly; there was cause of great mourning when it departed, and there was as great cause of rejoicing when it returned.

1. Whence came it? "from the way of the east." Christ's star was seen in the east, Matt. ii. 2; his coming was from thence: Zech. iii. 8; vi. 12, Christ is called $\pi\alpha\rho\alpha$ which the Septuagint renders, $\alpha\nu\alpha\tau\omicron\lambda\eta$, the Vulgate, Oriens, that is, the east; because Christ should come from heaven, and enlighten the dark world, as the sun doth, when it riseth in the east. Luke, in his 1st chapter, ver. 78, calls Christ, $\alpha\nu\alpha\tau\omicron\lambda\eta$, which we render, "the day-spring," and may be rendered, the east, for the day springs in the east first: be it east, or day-spring, it is from on high. Christ came from heaven to bring light into the blind world. Hence saith Christ, John viii. 12, "I am the light of the world," the great light, the sun of it; which, rising in the east, shines into the utmost parts of the west.

2. The next thing is, the sign of the glory. And that was, a voice, such a voice as "was like the noise of many waters." In chap. i. 24, when the cherubims went, "the noise of their wings was like the noise of great waters." As the voice of the Almighty, waters use to roar, and make a great noise, Jer. xxxi. 35, and li. 55. Such waters are strong, and there is no resistance of them; men cannot row or sail against them. This voice minds us of the voice of Christ in the gospel, the sound whereof "went into all the earth," Rom. x. 18: and, Rev. i. 15, Christ's voice is said to be "as the sound of many waters;" it was strong, and irresistible. He taught them with majesty and authority, Matt. vii. 29. They were not able to answer him, Matt. xxii. 46; John viii. 9; not to withstand the wisdom and truths he put into his disciples, Luke xxi. 15; Acts vi. 10; Rev. xi. 5. Christ's voice in the gospel is an efficacious voice.

3. The effects of it were two.

(1.) "The earth shined with his glory." Before the coming of Christ, the world was full of heathenish and hellish darkness; and Canaan was full of types, ceremonies, and shadows; there was little light or lustre there. But when Christ came, the oracles of the heathen ceased, and the Jewish shadows vanished, and the earth shined with the glory of the gospel. Matt. iv. 16, "The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light hath sprung up." When the Jews were under clouds and darkness, then Christ came, and brought the glorious gospel to them. When Christ was born, Luke ii. 9, there was glory shone round about the shepherds; signifying, that the glory of the Lord would fill the earth, yea, all the world.

Or, this may refer to the destruction of mystical Babylon, and coming down of the new Jerusalem from heaven: for of the one it is said, Rev. xviii. 1, 2, "An angel came down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory. And he cried mightily with a strong voice, Babylon is fallen," &c. And, chap. xxi. of new Jerusalem it is said, ver. 23, "The glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof." When these things be, the earth will be filled and shine with glory.

(2.) Ezekiel fell upon his face. The lustre of divine glory, sense of his own frailty and weakness, caused him to fall upon his face. Here I might enlarge, but of this falling on his face was spoken chap. i. 28, and the observations rising thence are there to be seen.

4. The fourth thing concerning this glory is, the resemblance of it: ver. 3, "And it was according to the appearance of the vision which I saw, even according to the vision that I saw when I came to destroy the city," &c. The prophet being sent of God to prophesy the destruction of Jerusalem, saith here, "when I came to destroy the city." The Chaldees, when I prophesied. Then had he such a vision as this was, chap. i. That which he declared to be done, he saith he did. The prophet was in Babylon when the city was destroyed, he did not put forth a finger towards destruction of it, he only prophesied against it. So Jeremiah was set over nations and kingdoms, to root out, to pull down, and to destroy; this he did by prophesying against them, not otherwise.

The same vision, which at first appeared to the prophet in a way of judgment, appears now to him in a way of merit; before, it prefigured the destruction, here the restoration of the temple, city, and land. The vision for outward appearance was like what he saw in chap. i. viii. ix. x.; but in the end, and use, totally differing from, yea, contrary unto the same. There he saw God angry, the glory departing from the temple, and going out at the east gate; here he sees God smiling, and the glory returning the same way it went out; here he beholds sweet reconciliation between God and the church, made up by Christ.

5. The fifth thing is the receptacle of this glory; and that was, the temple, or house, which had been measured: ver. 4, "And the glory of the Lord came into the house." This house, or temple, as hath been showed before, signified both the body and church of Christ. For his body natural, that was the receptacle of glory, Col. ii. 9; John i. 14; 1 Tim. iii. 16.

For the church, his mystical body, that is a receptacle of glory also. Isa. lx. 1, "The glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." And ver. 19, "The Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory." There is an estate of the church to come, wherein it shall be very glorious: in Solomon's temple there was glory, but glory in a cloud, 1 Kings viii. 10, 11; but in Ezekiel's temple there was glory without a cloud, a greater glory, even such a glory as made the earth to shine. This is the glory which the saints look for, and shall see in due time: Rev. xxi. 3, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God."

What is said of the church, is to be understood also of every believer, who is a receptacle of glory, a temple of the Spirit of Christ and God, 1 Cor. iii. 16; vi. 19; 2 Cor. xiii. 5. Whoever Christ hath measured out to be a temple, shall receive glory. 2 Cor. iv. 6, "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts," saith Paul, "to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." The gospel is a glass; in it we see the face of Christ, and in his face the glory of the Lord, and "are changed into the same image, from glory to glory," 2 Cor. iii. 18. It is observable here, that when the glory of God departs from a church, or people, it is not for perpetuity, but for a season. The glory went out of the temple, and city, at the beginning of Ezekiel's prophecy; but he saw the same returning, before the end of his prophecy. The ark, when taken by the Philistines, caused Phinehas' wife to name her son Iehabod, saying, "The glory is departed from Israel," 1 Sam. iv. 21; but after seven months, the glory returned again to Israel; chap. vi. the ark was sent home, God caused it to return again. Long have the Jews now been without an ark, and without glory; but in due time the glory of the God of Israel will return unto them: for, Rom. xi. 26, "There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." And when the sealing of the hundred and forty-four thousand out of all the tribes shall be, Rev. vii. then shall they stand on mount Zion with the Lamb, and so the glory will be in the midst of them, Rev. xiv. 1.

IV. The consequents of this vision, or glory returning, come next to be considered: and

The 1st is, the prophet's raising; ver. 5, "So the spirit took me up." He was fallen upon his face, as not able to behold the brightness of that glory which appeared; and being in that posture, the Spirit took him up. In chap. ii. 1, 2, the Spirit spake to Ezekiel, being down upon his face, entered into him, and set him upon his feet: but here he took him up, he dealt with him as a man doth with his friend fallen. Hence springs this consideration, that those that are humbled, and humble, with sense of their own vileness and weakness, through apprehension of glory and greatness, shall soon be raised and comforted. The sight of glory is a humbling thing. Ezekiel, chap. i. 28, and here again, was humbled upon that account; he saw so much lustre in that glory, so much greatness in the Lord, that, convinced of his own vileness and nothingness, he falls down upon his face, as being wholly unworthy to behold such a sight, to partake of such mercy; but presently the Spirit, being full of love, bowels, and compassion, steps to him, and takes him up; he suffers him not to lie affrighted with glory, or affected with misery, but is a speedy comforter unto him. The humble find mercy, and are raised; when the proud meet with judgment, and are thrown down.

The 2nd consequent is, the Spirit leading of him, and that was, "into the inner court." He had led him into several places, and now leads him "into the inner court;" whereby he came to understand the mysteries of, and behold the glory in, the temple, which none are able to do without the leading of the Spirit. None, destitute of the Spirit, can enter into the church, to understand the things thereof, and behold the glory therein, 1 Cor. ii. 14, 15; 2 Cor. iii. 18. It is the Spirit that makes men discern spiritual things; it is the Spirit that leads us from knowledge to knowledge, from mystery to mystery, and from glory to glory; he leads into the temple, and "into the inner court," he reveals the deep and glorious things of God unto the saints.

The 3rd is, the filling of the house, and that with glory: ver. 5, "Behold, the glory of the Lord filled the house." There was abundance of glory in it, the temple and most holy place were full of it. This leads us to consider, not only the temple rebuilt after the Babylonish captivity, which the Lord said by Haggai, chap. ii. 7, that he would fill it with glory, and that the glory of it should be greater than of the former house, ver. 9, which was fulfilled in Christ's bodily presence there; but it leads us also unto Christ, who was filled with the glory of the Spirit, and fulness of the Deity, Col. ii. 9; and unto the church of Christ, which is filled with the glory of the gospel: (for it is glorious, and hath shining light in it, 2 Cor. iv. 4;) but chiefly unto the new Jerusalem, wherein a greater glory is expected to be seen, than hath ever yet been; there will be abundance of grace, and glorious effusions of the Spirit. See how glorious the new Jerusalem is, Rev. xxi.

The 4th thing is, the Lord speaking unto Ezekiel: ver. 6, "And I heard him speaking unto me." The Hebrew is, I heard a saying to me from the house, a saying from the glory, or from the Lord, being in that glory which filled the house: the temple, saith Vatablus: the most holy place, saith Maldonate; but we understand it of both. As the glory was in the temple, so the voice came from the temple. The Lord spake not of the temple, as Lyra would have it; but from, or out of, the temple.

The thing pointed out hereby is this: That God reveals and makes known his mind in his house, in the church; he speaks from the temple unto his people: Isa. lxvi. 6, "A voice from the temple, a voice of the Lord." There God discovered his displeasure towards his enemies, and his good will towards his servants. "In Judah is God known," Psal. lxxvi. There his mind is known; "The law goes forth out of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem," Isa. ii. 3. Where his church is, there is his presence, there he utters his voice, there he opens his mind. Why did David desire "to dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of his life," but "to behold the beauty of the Lord," which appeared there eminently; "and to inquire in his temple," because the Lord there spake, and answered the desires of his servants, Psal. xxvii. 4. When he was troubled at the prosperity of the wicked, what did he then but enter "into the sanctuary of God?" and there he was resolved, he "understood their end," Psal. lxxiii. 17. The Spirit, and Christ, spake in the churches, and to the churches, Rev. ii. and iii.; and in chap. xvi. 1, a great voice was heard out of the temple.

"And the man stood by me." The Hebrew is, and a man was standing by me. Some make this man to be an angel; but it was he, mentioned chap. xl. 3, the man "whose appearance was like the appearance of brass, with a line of flax in his hand, and a measuring reed." This was Christ, the Master-builder. Zech. vi. 12, "Behold the man whose name is The Branch, he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the Lord." This Man stood by Ezekiel to assist, encourage, and interpret things unto him.

Whence cometh this observation, That the Lord Christ, who is the chief Architect in temple work, stands by his prophets and servants who are employed therein. When the temple was first built, many were employed therein, but they were not left to their own wisdom and skill. Solomon was principal therein; he was present, counselled, directed, and assisted; therefore it is said, he built the house of the Lord, 1 Kings vi. 2. So in Ezekiel's temple, a type of the gospel temple, Christ was present, he counselled, directed, assisted, he stood by the prophet. He stood by the apostles; Matt. xxviii. 20, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." He stood by Paul; Acts xviii. 10, "I am with thee;" so chap. xxiii. 11. And Paul doth acknowledge it; 2 Tim. iv. 16, 17, "All men forsook me," they showed their unfaithfulness; "notwithstanding the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me;" he was about temple work, for it follows, "that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the gentiles might fully hear." Christ was with him, to instruct, encourage, and bless him and his labours. Christ walks in the midst of the churches, and holds the stars thereof in his right hand, Rev. ii. 1. And, chap. v. 6, it is said, "In the midst of the elders stood a Lamb."

There are two things worthy notice, from the 5th and 6th verses considered together.

The 1st is, the distinction of subsistences in the divine nature and essence. Here are three distinct ones named: (1.) The Spirit, which took up Ezekiel. (2.) The glory of the Lord, whom he heard speaking out of the house, which was the Father. (3.) The Man standing by him, which was Christ. Here is the Spirit, Father, and Son, who as they have distinct personalities, so distinct operations. The Spirit's work is raising up; the Father's, speaking; and the Son's, assisting, or standing by.

The 2nd thing is, the gradual proceedings of God, in carrying on his servants from mercy to mercy. Here are five steps of mercy.

The first is, the Spirit taking up the prophet, being fallen upon his face. Had any one come and raised the prophet, being down, it had been kindness, especially if Daniel, Zerubbabel, or some elder of Israel had done it; but one greater and better than them all did it, viz. the Spirit of God. This was great mercy.

The second is, the Spirit leading of him "into the inner court." He did not raise him, and then leave him, but led him. And whither? not into the outward court, but "into the inner court." This was a further mercy, a choice mercy, to be brought so near the temple.

The third step was, a sight of glory, he saw the glory of the Lord filling the house; this was a grand mercy, which none of the Jews besides himself saw: as when Christ was transfigured, and the mountain shined with the glory of his transfiguration, Peter and John saw it, which was a favour unto them to see such glory, and the greater, because none of the other apostles did see the same.

The fourth step is, the Lord's speaking unto him, being compassed about with glory. To have heard the voice of an angel had been mercy; but to hear the voice of the great and glorious God out of the temple, this was a height of mercy, such as Moses had, Exod. xxxiii. 11.

The fifth and last step is, the presence of Christ; he stood by him. Here was another mercy, and no mean one; Christ, "in whom are hid all treasures of wisdom and knowledge," Col. ii. 3. So then here was the whole Trinity employed at once about Ezekiel; which was transcendent and superlative mercy. Those who are called to be agents in temple work, have need of the whole Trinity; help of the Spirit to raise or lead them; of a sight of glory, to darken all human and mundane glory before their eyes; of hearing God speak, that they may be taught of him; and of having Christ present with them, that they may be enabled to go through their work. John in the Revelation was led from mercy to mercy, from vision to vision, as appears throughout that book, and especially in chap. xxi. 1, 2, &c. The time will come when the Spirit will lead the saints "into the inner court," where they shall see the glory of God, hear his voice, and find Christ standing by them.

Ver. 7—9. And he said unto me, Son of man, the place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet, where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel for ever, and my holy name, shall the house of Israel no more defile, neither they, nor their kings, by their whoredom, nor by the carcases of their kings in their high places. In their setting of their threshold by my thresholds, and their post by my posts, and the wall between me and them, they have even defiled my holy name by their abominations that they have committed: wherefore I have consumed them in mine anger. Now let them put away their whoredom, and the carcases of their kings, far from me, and I will dwell in the midst of them for ever.

The second part of this chapter, being the speech of God to the prophet, begins at the words read: and in them we have,

I. A promise of God's abiding with his people, and the effect thereof, viz. sanctification.

II. A declaration of the cause why God formerly departed from them.

III. A duty, or charge laid upon them, ver. 9.

The promise of divine presence, and continuance, is partly in the 7th verse, viz. in these words, "The place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet, where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel for ever;" and partly in the 9th verse, the last words of it, viz. "I will dwell in the midst of them for ever."

By the place of God's throne, and of the soles of his feet, is meant the temple, and city of Jerusalem, where God had formerly dwelt. Jer. xvii. 12, "A glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary;" it was God's throne, and it was the footstool of God, 1 Chron. xxviii. 2. It is granted by all, that Jerusalem, having the temple in it, represented the church of God under the gospel, in which the promise here is, that God will dwell for ever. The christian church shall have the presence of God in it, and abiding with it for ever: Matt. xxviii. 20, "I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." John fixes this presence of God in the new Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. 2, 3. When new Jerusalem came down from heaven, then he heard a voice, "saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God." So chap. xxii. 3, "The throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it:" there both God and Christ will be and dwell.

This sets out the great esteem God had of, and the great complacency he had in, Jerusalem; he esteemed it as his throne, and took delight in it, as in his chiefest dwelling. Isa. lxix. 1, God saith, heaven is his throne, and earth his footstool; this is the honour he puts upon heaven and earth, and the same he puts upon Jerusalem, and now puts upon the christian church; it is his throne, his footstool, the place he esteems above all others, the place he takes more complacency in than all others. Such shall be the presence of the Lord in it, that it shall be called Jehovah-Shammah, that is, "The Lord is there," Ezek. xlvi. 35. And such shall be his content and delight therein, that Jeremiah tells you, it shall be called "the throne of the Lord;" Jer. iii. 17, "At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it."

The effect of God's presence, viz. sanctification, is comprehended in these words, "My holy name shall the house of Israel no more defile, neither they, nor their kings, by their whoredom," &c.

Of profaning and defiling God's holy name was spoken, chap. xxxvi. 20. To let that pass, the sense here is, they shall avoid all things which do defile, and sanctify God's holy name: they should keep the worship of God, keep from idolatry, and all arbitrary inventions of men; which Jerom and Maldonate refer to the heavenly temple, and not to the temple built after the Babylonian captivity, because that was oft defiled, by Antiochus, Pompey, and Titus, and deserted by the Lord. Others refer it, as is here said, to that temple; because the Jews, after their captivity, did for ever hate idolatry, and serve the true God, though not in a right manner. If these words do in part refer to the state of the church after the captivity, yet principally they refer to the state of it after Christ, and that time too when new Jerusalem shall be extant; for antichrist hath greatly defiled the holy name of God with his idols, and will-worship; but then, nothing that defileth shall enter, Rev. xxi. 27; then shall be made good that in Zech. xiv. 21, "In that day there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord;" they shall be all true Israelites.

"Nor their kings, by their whoredom." By "whoredom" the prophet understands idolatry, which is spiritual whoredom, of which hath often been spoken. Not only the people, but even kings and princes were given much to idolatry in Israel and in Judah; they caused idols and altars to be set up in most places, and countenanced them; they imitated the very heathens, and became like, yea worse than them. Ezek. v. 6, 7; xvi. 47; 2 Kings xxi. 2—7, 9. It is said of Jehoiachaz, Jehoiakim, and Jehoiachin, that they did evil in the sight of the Lord, according to all that their fathers had done, they defiled Jerusalem what lay in them; but of the new Jerusalem it is written, "Kings do bring their glory and honour into it," Rev. xxi. 24.

"Nor by the carcases of their kings in their high places." The word for "carcases" is, פגרים, from פגר which signifies to be without strength, slothful; so carcases are deprived of all strength, and move not; they lie where they are fallen. The rabbies tell us, that the kings of Judah had a house near to the temple, yea, joining to it, and that they were wont to bury their dead in a garden belonging to it. There they say Manassch and Amon were buried, which they gather from 2 Kings xxi. 18, 26; and that by their carcases being so nigh the temple, it was defiled. But the places cited do not say, it was in the garden of the house of the Lord; they say, it was "in the garden of Uzza;" neither do they affirm that this garden joined to the temple.

The Vulgate reads the words, in the ruins of the kings; and so some expositors refer it to what we find done by Josiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 12—14, "The altars which were on the top of the upper chamber of Abaz, which the kings of Judah had made, and the altars which Manasseh had made in the two courts of the house of the Lord, did the king beat down, and brake them down from thence, and cast the dust of them into the brook Kidron. And the high places which were before Jerusalem, which were on the right hand of the mount of corruption, which Solomon the king of Israel had builded for Ashtoreth the abomination of the Zidonians, and for Chemosh the abomination of the Moabites, and for Milcom the abomination of the children of Ammon, did the king defile. And he brake in pieces the images, and cut down the groves, and filled their places with the bones of men." These altars and high places, which Abaz, Manasseh, and Solomon made, were utterly destroyed by Josiah, and thereupon called, The ruins of kings.

Another exposition of these words is, to understand them of the children which were sacrificed to idols, and passed through the fire: both kings and others did so by their children, 2 Kings xvi. 3; xvii. 17; xxi. 6; Jer. xix. 5; xxxii. 35; Ezek. xvi. 20, 21. This practice of theirs greatly provoked God, and therefore he saith, Jer. xvi. 18, "I will recompense their iniquity and their sin double; because they have defiled my land, they have filled mine inheritance with the carcases of their detestable and abominable things." They are called carcases of their kings, either from the example of kings, who offered their children; or from their authority, commanding it; or from the names of their idols, which were called Molech, Milcom, and Malcham, 1 Kings xi. 7; 2 Kings xxiii. 13; Zeph. i. 5; which signifies, a king. Moses calls idols carcases, Lev. xxvi. 30; and such they are, because lifeless, Psal. cxv. 5—7, and loathsome, Ezek. xxii. 3, abominations in the abstract. The carcases therefore of their kings, it is not amiss to expound of those idols they caused to be set up and countenanced.

The Annotations on this place say, The Jews did deify their dead kings, and kept their bodies for adoration; but, as Sanctius saith, there is no Scriptural evidence that such insane adoration ever existed. That place they cite, Psal. evi. 28, is impertinent, "They ate the sacrifices of the dead," that is, things offered to Baal-peor, a dead god.

Ver. 8. "In their setting of their threshold by my thresholds, and their post by my posts." The latter part of the former verse, "neither they, nor their kings," &c. together with this verse, declare the cause of God's former departing from them. God did not account the temple defiled because the kings had houses near unto it, in which they did wickedly, whereas they should have been more holy for their proximity to the temple. This sense some fasten upon the words. But that which hath more weight in it is, Manasseh "built altars in the house of the Lord, and set a graven image of the grove there," 2 Kings xxi. 4, 7. In, or near the house of God, there was the image of jealousy, Tammuz, and other abominations, Ezek. viii. 5, 10, 14, 18; so 2 Kings xvi. 11, 12, 14; Ezek. xxiii. 39. These were the threshold by God's thresholds, and the post by God's posts; these things caused God to go far off from his sanctuary, Ezek. viii. 6.

The precepts and traditions of men, with their inventions and additions to the worship of God, are styled posts, and thresholds. The authors of them do lean and stand much upon them, and set them in the way, to hinder others from enjoyment of temple privileges, unless they will own and comply with them; but such posts and thresholds are rotten and faulty. The Lord's institutions and appointments are sound and good; they bear up his name and worship; they are strong, and standing things, and by them we have entrance into his presence.

To make any thing like the institutions and appointments of God is prohibited. Exod. xxx. 32, 33, 37, 38, none might make anointing oil like the holy anointing oil, which God had appointed; if they did, they were to be cut off. And men may not make thresholds and posts like the Lord's thresholds and posts; much less set them up with the Lord's, impose them upon the conscience as the Lord's, giving them equal honour and authority with them. This is defiling the worship and holy name of God, which he will avenge; for he will admit no rival or proprietary in the things of his worship; he saith, "My thresholds, my posts;" he will have no adding to or diminishing from what is his, Deut. xiii. 32.

The scope of God in these words is this, that the worshippers in the new temple shall do nothing of their own private spirits, of their own heads; there shall be no superstition, idolatry, or human invention, added to the worship of God; there shall be no heresy, no false doctrines, no traditions or devices of men. Such thresholds and posts shall not be set up by the Lord's; they are defiling things, and such things must not enter into the new Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. 27: neither shall they by their sins cause God to depart from them; but shall do all things according to the line of his word, and apply themselves wholly to do his good pleasure.

"And the wall between me and them." There is but the wall between my sanctuary and their houses, I am but a little distanced from them, and yet they have done these things; they have forgotten me, and defiled my holy name: or, their altars, idols, traditions, inventions are a wall between me and them, so that they neither come at me nor I at them. Isa. lix. 2, "Your iniquities have separated between you and your God;" they are a partition-wall, so thick and high, that there is no seeing or hearing one another.

"Wherefore I have consumed them in mine anger." By their will-worship, and idolatry, they so displeased the Lord, that he departed from them, was wroth with them; and so wroth, that he consumed them by sad and severe judgments; but under the new temple, or gospel church, it should not be so: being reconciled to his people therein by the Lord Jesus, he will not leave them, be wroth with them, or consume them. Sin causes separation, wrath, and consumption.

Ver. 9. "Now let them put away their whoredom, and the carcases of their kings," &c. Junius reads the words in the future tense, Now they shall remove their whoredom far off. The Lord tells Ezekiel what converted Jews and others under the gospel should do, they should put all superstition, idolatry, and will-worship away, and serve the Lord in all purity, and so he would dwell amongst them for ever. Rev. xiv. 1, 4, 5; vii. 14, 15, God is holy, and he will dwell amongst holy ones. 2 Cor. vi. 16—18, God will not leave this temple as he left the former, but be in it, and dwell in it for ever. This is his promise, and it is a great and precious one. The sun's presence in the day is a great mercy, but it is gone in the night, and then all is dark and doleful. In the church of Christ, the new Jerusalem, there will be no night, Rev. xxi. 25. There the sun will always shine, God will be present and perpetually present in it, everlasting light and glory unto it, Isa. lx. 19.

Ver. 10—12. Thou son of man, shew the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities: and let them measure the pattern. And if they be ashamed of all that they have done, shew them the form of the house, and the fashion thereof, and the goings out thereof, and the comings in thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the laws thereof: and write it in their sight, that they may keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and do them. This is the law of the house; Upon the top of the mountain the whole limit thereof round about shall be most holy. Behold, this is the law of the house.

In these verses we have given out,

I. The prophet's duty; which is to show the Israelites the house, with the adjuncts and appurtenances of it.

II. The house of Israel's duties; which are,

1. Humiliating for their sins.

2. Measuring of the pattern.

3. Keeping and observing the forms and ordinances of the house.

III. The law of the house; which is holiness, ver. 12.

Ver. 10. "Thou son of man, show the house to the," &c. The Lord commands Ezekiel to "show the house to the house of Israel;" he had seen the house, with all the forms, ordinances, and adjuncts of it; he had seen the measuring of it, within and without; he well understood both the frame and the house, and the things belonging to it, and so must show it to the Jews. The prophets must first see themselves, before they show to others; they must first be taught of Christ, before they teach others; they must be well acquainted with temple work, know the inside and outside, the forms and laws thereof, first themselves, and then make the same known to others. John first saw new Jerusalem, and the measurings of it, and after that revealed it to others, Rev. xxi. And what they have seen, that they reveal, that they show, and nothing of their own. Ezekiel must show the house he had seen, and only that. Ministers under the gospel should know the form and ordinances of Christ's house, and show them, and them only, to the people.

"That they may be ashamed of their iniquities."

This vision was to be shown unto the Jews in captivity, to let them know that there should be a restoration of the temple and church state again; and under it, the state of the church under Christ was typed out; and this was done to bring them to repentance. The word for shame is, כָּלָם, which notes, shame for things in themselves shameful, filthy, and loathsome. The words may be read, And they shall be ashamed; or thus, And let them be ashamed.

Obs. When God reveals mercy, and shows kindness to a sinful people, they ought to be ashamed, and repent of all their former iniquities. See Ezek. xvi. 60, 61, 63; xxxvi. 25—31. And here they must be informed of this vision, and the mercy held out in it towards them, that they might consider their idolatries, superstitions, and other iniquities, and so be ashamed, and confounded in themselves. "The house of Israel," all Israel, were to be "ashamed of their iniquities," of all they had done amiss in church and state. And so should the house of England be ashamed of all done amiss in church and state; of all corruptions, abominations, and oppressions, which are in the same: we should be ashamed of them, 1. As acts of filthiness. 2. As acts of folly. 3. As acts of unkindness and ingratitude. 4. As fearing a just reproof. 5. As fearing God's servants, cause, and name will suffer by them. When our shame is of this nature, it is right; if upon other grounds and considerations, it is worthless.

"Let them measure the pattern." Junius reads the words, that they may measure universally.

thers, let them measure. The showing of them the house was that they might measure it; that is, that they might endeavour to understand the measures of it, and so have the knowledge of it, and the christian church, exactly in their minds. It was a spiritual measuring which Ezekiel had; and such a measuring they were to make, to look at the true marks of the church, which are essential and spiritual, not external and accidental.

Obs. Those who have humbled themselves for their former sins, are fit to be spiritual mathematicians. The house of Israel must first be ashamed of her iniquities, and then "measure the pattern." When we reflect upon our sinful ways, and are broken-hearted that we have displeased the Lord; then are we fittest for the knowledge and understanding of spiritual things. Dan. ix. 13, it is clear, that humbling of the soul for sin, and turning from it, makes way for understanding of the truth. The old man is to be put off, that all things may be new, and so we may attain to the knowledge of this temple. Men of corrupt minds and practices are unfit for temple work, and the measurings thereof which must be according to the word.

Ver. 11. "And if they be ashamed of all that they have done, show them the form of the house, and the fashion thereof," &c. These words seem to contradict what is in the former verse, where it is said, "Show them the house, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities;" and here it is, "If they be ashamed of all that they have done, show them the form of the house." In the first, sight of the house is required, as precedaneous to humiliation; and here, humiliation is required as precedaneous to sight of the house. The answer to this seeming contradiction is easy. The sight of the house first, was mercy, and that made way for humiliation; and then their humiliation upon that made way for further mercy. First, they had a general sight of the house, which caused shame; and being thoroughly ashamed, they had a more distinct and particular knowledge of the same.

"The form of the house, and the fashion thereof."

In a house there are several parts, as walls, windows, doors, posts, lintels, galleries, stairs, chambers, &c. And these are of several forms and fashions, which he must show to the house of Israel, even "all the forms;" which is twice mentioned, and notes the outward and inward forms of the church.

The outward, lies in profession, in the union and harmony of the parts, in the greatness and extent of the whole, in the discipline and government of it.

The inward forms consist in those gracious principles and qualifications which are in those professors, which make up the house and body of Christ, in the power of godliness, and the cordial closing one with another in the life, spirit, purity, and power of ordinances. There is beauty and glory in the outward forms, but most in the inward. Psal. xlv. 13, "The king's daughter is all glorious within; and her clothing is of wrought gold." The church shines without, but is very glorious within, all glorious. "The kingdom of God is within men," Luke xvii. 21; and that is, in righteousness, peace, and joy. Paul had an eye to both forms, when he told the Colossians, he rejoiced to see their order, and faith, Col. ii. 5.

"And the goings out thereof, and the comings in thereof." There were several gates in this temple, and they were to come in at one and go out at another. Those who came in at the north gate, must go out at the south gate; and they who came in at the south gate, must go out at the north gate, and not at the gates they came in by, Ezek. xlvi. 9. In this temple there was no turning back, but going forward; when the tabernacle was up, there was looking and turning back to Egypt. When Solomon's temple stood, there was of them who went backward, and not forward, Jer. vii. 24; Isa. i. 4; Jer. xv. 6; but in this temple they were to go forward, and not backward. Isaiah prophesied that the people of this temple should "be all righteous," Isa. lx. 21; and the righteous hold on their way, Job xvii. 9.

"All the ordinances and all the laws thereof." The Hebrew word for "ordinances" is, חֻקִּים from חָקַק to engrave upon wood or stone; and that for "law" is, תּוֹרָה from יָרָה to instruct, or teach; so that this latter imports the instruction of the mind, the former the impression of truth upon the heart and affections. Suarez saith, that a law, properly so called, is illuminative, reforming and directing the judgment; and impulsive, moving the heart and will to action. Some, by these ordinances and laws, understand the rites and rules they were to observe in relation to the sacrifices; for it is probable, being seventy years in captivity, they had forgotten them in part, if not wholly; but not only these are here intended, for then the scope of the vision would extend no further than Zerubbabel's temple, whereas it refers chiefly to the temple and worship of Christ under the gospel, as hath been showed. The ordinances and laws thereof are here likewise included, and what the worshippers are to do; when, and how, and which belong to the temple.

Obs. 1. That to repentant men, ashamed of all their evil doings, the ways of God's house are to be made known by the prophets and ministers. "If they be ashamed, show them the form and fashion of the house," &c. If they were not humbled for and ashamed of their abominations, which caused the destruction of the first temple, they must not be informed in the mysteries of this temple, either by word or writing. Impenitency excludes from temple mercies; but shame, and hearty sorrow for sin, makes way for such mercies. To them so affected, must the forms and fashions, the comings in and goings out of the house, all the outward and inward forms, all the ordinances and laws thereof, be made known, by word, or writing, or both; they are to be admitted to the mysteries and secrets of the temple. As for dogs, holy things are not to be communicated unto them.

Obs. 2. Temple and church work must not be according to men's fancies, but according to the mind of God, and that pattern he gives forth. God set a pattern before Ezekiel, he must set it before the house of Israel, and they must build and order the temple answerably; they must "keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof;" they might not add to, nor detract from, what God had prescribed. Moses, in the tabernacle work, must do all after the pattern given him, Exod. xxv. 40; xxxix. 42, 43. Noah, in his ark work, must keep to what God appointed, Gen. vi. 14—16. Solomon, in his temple work, was tied to the pattern given out by the Spirit to David, 1 Chron. xxviii. 11—13. In the gospel church it is so, Matt. xxviii. 20, "Teaching them to observe all things which I have commanded you." Nothing is left to their liberty, God's appointments only must be in his house; neither antiquity, nor custom, nor convenience, nor prudential considerations, nor show of holiness, nor any pretext whatsoever, will warrant any human invention, brought into the church and worship of God.

Obs. 3. That the temple and church of Christ hath distinct and peculiar laws of its own. Ezekiel must show them the laws and ordinances of the house, not those of nature or nations. Cæsar's and Christ's laws do differ; his are civil, and Christ's are sacred, he rules in Zion, and man's laws have no place there.

Obs. 4. The church in due time shall be such a temple as here it is represented by this vision. It shall be one large, strong, and full of glory, as this visional temple was. When God gives forth visions, it is in the thoughts of his heart to make them good. How shall the house of Israel, the true christians, keep the laws and ordinances of his house, if it never be built? God hath not only purposed, but promised to build it, Ezek. xxxvii. 26, 27, "I will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore. My tabernacle also shall be with them; yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people." And John saw it accomplished in vision, hearing God uttering parallel words, Rev. xxi. 2, 3. And doubtless the time is drawing near for the building of it. Now men see a difference between the stones of Babylon, which must neither be corner, foundation, or wall-stones, Jer. li. 26, and the stones of Zion, which are precious and living; they begin to creep out of the dust of contempt, and to appear like the stars of the morning: now there is a spirit of prayer more than formerly, and more than ordinary, for the accomplishment of this vision, and great expectation raised in many to see such a spiritual temple.

Obs. 5. The end of making known the laws and ways of God's house is, that they may be observed and practised. Ezekiel must show them, and write in their sight, the forms, laws, and ordinances of the house, that they may keep and do them. God propounds not divine things only to be known, but chiefly to be done. It is not enough to know virtue, but men must endeavour to have it, and to do virtuously. Did a man know all the forms, comings in, and goings out of God's house, all the laws and ordinances thereof, and not observe them, it would not advantage him at all, but make his condemnation the greater. The end of human laws and ordinances is observation, else they are no better than ciphers. So the end of God's laws is keeping and doing of them; it is not knowing, nor hearing, nor praising, but practice which commends them. Disobedience is a dishonour to God, to his house, to his laws. Let us hearken to James in this case, chap. i. 22, his counsel is good, "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves."

Ver. 12. "This is the law of the house; Upon the top of the mountain the whole limit thereof round about shall be most holy," &c. Sanctius reads the words thus, "This is the law of the house, upon the top of the mountain," and there makes the distinction from the following words. Others make it before, and refer the words "upon the top of the mountain" to the latter words, not the former. There is no considerable difference, whether the note of distinction be in the one or the other place, for the house was upon the top of a mountain, chap. xl. 2.

The law of this house, viz. the fabric, mountain, and whole compass thereof, was holiness; it is here said to "be most holy." The Hebrew is, the holiness of holiness. The Hebrews do double the word when they intend a superlative; as, "a servant of servants," Gen. ix. 25, that is, most servile; "a king of kings," Ezra vii. 12, that is, the most eminent and greatest of kings; and here, the holiness of holiness, that is, the "most holy." Such was this house, and the mountain whereon it stood, and the compass of it round about, which was by a wall of five hundred reeds long, and so many broad; or, thereby was the separation made "between the sanctuary and the profane place," chap. xlii. 20. This house was to be the habitation of God's throne; a representation of new Jerusalem, and heaven itself; therefore it is styled not only holy, but "most holy."

Obs. 1. The church of God hath a good foundation. It is a house upon a mountain, and that is strong; Job xxxix. 28, rocks and mountains are strong places, they stand immovable. The rock, or mountain, on which the church is founded and built, is the Lord Christ himself, 1 Cor. iii. 11; called "a mountain," Dan. ii. 35; "a precious corner stone, a sure foundation," Isa. xxviii. 16; a "rock," 1 Cor. x. 4; "the strength of Israel," 1 Sam. xv. 29; "the root of David," Rev. xxii. 16; and upholder of all things, Heb. i. 3; he upholds the world and the church.

Obs. 2. The church of God is eminent and conspicuous. It is on the top of a mountain, and that mountain was very high, chap. xl. 2, where he saw this temple; which holds forth the visibility and eminency of the church under the gospel. Isa. ii. 2, "It shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it." When one mountain is laid upon another, the uppermost must be very eminent. The church here is called "a mountain," and this mountain is seated upon the top of another mountain, even that mountain that fills all the earth, Dan. ii. 35. It must therefore of necessity be high, and be seen of the nations; for it is prophesied that "all nations shall flow unto it." This suits with that, Rev. xxi. 24.

Obs. 3. The whole church of God is to be made up of holy materials. The house upon the top of the mountain, the whole circuit thereof round about shall be most holy. There must not be one part of the house profane, another part holy; but the whole house, and every part thereof, must be holy. Isa. xxxv. 8, there shall be "the way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it;" the purity of that way will be such, as wicked ones will not dare to tread in it. Joel iii. 16, 17, "The Lord shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake;" terrible doings there shall be, "but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel. So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain: then shall Jerusalem be holy," that is, all Jerusalem shall then be holy, "and there shall no strangers pass through her any more," to pollute and defile her. Then shall "every pot in Jerusalem and Judah be holiness unto the Lord," as Zechariah speaks, chap. xiv. 21. Then shall be shut out all dogs, soeersers, whomongers, murderers, idolaters, and lovers with makers of lies, as John saith, Rev. xxii. 15; and whatever defileth, chap. xxi. 27. Peter calls them of this temple "lively stones," 1 Pet. ii. 5. John calls them sealed ones, Rev. vii. 4; such as had the "Father's name written in their foreheads,"

Rev. xiv. 1; "Precious stones," Rev. xxi. 19; Eph. ii. 19—22.

Obs. 4. The law of this house, which is holiness, is specially to be observed. The verse begins and ends alike: "This is the law of the house. Behold, this is the law of this house." Of this house, so Vatablus. Of that house, so Junius. As the house is emphatical, so is the law of it set out with a Behold! this is the law of it, holiness of holiness; all in this house hath a law of holiness written in it, or upon it. If any thing or person could come in here without holiness, such things and persons would be cast out as unclean, as the man was who came in to the marriage supper without "a wedding garment," Matt. xxii. 12, 13; they violate the law of holiness, and must suffer for it. But such shall not be suffered to enter: Rev. xxi. 27, "There shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth;" no false doctrine, no human inventions or will-worship, shall be there; no profane person, no formalist, or hypocrite, shall get in there; "but they who are written in the Lamb's book of life:" ver. 12, there is an angel at every gate to keep out the unworthy. See Isa. lii. 11.

Ver. 13—17. And these are the measures of the altar after the cubits: The cubit is a cubit and an hand breadth; even the bottom shall be a cubit, and the breadth a cubit, and the border thereof by the edge thereof round about shall be a span: and this shall be the higher place of the altar. And from the bottom upon the ground even to the lower settle shall be two cubits, and the breadth one cubit; and from the lesser settle even to the greater settle shall be four cubits, and the breadth one cubit. So the altar shall be four cubits; and from the altar and upward shall be four horns. And the altar shall be twelve cubits long, twelve broad, square in the four squares thereof. And the settle shall be fourteen cubits long and fourteen broad in the four squares thereof; and the border about it shall be half a cubit; and the bottom thereof shall be a cubit about; and his stairs shall look toward the east.

In chap. xli. 22, mention was made of an altar, which was of the altar of incense. Here another altar is presented to the prophet, which is the altar of burnt offering; which, with the appurtenances of it, is described, and measured by the cubit; not the common cubit, which consisted of twenty-four fingers' breadth, but the large or royal cubit, which was a hand's breadth more, and is here said to be the cubit, that is, "a cubit and a hand's breadth." This altar was a perfect square, in length and breadth equal, each was twelve cubits; the bottom, breadth, and border, with the lesser and greater settles, have their several measures and distances; it had horns and stairs.

The 15th verse in Hebrew is thus, And the mount of God, four cubits, and from the lion of God and upwards four horns; so it is in the margin, "Harel, the mountain of God." Some understand the space where they put the wood which burned the sacrifice. Others make it the body of the altar, which being between two settles, or benches, was so termed, appearing like a little mountain. הַרְיָהוּא the lion of God, or of the strong God, it is conceived was the grate upon which the holocaust was laid; and this grate was of the form of a lion, as Vialpandus saith; but rather it was so called, because, as a lion tears and devours the prey, so the fire of this altar did eat up the sacrifices laid upon this grate. Whether the apostle hath not some respect unto this, or Solomon's altar for burnt offerings, when he saith, "Our God is a consuming fire," Heb. xii. 29, is considerable.

This altar had stairs to go up unto it, yet God had forbid steps, or stairs, to be made unto his altar, and gives a reason for it, Exod. xx. 26, which was to be observed of men when they made altars unto God; but when the Lord prescribed the form of an altar for himself, he might, according to his own good pleasure, have it with steps or without. It is probable Solomon's altar had steps, being ten cubits high, as Sanctius and the Annotators observe; the priests also were to wear linen breeches when they were sacrificing.

These stairs looked "toward the east;" that so, when they sacrificed and worshipped God, their backs might be towards the east, and their faces westward; which the wise God ordered so, that he might keep his people from conforming to, and symbolizing with, the idolatrous nations, who with their faces eastward worshipped the sun-rising.

This altar for burnt offerings was a type of Christ, as those of Moses and Solomon were, Exod. xxvii. 1; 2 Chron. iv. 1.

1. This altar was but one; so Christ is our altar, and our only altar, Heb. xiii. 10; the christian church knoweth no other.

2. It had a grate, whereon the sacrifice was laid, and fire put to it, whereby it was burnt; so Christ had a cross, whereto he was fastened; and there the fire of God's anger did fall upon him, which was due to us for our sins, Isa. liii. 5; Matt. xxvii. 46.

3. It had four horns at the four corners thereof, which signified the strength and sufficiency of Christ, for all who should come unto him from the four corners of the earth. When men were in danger of their lives, they fled to the altar, and took hold on the horns thereof, 1 Kings ii. 28; Exod. xxi. 14; and if they were not wilful and presumptuous sinners, they were safe. What sinner soever shall come from any part of the world unto Christ, and take hold of him by the hand of faith, he shall be safe. The four corners of his altar are his "wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption," 1 Cor. i. 30; and he is able to save them who take hold of him to the uttermost, Heb. vii. 25.

4. This altar was to be seven days cleansed and purified, ver. 26 of this chapter, and Exod. xxix. 37; and so it was holy, and whatsoever touched it was holy. Herein is figured the perfect holiness of Christ, who was "most holy," Dan. ix. 24, and sanctified himself for the service of the church; and whoever toucheth him by faith is made holy; and whatever is offered up to God upon this altar likewise is holy. This altar sanctifieth the gift, Matt. xxiii. 19; Heb. xiii. 15.

5. It was glorious and durable, being of shittim wood and brass, Exod. xxvii. 1, 2; of cedar, and pure gold, 1 Kings vi. 20. And herein it represented the Deity of Christ, which is most glorious and eternal, Heb. i. 3; ix. 14.

6. It was called the mountain of God, being on mount Zion; he did as it were dwell there, and took pleasure in the sacrifices offered on it: and is not Christ Haniel, the mountain of God; is not he the altar in the mountain of the Lord's house? Heb. xiii. 10; Isa. ii. 2. Doth not God dwell in him? Col. ii. 9. Was he not a sacrifice well pleasing to God? Eph. v. 2. Are not we "the righteousness of God in him?" 2 Cor. v. 21.

And not only so, but the lion of the strong God; and is not Christ Haariel, the Lion of the mighty God? He is "the Lion of the tribe of Judah," Rev.

v. 5; the Lion of God, to whom God hath given all power in heaven and earth, Matt. xxviii. 19. This Lion hath rescued us out of the mouth of that "roaring lion," who intended and endeavoured to make a prey of all mankind, 1 Pet. v. 8; Heb. ii. 14. This Lion hath "spoiled principalities and powers," Col. ii. 15; purged away sin, Heb. i. 3; made reconciliation to God, Dan. ix. 24; "abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light," 2 Tim. i. 10.

The exact measuring of this altar dictates this, that ministers should have and hold forth the full knowledge of Christ, and especially of him crucified, as an offering for sin; for therein lieth the benefit of sinners, to know Christ crucified. Hence Paul, 1 Cor. ii. 2, professeth he determined not to know any thing among the Corinthians, (that is, to make known any thing, to preach any thing,) "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified;" that should be his work, to measure out Christ to them. So Philip preached Christ to the Samaritans, Acts viii. 5; and Peter preached Christ unto the Jews, and others, Acts ii. The virtue of Christ crucified is to be made known fully.

Ver. 18—27. And he said unto me, Son of man, thus saith the Lord God; These are the ordinances of the altar in the day when they shall make it, to offer burnt offerings thereon, and to sprinkle blood thereon. And thou shalt give to the priests the Levites that be of the seed of Zadok, which approach unto me, to minister unto me, saith the Lord God, a young bullock for a sin offering. And thou shalt take of the blood thereof, and put it on the four horns of it, and on the four corners of the settle, and upon the border round about: thus shalt thou cleanse and purge it. Thou shalt take the bullock also of the sin offering, and he shall burn it in the appointed place of the house, without the sanctuary. And on the second day thou shalt offer a kid of the goats without blemish for a sin offering; and they shall cleanse the altar, as they did cleanse it with the bullock. When thou hast made an end of cleansing it, thou shalt offer a young bullock without blemish, and a ram out of the flock, without blemish. And thou shalt offer them before the Lord, and the priests shall cast salt upon them, and they shall offer them up for a burnt offering unto the Lord. Seven days shalt thou prepare every day a goat for a sin offering; they shall also prepare a young bullock, and a ram out of the flock, without blemish. Seven days shall they purge the altar and purify it; and they shall consecrate themselves. And when these days are expired, it shall be, that upon the eighth day, and so forward, the priest shall make your burnt offerings upon the altar, and your peace offerings; and I will accept you, saith the Lord God.

Having prescribed the form of the altar, the Lord gives out to Ezekiel the ordinances thereof, the laws and rites which concerned the sacrifices and priests, showing him what priests he would have employed for the service of this altar, as also what sacrifices, and how the altar is to be purified; which things extend to the 27th verse, and therein the daily work and worship of the altar is appointed.

Although the chief scope of this vision be to set out the glory and greatness of the church under the gospel and among the gentiles; yet, because the Jews at this time being in Babylon were to return unto Jerusalem, therefore the Lord alludes to ordinances, rites, and ceremonies which were well known among the Jews, holding out under them the spiritual worship of the gospel.

The priests to be in the service of this altar, and to draw near to God, were to be of the seed of Zadok. David being on his death-bed, Abiathar the high priest sided with Adonijah the eldest son, to make him king, but Zadok was for Solomon; whereupon after the death of David, Solomon obtaining the kingdom, Abiathar was put out of his place, and Zadok made high priest, 1 Kings ii. 35. Zadok was constant and faithful, a just and upright man, as his name signifies; and such men were to serve at this altar; such as are constant to Christ, faithful, just, sincere, ought to be in gospel administration, and to draw near to God in these ordinances which belong to the gospel, which differ from the Judaical.

Here are three sorts of sacrifices mentioned, the burnt offering, the sin offering, and the peace offering, ver. 18, 19, 27; of which, and their different rites, you may read, Lev. i. per totum; chap. vi. 24, to the end; chap. iii. per totum, with chap. vii. 11—22. These sacrifices were not sufficient to expiate sin, but they were means of worship, leading them unto Christ. So baptism and the supper are not of great validity, as to purge away sin; but they are means of worship leading unto Christ, who only is the expiatory sacrifice for sin, Heb. vii. 27; x. 10—12, 14.

Concerning the bullock for the sin offering, two things are proposed.

1. That the blood thereof be taken "and put upon the four horns of the altar, and upon the four corners of the settle, and upon the border round about," ver. 20; and the like was to be done with the "kid of the goats," ver. 22. This presignified the abundant shedding of the blood of Christ, which "cleanseth from all sin," 1 John i. 7; Rev. i. 5; and that Christ crucified should be preached to the four corners of the earth, Matt. xxviii. 19; 1 Cor. i. 23.

2. This bullock was to be burnt in the appointed place of the house without the sanctuary, which shadowed out the place of Christ's suffering, as it is written, Heb. xiii. 11, 12. The sin offering was burnt "without the camp." Wherefore Jesus also, that he might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate," even in the place appointed, Luke xxiii. 33.

As for the burnt offering of a young bullock, and a ram out of the flock, both without blemish, the priests were to "cast salt upon them," ver. 23, 24. In Leviticus they were commanded with all their offerings to offer salt, chap. ii. 13. Salt makes all things savoury, and preserveth from corruption, by the heat and sharpness of it; and therefore salt was accounted an emblem of duration and eternity: 2 Chron. xiii. 5; Numb. xviii. 19, we read of "a covenant of salt," which notes an inviolable, incorruptible, and perpetual covenant. Sanctius thinks salt was used in sacrifices, because it notes prudence and wisdom; without which sacrifices are unsavoury. Without question it notes the wholesome doctrine of the gospel, gracious words, and reasonable reproofs, Col. iv. 6; Eph. iv. 29, which are savoury to God and man. This salting the sacrifices by the priests, types out the office of gospel ministers, who are styled by the Lord Christ, "The salt of the earth," Matt. v. 13; and are to season others with wholesome doctrine and sharp reproofs. Titus must rebuke the Creteans "sharply, that they may be sound in the faith," Tit. i. 13; the salt of the gospel will eat out those ill humours which are in men. Christ saith, Mark ix. 49, "Every one shall be salted with fire," that is, with the fire of the Spirit, the fire of afflictions, or the fire of hell; and "every sacrifice shall be salted with salt," that is, with grace, and especially the grace of mortification, which will eat out, and consume, those lusts which are offensive to God, to themselves, and others; and the grace of zeal, which will make the affections mount up to the Lord. True christians are sacrifices well seasoned; uncorrupt doctrines will make uncorrupt souls and bodies, the salt makes both immortal: men soundly salted with gospel truths shall never perish.

Ver. 26. "They shall consecrate themselves." The Hebrew is, they shall fill their hands. Some, by hands, understand the sides of the altar, because י signifies both a hand and a side: others take hands for the bands of the priests, which should be filled with sacrifices, that is, with sacrificing work, and so prefigured the full employments the gospel ministers should have. But the Hebrew word קדש sometimes signifies, to consecrate, as learned Hebricians observe; Exod. xxviii. 41, "Thou shalt anoint them, and consecrate them;" the Hebrew is, thou shalt fill their hand; so Exod. xxix. 9; Numb. iii. 3; 1 Kings xiii. 33; Judg. xvii. 5. In these places the Hebrew is, filled the hand, which notes consecration, according to the Hebrew dialect, and so it imports the ministers' consecrating and dedicating themselves unto the work of Christ, under the gospel.

The 27th verse speaks of the daily sacrifices, and work of the altar; one sacrifice or other was to be offered daily. Two lambs, one in the morning, another in the evening, were to be offered daily, Exod. xxix. 38, 39; these were for the burnt offering, ver. 42. Besides which, here is mention of a peace offering, of which they were neither to eat the fat nor the blood, Lev. iii. 17; signifying, that those who are at peace with God, through Christ, ought neither to be carnal, nor cruel, but to mortify their carnal lusts, and to be meek as Christ was. The daily sacrificing of the priests' here, showed the daily and constant work of the ministers under the gospel; preaching, administering of sacraments, praying, and praising of God, is to be their daily work; which being done according to rule, and in the name of Christ, makes them and the people accepted.

Ver. 28. It shall be upon the eighth day.

Here is foretold, saith Mr. Shepherd, the continuance of the sabbath in gospel days, the eighth day from the creation being the first of our redemption. Noah is called the eighth, 2 Pet. ii. 5; who was the first in regard of his years, and dignity of person, and first entered into the ark, Gen. vii. 7. And so the Lord's day may be the eighth in one sense, and the first in another.

CHAPTER XLIV.

Ver. 1—3. Then he brought me back the way of the gate of the outward sanctuary, which looketh toward the east; and it was shut. Then said the Lord unto me; This gate shall be shut, it shall not be opened, and no man shall enter in by it; because the Lord, the God of Israel, hath entered in by it, therefore it shall be shut. It is for the prince; the prince, he shall sit in it to eat bread before the Lord; he shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate, and shall go out by the way of the same.

This chapter treats of the priests, and divers ordinances concerning them.

1. Sundry things are presented to Ezekiel touching the priests.

1. The privilege of the high priest, in the three first verses.

2. A reproof of the priests for their profaneness and neglect, from the beginning of the 4th verse to the 8th.

3. The exclusion of some, and deposing of others from the priest's office, ver. 9—14.

4. What priests God will accept of, ver. 15, 16.

II. The ordinances which concern the priests are laid down, from the 17th verse to the end.

Ver. 1. "Then he brought me," &c. The prophet having seen the altar for burnt, sin, and peace offerings, with the ordinances thereof, is brought back to the east gate, or "gate of the outward sanctuary," that which separated the priests' court from the people's, or the outmost gate of all. We must follow Christ, which way soever he leads us, be it backward or forward; he hath something to reveal unto us, which will be for our use.

Ver. 1, 2. "It was shut." What gate soever this was, it was shut; and therefore shut, because the Lord had entered in by it, and no man might, but the prince only.

Some take "prince" literally for the governor of the people, but the best expositors take it for the high priest, who was preferred above, and so prince of, all the rest; for in this chapter he speaks of the orders of the priests. This prince, or high priest, was a type of Christ. The high priest was to be without blemish, anointed with holy oil, to be covered with clean linen, and clothed gloriously; on him was a plate engraven with holiness to the Lord, he had the Urim and Thummim, he bare the names of the twelve tribes of Israel upon his breast and shoulders; as appears, Lev. xxii. 13; Exod. xxix. 7; xxviii. 2; xlii. 36; xxx. 9. So Christ, our High Priest, was without blemish, Heb. vii. 26; anointed with the Spirit, Isa. lxi. 1. He was holy, glorious, yea, holiness altogether, Luke i. 35; Mark i. 24. He had all perfection, Col. i. 19; ii. 3. He bears all Israel in his breast, and on his shoulders, Isa. xl. 11; Heb. vii. 25.

What is meant by the gate shut, is necessary to inquire. It was not the womb of the virgin, which was shut up after the birth of Christ, as popish interpreters expound it. Some of the ancients make it to be heavenly mysteries, which none know but the Father and the Son; some make it the Scripture, or "book sealed with seven seals," Rev. v. 1, which none could open but Christ. This gate shut, rather notes the gate or entrance into heaven, which Adam by his fall had shut, so that no man whatsoever, being sinful, could open it, or enter; only Jesus Christ our High Priest hath opened it, and entered. Heb. iv. 14. "We have a great High Priest, who is passed into the heavens." He hath broken all the bars, locks, and bolts, which kept it shut, and hath opened the same, so that now sinners may have access to God. The high priest once in a year entered into the most holy place, the door opened to none but him; this typified Christ's opening of heaven, and entrance in thither, as is clearly expressed, Heb. ix. 7, 8, 11, 12, 24. The tabernacle and temple were representations of heaven, and so was this vision of Ezekiel; and as the gate here was shut, so was the gate of heaven, till the Lord Christ, the Archbishop of our souls, opened the same, and entered. "No man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven," John iii. 13; no man ever, by his own virtue or power, ascended up to heaven, but Christ. Enoch and Elijah neither ascended nor entered by their own strength, grace, or goodness. Christ's merits were the key which opened heaven for them and others. Christ is the door, and the way, and no man comes to the Father, but by him, John xiv. 6. It is by Christ alone that we come to the knowledge and fruition of the Father; he reveals him and his mysteries, and brings us unto the enjoyment of him.

Quest. If Christ have entered in by this gate, why is it still shut, why stands it not open? for, ver. 2, it is said, "This gate shall be shut, it shall not be opened, and no man shall enter in by it:" and why? because "the God of Israel hath entered in by it, therefore it shall be shut."

Ans. 1. It is shut for the honour of the prince. Great persons and princes have their gates shut, all must not come at and see them: it was an honour to the spouse, that she was "a garden enclosed, a spring shut up, a fountain sealed," Cant. iv. 12.

2. For the use of the prince, that he might go in and out at his pleasure; that he might let in and keep out whom he pleased. The wise virgins were let in by the bridegroom, but the foolish were kept out, for "the door was shut," Matt. xxv. 10, 11. In the new Jerusalem no unclean thing could enter, though the gates stood open; and out of heaven no clean thing shall be kept, though the gate be shut. Christ hath the key to open it for saints: he opened it for Stephen, Acts vii. 56, "Behold, I see heaven opened, and the Son of man standing at the right hand of God." He opened it for Peter, Acts x. 11.

3. It may be said to be shut, in regard of Christ's long continuance there before his return. It is said, ver. 3, "He shall enter by the way of the porch of the gate, and shall go out by the way of the same." Christ will come again, he is entered into heaven, and there he will, and must, abide, till "the time of restitution of all things," Acts iii. 21; see Acts i. 11; Heb. ix. 28.

Christ, who entered by this gate, was not only man, but God; he was the Lord God of Israel, Jehovah, that he might open heaven for sinners; and man, that he might enter himself.

This gate was "for the prince," that he might "sit in it to eat bread before the Lord." Aaron, the high priest, was to eat sacred flesh, and bread, in the door of the tabernacle, Lev. viii. 31; Exod. xxix. 32. This sitting, and eating bread there, and that "before the Lord," leads us to a double consideration of Christ.

1. His sitting in heaven at the right hand of Majesty, Heb. i. 3. Having finished the work which was given him to do, he ascended on high, and had the greatest glory; he sat at God's "own right hand in heavenly places, far above all principalities, and powers, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come, Eph. i. 20, 21.

2. His communion with, and happiness in, the Lord; which is held forth in his eating "bread before the Lord." The communion and happiness the saints have with and in Christ, is set out by eating and drinking; Luke xxii. 29, 30, "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table, and sit on thrones," &c.; so Matt. xxvi. 29; that is, that ye may have sweet communion with me, and be happy in the fruition of me, as I am in the fruition of my Father, and communion with him.

Ver. 4—8. Then brought he me the way of the north gate before the house: and I looked, and, behold, the glory of the Lord filled the house of the Lord: and I fell upon my face. And the Lord said unto me, Son of man, mark well, and behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears all that I say unto thee concerning all the ordinances of the house of the Lord, and all the laws thereof; and mark well the entering in of the house, with every going forth of the sanctuary. And thou shalt say to the rebellious, even to the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; O ye house of Israel, let it suffice you of all your abominations, in that ye have brought into my sanctuary strangers, uncircumcised in heart, and uncircumcised in flesh, to be in my sanctuary, to pollute it, even my house, when ye offer my bread, the fat and the blood, and they have broken my covenant because of all your abominations. And ye have not kept the charge of mine holy things: but ye have set keepers of my charge in my sanctuary for yourselves.

Before the reproof of the priests, the second thing considerable in the chapter, here are three things to be minded concerning Ezekiel.

I. His sight of glory.

II. The effects of that sight.

III. The command laid upon him.

For the sight of glory. Being "brought to the north gate," he saw "the glory of the Lord filled the house;" that was, some visible sign of his glorious presence: touching this, was spoken in chap. xliii. 5.

The effect was, he fell upon his face, as before: the sight of glory humbles, and prepares to receive the commands of the Lord. When the glory and majesty of God is seen, and apprehended, the heart is stricken with awe and reverence of God; and the party so affected is humbled before God, and so made fit for impression of divine commands: as here it follows;

Ver. 5. "And the Lord said unto me, Son of man, mark well, and behold," &c. In chap. xl. 4, we had the substance of this verse, and partly the very words. Here, God requires the inward and outward parts, the heart and senses. Those words, "mark well," are, in the Hebrew, set thine heart; so that the heart, the ears, and eyes, are to be attentive, and intente, on what God commands. The heart must not wander, the ear be heavy, nor the eye rove, when God speaks, and temple work is in hand. The holy God, and holy things, are exactly to be observed and heeded by all; but especially by those who are officers in his house, as Ezekiel was: they must attend to all the ordinances and laws of God's house, for they must make them known to others, and walk by them themselves; they must know how to behave themselves in the house of God, and teach others so to do: especially, they must "mark well the entering in of the house," that is, they must be careful who they admit to be in it, and to partake of the ordinances of it, lest both it and they be defiled; they must mark every going forth of the sanctuary, so that none go out at the same door they entered, that they go forwards, not backwards, that they leave not the house of God, but be looked after.

Ver. 6. "And thou shalt say to the rebellious, even to the house," &c. Ezekiel, being prepared, must go and execute the command of God; which was, to reprove the house of Israel, and chiefly the priests. The sins they are reprov'd for are, 1. Rebellion. 2. Abominations. 3. Bringing in unworthy persons into the sanctuary, to pollute it. 4. Their sinful sacrificing. 5. Breaking of covenant. 6. Neglecting of their charge, and committing the same to others.

Of the rebellious house of Israel, and their abominations, formerly hath been spoken. It is said here, ver. 6, "Let it suffice you of all your abominations;" that is, they are not few, or light, but many, and grievous; and it is time now that ye should be ashamed of, and humbled for, them, and turn to the Lord from them: him have you provoked bitterly by them, and he hath made you suffer long and sharply for them. O sin no more, cease from idolatries, and unjust practices! let what is past suffice. So Peter, 1 Epist. chap. iv. 3, saith, "The time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the gentiles."

The third sin was, the introduction of strangers into the sanctuary, and they were men "uncircumcised in heart and in flesh." The gentiles were not circumcised in flesh, they ought not to have entered into the sanctuary, Lam. i. 10. Paul was accused for bringing Greeks into the temple, Acts xxi. 28. The heathen might come into the outward court, or "profane place," as Ezekiel styles it, chap. xlii. 20; but into the temple they might not come, it was a polluting of it. Sanctius thinks the priests received sacrifices and oblations from the hands of the heathen, which they offered to God in the temple, which was contrary to the law, Lev. xxii. 25. The Jews were circumcised in flesh, but many of them were uncircumcised in heart; they were without faith, they followed their own lusts, and imitated the heathens. Such priests were admitted into the sanctuary as were profane. The priests, saith God, "have violated my law, and have profaned mine holy things: they have put no difference between the holy and profane," Ezek. xxii. 26. Eli's sons were wicked, even "sons of Belial," 1 Sam. ii. 12. Urijah the priest made an altar like that of Damascus, and sacrificed on that, according to the command of the king, 2 Kings xvi. 11—16, but contrary to the command of God. Such should not have any place in the house of God, because they were abomination unto him; they polluted the sanctuary and sacrifice, by taking the bread, fat, and blood to themselves, which was against the law, Lev. xxxix. 10, 11, 14, 15—17; xxi. 8, or by offering them with defiled hands and hearts. They also broke the covenant, that is, the laws, which God had given them, concerning the way and manner of sacrificing: they kept not, but violated the same; their own wills were set up, and God's laws laid aside.

The last sin is, their neglect of their charge: ver. 8, "Ye have not kept the charge of my holy things." All things belonging to the tabernacle and temple were holy, and the charge of such things was committed to the priests and Levites, 1 Chron. ix. 27—32, and xxxiii. 28—32; and they ought to have had special care of them themselves; but they have suffered strangers, and uncircumcised ones, to be in the sanctuary, to meddle with the holy vessels, and to offer sacrifice: and this they did for their own ease and ends, not for God's glory; for they did the same of their own heads, contrary to the rules and laws of the sanctuary, which, by so doing, they made no better than a den of thieves, or wild beasts; which place was only for whom, and what, God himself appointed, and so for his honour and glory alone.

Observe hence, That those who have the charge of holy things, ought to be exact, observing the order and rules God hath given, and not to deviate from them, doing any thing of their own heads. These men did not keep the charge of the holy things: they should have observed the laws of God's house, which they neglected; themselves should have done all things according to divine order; they set others about the work. God's work must be done by those he appoints, and in the manner he prescribes. Jehoiada observed what was written in the law of Moses, and appointed offices and officers in the house of God accordingly; he durst not vary from what God had given out by Moses, 2 Chron. xxiii. 18, 19. Timothy was charged to keep the command given him by Paul concerning the house of God, and the holy things thereof, "without spot, unrebukeable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus," 1 Tim. vi. 13, 14: he might not spot the same with his inventions, additions, or detraction. It is great presumption in men to take upon them to alter what the infinite wise God hath prescribed; as if they were wiser than God, and knew what were fitter for his worship and service than himself: men, in so doing, do equalize their will-worship to his divine worship, they set their posts by his, Ezek. xliii. 8: but this provokes, and makes way for judgment. When Nadab and Abihu brought strange fire, such as God commanded not, kitchen fire, not altar fire, their own fire, not God's fire; though it were for nature the same, and would have done what the other did, yet because it was not the appointed fire, God was wroth, and sent out fire which devoured them, Lev. x. 12. When they carted the ark, (which should have been carried upon the Levites' shoulders, Numb. iv. 15,) and Uzzah, without warrant from God, staid it up with his hand, did not the Lord's anger kindle to such a height, that he smote him dead? 2 Sam. vi. 6, 7. David acknowledged this evil, 1 Chron. xv. 23, saying, "The Lord our God made a breach upon us, for that we sought him not after the due order." Men may seek God, and yet if they seek him not in a due order, even that order he hath prescribed, they may be far from mercy, and near unto judgment.

Ver. 9—14. Thus saith the Lord God; No stranger, uncircumcised in heart, nor uncircumcised in flesh, shall enter into my sanctuary, of any stranger that is among the children of Israel. And the Levites that are gone away far from me, when Israel went astray, which went astray away from me after their idols; they shall even bear their iniquity. Yet they shall be ministers in my sanctuary, having charge at the gates of the house, and ministering to the house: they shall slay the burnt offering and the sacrifice for the people, and they shall stand before them to minister unto them. Because they ministered unto them before their idols, and caused the house of Israel to fall into iniquity; therefore have I lifted up mine hand against them, saith the Lord God, and they shall bear their iniquity. And they shall not come near unto me, to do the office of a priest unto me, nor to come near to any of my holy things, in the most holy place: but they shall bear their shame, and their abominations which they have committed. But I will make them keepers of the charge of the house, for all the service thereof, and for all that shall be done therein.

In the 9th verse strangers are excluded from the sanctuary, and the service of it. In the rest of the verses those who had abused the priestly office are deposed from it, yet admitted into inferior services.

In Deuteronomy there was a law which prohibited the Ammonites and Moabites from entering into the house of God, which was grounded upon special reasons, Deut. xxiii. 3, 4; but here is a general law, prohibiting all strangers whatsoever to enter into the sanctuary, and bear office there; none ungodly, uncircumcised in heart or flesh, would he have to enter, or minister unto him. And not only so, but the Levites themselves which were corrupted, must be put from their offices. Many of the priests, after the ten tribes revolted, set up calves, and idolatized; complied much with them, and the sinful practices of the times, and were defiled with the pollutions of them, and so went far from God, and his pure ways, hearkening to the commands of wicked kings, 2 Kings xvi. 11; therefore they must be thrust from the dignity of priesthood into the covert service of the sanctuary, they must "bear their iniquity," the punishment of their sins, viz. loss of their places; they must no longer minister unto God, be priests of God, but ministers of the people; they must be porters of the gates, slayers of the sacrifices, and keepers of the utensils that belonged unto the sanctuary. These were inferior and mean offices. Their departing from God's ways, their drawing the people to sin, and offending the church, made God swear against them, (for so that expression, "I lifted up mine hand against them," is to be understood,) lay shame upon them, and cause them to serve in the basest services; wherein mercy appeared also, in that he did not absolutely reject them. Those who sin through infirmity, and repent, do find mercy.

Ver. 15, 16. But the priests the Levites, the sons of Zadok, that kept the charge of my sanctuary when the children of Israel went astray from me, they shall come near to me to minister unto me, and they shall stand before me to offer unto me the fat and the blood, saith the Lord God: they shall enter into my sanctuary, and they shall come near to my table, to minister unto me, and they shall keep my charge.

The other priests being laid aside from all priestly performances, for their apostasy from God, and for their pollutions, here it is declared what priests God would accept of, viz. "the sons of Zadok," who was the first high priest in Solomon's temple, whose posterity was faithful and constant in evil and apostatizing times. When the ten tribes went a whoring from God, and many priests, the sons of Ithamar, were led aside, by the commands of Ahaz and Manasseh, these kept the charge of the sanctuary, and would not, for fear, flattery, or favour, depart from the laws and rites of God's house: these were the men who must come near to God, and minister unto him in the sanctuary.

"Come near to my table." By "table" is meant the altar. Ezek. xli. 22, "The altar of wood" is said to be "the table before the Lord:" and not only the altar for incense was God's table, but that also which was for burnt offerings, Mal. i. 7, 12; that was a table for God's bread and meat.

Obs. 1. The Lord takes notice of those who serve in his house, who are false and who are faithful, in corrupt and apostatizing times. The sons of Zadok, they kept the charge of my sanctuary, when the children of Israel went astray from me. Those who forsook me followed Jeroboam and the calves, but the others would not leave my house, my service, they kept their stations, and were constant. This was their honour, that they were stedfast in the way and work of the Lord; and it was a blot and reproach to them that fell off, for the Lord brands them to be revolters, Hos. v. 1, 2.

Obs. 2. God takes pleasure in and honours those who are faithful and constant in his service. The sons of Zadok were such, and God saith of them, "They shall enter into my sanctuary, they shall come near to me, they shall stand before me, they shall minister to me at my table, they shall keep my charge." By these expressions they are much honoured, and God's pleasure in them much manifested. Those priests, prophets, ministers, who are backsliders, revolters, apostates, are a dishonour to God, and burden to his Spirit. Of such, though they repented, it is said, ver. 13, "They shall not come near unto me, to do the office of a priest unto me, nor to come near to any of my holy things, in the most holy place: but they shall bear their shame, and their abominations which they have committed." God will neither honour them, nor have any pleasure in them; he honours and takes pleasure in those who have been true to him, and faithful.

Ver. 17—22. And it shall come to pass, that when they enter in at the gates of the inner court, they shall be clothed with linen garments; and no wool shall come upon them, whiles they minister in the gates of the inner court, and within. They shall have linen bonnets upon their heads, and shall have linen breeches upon their loins; they shall not gird themselves with any thing that causeth sweat. And when they go forth into the utter court, even into the utter court to the people, they shall put off their garments wherein they ministered, and lay them in the holy chambers, and they shall put on other garments; and they shall not sanctify the people with their garments. Neither shall they shave their heads, nor suffer their locks to grow long; they shall only poll their heads. Neither shall any priest drink wine, when they enter into the inner court. Neither shall they take for their wives a widow, nor her that is put away: but they shall take maidens of the seed of the house of Israel, or a widow that had a priest before.

Here, and in the following verses, are certain rules and instructions given forth for the priests: and the first is,

Concerning their vestures and attire. When the sons of Zadok come to minister unto the Lord, they must be clothed all in linen, no woollen garments must be upon them, as it was in Moses' days: Exod. xxviii. 42, 43; xxxix. 27—29; Lev. xvi. 4, they had linen bonnets, linen breeches, linen girdles, and linen coats; woollen was not permitted them, because less pure than linen. And as those linen garments which Aaron and his sons had, noted out the purity and innocency of Christ, so these the sons of Zadok had noted out the purity and innocency of the ministers under Christ and the gospel. The twenty-four elders were clothed in white raiment, Rev. iv. 4; and those who served the Lord in his temple were arrayed with white robes, chap. vii. 13, 15. The ministers of Christ ought to be holy, chaste, unblamable, and patterns of virtue unto others, 1 Tim. iv. 12; 2 Tim. ii. 22; Tit. i. 7, 8. When they savour the things of the flesh, they are brutish, and have on woollen garments, which should not be. They are to avoid all things which may make them infamous, and to hear ill. Sweat is an unsavoury thing, they must not wear any thing which causeth that, signifying they must do nothing which may justly cause an ill savour. Their loins must be girt with sincerity, and their conversations such as may be inoffensive before God and men.

Of putting off their garments, and putting on others, when they go out from their ministration, was spoken, chap. xlii. 14. "And they shall not sanctify the people in their garments." Common things were made holy by the touching of holy things, according to the law, Exod. xxix. 37; the priests therefore put them off, lest going out in them, the people might touch them, and so being sanctified, be necessitated to leave their callings. Ud. Diodate. Cœcolampadius saith, to sanctify, in this place, is to be willing to be esteemed holy; and so the priests were not to go forth in their garments, that the people might esteem them holy. The Chaldee is, they shall not mingle with the people, being in those holy garments, and so profane them. Pintus hath it to good purpose, thus, they shall not go out in their priestly garments to bless the people, but do it in their common garments; they must be in another frame of spirit in their approaches to God, than in common dealings with the people.

The second rule given them is, concerning their heads, they must not shave them, nor wear long locks, but poll their heads. The heathens used to shave their heads, especially their idolatrous priests; and God would not have those that ministered unto him to conform unto idolaters. His servants must not shave their hair, then it would be too short; nor nourish it, then it would be too long; but "poll" the same, keep a medium between both. The ministers of Christ must not "shave their heads," lest they should symbolize with antichristian monks and friars; nor wear it long, which is the garb of luxurious, barbarous, and military men; they must neither neglect their hair, nor be effeminate in the length, powdering, or curling of the same; but have such a care of that, and their habit, as becomes the gospel, and the servants of Christ.

A third rule is, the prohibition of wine; not simply, but "when they enter into the inner court." This was a law laid upon Aaron and his sons: Lev. x. 9, "Do not drink wine nor strong drink, thou, nor thy sons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations." Notwithstanding this law, the priests and prophets were faulty, and complaint is made, Isa. xxviii. 7, "The priest and the prophet have erred through strong drink, they are swallowed up of wine, they are out of the way through strong drink; they err in vision, they stumble in judgment." The Jewish priests were absolutely forbidden wine, it is conceived, lest it should cause them to speak or do indecently in their ministrations. But wine is not wholly prohibited to the ministers of the gospel; Paul bids Timothy drink wine, 1 Tim. v. 23. Here temperance and sobriety are commanded and commended unto the ministers of Christ; they must not be men given to wine, Titus i. 7, but sober, ver. 8.

A fourth rule is, touching their marriage. They are not forbidden to marry, but are cautioned about the same, and showed who they must not marry, not a widow, or one divorced. And Moses mentions two more, Lev. xxi. 14, a profane one, and a harlot, which they might not take; a virgin or a priest's widow they might, and these must "be of the seed of the house of Israel." Strange virgins, or strange widows, they might not join themselves unto. The scope of the words is, that they should marry them who were modest, chaste, pious, sober, and well educated, that so they might be a comfort and an honour to their husbands in that office. The priests were types of Christ, and the ministers of the gospel are in Christ's stead unto the people; and marriage represents the mystical union and marriage between Christ and his church: therefore, of all men, they should see to it what wives they take, even such as will be subject in all things, as the church is unto Christ, Eph. v. 24; and so mind others of their duty.

Ver. 23—27. And they shall teach my people the difference between the holy and profane, and cause them to discern between the unclean and the clean. And in controversy they shall stand in judgments; and they shall judge it according to my judgments: and they shall keep my laws and my statutes in all mine assemblies; and they shall hallow my sabbaths. And they shall come at no dead person to defile themselves: but for father, or for mother, or for son, or for daughter, for brother, or for sister that hath had no husband, they may defile themselves. And after he is cleansed, they shall reckon unto him seven days. And in the day that he goeth into the sanctuary, unto the inner court, to minister in the sanctuary, he shall offer his sin offering, saith the Lord God.

More rules are prescribed here for the priests of this new temple.

The first is, that they, putting difference in things and persons, between the holy and profane, the clean and the unclean, should teach the people the same. This was the priests' duty of old, Lev. x. 10, 11; and because it was neglected, God complains of the priests: Ezek. xxii. 26, "They have violated my law, they have profaned my holy things: they have put no difference between the holy and profane, neither have they showed" (that is, to the people) "difference between the unclean and the clean." But now it should be otherwise, the ministers of the gospel should teach the people sound and discriminating doctrine, so that they should know truth from error, men sound in the faith from such as were corrupt and heretical. Paul taught Timothy to discern between men having a form of godliness, and the power of it, 2 Tim. iii. 2—8; and Titus he taught to distinguish of persons, chap. i. 10—16; and John put difference between the clean and the unclean, Rev. xxi. 27; and Christ taught his apostles, and in them all others, that holy things must not be given unto dogs, Matt. vii. 6.

The second rule is, about controversies, and what they are to do therein. When controversies arise, they are to hear, judge, and determine them by the law of God: ver. 24, "In controversy they shall stand in judgment: and shall judge according to my judgments;" not according to their own wills, desires of others, or laws of men, but as God's laws direct and command. Christians should bring their differences to their ministers, and church officers, that they may make and maintain peace between them, judging and determining their controversies according to the word of God. Paul blamed the Corinthians, that brother went to law with brother, and that before unbelievers, and brought not their cases unto the church, 1 Cor. vi. 6. Ecclesiastical differences ought to be decided by ecclesiastical persons, and other differences too, Deut. xvii. 8—11.

The third rule is, about the solemn assemblies and sabbaths: "They shall keep my laws and my statutes in all mine assemblies; and they shall hallow my sabbaths." God would not allow the priests, though never so knowing or holy, to do aught of their own heads in his worship: as they might not prescribe worship itself, so they might not alter it, nor the laws, rites, or manner of performing the same. Religion and worship are such sacred things, that nothing human must be intermingled with them, all things therein must be done according to the mind of God exactly, "they shall keep my laws and statutes." This the ministers of Christ are to do themselves, and to teach others to do the same; they are to sanctify the sabbaths, and to see others do so too.

A fourth rule is, direction about their dead kindred, whom they might bury, and mourn for, viz. "father or mother, son or daughter, brother or sister" a virgin. To these six they were limited, and forbidden to be at the funerals of all others. For those of their consanguinity they might mourn, God would not have them unnatural; yet in their mourning they might not be immoderate, nor disfigure themselves by baldness, shaving their beards, or cutting their flesh, Lev. xxi. 5; they must be patterns of patience unto others, and quietly submit unto the hand of God, in pulling away their near relations: and because it is hard in such cases to keep within bounds, and not transgress, therefore they were to offer a sin offering before they came to public administrations, showing that singular purity is required in the ministers who are to draw near unto God.

Ver. 26. "After he is cleansed," &c. The Lord indulged them so far that they might defile themselves, ver. 25, that is, touch and mourn for their near kindred, but after this they must cleanse themselves according to law, Numb. xix. 11—13, and chap. vi. 9—11. They were to be holy, especially when they came to minister before the Lord.

Ver. 27. "He shall offer his sin offering." When we have indulgence from God in any thing, especially in matter of our affections, we are apt to exceed our bounds, therefore here the Lord provides a remedy.

Ver. 28—31. And it shall be unto them for an inheritance: I am their inheritance: and ye shall give them no possession in Israel; I am their possession. They shall eat the meat offering, and the sin offering, and the trespass offering; and every dedicated thing in Israel shall be their's. And the first of all the firstfruits of all things, and every oblation of all, of every sort of your oblations, shall be the priest's: ye shall also give unto the priest the first of your dough, that he may cause the blessing to rest in thine house. The priests shall not eat of any thing that is dead of itself, or torn, whether it be fowl or beast.

The priests and Levites were to have no inheritances in the land of Canaan, Numb. xviii. 20; Deut. x. 9; xviii. 2. God was their inheritance, and provided for them, he gave them the sacrifices which were due to himself: Josh. xiii. 14, "Only unto the tribe of Levi he gave no inheritance; the sacrifices of the Lord God of Israel made by fire are their inheritance." And so here God was the inheritance of the priests of this new temple, and gave them the offerings due unto him, and all the dedicate things; yea, he ordered that the first of all the firstfruits of all things, and all the oblations, should be the priest's, and the first of their very dough; hereby presignifying, that the ministers of the gospel ought to be maintained by the people they preach unto. It is a divine ordinance, that out of their estates and means the ministers should be provided for: see Matt. x. 10, 11; Luke x. 7, 8; Gal. vi. 6; 1 Cor. ix. 13, 14; 2 Cor. xi. 8.

Here is a special reason given why they should be maintained, and that comfortably: it is in the 30th verse, "That he may cause the blessing to rest in thine house." Junius and Piscator read it, that I may appoint or settle a blessing in their house. Where the faithful ministers of Christ are well provided for by the people, there God singles out blessings for their families, and causes them to rest there: Prov. iii. 9, 10, "Honour the Lord with thy substance and with the firstfruits of all thine increase: so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst with new wine;" so Mal. iii. 10, God had blessings for them under the law, who were forward to uphold his worship, and maintain his servants. And so he hath for those in these gospel-times who do the like: 2 Cor. ix. 6, "He that soweth sparingly shall reap sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully shall reap bountifully."

For the last verse, which forbids the priests to eat fowls or beasts which died of themselves, or were torn by others, the same was prohibited the people also, Exod. xxii. 31; Lev. xvii. 15; Deut. xiv. 21: God would have both priests and people holy, and not defile themselves with such meats. And here it may present unto us the care ministers should have of what they eat. Though all creatures be good, and lawful to eat, yet all are not wholesome, and expedient for them who are employed in sacred things to feed upon. Or thus: They are to be hospitable, and should not provide of the worst to entertain the people of God. Such creatures as died of themselves, are torn by dogs, beasts, or vermin, whatever is unsightly, unwholesome, or unsavoury, should not be at their tables, or distributed at their doors. Or thus: This not eating such things may note sanctification in the priests: they were not to be covetous, or cruel, but to be unblamable, abstaining from evil, and the appearances thereof.

CHAPTER XLV.

Ver. 1-6. Moreover, when ye shall divide by lot the land for inheritance, ye shall offer an oblation unto the Lord, an holy portion of the land: the length shall be the length of five and twenty thousand reeds, and the breadth shall be ten thousand. This shall be holy in all the borders thereof round about. Of this there shall be for the sanctuary five hundred in length, with five hundred in breadth, square round about; and fifty cubits round about for the suburbs thereof. And of this measure shalt thou measure the length of five and twenty thousand, and the breadth of ten thousand: and in it shall be the sanctuary and the most holy place. The holy portion of the land shall be for the priests the ministers of the sanctuary, which shall come near to minister unto the Lord: and it shall be a place for their houses, and an holy place for the sanctuary. And the five and twenty thousand of length, and the ten thousand of breadth, shall also the Levites, the ministers of the house, have for themselves, for a possession for twenty chambers. And ye shall appoint the possession of the city five thousand broad, and five and twenty thousand long, over against the oblation of the holy portion: it shall be for the whole house of Israel.

HAVING laid down the platform and measures of the temple, he comes now to the division and measurings of the land: wherein things are dark, difficult, and deep, not to be attempted by human strength, but by the help of Christ's Spirit, which maketh dark things light, difficult things easy, and sounds the greatest depths.

In this chapter are two principal parts:

I. The partition of the land, which is in the first eight verses.

II. Ordinances political and ecclesiastical, from the 9th verse to the end.

For the first. The division of the land is fourfold.

1. A portion for the sanctuary and the priests, in the first four verses.

2. A portion for the Levites, ver. 5.

3. A portion for the city, or people, ver. 6.

4. A portion for the prince, ver. 7, 8.

For the second. The political ordinances, which concern the prince, are from the 9th verse to the 12th.

The ecclesiastical, which concern the people, the prince, and the priests, are from the 13th verse to the end.

There was a distinction of the land of Canaan in Moses' and Joshua's days, Numb. xxxiv. xxxv.; Josh. xiii. xxi. But this division differs much from the same, and when the Jews returned from Babylon, there was no such division made of the land. Had it been, Ezra or Nehemiah would have made mention thereof. This division, therefore, is not to be understood literally, but spiritually; and the completing thereof to be looked for in the church of Christ, not in the Jewish state or temple. Here, then, seems to be a spiritual lotting, and bringing men out of Judaism and heathenism into the kingdom of Christ, and fellowship of the gospel.

These words, "when ye shall divide by lot the land for inheritance," are thus in the Hebrew, when ye shall make the land to fall into inheritance; that is, when ye shall make the lot to fall upon the land, to divide it into inheritances: he alludes herein to the ancient division of the land by lot. That which is by lot, is free; when the lot fell upon Matthias it was free, and declared whom God had chosen, Acts i. 24, 26.

The work of grace, and bringing of men into the church, is free; nothing in man, or from man, procures it: 2 Pet. i. 1, "To them who have obtained like precious faith with us." The word for obtain, is, λαμβάνω, which notes, that which comes freely to a man, that which, being no debt, nor desert, is allotted out to a man; as, God gives faith to whom he pleases. We have nothing disposes us for grace, or entitles us to any heavenly inheritance: Col. i. 12, it is the Father "who makes us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light;" he regenerates, adopts, and sanctifies, and so makes us meet for spiritual enjoyments and privileges, and then lots them out for us, and us for himself: so that true believers are God's lot, portion, and inheritance.

"Ye shall offer an oblation unto the Lord, an holy portion of the land." The Hebrew is, ye shall elevate an elevation unto the Lord; that is, consecrate, or dedicate, a portion of the land unto the Lord, that it may be holy. This portion of land was large, "five and twenty thousand reeds in length:" not so many cubits, as some would have it, for the measuring was by a reed of six cubits, chap. xl. 5; and ten thousand reeds in breadth; and of these, five hundred in length, and five hundred in breadth, were for the sanctuary, with fifty cubits round for the suburbs thereof. This holy portion of land, as it was for the sanctuary, so for the priests, and their houses, the Levites, and their chambers.

Here the first care is for the house-service, and servants of the Lord. It is the duty of christians to promote the worship of God in the first place, and to provide for those who are officers in his house, who are not to be non-resident, but to live in the houses near to their charge.

Some expositors, as Junius and Polanus, inform us, that a new form and state of the church is here represented unto us, viz. the abrogation of the Jewish, and bringing in of the christian; which was done by Christ and his apostles.

By the portion of land, the holiness and amplitude of it, we may understand the church under the gospel, with the holiness and largeness thereof.

1. The church is holy, and a holy offering unto God; "Ye shall offer an oblation unto the Lord." Holiness from the earth, that it separate from the same; or, holiness of earth, that is, holy earth. Such is the church, holiness from the earth, or holy earth, Eph. v. 27. It is the most glorious and pure part of the world, it consists of those who are virgins redeemed from the earth, whose mouths are guileless, and persons faultless, "before the throne of God," Rev. xiv. 4, 5.

2. The largeness of it. Under Christ, the church is greatly enlarged, and extends to all parts. The Thessalonians' faith spread far, 1 Thess. i. 8; and Paul saith, that in every place they called upon the name of Jesus Christ, 1 Cor. i. 2. Peter brings Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, within the bounds of the church, 1 Pet. i. 1. Not only Asia, Europe, and Africa, but even America, hath some holy ones to be an offering to the Lord: Rev. vii. 9, there were some out of all nations.

We may also here observe, that in the church of Christ there is provision and protection for his people. There is a portion for the priests, possessions for the Levites, and the whole house of Israel; there are portions of land for them, with houses, chambers, and a city. Those who come to Zion shall not be destitute, but meet with maintenance and safety: Jer. xxxi. 12, "They shall come and sing in the height of Zion, and shall flow together to the goodness of the Lord." He will be their Shepherd, and provide for them wheat, wine, and oil, that is, bread and water of life, with the comforts of the Spirit; and make their souls as a watered garden, green and growing, fat and flourishing, fruitful and very fruitful: and being in that condition, he will defend them from wild beasts, and spoil of any. They are his garden enclosed, and fenced about with his power; see Ezek. xxxiv. 26—28.

Again observe, the true church state takes not away propriety, neither consists of levelling principles; it preserves men's rights, and the different degrees and orders that are set amongst men. Here was a portion of land for the priests, a portion for the Levites, and a portion for the citizens, the one might not seize upon the others': here are distinct orders of men, priests, Levites, people, and prince. The order of the gospel is to preserve order, not to bring in confusion, or levelling; see Acts v. 4; xxviii. 30; Philem. i. 8; 1 Cor. xii. 28—30; 1 Tim. ii. 2; 1 Pet. ii. 13, 14.

Ver. 6, "And ye shall appoint the possession of the city." Provision being made for the church, and those who served in it, the next care here is for the people, they must have their portion and possession. The Lord's goodness extends to them, as well as those who are nearest to him in office.

Ver. 7, 8. And a portion shall be for the prince on the one side and on the other side of the oblation of the holy portion, and of the possession of the city, before the oblation of the holy portion, and before the possession of the city, from the west side westward, and from the east side eastward: and the length shall be over against one of the portions, from the west border unto the east border. In the land shall be his possession in Israel: and my princes shall no more oppress my people; and the rest of the land shall they give to the house of Israel according to their tribes.

The prince was to have a portion as well as the rest, and it was to be on both sides, on the west side and on the east side; it was to compass in the other portions: intimating to us thereby, that the prince and his estate should be for the preservation of the whole. A prince is to be the defender and bulwark of the commonwealth; himself, and his estate, should rather suffer than it.

Who this prince was is doubted; for, after their return from Babylon, they had neither kings nor princes. Zerubbabel was governor of Judah, not king, or prince, Hag. ii. 21. Some make him to be the high priest, and the 17th verse induceth to believe so, for it saith, "It shall be the prince's part to offer burnt offerings, and meat offerings, and drink offerings, in the feasts, and in the new moons, and in the sabbaths, in all solemnities of the house of Israel: he shall prepare the sin offering, and the meat offering, and the burnt offering, and the peace offerings, to make reconciliation for the house of Israel." To sacrifice was priest-work, not prince-work; civil princes might not sacrifice, had they had them. In the time of the Maccabees, they had high priests, who were over them both in church and state affairs; and these here, it is conceived, are honoured with the title of prince. But it is questionable whether the high priest be the prince here spoken of, because, in chap. xlvi. 2, the prince there is distinguished from the priest. It is better to understand it of Christ, who was "the great high priest," Heb. iv. 14; and "Prince of the kings of the earth," Rev. i. 5. Rabbi David, in his commentary upon this place, saith, that the Hebrews interpret this prince to be the Messiah; so doth Jerom, and some late expositors: and, chap. xxxiv. 24, God had promised the Jews that his "servant David should be a prince among them," that was, Messiah.

This insinuates thus much unto us, that the church is Christ's portion, and Christ the protector of it. His possession lieth in the land of Israel; the saints, the true Israelites, are his portion, his possession; he is "on the one side and on the other" of them, even from west to east: he reigns, and is round about the church, he compasses it with his favour, and his power. New Jerusalem had a wall about it, Rev. xxi. 17: Christ the Prince he is the wall to the whole church, and all the parts of it, to apostles, pastors, and people; not Peter, popes, or priests, are protectors thereof.

"My prince shall no more oppress my people." These princes (whether those who are chief in the church of Christ, or in the civil state) they shall not be covetous, and oppress the people. This was too common before the captivity, as appears, Mic. iii. 1—11; Zeph. iii. 3; Amos iv. 1; Jer. vi. 13; Ezek. i. 22—28; and after the captivity, the nobles and rulers exacted upon their brethren, and oppressed them, Neh. v. 7, 8. But there must be a time for fulfilling this truth, that princes "shall no more oppress the people." Hitherto it can hardly be made out that ever there were such princes, or times, wherein the people were not oppressed. But such are promised as shall be far from oppression, as shall not take away, but give unto the house of Israel according to her tribes. The house of Israel is the whole church of Christ, and the tribes thereof are the particular churches therein; and those princes are the Lord's, (for he saith, "my princes.") shall give unto him their titles, rights, and privileges; they shall acknowledge the Lord Christ to be Prince, and submit unto him, Rev. xxi. 24.

Ver. 9—12. Thus saith the Lord God; Let it suffice you, O princes of Israel: remove violence and spoil, and execute judgment and justice, take away your exactions from my people, saith the Lord God. Ye shall have just balances, and a just ephah, and a just bath. The ephah and the bath shall be of one measure, that the bath may contain the tenth part of an homer, and the ephah the tenth part of an homer: the measure thereof shall be after the homer. And the shekel shall be twenty gerahs: twenty shekels, five and twenty shekels, fifteen shekels, shall be your maneh.

These verses contain political ordinances, which are for just and righteous proceedings between prince and people, and people amongst themselves.

Ver. 1. "Let it suffice you, O princes of Israel." Ye have been long given to covetous practices, and thereby increased your revenues to the prejudice of others; but now let what is past suffice you, let there be no more such doings amongst you. The political estate must be reformed, and with you princes the reformation must begin. The princes of Israel were very covetous; Isa. i. 23, "Thy princes are rebellious, and companions of thieves: every one loveth gifts, and followeth after rewards:" they were no better than thieves, robbing the people, perverting all justice through their covetousness. This God complained of them, and minds them of it here, saying, "Let it suffice;" or thus the words may be taken, Be content with the revenues, legal tributes, and customs, thirst after no more, rest satisfied with what you have, and covet no more, let the portion you have please you.

"Remove violence and spoil." When princes use violence to fetch in their revenues, taxes, customs, and to satisfy their desires, spoil follows upon it; men suffer in their estates by those who are employed by them, and oft are undone. Naboth loses his vineyard, and life too, through the violence of Ahab, Jezebel, and the instruments they set on work. But in this new political estate it must be otherwise: Isa. lx. 18, "Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders."

"Execute judgment and justice." Princes and magistrates are God's deputies, they ought to be like unto him, and to act for him; they should be men of knowledge, able to judge in controversies, to discern where the right lies; Deut. i. 16, 17, and men of courage to rule for God, executing judgment and justice impartially. As David did; 2 Sam. viii. 15, he "reigned over all Israel; and executed judgment and justice unto all his people;" and this was one of his last words, "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God," 2 Sam. xxiii. 3. And when men rule so, there will be no place for injustice and oppression: such we have warrant to expect, for the Lord hath said, "I will make thy officers peace, and thine exactors righteousness," Isa. lx. 17.

"Take away the exactions from my people."

The Vulgate reads the words, Separate your confines from my people. When princes and great men have fields and inheritances lying near to their inferiors' grounds, as Ahab's did to Naboth's, they covet the same, and find out ways to get the same, and in time eat up their possessions; therefore, to prevent this, the Lord calls upon them to separate their borders from their neighbours. They force men out of their houses and inheritances; as it is, Mic. ii. 2, "They covet fields, and take them by violence; and houses, and take them away: so they oppress a man and his house, even a man and his heritage:" these were "exactions," as we read it. And of the great ones' "exactions," you may see, 2 Kings xv. 20; xxiii. 35. Sometimes under pretence of law, and necessity, they did exact of the people. But these must cease, and when the new heavens and new earth come, there shall righteousness be in them, no exaction or oppression, 2 Pet. iii. 13.

Ver. 10. "Ye shall have just balances." In this and the other two verses ordinances are given out about weights, measures, and money.

1. Concerning weights, the balances must be just. In former days they did pervert or falsify the balances by deceit, Amos viii. 5; which was "abomination to the Lord," Prov. xx. 10. There was a law in Deuteronomy against the same, chap. xxv. 13—15; it was against diverse weights and diverse measures, tying them to one, and that perfect and just: so here, "just balances" are required; God would have the people just and equal in their dealings, not defrauding one another.

"A just ephah, and a just bath," &c. The measures of the Hebrews were of dry and liquid things, both which are here mentioned. To begin with the homer, which was the greatest measure they had, and signifies, a heap, it held so much; some make the quantity to be what a camel or an ass could bear and carry. The homer is the same with that measure called cor, or eorus, as the 14th verse shows; each of them containing ten baths, or ten ephahs. A Lapid makes the bath and ephah to contain three bushels a piece, and so the homer to be thirty bushels. But if we make modius to be but half a bushel, then the ephah and bath contain one bushel and a half a piece, and the homer fifteen. But Ainsworth, upon Lev. xxvii. 16, makes the homer to be ten ephahs, that is, ten bushels; so that the ephah and the bath held the measure of a bushel.

The "ephah" was a measure for dry things, wheat, barley, meal, flour, 1 Sam. xvii. 17; Judg. vi. 19; Numb. v. 15; and it was the common measure, and the regulator of all other measures.

There is a seeming contradiction between what you have in Exod. xvi. 36, where it is written, "an omer is the tenth part of an ephah," and what you have here in Ezekiel, who saith, "an ephah is the tenth part of an homer." For answer; know, the words omer and homer in the Hebrew differ: the first is, עֹמֶר, omer with ain, which signifies, a handful: Lev. xxiii. 10, "Ye shall bring a sheaf of the firstfruits;" the Hebrew is, a handful, an omer. It is conceived the wheat beaten out of that sheaf did fill the omer, which contained above a pottle, about five pints; and so was "the tenth part of an ephah," which contained of our English measure seven gallons and a half, which makes our bushel.

The second word, הָבַת, is written with ה cheth, and is that great measure containing "ten ephahs," which is spoken of here.

The measure called a "bath," was of liquid things, and contained as much as the ephah, seven gallons and a half, "the tenth part of an homer." Wine and oil were usually measured by it, as 2 Chron. ii.

10; Ezra vii. 22. In Isa. v. 10, we find these words, "Ten acres of vineyard shall yield one bath;" God would so blast their vines, that ten acres planted with vines should not yield ten gallons, they should fill but one "bath;" and the seed of an homer, that is, ten bushels, should yield an ephah, that is, one bushel. Here the "bath" is the measure of wine, and the ephah the measure of corn.

"And the shekel shall be twenty gerahs." Having spoken of the measures, he proceeds to the money, that it might be of a just value. The "shekel" must be "twenty gerahs;" a gerah was to weigh sixteen barley-corns, so that "twenty gerahs" amounted to three hundred and twenty barley-corns, and so much the shekel was to weigh. Of it was spoken, chap. iv. 10. Sixty shekels made the maneh, or pound; some pieces of their money were twenty shekels, some twenty-five, some fifteen, and these together made their maneh.

Obs. 1. Princes and magistrates commonly are covetous and cruel. The princes of Israel used violence and spoil, they exacted upon the people. Zeph. iii. 3, Jerusalem's "princes were roaring lions; her judges evening wolves," they were greedy of the prey. Nero was a lion to the people of God, 2 Tim. iv. 17. Nebuchadnezzar was both a lion, a bear, and a dragon: Jer. li. 34, saith Jerusalem, "He hath devoured me, he hath crushed me, he hath made me an empty vessel, he hath swallowed me up like a dragon, he hath filled his belly with my delicates, he hath cast me out." His belly was so big, his desires so enlarged, that he ate up cities, kingdoms, and nations. As it was said of Pompey, so of most princes in the world may the people say, By our miseries ye are become great.

Obs. 2. Christianity doth not overthrow, but establish, magistracy. The Lord here speaking what reformation should be under the Messiah, doth not take magistrates away, but corrects their exorbitances, saying, "Remove violence and spoil, take away exactions:" he abridges them not of just power, but decries their tyranny. Paul approves of magistrates, Rom. xiii.; 1 Tim. ii. 1, 2; and tells us, "they are the ministers of God for good;" they are appointed for public good, to be a terror to the wicked, a shield to the godly, a husband to the widow, a father to the orphan, a patron to the poor, and a refuge to the oppressed. Such magistrates we expect, and pray for.

Obs. 3. The great thing required of them, is to do justice, execute judgment and justice, do wrong to none, neither suffer wrong to be done. They should see there be no false weights, measures, or moneys, to deceive the people withal. Magistrates are in God's stead, and they should be righteous as God is; he rules so, that he makes appeal to his people, saying, "What have I done to thee? wherein have I wearied thee? testify against me," Mic. vi. 3. So did Samuel; "Behold, here I am: witness against me before the Lord, and before his anointed; whose ox have I taken? or whose ass have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed? or of whose hand have I received any bribe to blind mine eyes therewith? and I will restore it," 1 Sam. xii. 4: here was a righteous judge, a man of integrity. Such a one was Nehemiah, chap. v. 14, 15. When magistrates are righteous, and do righteous things, respecting every man's cause, and regard no man's person, they are the glory of heaven, the ornament of the earth, the joy of the just, the desire of all, and blessed themselves, Psal. cvi. 3.

Obs. 4. Princes are not to rule by prerogative in an arbitrary way, but they themselves are tied to the laws of God, and bound up by them. The Lord, who is the great Lawgiver, saith, "Let it suffice you, O princes of Israel, remove violence," &c. He gives them laws here, and his word, which are binding, and ought not to depart from them. If they proceed by their own wills and lusts, they become tyrants, and shall have their reward, Psal. lv. 22; Prov. xxviii. 17; xiv. 11; Job xviii. 15. Therefore kings are commanded to be wise, judges to be instructed, to serve the Lord, kiss the Son, Psal. ii. 10—12; and to keep to the law of God, Deut. xvii. 18.

Ver. 13—17. This is the oblation that ye shall offer; the sixth part of an ephah of an homer of wheat, and ye shall give the sixth part of an ephah of an homer of barley: concerning the ordinance of oil, the bath of oil, ye shall offer the tenth part of a bath out of the cor, which is an homer of ten baths; for ten baths are an homer: and one lamb out of the flock, out of two hundred, out of the fat pastures of Israel; for a meat offering, and for a burnt offering, and for peace offerings, to make reconciliation for them, saith the Lord God. All the people of the land shall give this oblation for the prince in Israel. And it shall be the prince's part to give burnt offerings, and meat offerings, and drink offerings, in the feasts, and in the new moons, and in the sabbaths, in all solemnities of the house of Israel: he shall prepare the sin offering, and the meat offering, and the burnt offering, and the peace offerings, to make reconciliation for the house of Israel.

The political ordinances being declared, now he comes to the ecclesiastical, which concern sacrifices and oblations. Of the homer, ephah, and bath, have been spoken in the former verses. The cor is the same measure for quantity with the homer.

1. Here is laid down the things to be offered, wheat, barley, oil, a lamb, and other offerings.

2. The proportion of the dry and liquid things: the sixth part of an ephah of wheat, and barley, and the tenth part of a bath of oil; and so of the lambs, one out of two hundred, and so of other cattle; and these must not be poor, lean ones, but such as came from "the fat pastures of Israel," and might be fit for offering up to God. The sixtieth part of dry things, the hundredth of liquids, and two hundredth of cattle, were to be given.

3. The persons who were to give them, and that is, "all the people," ver. 16. The Hebrew is, all the people in the land shall be in that oblation to the prince in Israel. And then the person who is to offer them, ver. 17, and that is the prince, or high priest.

By the wheat, barley, oil, and lambs, the oblations, offerings to be given to the prince in Israel, are intended the spiritual sacrifices, which the saints under the gospel do give to Christ, 1 Pet. ii. 5; Rev. v. 8—10; vii. 10; xiv. 3; Heb. xiii. 10; viii. 3; Rom. xii. 1; xv. 16. The persons, prayers, and praises of the saints are to be given up to Christ, and by him to the Father.

It is a dispute amongst expositors who is meant by "prince:" some would have it the secular or civil prince; some, the high priest, because of his offering sacrifices. The Jews are here at a stand, not knowing which to determine: but Cœolampadius understands it of the Messiah; he was both a Prince and High Priest; not a common prince, for he would not be made king by men, Job vi. 15; not a levitical high-priest, after the order of Aaron, but an extraordinary one, after the order of Melchizedec, Heb. vii.

11—13; and of another tribe than Aaron was, viz. the tribe of Judah, ver. 14; which imported that Christ should put down Levitical worship, and set up another way of worship in the place thereof, which was prefigured in this vision of Ezekiel.

All the oblations here, and sacrifices, were types of Christ. The wheat, the barley, the oil, the lamb, the sin offering, the meat offering, the burnt offering, and the peace offering, all represented Christ, and were fulfilled in him. He was the expiatory sacrifice, and purged away our sins, Heb. i. 3; he was the propitiatory sacrifice, and made the atonement for us, Rom. iii. 25; v. 11; he was the pacificatory sacrifice, he made peace between us and God, Rom. v. 10; Col. i. 20; he is the eucharistical sacrifice, or thank offering, he gave thanks to God for his favour, mercy, and goodness to us, Matt. xi. 25; John xi. 41; he had the virtue of all the sacrifices in him, and far more. Heb. ix. 23, the words "better sacrifices," are spoken of Christ; he was the one and only sacrifice, and once offered, Heb. x. 12; vii. 27; and yet was sacrifices, because they all signified him, and he had the strength, worth, and benefit of them all in himself; yea, he was better sacrifices than they all; for they were imperfect, for a season, and of little efficacy, but Christ was a perfect sacrifice for ever, and most efficacious, Heb. ix. 11—14; x. 12. He hath made reconciliation for the house of Israel, and maintains it; for he appears in the presence of God for us, Heb. ix. 24; and lives for ever to make intercession for us, Heb. vii. 25. He doth that always, which the priests did in the feasts, new moons, sabbaths, and solemnities; the virtue of this sacrifice is ever useful.

Ver. 18—20. Thus saith the Lord God; In the first month, in the first day of the month, thou shalt take a young bullock without blemish, and cleanse the sanctuary; and the priest shall take of the blood of the sin offering, and put it upon the posts of the house, and upon the four corners of the settle of the altar, and upon the posts of the gate of the inner court. And so thou shalt do the seventh day of the month for every one that erreth, and for him that is simple: so shall ye reconcile the house.

Here we have an ordinance for cleansing the sanctuary, much like that ordinance in chap. xliii. for cleansing the altar of burnt offerings. There was no such ordinance among the Mosaicals, as Jerom, Sanctius, and others, observe. This was a new ordinance which the Levitical law knew not, and speaks out the newness of all under the gospel, the cleansing of the church by the blood of Christ, who, in due season, being without sin, was made sin for us, 2 Cor. v. 21; and by his blood washed away the sins of his people, Rev. i. 5; Heb. xiii. 11; and by it made way for entering into the holiest, Heb. x. 19. And whereas "the posts of the house, and posts of the gate, and four corners of the settle of the altar," were all sprinkled with blood; it tells us that all, great or small, whencesoever they come, from east, west, north, or south, cannot be cleansed, or saved, but by blood, even the blood of Christ, Heb. ix. 22, 23. It is nothing in man, or from man himself, not his righteousness, free-will, or sufferings, which doth cleanse him from his sin; that only is from the virtue of Christ's blood, 1 John i. 7.

The 2^d verse leads to speak of sins of ignorance. Under the law there was a sacrifice for the man who sinned ignorantly: Lev. v. 17, 18, he was to "bring a ram to the priest," and by the sacrificing of that, his sin "was forgiven him," and peace made. Here the ordinance differs from that. Instead of "a ram" must be "a young bullock" sacrificed; signifying, that the blood of Christ is for the erroneous, simple, ignorant, as well as others. When men sin wilfully, it is dangerous, Heb. x. 26, 27; but for those who are simple, and through ignorance do err, there is a remedy provided: 1 John ii. 1, 2, "My little children, I write unto you that ye sin not." (That is impossible, they might have replied, "for in many things we sin all," James iii. 2.) "And if any man sin," (that is, through weakness, ignorance, simpleness, strength of corruption, or temptation,) "we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; and he is the propitiation for our sins." This remedy Christ holds out in the gospel to such sinners, and would have his ministers do the like: Gal. vi. 1, "If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one;" bring him to Christ, cause him to look upon him crucified, and expiating his sin with his own blood, and then he will weep for his error, his simplicity; and so he is restored.

Ver. 21—24. In the first month, in the fourteenth day of the month, ye shall have the passover, a feast of seven days; unleavened bread shall be eaten. And upon that day shall the prince prepare for himself and for all the people of the land a bullock for a sin offering. And seven days of the feast he shall prepare a burnt offering to the Lord, seven bullocks and seven rams without blemish daily the seven days; and a kid of the goats daily for a sin offering. And he shall prepare a meat offering of an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and an hin of oil for an ephah.

In these verses are ordinances for keeping the passover, &c. Of the Mosaical, you may see, Exod. xii. and Lev. xxiii.; from which this differs in many things, as Polanus notes, and presents unto us Christ our passover, who was sacrificed for us, 1 Cor. v. 7. The passover was "in the first month, the fourteenth day," when the moon was at the full, and the sun ascending; all things began to revive; which showed that Christ was not to be sacrificed presently after his birth, but when the fulness of ceremonial light was come; and that by his death Jewish shadows being abolished, true light, life, and reviving, came into the world. The feast of unleavened bread showed how we are to keep the feast of the christian passover, viz. not with old leaven, that is, our old corrupt hearts, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. Men should not come to his ordinance with old, malicious, or wicked hearts, but with hearts sincere and true; all corruption of nature, doctrine, and manners, should be purged out. And christians should live their whole life (noted by the "seven days" here) free from hypocrisy, lying, malice, and unrighteousness; they should study and endeavour to be holy, as God is holy.

It is said, ver. 22, that the prince must "prepare for himself and for all the people a bullock for a sin offering." This prince, therefore, seems not to be Christ, but the high priest, who was sinful, and offered first for himself, and then for the people, Heb. vii. 27. Christ had no sin, and so could not offer sacrifice for himself.

For answer hereunto, know, that Christ considered in himself was an immaculate Lamb, without blemish, 1 Pet. i. 19; "an High Priest, holy, harmless, unde-filed," Heb. vii. 26. But consider him as our Surety, as Head of the body, so he had sin; his own self did bear our sins in his own body, 1 Pet. ii. 24; he was made sin for us, 2 Cor. v. 21; he was offered to bear the sins of many, Heb. ix. 28; the Lord laid upon him the iniquities of us all, Isa. liii. 6; and he was numbered with transgressors, ver. 12. Our sins were imputed to him, so that he stood as a sinner and malefactor in our stead; and offered up himself a sacrifice for himself, that is, for his body the church. Thus nothing hinders but by "prince" here we may understand Christ.

The burnt offering and sin offering, which were to be "daily," set out the virtue of Christ's death and intercession, which is not for a day, or a few years, but for ever; or they may acquaint us with the saints, their total and constant dedication of themselves unto God and his service.

"An hin of oil." Of the ephah, bath, homer, and cor, was spoken in the former part of the chapter. "An hin" was for liquid things, and contained as much as twelve logs, and each log contained six eggs; so that "an hin" held as much wine, or oil, as seventy-two eggs; and, according to some, is three quarts of our English measure.

Ver. 25. In the seventh month, in the fifteenth day of the month, shall he do the like in the feast of the seven days, according to the sin offering, according to the burnt offering, and according to the meat offering, and according to the oil.

Passing over the feast of Pentecost, without any mention thereof, he comes to the feast of tabernacles, which was to begin the fifteenth day of the seventh month, Lev. xxiii. 34. And as it was in the feast of the passover, so it must be here; but it was not so in the time of Moses, Lev. xxiii. 39, 40.

This feast of tabernacles, or booths, cannot be understood literally, for there is a prophecy in Zech. xiv. 16, "That those left of the nations which came against Jerusalem should come to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles;" which in the literal sense was peculiar to the Jews. It figures out, therefore, the gathering of the elect into particular churches in this world, into which they should come, and in which they should have fellowship with the saints, and partake of the grace of God.

By these feasts, and sacrifices also, we are minded of the spiritual joy the saints have in their communion together under the gospel, and spiritual sacrifices they offer up to God by Christ. The primitive christians continued "daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God," Acts ii. 46, 47.

CHAPTER XLVI.

Ver. 1—8. Thus saith the Lord God; The gate of the inner court that looketh toward the east shall be shut the six working days; but on the sabbath it shall be opened, and in the day of the new moon it shall be opened. And the prince shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate without, and shall stand by the post of the gate, and the priests shall prepare his burnt offering and his peace offerings, and he shall worship at the threshold of the gate: then he shall go forth; but the gate shall not be shut until the evening. Likewise the people of the land shall worship at the door of this gate before the Lord in the sabbaths and in the new moons. And the burnt offering that the prince shall offer unto the Lord in the sabbath day shall be six lambs without blemish, and a ram without blemish. And the meat offering shall be an ephah for a ram, and the meat offering for the lambs as he shall be able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah. And in the day of the new moon it shall be a young bullock without blemish, and six lambs, and a ram: they shall be without blemish. And he shall prepare a meat offering, an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and for the lambs according as his hand shall attain unto, and an hin of oil to an ephah. And when the prince shall enter, he shall go in by the way of the porch of that gate, and he shall go forth by the way thereof.

This 46th chapter contains,

I. Ordinances about several gates, the prince and people's going in and out by them, with their oblations and worship, from the beginning to ver. 15.

II. Certain laws are laid down concerning the prince's gifts unto his sons and servants, in the 16th, 17th, and 18th verses.

III. A description of the courts and places where the priests and Levites were to boil and prepare the sacrifices, from the beginning of ver. 19, to the end of the chapter.

The 1st verse speaks of the east gate in the inner court, that was, the gate next to the temple. By this gate the glory of the Lord came into the temple, chap. xliii. 1, 2, 4; and it was to be kept shut all the six working days, and only to be opened on sabbaths and new moons. In chap. xlii. we have the reason why it was to be kept shut: ver. 2, thus saith the Lord, "This gate shall be shut, it shall not be opened, and no man shall enter in by it; because the Lord, the God of Israel, hath entered in by it, therefore it shall be shut;" that is, for the prince, &c.: and here it is, "The prince shall enter by the way," &c.

The things here required are not to be found in the Mosaical law; they represented things under the gospel; that Jewish worship should go down when Christ appeared in the flesh.

The shutting of the gate the six working days tells us, that on those days we are to follow our callings, and earn our daily bread. Christianity doth not open a door to idleness; "We command and exhort," saith Paul, "that with quietness men work, and eat their own bread," 2 Thess. iii. 12. Under Moses God allowed them six days to work, Exod. xx. 9; and the same allowance they have under the gospel, Luke xiii. 14. Some pervert God's order, and make all days alike, either all working days, or all sabbaths, resting days; but God hath distinguished them. As there are working days wherein we must not rest, so there are sabbaths wherein we must not work.

The opening of the gate on sabbath days and new moons, signifies unto us, that the gate of heaven is open unto us, when we have solemn and public meetings on the Lord's day, and other special occasions, to worship God. When all the disciples were assembled together to serve and seek God, then came a sound from heaven, and the Spirit fell upon them like fiery tongues, Acts ii.: so when Peter preached unto the great multitude, the gate of heaven was opened, and power came down from above to convert three thousand, ver. 41: so when there was a solemn meeting in the centurion's house, the word being preached by Peter, the gate of heaven was opened, and the Holy Ghost fell on all that heard the word, Acts x. 44. Such times are times of grace and mercy, God opens heaven, and gives out blessings.

These six days may denote the term of man's life here, which is a time of labour and sorrow, Job v. 7; xiv. 1. He tumbles, or is tumbled, up and down from condition to condition, and hath no rest; but at the end of his life heaven gate is opened, and he hath a sabbath, an eternal rest, where is no labour, sin, nor sorrowing, Heb. iv. 9, 10. Then the gate of the inner court is opened unto him, and then he shall see as he is seen, and know as he is known, 1 John iii. 2. 1 Cor. xiii. 12, here we see and know little, and that little darkly, as in a glass; but then shall we see clearly, and know perfectly, the mysteries of this and other visions and things.

The 2nd verse tells us of the prince, his entering by the way of the porch, and standing by the post of the gate; where he was to worship, but come into the court he might not.

If we understand this of the secular prince, four things are here considerable:

1. That the prince must not enter into the inner court; he must not meddle with the priestly office, or things of God. Princes may not change any thing in the worship of God, abrogate or institute aught by their wills or power. Uzziah was smitten with the leprosy for meddling, 2 Chron. xxvi.; and Ahaz for his adding, 2 Kings xvi. his altering, detracting, and abrogating, 2 Chron. xxviii. was branded for his wickedness. They kept not at the post and threshold of the gate, but entered into the inner court.

2. They are to countenance and maintain the worship of God. The prince must stand at the post of the gate, and see the priests do their office. He found the burnt, peace, and meat offerings, and the priests prepared them, that is, fitted them for sacrifices. The princes and powers of the christian world should countenance, preserve, propagate, and maintain the true worship of God in their territories. When Joash was made king, he had the testimony given unto him, 2 Chron. xxiii. 11; that was, the book of the law: and why was this given him? It was to inform princes, that they should rule according therunto; that they should countenance, preserve, propagate, and maintain the same, and the worship it held forth.

3. That princes must worship the Lord publicly on sabbath days, and when special occasions are, as well as other people.

"He shall worship at the threshold of the gate." Let princes be never so great, rich, learned, wise, yet they must fall down at God's footstool, serve him with fear, and kiss the Son; they must observe the times of God's worship, bow to him, and not leave all to their inferiors.

4. They must not impede the worship of God. The prince shall go forth, but the gate shall not be shut where he hath worshipped, he must not hinder others. It was a vile practice in those who shut up the doors of the Lord's house, and would not let the people or priests come there to worship, 2 Chron. xxviii. 24. Princes should see to it that the door be open for public worship, not only at the appointed times, but upon special occasions.

If we take the prince here to be Christ, as Geolampadius and Polanus do, then his coming to, and standing by, the post of the gate, his sacrificing and worshipping, do prefigure his coming in the flesh, and his standing at the gate of heaven for us, offering up prayers and supplications for us, with strong cries and tears, Heb. v. 7; Luke xxii. 44. And whereas it is said, "The priests shall prepare his burnt offering and his peace offerings; this presignified the priests' delivering up Christ to be crucified for us: Luke xxiv. 20, "The chief priests and rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and crucified him" who was "the Prince of life," Acts iii. 15; yet he "laid down his life freely," John x. 17, 18. And for his "worshipping at the threshold of the gate," it may point out that time when Christ, being on the cross, said, "It is finished: and he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost," John xix. 30. Now was he at the threshold of the gate; for he said to the thief immediately before, "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise," Luke xxiii. 43; then his soul went forth of its earthly tabernacle; and shortly after re-assuming that, he left the world, and went to his Father, John xvi. 28.

The gates standing open until evening, that so the people might come and worship at the door of the gate before the Lord; this some interpret of the door of mercy and reconciliation which Christ hath set open for sinners during this life; and if they come not thither before death and worship God, then it is shut for ever against them. On sabbath days men should draw near to God, seek reconciliation with him, for on such days the gate is widest open for grace and mercy. On the six days it is shut, that is, comparatively shut. Christians do celebrate sabbaths and new moons, when they have inward spiritual rest in their souls, through faith in Christ, and do receive light from him to see what is evil, and so to avoid it, and what is good, and so to practise it.

In ver. 4—7, the offerings, oblations, and sacrifices of the prince for the sabbath days and new moons are mentioned. The olah, or burnt offering for the sabbath, was to be six complete lambs without blemish, and one ram, which differs much from the appointment in Moses' days, Numb. xxviii. 9; then there were but two lambs, here six are appointed. And so the meat offering is larger here than there; but for the offering in the day of the new moon, it was short of that in Moses' time; for then two bullocks, seven lambs, and one ram, were appointed; and here, one bullock, six lambs, and one ram, are nominated for the offering: which shows the Levitical worship was to be changed.

And taking the prince for one of the princes of the earth, it tells us, he ought to provide for the worship of God. But if we take this prince to be Christ, then it imports that Christ hath ordained more spiritual, pure, and efficacious worship on sabbaths under the gospel than was under the law, and more extensive than was before: also, that Jewish shadows are fled away by the coming in of the glorious light of the gospel, "that old things are passed away, and all things become new."

These sacrifices do point out Christ: he was the sum of all; he was the lambs, the rams, the bullock, the meal, the flour, and the oil. This prince sacrificing of himself, did more by that one and once sacrifice, than all the sacrifices from the first to the last, Heb. x. 14.

Ver. 5. "As he shall be able to give." The Hebrew is, the gift of his hand; and so it is in the margin: in ver. 7 it is thus, "as his hand shall attain unto;" and in ver. 11, "as he is able," that is, as God hath blessed him. God in that dispensed with men's disabilities in Moses' law; Lev. v. 11, and xiv. 21, if they were poor, and not able to bring lambs, or two turtle doves, they must bring one lamb, or the tenth part of an ephah of flour; something he would have, and to such a proportion. But here it is left to man's liberty, to give according to his ability, no proportion is prescribed; so men give freely, whatever it be, it shall be accepted. God looks not for much where little is. The grace and favour of God under the gospel, exceed what was under the law.

Ver. 6. "And in the day of the new moon." New-moon days were holy, and had special sacrifices, as in this verse, Numb. xxviii. 11: on those days they might not buy or sell, or do worldly work, Amos viii. 5; but they were to look unto Christ, of whom those days were shadows, Col. ii. 16, 17, and to meditate of that light, grace, and comfort which come by him. The gate of the inner court was to stand open on these days, as well as on sabbaths, ver. 1. And Isaiah prophesied, chap. lxxvi. 23, that all flesh should come to worship before the Lord, from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another; intimating thereby, that God, in times of the gospel, would accept of true and spiritual worship, performed in the name of Christ, in all places, and at all times, as he did the Jewish worship at Jerusalem, and on the solemn feast days.

Or these new-moon days and sacrifices, may point out the renewing of the church, and the joy thereupon. The church after Christ's time, was oft in the wane, in a suffering and declining condition; but when it hath rest, edification, comfort, and multiplication, Acts ix. 31, then it is new moon with it; and in a short time it becomes "fair as the moon," Cant. vi. 10; and shall be filled with light and joy, as saith Isaiah, chap. lx. 20.

The 8th verse is an ordinance about the prince's going in by the porch of the gate, and going out by the same way. There were divers gates to enter into the inner court, by the north gate, the south gate, as well as the east gate; and this gate was both for the prince and the priests to go in and out at.

Hence two things are observable:

1. That princes are to walk according to divine appointment, especially in matters of worship; they must look unto God, who hath prescribed the way they should walk in; it had been sinful for them to have gone to the north gate, or south gate, and worshipped: their princes must not do aught of their own wills in the things of God. It might seem a bondage to be tied up to the east gate only, and never to have ingress and egress at the other; but, however, princes themselves must be subject to the ordinances of Heaven.

2. That princes and priests, magistrates and ministers, should mutually mind and care for the things of God, countenance and encourage one another therein, and each put to their helping hand to preserve the purity and power of religion. When the powers go one way, and the true ministers of God another way, religion doth not shine: when Josiah and the priests went together hand in hand one way, then there was great reformation in Israel, the worship of God was pure, and religion did flourish.

Supposing this prince to be the Lord Christ, whose ingress and egress was at the same gate, then it notes his coming from heaven, and returning thither again, according to that of John vi. 62; iii. 31; xvi. 28; Acts i. 11.

Ver. 9—15. But when the people of the land shall come before the Lord in the solemn feasts, he that entereth in by the way of the north gate to worship shall go out by the way of the south gate; and he that entereth by the way of the south gate shall go forth by the way of the north gate: he shall not return by the way of the gate whereby he came in, but shall go forth over against it. And the prince in the midst of them, when they go in, shall go in; and when they go forth, shall go forth. And in the feasts and in the solemnities the meat offering shall be an ephah to a bullock, and an ephah to a ram, and to the lambs as he is able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah. Now when the prince shall prepare a voluntary burnt offering or peace offerings voluntarily unto the Lord, one shall then open him the gate that looketh toward the east, and he shall prepare his burnt offering and his peace offerings, as he did on the sabbath day: then he shall go forth; and after his going forth one shall shut the gate. Thou shalt daily prepare a burnt offering unto the Lord of a lamb of the first year without blemish: thou shalt prepare it every morning (or, as the Hebrew, morning by morning). And thou shalt prepare a meat offering for it every morning, the sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of an hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour; a meat offering continually by a perpetual ordinance unto the Lord. Thus shall they prepare the lamb, and the meat offering, and the oil, every morning for a continual burnt offering.

The 9th verse contains an ordinance concerning the people's coming to and departing from the public worship: they must not come to the east gate, but to the side gates, the north and south, they might; and this order they were to observe, viz. to go out at that gate which was over against the gate they came in at; he that entered by the north gate must go out by the south gate, and he that entered by the south gate must go out by the north gate. Hence, Obs. 1. The Lord expects not only prince and priests to worship him in a public way, but the people also. "When the people of the land shall come before the Lord in the solemn feasts." God looks not for great ones, learned ones, rich ones, but all sorts, and all of all sorts, to come before him, to acknowledge him to be their God, Creator, and Lawgiver; he is honoured by the worship of the meaner, if sincere, as well as by the worship of the prince or priest; he is no respecter of persons.

Obs. 2. That the way of God's servants is a straight and right-forth way. There is no crookedness in it: Isa. xxvi. 7, "The way of the just is uprightness;" there is no turning aside to the temptations of Satan, to the beggarly elements of the world, to the enticing delights of the flesh, or any vanity whatsoever. That soul that is in God's way, must not look back to Sodom, as Lot's wife did, and suffer for it, but it must go forward. Matthew being called from the receipt of custom into the way of Christ, Matt. ix. 9, might not return, but follow Christ; for whosoever puts his hand to the plough, and looks back, is not fit for the kingdom of God, Luke ix. 62. Such a one must not look back to his old courses, customs, company, principles, or errors; but leaving them, must go straight on in the way of God, from darkness to light, from imperfection to perfection. Those that come to be the Lord's servants, must continue in his service, and perfect holiness in his fear, 2 Cor. vii. 1; Heb. xii. 1—3; Phil. iii. 13, 14.

Obs. 3. The shortness of man's life is here represented unto us; he enters into the world, goes on a little way, and then goes out of it again. So that man's life is as a passage from one gate to another.

They came in at a north gate, went on a little while, and a little way, and then went out at a south gate, &c. It is no long passage from the doors of the womb to the gates of death, Psal. ciii. 15, 16; Job xiv. 1, 2.

The 10th verse is an ordinance for the prince, showing when he is to come to the public worship, and when he is to depart from it. When the people go in at the gate appointed for them, then must he go in at the gate appointed for him; and so when they go out, he must go out. Those words, "in the midst of them," are not to be taken as if the prince went in the midst of the people to the sanctuary; but they denote, that he went at that time, and when come thither, he was there with them, or among them; or at the east gate, which is between the north and south.

1. Here we may see princes are bound to be present at the public worship of God; and not only to be present, but to be present at the beginning, and to stay till the end thereof. They may not come and go at their own pleasure, but at God's appointment. The presence of great persons at the worship of God is of much concernment, and hath great influence into the people; it encourages them to come to hear, to stay, when greater than themselves do so: people are led much by example of superiors; therefore kings and judges are commanded to serve the Lord with fear, and to kiss the Son, Psal. ii.

2. Here we are informed, taking "the prince" for Christ, that he is in the assemblies of his people; when the saints meet together to worship the Lord, he is in the midst of them. He made a precious promise when he was here on earth, and makes it good daily, though he be in heaven; it is that Matt. xviii. 20, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, I am there in the midst of them;" to observe, to reward, and punish. The church is called Christ, 1 Cor. xii. 12; and Christ is said to sing praise unto God in the midst of the church, Heb. ii. 12. He being King of saints, loves to be with and among them: he was in the midst of the one hundred and forty-four thousand, Rev. xiv. 1.

The 11th verse treateth of the meat offering, which was to be at feasts and solemnities, directing the particulars and quantities. In Moses' time the tenth part of an ephah of flour, and the fourth part of an hin of oil, was required, Numb. xxviii. 5; Exod. xxix. 40; but here it is otherwise; a whole ephah of meal or flour is appointed to a bullock, a whole ephah to a ram, and a whole hin of oil to each, only the lamb's flour or oil to be offered was left to liberty or ability.

This may teach us, that seeing our light and mercies are greater under the gospel than theirs were under the law, therefore our obedience and service to the Lord should exceed theirs; if they gave him but the tenth part of an ephah, we ought to give him a whole ephah; if they gave him the fourth part of an hin, we must give him a whole hin. The more God communicates to us, the greater returns should be to him.

The 12th verse minds us of the prince's freewill offerings. Besides what was enjoined, he might voluntarily prepare a burnt offering or a peace offering at his pleasure; and at his coming one was to open the east gate unto him, and at his going forth one was to shut the gate. God looks for more from princes and great ones, than what is ordinary, than what is commanded; he looks for voluntary sacrifices, freewill offerings at their hands. It is said of Josiah, that he gave three thousand bullocks, three thousand lambs and kids for passover offerings, and all of the king's substance; and that the princes gave willingly, 2 Chron. xxxv. 7, 8. So free and bountiful they were, that the Lord took notice of it, and hath recorded it in his word, that "there was no passover like to that kept in Israel from the days of Samuel the prophet; neither did all the kings of Israel keep such a passover as Josiah," ver. 18.

We may interpret this verse of Christ, and so it presents to us not only that Christ hath freely and voluntarily offered up himself a sacrifice to God for us, Heb. ix. 14; x. 9, 10; but that he is the substance and quintessence of all sacrifices; and that the Father hath opened the gate of heaven unto him; and that by virtue of his merits and intercession, the door of reconciliation stands open unto us continually; but should he leave heaven, that door should be shut. No patriarch, no prophet, no apostle, no martyr, no saint, no angel, ever had this honour, to have the door of mercy and grace opened and shut at their pleasure: this is an honour peculiar to Christ.

The 13th, 14th, and 15th verses, declare what the daily sacrifices should be every morning, viz. a lamb of the first year without blemish for a burnt offering, and a meat offering with it, the sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of an hin of oil. The daily sacrifice here differs from that in Numb. xxviii. 3—6. Moses requires two lambs, the tenth part of an ephah of flour, and the fourth part of an hin of oil; Ezekiel speaks but of one lamb, the sixth part of an ephah of flour, and the third part of an hin of oil; and here is no mention of the evening: which alterations import that Mosaic rites and sacrifices should expire; and that notwithstanding, God would have a daily sacrifice in the days of Christ; that he would be worshipped, not only on the christian sabbath, but other days also, as was fore-foreshadowed, Psal. lxxii. 15. "Prayer shall be made unto him continually, and daily shall he be praised."

Ver. 16—18. Thus saith the Lord God; If the prince give a gift unto any of his sons, the inheritance thereof shall be his sons; it shall be their possession by inheritance. But if he give a gift of his inheritance to one of his servants, then it shall be his to the year of liberty; after it shall return to the prince; but his inheritance shall be his sons' for them. Moreover the prince shall not take of the people's inheritance by oppression, to thrust them out of their possessions; but he shall give his sons inheritance out of his own possession: that my people be not scattered every man from his possession.

These verses contain laws to direct the prince's bounty, and to keep him from oppression. 1. Here is a law about giving to his sons, ver. 16. What he gives them, must be their inheritance and possession for ever. 2. Here is a law about giving to his servants, ver. 17. If the prince give a gift to any of his servants or subjects of his inheritance, it must not be theirs for ever, but only to the year of liberty, that was the year of jubilee; for among the Jews, every fiftieth year was a year of jubilee; Lev. xxv. 10, "Ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof; it shall be a jubile unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family." Whatsoever of men's possessions were sold or mortgaged, returned to the owners in the year of jubilee; see ver. 17, and Lev. xxv. 28; and whatever the prince here should give away to any but his own sons, should return to him again at the year of jubilee.

The law to prevent oppression in the prince is in ver. 18. When princes give gifts of inheritance to their sons and servants, and are expensive in their buildings, feasting, and revellings, usually they fetch it out of the people, by squeezing and oppressing them; but the law is, "the prince shall not take of the people's inheritance," lest he should alienate the inheritance which came by parents, from their posterity, unto strangers, and so cause them to desert their country, and to scatter abroad. God would have princes to live upon and give of their own, and by no means to oppress the people. These laws were not amongst the Mosaical ones. And if "the prince" here be taken for the princes of this world, where, when, and by whom hath this prophecy been fulfilled? where dwells the prince, and what is his name, who hath not oppressed the people? We may find the accomplishment of it in Christ, rather than in any of them. But for them we may observe here,

1. That princes should be liberal and bountiful; and not only to their children, but to their servants and subjects; they may deserve well at their hands, and if they be not rewarded and encouraged, men will have no hearts to public, honourable, and difficult employments. When David shall have Saul's daughter, he will venture upon the Philistines, I Sam. xviii.

2. That princes being bountiful, must give of what is their own: it is injustice and dishonourable to them, to give away what is another's.

3. They ought to be well content with their own estates, and not to covet and take away from others their goods, houses, or possessions; they should not spoil their subjects of their right, thrust them out of their possessions, take away their privileges, to make themselves great, rich, dreadful. When princes do so, they become tyrants and oppressors, and their ends will be breaking; Psal. lxxii. 4, "He shall break in pieces the oppressor."

To speak somewhat of this prince, as pointing out Christ. He hath sons and servants; to the one he gives graces, to the other common gifts. To his sons he gives a kingdom, Luke xxii. 29; to the wicked who are his servants, he gives a portion in this life, Psal. xvii. 14. And at their death, the time of liberty, and at the time of restitution of all things, the gifts return to the prince again; but the graces and the kingdom are the saints' for ever, they are their inheritance. This Prince gives of his own; for all that the Father hath are his, John xvii. 10; and he is Heir of all things, Heb. i. 2; and he gives bountifully, he pours out his Spirit upon his sons, and fills them with joy glorious and unspeakable.

Ver. 19—24. After he brought me through the entry, which was at the side of the gate, into the holy chambers of the priests, which looked toward the north: and, behold, there was a place on the two sides westward. Then said he unto me, This is the place where the priests shall boil the trespass offering and the sin offering, where they shall bake the meat offering; that they bear them not out into the utter court, to sanctify the people. Then he brought me forth into the utter court, and caused me to pass by the four corners of the court; and, behold, in every corner of the court there was a court. In the four corners of the court there were courts joined of forty cubits long and thirty broad: these four corners were of one measure. And there was a row of building round about in them, round about them four, and it was made with boiling places under the rows round about. Then said he unto me, These are the places of them that boil, where the ministers of the house shall boil the sacrifice of the people.

The courts and places where the priests and Levites boiled, baked, and made ready the sacrifices, are here described unto us. On the north side of the priests' court, into which the prince and people were not to enter, were the holy chambers; and westward from them was a place as far from the east gate as might be, where all things were fitted for boiling and baking the sacrifices; in that place were the kitchens for such service. Hither was the prophet brought to see these, and from hence he was carried into the utter court. Some make this utter court the gentiles' or people's court; others, the middle court, called the utter court, because it was so to the inner court.

"In every corner of the court there was a court." According to the Hebrew thus, A court in a corner of a court, a court in a corner of a court; and these little courts were for the Levites, where was a building with boiling places, and there the appointed officers boiled the sacrifices of the people.

"That they bear them not out to sanctify the people." In chap. xlv. 19, "They shall not sanctify the people with their garments," was laid down. What may serve here, unless by sanctifying we understand defiling, as sanctum doth? for the Hebrew word קִטַּף signifies sometimes to pollute, as Deut. xxii. 9, "Thou shalt not sow thy vineyard with divers seeds; lest the fruit of thy seed which thou hast sown, and the fruit of thy vineyard, be defiled."

The holy chambers here spoken of, and the four courts in the four corners of the court, do seem to hold out the particular churches which are in all parts of the world; and that these being committed to the ministers of the gospel, they ought to preach Christ unto them, and especially Christ crucified, who is the trespass offering, the sin offering, and meat offering. They must be careful to whom they give holy things; they might not bear out the offerings into the utter court, where all sorts of people were; they would have thought themselves holy by touching holy things, though they had defiled them. As many now by having the supper of the Lord think themselves holy, whenas they have defiled the ordinance and themselves the more by their unworthy receiving. The ministers of the gospel therefore should be very circumspect and careful to whom they give holy things: the profane, ignorant hypocrites should not share in them; those who are true repentants, and true believers, are meet to partake of them. Holy things must be kept within the limits of the church of God, and not extended further than God hath appointed.

Again, it is the ministers who must boil and bake; they are spiritual cooks, and must prepare wholesome food for the people. The people might bring sacrifices, but not prepare those themselves were in part to feed upon, that was the work of the priests and Levites. And now under the gospel, it is the work of pastors and teachers to prepare boiled and baked meat, boiled in the furnace of meditation, and baked in the oven of the heart by spiritual heat. Such meat will nourish and strengthen, make fat and flourishing.

CHAPTER XLVII.

Ver. 1—5. Afterward he brought me again unto the door of the house; and, behold, waters issued out from under the threshold of the house eastward: for the forefront of the house stood toward the east, and the waters came down from under from the right side of the house, at the south side of the altar. Then brought he me out of the way of the gate northward, and led me about the way without unto the utter gate by the way that looketh eastward; and, behold, there ran out waters on the right side. And when the man that had the line in his hand went forth eastward, he measured a thousand cubits, and he brought me through the waters; the waters were to the ancles; (or, waters of the ancles.) Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through the waters; the waters were to the knees. Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through; the waters were to the loins. Afterward he measured a thousand; and it was a river that I could not pass over: for the waters were risen, waters to swim in, a river that could not be passed over.

In this chapter are two principal parts:

1. A vision of waters, and the description of them, ver. 1—12.

11. The bordering and dividing the land, ver. 13, to the end.

Concerning the waters, they are described,

1. From their original or place whence they spring and flow, ver. 1, 2.

2. From their increase, ver. 3—5.

The man with the measuring line in his hand, having led our prophet up and down to view the temple, the parts and appurtenances of it, brings him again to the door of the house, that is, to the door of the temple or sanctuary.

“And, behold, waters issued out from under,” &c. Vilalpandus makes these waters to be those subterranean waters which were carried in pipes under ground, and issued forth into the priests’ court, to wash the sacrifices, and purge away the blood, excrements, and filth, occasioned by the slaying so many sacrifices; for certainly had there not been aqueducts about Solomon’s temple, to have cleansed the places where the sacrifices were slain and prepared, it would have been an unsavoury and unhealthful place. These waters issued forth, some from the threshold, some from the south side of the altar, and so ran away. From these waters, the Lord takes occasion to speak of spiritual waters.

“The waters came down from under from the right side of,” &c. The temple was upon a high mountain, Ezek. xl. 2, therefore the waters are said to come down; and they came from the right side of the house, that was, the south side; for the front of the house standing towards the east, when a man stood and looked eastward, his right hand or side was towards the south. The altar for burnt offering was before the porch of the temple, and at the south side thereof did these waters run.

Our prophet having seen the spring and rise of the waters, is led out of the inner court, by the way of the north gate, and brought to the uttermost east gate, where he first entered; and it was to behold how the waters ran out there on the right side also. The words in Hebrew are, מים סובים נבה; מים signifies to flow, but gently, he saw the waters run there gently and pleasingly; they ran not fiercely as a torrent, but gently, as oil poured out of a vial.

These waters, though they ran gently, yet increased mightily; for upon Christ’s measuring out a thousand cubits, they became waters of the ancles; upon his measuring out the two thousand cubits, they rose to be waters of the knees; upon his measuring out the third thousand of cubits, they ascended to be waters of the loins; and upon measuring the fourth thousand, they became waters for swimming, they could not be waded through, they were so deep, even a great river impassable.

What these waters do signify is worthy inquiry. Some make these waters to signify the prosperity of the church, that great happiness which the Jews had after their return from Babylon. This was an outward mercy, and but for a little season, for they suffered great and grievous things by Antiochus and others, in the Maccabees’ times. But here some spiritual mercy is intended by the waters; others therefore understand by them, the waters of baptism, which Christ instituted, and so came from the altar, viz. the side of Christ; but these waters are too shallow to be Ezekiel’s waters. A third sort make them to be the Spirit, and gifts of the Spirit. It is true, the Spirit is said to be poured out, Joel ii. 28; but it is not to be understood of the person of the Spirit, which is infinite, indivisible, and immovable, but of the gifts and graces of the Spirit. A fourth sort interpret these waters of the gospel, the glad tidings touching man’s salvation by Christ, which is compared to water frequently in Scripture: Isa. xi. 9, “The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea;” the knowledge of the Lord Jesus shall abound, as the waters of the sea: see Joel iii. 18; Zech. xiv. 8. We may take the gospel, with the gifts and graces of the Spirit, to be these waters; for the gospel is the ministration of the Spirit, as the apostle saith, 2 Cor. iii. 8. And the Spirit, with the graces and gifts, are oft compared to water, as well as the gospel: see Ezek. xxxvi. 25; Isa. xlv. 3; xli. 18; Acts ii. 17; John iv. 14; vii. 37—39. Now it remains to show wherein they are like unto water.

1. Water cleanseth, it purgeth away the filth of the body, and other things. So doth the gospel, with the gifts and graces of the Spirit, cleanse the souls of men, and purge their hearts from sin and filthiness. John xv. 3, “Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you.” Christ spoke unto them the gospel, and that was the word, together with the Spirit, which made them clean from their unbelief, disobedience, and other sins. 1 Pet. i. 22, “Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit.” The Spirit accompanying the gospel, purified their souls, and made them obedient to the truth. See Ezek. xxxvi. 25, 27.

2. Water moistens and softens the earth, which before was dry and hard, so that there was no entrance for the plough; but being well watered with the rain of heaven, it is soft, and fit for the plough. So the gospel, the doctrine of Christ, moistens and mollifies hard and heavy hearts. Those that put Christ to death, were hardhearted sinners; but when they heard Peter preach the gospel, and some of that water fell upon their hearts, they were softened, and became sensible of what they had done; “They were pricked in their hearts, and said, Men and brethren, what shall we do?” Acts ii. 37. So Paul was a stout and stubborn fellow, but the water of the gospel did so supple him, that it made him yield and say, “Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?” Acts ix. 6.

3. Water cools heat; the heat of the earth and air in summer, and the heat of the body in hot weather. Many bathe themselves in the water to cool them. Dives begged a little water to cool his tongue, Luke xvi. 24. The waters of the gospel have a cooling virtue in them; they cool the heat of persecution, Matt. v. 11, 12; they cool the heat of our passions, James iii. 2; Matt. v. 22; they cool the heat of temptations, Rom. xvi. 20; 1 Cor. x. 13; James i. 2, 12; they cool the heat of our lusts, 1 Pet. ii. 11; Rom. viii. 13; 1 Tim. vi. 9, 10; they cool the scorings of a guilty conscience, and fire of hell, Matt. xii. 31; xi. 28; 1 John i. 7.

4. Water makes the earth fruitful. When they wanted rain, there was barrenness and famine, Jer. xiv. 4; but when they had the former and latter rain, all things flourished and abounded. Ezek. xxxiv. 26, 27, "I will cause the shower to come down in his season; there shall be showers of blessing; and the tree of the field shall yield her fruit," &c. Literally these words are true, and spiritually also, and set out the fruitfulness of those who were to live under the sweet showers of gospel doctrine. They should be like a watered garden, Jer. xxxi. 12. The doctrine of the Lord is as the rain and dew, which falling upon the tender herbs and grass, cause them to grow, Deut. xxxii. 2. When Zaccheus was watered with this water, he became very fruitful, and gave half of his goods to the poor, Luke xix. 8. Others sold all, and laid the money down at the apostles' feet, Acts iv. 35; they were abundant in love, and in good works.

5. Water quenqueth thirst, satisfies and revives the thirsty soul. It was their drink in the infancy of the world, and is still in some hot countries. Samson, when like to perish for thirst, having some water out of the jaw bone of an ass, he revived, and was satisfied, Judg. xv. 18, 19. The waters of the gospel have this property also; when the soul is athirst, there is no water quenqueth that thirst, but the water of life, which the gospel showeth and conveyeth unto us. The gospel hath this water of life in it, Christ and the Spirit, which it makes men partakers of. The great and precious promises are satisfying things; the righteousness and Spirit of Christ are satisfying and reviving things. Peter found it so, when he said to Christ, "Lord, to whom should we go? thou hast the words of eternal life:" let others go to what brooks, pits, or cisterns they will, to quench their thirst, we will never go from thee, who hast the words of eternal life; who art the fountain of living waters, and canst satisfy us for ever, John vi. 68. This water quenqueth unlawful desires, and satisfieth spiritual desires.

6. Some waters have a curing and healing virtue. The pool of Bethesda healed all manner of diseases, John v. 4. There are waters in our land which have healing virtue in them. Such are the waters here mentioned, for they healed other waters, ver. 8. Gospel waters will heal sick souls and bodies. The centurion said to Christ, "Lord, speak thou but the word only, and my servant shall be healed," and it was so, Matt. viii. 8, 13. Christ cast out devils with his word, and healed all that were sick, ver. 16. The gospel is not only a pattern of wholesome words, but of healing words; also there is no spiritual disease in the soul, but the gospel hath healing virtue to cure it; therefore it is called the "gospel of salvation," Eph. i. 13, and "the power of God unto salvation," Rom. i. 16.

7. Some waters are very cordial, and do greatly comfort the spirits of man. None more than the waters of the gospel, by which the Spirit, the true, solid, and eternal Comforter, flows into the heart.

The gospel, and good things of it, are set out by water, milk, and wine, Isa. lv. 1, all which are comforting things. The gospel is glad tidings, and affords strong and everlasting consolation to the soul, 2 Thess. ii. 16; 2 Cor. i. 5. Jeremiah saith, the word of God was the joy and rejoicing of his soul, chap. xv. 16. David professes, he had perished in his affliction, had he not drunk of these cordial waters, Psal. cxix. 92.

To come to those observations which we may pick out of these verses.

Obs. 1. That as it is Christ who makes known the things of the temple; so he doth the same not all at once, but he makes known some at one time, some at another. Formerly Christ had revealed much to the prophet, and here he brings him again to the door of the house, and shows him waters he had not seen before. We are not capable of much at once; like children, we must have line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little, and there a little. Ezekiel is instructed a little in one place, and a little in another place, as he was capable. So Christ, the wise and chief Builder of the temple, deals with him, and revealed one thing after another unto him; and so he dealt with his disciples, John xvi. 12.

Obs. 2. The waters of the gospel, the gifts and graces of the Spirit, do flow from Zion, from Jerusalem, where Ezekiel had his vision, chap. xl. 2. The bitter waters of the law flowed from mount Sinai, but the sweet waters of the gospel flowed from mount Zion. Isaiah long before prophesied whence these waters should come; Isa. ii. 3, "Out of Zion shall go forth the law," that is, the law of faith, not of works, "and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." So in Zech. xiv. 8, "And it shall be in that day, that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the former sea," that is, eastward, "and half of them toward the hinder sea," that is, westward; "in summer and in winter shall it be;" there shall be no time wherein these Jerusalem waters shall cease flowing. It is not Rome, or any other city in the world, which hath the honour to send out these waters, but Jerusalem only, where was the true church of God.

Obs. 3. These spiritual waters, although they flowed from Zion and Jerusalem, yet Christ himself was the fountain and original of them; they came from the door and threshold of the house. Christ tells us, he is "the door," John x. 7. All spiritual water is in him, all heavenly doctrine, all gifts and graces. When the Spirit moved holy men to speak, as it is 2 Pet. i. 21, it received of Christ, and showed unto them, John xvi. 14; and all the waters which flowed from the apostles they received from Christ. The Spirit was given them to fill their vessels, and fitted them to carry these living waters from Jerusalem to all parts, Acts ii. 8; and Christ sent them forth to preach the gospel. "All the treasures of wisdom and knowledge" are in him, Col. ii. 3; and he that believes in him, receives living waters from him: all gifts, graces, and divine truths, are from him. The waters of the sanctuary flow from the Lord of the sanctuary.

Obs. 4. God would not have his worshippers to conform to and comply with the world's worshippers. They worshipped with their faces towards the east, that was the nations' practice. The heathen idolaters had their backs to the west; but here the front of the house stood eastward, that when they came to worship the true God, their backs might be towards the east, and their faces towards the most holy place, which was westward. When some Jews, degenerated into heathenish customs, did worship with their faces towards the east, Ezek. viii. 16, and their backs towards the temple, God counted it an abomination, it did greatly provoke him, causing him to deal in fury with them, and to show them no pity, Ezek. viii. 17, 18. God must be worshipped according to his own order, and not after the rites and customs of others.

Obs. 5. The gospel spread first into the eastern and southern parts of the world; it is said, the waters issued out eastward, and came down from the south side; they were dry and hot countries, and God took special care of them, that they should be first watered. In Galilee did Christ first preach the gospel, Matt. iv. 23, and so all Judea over; and after from Jerusalem these gospel waters flowed into all nations: Matt. xxviii. 19, "Go, and teach all nations;" Mark xvi. 15, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." The apostles were spiritual clouds, and they were to water, not only Jerusalem and Samaria, but the uttermost parts of the earth, Acts i. 8.

Obs. 6. Those who are preachers of the gospel, must look for hardship, for travail and trouble, for much heat, much cold, for many storms and tempests. They that carry these waters, must travel into all quarters, east, south, north, where are fierce winds, parching heats, terrible storms. Preachers must expect temptations, persecutions, reproaches, accusations, imprisonments, &c.; and notwithstanding these, they must go on and carry sanctuary waters to all places. "Endure hardness," saith Paul to Timothy, "as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." Gospel preachers must not be dismayed at northern or eastern blasts, nor faint at southern heats.

Obs. 7. Sanctuary waters are not common, but choice mercies, they are right-side mercies, south-side blessings. The gospel is a right-hand mercy. Some mercies are left-hand and left-side mercies, they are those of an inferior nature. Others are right-hand mercies, and such are those of the highest nature, amongst which is the gospel. Rev. v. 1, "I saw in the right hand of him who sat upon the throne a book written within and on the back side, sealed with seven seals;" and ver. 7, Christ, who was the Lamb, took this book out of the right hand of God, and so handed it over to us, acquainting us with the mysteries and mercies in it.

Obs. 8. The glorious and blessed truths of the gospel do come from Christ Jesus, as Mediator, and making reconciliation for us with God the Father. These waters are said to flow from the altar, which was a type of Christ. The sacrifices offered upon the altar were for reconciliation; and Christ being both altar and sacrifice, hath reconciled man to God; and as he doth this, so the waters flow from him, so gospel truths are given out by him. The gospel is the purchase of the death of Christ, sealed with his blood, and holds out strong arguments of our being reconciled to God; and therefore it is called "the gospel of peace," Eph. vi. 15.

These are the observations from the two first verses. Now for those that flow from the other three verses.

Obs. 1. The Lord Christ, as he is the Architect of the church, so the Measurer of all things belonging unto it. He is the man in this vision with the line in his hand; nothing is to be done in his spiritual temple, but according to his will and direction. Moses measured out all in the tabernacle, David and Solomon all in the temple, but Christ is the only measurer in this house. Gospel measurings are committed to the Son; Heb. i. 2, "God hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son;" and he is over his own house, Heb. iii. 6. to order and dispose all things as himself pleaseth.

Obs. 2. The motion of sanctuary waters is not accidental, or human, but according to divine appointment. Christ goeth forth eastward, measures a thousand cubits, and then the waters flow that way; and then he measures a thousand cubits more, and so they flow another way. That way Christ went with his line measuring, the waters still flowed; which imports, that the preaching of the gospel in one place, and not in another, is not casual, or as man will, but the appointment of Christ. He forbade his disciples to go into the way of the gentiles, and into the cities of the Samaritans, but rather go to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, Matt. x. 5, 6. Christ here measured out the cubits, where these gospel waters should flow. Paul and those with him, being forbidden to carry these waters into Asia, and not suffered to go with them into Bithynia, whether their wills were bent, at length by a vision they are directed into Macedonia, assuredly gathering, that the Lord had called them to preach the gospel there, Acts xvi. 6—10. Christ had measured out a thousand cubits there, for these spiritual waters to flow. It is at the appointment of Christ what countries, what cities, what towns, and what families shall have these waters.

Obs. 3. That as it is at Christ's appointment to what places these waters shall flow, so likewise how far therein they shall flow. So many cubits as Christ measures out, so far they shall flow, and not farther. If he measure out a thousand cubits, they shall extend so far; if he measure out but five hundred cubits, or one hundred only, the waters shall run to the borders thereof, and not one cubit beyond, nor one short. So far as Christ's line is stretched over any place, so far the waters of the sanctuary will and must flow.

Obs. 4. The doctrine of the gospel is never rightly understood, unless we be taught it by Christ. He led Ezekiel into the waters of the sanctuary; so is the Hebrew עֲבָדִים and we read it, through them; he instructed him in the nature and qualities of them. Whosoever understands the gospel savingly, is led into that knowledge by the Spirit of Christ. The apostles themselves had not understood the gospel, had not Christ sent them his Spirit; John xvi. 13, "When he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth;" that is, he will make you know all truth savingly. The truths of Christ are spiritual, and without the Spirit they are not discerned, 1 Cor. ii. 14, 15. Many wade into these spiritual waters without Christ and his Spirit, and they are of those who are said to be "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth," 2 Tim. iii. 7.

Obs. 5. The doctrine of the gospel, conversion of sinners, and graces of the Spirit, proceed gradually.

(1.) For the doctrine of the gospel, that went out gradually, like water out of a fountain, which may be covered with one's hand, or a dish, but running a little way increases; the waters here, after a little time and motion, were up to the ankles, after to the knees, and then to the loins. The gospel was not given out all at once, but one truth thereof after another. Christ himself first preached one part of the gospel, and then another; he was four years and upwards in letting that sacred water run out of his lips, it came from him by degrees. And so the apostles, who were conduits of this fountain, let out that water little by little; they went up and down preaching here and there, writing an epistle to one place, and an epistle to another place, till they filled the world with these waters. If you read the book of The Acts of the Apostles, you may see how the gospel spread from place to place, and what great progress it had in the world. Paul saith, Rom. x. 18, "Their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world;" and to the Colossians, chap. i. 6, he declares, the gospel was come unto them, and to all the world: from small beginnings here was great increase.

(2.) The conversion of sinners is a gradual work: now one is converted, then another, afterward a third, not all at once. Though the waters of the sanctuary be living waters, yet they do not beget life in all who taste of them. Many scribes and Pharisees, and others, heard Christ preach the glad tidings of the gospel, and speak as never men spake, yet were not converted: some few were wrought upon in Christ's time, in Judea and Jerusalem; some by the apostles in several places where they came, as at Rome, Corinth, Galatia, Ephesus, Philippi, and other places; but the most part remained unconverted, even in Jerusalem itself: which made Christ weep over it, Luke xix. 41, and say, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" Matt. xxiii. 37. Conversion work went out slowly in Christ's days; it was quicker in Peter's time than ever since, three thousand souls converted at a sermon: now three thousand sermons hardly convert one soul. Paul got at one time a Lydia, at another a jailor, at a third time a fugitive servant; and so by degrees the waters of the sanctuary did good.

(3.) The graces of the Spirit have a gradualness in them. Their knowledge, their faith, their hope, their love, are little at first; but in time they increase, they grow from knowledge to knowledge, from faith to faith, from hope to hope, and from love to love: none are filled with sanctuary waters at first, they come into us little by little, drop by drop. Apollos was more perfectly instructed in the way of God by Aquila and Priscilla, Acts xviii. 26. There are several ages in christianity, babes, children, young men, fathers. Babes are only sprinkled with these waters; in children, they are come to their ankles; in young men, to their knees; and in fathers, they are up to their loins, and drawing near to their chins, they are almost come to perfection: but they and the others must still "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ," till they all come to "a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ," Eph. iv. 13.

Obs. 6. The gospel hath such depths and mysteries in it, as no human understanding can sound or comprehend. The waters of the sanctuary did rise so high, become so deep, that they could not be passed over; swim in them Ezekiel might, but he could neither find the bottom of them, nor get over them. The gospel is among "the deep things of God," 1 Cor. ii. 10, it is the richest box of the knowledge and wisdom of God; and there is a depth in those riches, Rom. xi. 33; it is "the unsearchable riches of Christ," Eph. iii. 8; it is "wisdom from above," Jam. iii. 17; it is a doctrine of "heavenly things," John iii. 12; Heb. viii. 5; it is not known without "the spirit of wisdom and revelation," Eph. i. 17; neither Christ nor his doctrine are known without revelation, Matt. xvi. 17; Gal. i. 16. The flesh taught the Pharisees to call Christ Samaritan, and to say, he had a devil, John viii. 48; but it is the Spirit which teaches men to own and acknowledge Christ for a Lord, 1 Cor. xii. 3. Are not these mysteries and depths in the gospel; that three should be one? 1 John v. 7; that two should be one, and yet continue two still? that the Maker should be one with the thing made? that he who blesseth all should himself be a curse? that the Prince of life should die? that the debt should be paid and yet pardoned, the fault be punished and yet remitted? that the Head and members of the same body should be in heaven, and on earth, and in the several quarters of the world, at the same time? that God, who is infinite, should dwell in man? These, and such like deeps, are in the gospel. Is not the Revelation alone a great river, which none of our spiritual mariners can sound or sail over? That one place, Rev. xiii. 18, hath put the skillfullest of them to it: "Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast; for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore and six." In Daniel there are depths; and Peter saith, that in the epistles of Paul there are δυσνόητα, "things hard to be understood," 2 Pet. iii. 16.

Obs. 7. The doctrine of the gospel is pure, and sufficient of itself, it needs no tradition or invention of men. The waters of the sanctuary are holy waters, and a river great and deep, which none can pass over. No waters are like these for purity and perfection: they are not like the muddy waters of Egypt, or puddle waters of Rome; they are pure, without all mixture, and sufficient for all that belong to the sanctuary: so that men need not run to pits or cisterns of their own, or others. The doctrines of men are muddy waters, compared to these, and not sufficient to quench the thirst of any thirsting soul; but these gospel waters are most pure, sufficient, and satisfying.

Obs. 8. From this vision of the waters, That sanctuary waters afford comfort unto the saints in their afflictions, yea, in their deepest distresses. Ezekiel had this vision in the time of his captivity, and it was to comfort him, and the captives in Babylon with him; and so to presignify to us, that the waters of the gospel would yield choice comfort to the saints in their sad, yea, saddest conditions. They are living waters, and do refresh dying souls: the promises are bottles of this water; and when those that are in the greatest afflictions drink the cordial water contained in them, they forget their misery, and are like giants refreshed with wine. The comfort of the Scriptures is choice comfort, Rom. xv. 4. That in Psal. xli. 4, is verified in these gospel waters: "There is a river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God." Let the city of God be in never so great straits or distresses, the river of the sanctuary, gospel waters, will make it glad.

Ver. 6—12. And he said unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen this? Then he brought me, and caused me to return to the brink of the river. Now when I had returned, behold, at the bank of the river were very many trees on the one side and on the other. Then said he unto me, These waters issue out toward the east country, and go down into the desert, and go into the sea: which being brought forth into the sea, the waters shall be healed. And it shall come to pass, that every thing that liveth, which moreth, whithersoever the rivers shall come, shall live: and there shall be a very great multitude of fish, because these waters shall come thither: for they shall be healed; and every thing shall live whither the river cometh. And it shall come to pass, that the fishes shall stand upon it from En-gedi even unto En-eglain; they shall be a place to spread forth nets; their fish shall be according to their kinds, as the fish of the great sea, exceeding many. But the miry places thereof and the marishes thereof shall not be healed; they shall be given to salt. And by the river upon the bank thereof, on this side and on that side, shall grow all trees for meat, whose leaf shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed: it shall bring forth new fruit according to his months, because their waters they issued out of the sanctuary: and the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine.

We have heard whence these visional waters did spring, and of their great increase into a river; and here we have a description of this river.

I. From the trees which were about it, with their leaves and fruit, ver. 7, 12.

II. From the place into which it flows, ver. 8.

III. From the effects, in ver. 8—10.

IV. From the fishers and nets, ver. 10.

V. From the adjunct places, ver. 11.

In ver. 6, the Lord puts a question unto Ezekiel, and it is this, "Son of man, hast thou seen this?" hast thou seen these waters whence they spring? hast thou seen which way they flow? hast thou seen their great increase and unpassableness? If thou hast not, see now fully, and observe them more exactly; that is the intent of the question. There is a corporal sight, and there is an intellectual sight; see with the eye of thy body, and with the eye of thy mind.

Note hence, That the waters of the sanctuary have that in them which is observable to be considered and seriously weighed.

"Hast thou seen, this?" how suddenly these waters break forth? how they have followed the measuring line, which way soever it went? how in a little time they have risen up to a river, and such a river as is impermeable? Hast thou seen the mysteries contained in these waters? As the waters abound, so the mysteries thereof abound. The gospel is full of mysteries and depths; the beginnings, increase, and success of it are wonderful things, and ought to be minded; the spreading, converting, and edifying power of the gospel, christians should take special notice of, rejoice at, and bless God for. It is a choice mercy to have the waters of the gospel in a land, or in a town; and what a mercy is it when these waters prove waters of life, to convert and edify those that are there! If Middleton's and Thames' waters are observable, much more mystical waters.

After this question comes action; the Lord brought him, and caused him to return to the brink of the river, or tip of it. Hitherto he had seen the waters; now the Lord would have him to see what was upon the banks or sides of the river, for as there were things considerable in the waters, so on the banks.

Obs. 1. Christ reveals and makes known the mysteries of the sanctuary by degrees, and one after another. Ezekiel sees the waters, and being taught something concerning them, he is brought to the brink of the river, and hath new mysteries presented to him; he is held from seeing the waters of the sanctuary, to behold the trees thereof.

Obs. 2. The scholars of Christ ought to be content with what it pleases the Lord Christ to make known unto them, and to rest satisfied therewith. Ezekiel troubles not himself or Christ about the depth of the river, the multitude of waters, and several measurings; but being set down on the brink of the river, he is content to see and hear what the Lord should show him, and speak unto him. There is an itch in man to know things kept secret and hidden: many, through curiosity, prying into such things, have prejudiced themselves and others: Gen. iii. 6, Eve did so. Let us acquiesce in what Christ reveals, and not thirst after hidden secrets, lest we meet with Satanical delusions, and be given up to believe lies.

In ver. 7, the river is described from the multitude of trees on each side of it. There was very much wood, or very many trees, as Piscator, or very great trees, as Junius and Tremellius have it. As the waters were mystical, so are these trees, and they have a mystical and spiritual signification. They signify the saints under the gospel, those that are true christians; and such are not unfitly compared to trees, for they resemble them in many respects.

(1.) Trees have life in them; so true christians have life in them. When the Romans were become christians, then they were "alive unto God through Jesus Christ," Rom. vi. 11; before they were dry and dead trees, as the Ephesians were, Eph. ii. 1. When men are once true christians, they have life from Christ, John x. 10; xx. 31; 1 John v. 12; Gal. ii. 20.

(2.) Trees are rooted in the firm earth, in rocks and mountains; and true christians are rooted in Christ, who is a firm and solid Rock. The Colossians were rooted in Christ; not in Plato, Aristotle, or human philosophy, but in Christ and his doctrine; they were established in the faith of Christ, so that none could pull them from him, John x. 28.

(3.) Trees draw sap, moisture, and virtue from the earth, and the waters they are near unto, Jer. xvii. 8. Psal. civ. 16, "The trees of the Lord are full of sap," they draw strongly. And so it is with true christians, metaphorical trees, they draw sap from Christ, virtue from his promises, and moisture from his ordinances. Faith and love are like the little fibres which are upon roots; those strings, veins, or sinews draw mightily, and communicate to the whole; so do faith and love abundantly bring in spiritual sap into the soul: John i. 16, "Of his fulness have we all received;" see John xv. 5.

(4.) Trees do grow upwards; Gen. ii. 9, every tree grew; and the saints are of a growing nature; Psal. xcii. 12, "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree; he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon." Palm trees and cedars especially grow very high, Amos ii. 9, their tops reached to heaven. And did not the Thessalonians grow exceedingly in faith and charity? 2 Thess. i. 3. Did not Paul grow greatly, when his conversation was in heaven daily? Phil. iii. 20. The saints grow up into Christ in all things, Eph. iv. 15.

(5.) Of trees, some are strong, some are weak, some are high, some are low. So is it with saints, some are strong and high, as the centurion, Matt. viii. 10, the woman of Canaan, chap. xv. 28; James, Cephas, and John, Gal. ii. 9; some are low and weak, as the Corinthians, 1 Cor. iii. 1, and the Hebrews, Heb. v. 12, 13. John hath ranked these spiritual trees into three sorts, 1 John ii. 12—14, little children, young men, and fathers.

(6.) They are fruitful, and bear several kinds of fruit. Hence the tree of the field is said to be man's life, Deut. xx. 19; that is, it brings forth fruit of several kinds, whereby the life of man is preserved; and true christians are not barren trees, or trees which bring forth sour or corrupt fruit; but they are fruitful, and their fruit is good fruit. The Philipians were "filled with fruits of righteousness," Phil. i. 11. Doreas was "full of good works and alms-deeds which she did," Acts ix. 36. The churches of Macedonia abounded in liberality, 2 Cor. viii. 2; and the church of Corinth in every thing, ver. 7; some had tongues, some interpreted, some wrought miracles, and some prophesied. Those widows which were to be taken into the church had fruit, much and variety of it; they brought up children, they lodged strangers, they washed the saints' feet, they relieved the afflicted, and they diligently followed every good work, 1 Tim. v. 9, 10.

(7.) Some trees are very fragrant, well scented; they perfume the air where they grow. Hos. xiv. 6, "His smell shall be as Lebanon." In Lebanon, which was a great mountain and fruitful forest, were fair trees, cedars, and almg trees, which filled the air with a sweet scent; and like unto Lebanon Israel should be. And Christ saith of his spouse, Cant. iv. 11, "The smell of thy garments is like the smell of Lebanon." The church's garments are the graces and gifts with which the Spirit hath adorned her, as knowledge, faith, love, humility, zeal, wisdom, &c.; these yield a good savour. From the church of Philippi was "an odour of a sweet smell," Phil. iv. 18. The church of Rome in Paul's days had a good scent, her "faith was spoken of throughout the whole world," Rom. i. 8. Gaius was a tree very fragrant, 3 John 2. 5, 6; and Demetrius alone had the smell of Lebanon, of fir trees, cedars, and almg; for he had good respect of all men, and of the truth itself, ver. 12.

(8.) Trees are exposed to all winds, weathers, storms, to heat and cold; so are saints. Jer. xvii. 8, the man that trusts in God, shall be as a tree planted by the waters; and what though heat and drought come? he shall be prejudiced by neither; his branch is "green before the sun," Job viii. 16. There will be scorching heat and terrible blasts. Christians do meet with Satan's fiery darts, and the dragon's floods; reproaches, afflictions, temptations, troubles of all sorts they are exposed unto; see Psal. xxxiv. 19; 2 Tim. iii. 12.

Ver. 8. "These waters issue out towards the east country, and go down into the desert." These are the places into which the waters of the sanctuary did run. Some render the Hebrew words הַיַּרְדֵּן הַקָּדוֹשׁ into Galilee of the east; Montanus, to the eastern border. Galilee was eastward from Jerusalem, and in it was Lacus Asphaltitis, the lake of Sodom, or Dead sea, so called because no fish could live in it, nor birds fly over it, but died, so deadly were the waters and vapours thereof. Hither the sanctuary waters came, and they went down also into the desert, that is, say some expositors, into the Mediterranean sea, which was in the west; suitable to which interpretation seems that in Zech. xiv. 8, where living waters are said to go out from Jerusalem, "half of them toward the former sea," that is, the Salt or Dead sea, "and half of them toward the hinder sea," that is, the Mediterranean sea. Others conceive these waters of Ezekiel did run only eastward, first into the Dead sea, and then out of that into the deserts or plains of Moab; for here is not mention of several seas, but there is of rivers, ver. 9.

The effects of these waters are,

1. Healing. When they came into the Dead sea, they healed the waters thereof; the sanctuary waters made those deadly waters wholesome and profitable, as the bitter waters of Marah were healed by a tree thrown in, Exod. xv. 25, and the waters of Jericho by a cruse of salt, 2 Kings ii. 20, 21.

2. Production of fishes, and them in abundance. These waters were fruitful waters, ver. 9, they begat life in dead creatures, and caused fish to abound "as the fish of the great sea, exceeding many," as it is in the end of ver. 10. By fish understand those that are wrought upon and brought in by the gospel; and they are so called,

(1.) Because as fish are generated of spawn, or seed, and water; so believers are born of water and the Spirit. John iii. 5.

(2.) Fish it is conceived were not under the curse, that fell upon the earth and things upon it, not on the waters and fish therein; so believers are not under the curse of the law. Unbelievers are under condemnation and wrath, John iii. 18, 36, but believers are free from both.

(3.) They keep fresh in salt and brackish waters; and true converts do so. When there are brackish, corrupt doctrines abroad, hot and fierce persecutions by reason of them, the sound believer is not tainted with them; Arianism, Pelagianism, familism, rantism, and quakerism do not corrupt them; and the greater troubles they meet with, the more lively they are.

(4.) Some fish swim constantly against the stream. Such are true christians, they swim against the stream, they are not led by the multitude. There are several streams, one of profaneness, another of flattery, a third of superstition, a fourth of lukewarmness and formality, a fifth of carnal policy, a sixth of self-seeking: against all these, and many others, doth the sincere christian swim and row daily.

(5.) Fish live in and by the waters, they cannot live on dry land, they presently die without water. And true christians, they live in and by the waters of the sanctuary, they live in and by the Spirit, they drink in the waters of the gospel. These spiritual fish cannot live without them: Rev. xxii. 1, there is "a pure river of water of life," wherein these live and swim.

(6.) Fish of the same kind do sort together. It is so with true converts, they leave their old company, and sort with those that are regenerate and godly. David saith, Psal. cxix. 63, "I am a companion of all them that fear thee." Christ's disciples assembled together, Acts i. 15. Peter and John "went to their own company," Acts iv. 23.

Ver. 10. "The fishers shall stand upon it from Engedi, even unto En-eglaim." Engedi was a town near unto the Dead sea, upon the coast of it, having strong holds, 1 Sam. xxiii. 29; called Hazazon-tamar in Jehoshaphat's days, 2 Chron. xx. 2, which A Lapidie interprets urbs palmarum, a city of palm trees, because they flourished in it; it had several vineyards belonging to it, Cant. i. 14. From this place to En-eglaim, should the fishers spread their nets.

En-eglaim was seated at the mouth of the Dead sea, where Jordan emptied itself into it, as Junius and Piscator observe; and it was in the eastern part, as Engedi was in the western.

Before we proceed further, take some observations from ver. 7—10.

Obs. 1. The waters of the sanctuary, the doctrine of the gospel, doth powerfully and speedily beget and bring men to God. Such was the virtue of the waters Ezekiel saw, that presently they brought forth trees on each side their banks; there were trees of righteousness presently, viz. true christians. When Christ preached, and the apostles, their doctrine was received, and divers believed, John iv. 41; vii. 31; viii. 30; xii. 42; Acts xvii. 11, 12; xviii. 8. The waters of the gospel turn thorns and thistles into vine and fig trees, and make an orchard for God where none was. This was foretold by Isaiah, chap. xli. 18, 19, "I will open rivers in high places, and fountains in the midst of the valleys: I will make the wilderness a pool of water, and the dry land springs of water. I will plant in the wilderness the cedar, the shittah tree, and the myrtle, and the oil tree: I will set in the desert the fir tree, and the pine, and the box tree together." The meaning is, God would cause the gospel to be preached in dry and barren places, and there should some of all sorts come in, believe, and grow up like trees of God. Isa. xlv. 3, 4, "I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring: and they shall spring up as among the grass, as willows by the water courses." This water brings forth trees, and makes them good being brought forth.

Obs. 2. The waters of the gospel have, and will have their course; they issue out, who can keep them in? and being out, they go toward the east country, and go down into the desert, and so into the sea; who can stop them? When the gospel began first to be preached, it spread: Mark i. 27, 28, "What new doctrine is this? for with authority commandeth he even the unclean spirits, and they do obey him. And immediately his fame spread abroad throughout all the region round about Galilee." The gospel did run like water, from country to country, and from sea to sea, 2 Thess. iii. 1.

Obs. 3. That people without the gospel, are like unto the Dead sea, that lake of Sodom, into which, by our apostasy from God, we have cast ourselves. The Dead sea in a spiritual sense is the lake of our sins, where all things are loathsome, dead, and deadly; whence nothing but corrupt and pestilent vapours do flow. Men are children of wrath by nature, dead in sins and trespasses, Eph. ii. 1, 3, 5. All men are gone astray, and "all together become filthy." Psal. xiv. 3. "Their throat is an open sepulchre," &c. See Rom. iii. 10—18. They send forth mire and dirt as the sea doth, Isa. lvii. 20; and nothing that is good lives in them: they stifle all good motions, being dead in sin, abominable, and reprobate to every good work.

Obs. 4. The waters of the sanctuary have curing and quickening virtue in them. Where they came, the waters were healed, and every thing lived. When they flowed into the Dead sea, that was healed by them, ver. 8, and every thing lived whither the river came, ver. 9. People in Scripture are compared to waters, Rev. xvii. 1, 15; but they are unsavoury, corrupt waters, like the Dead sea, sending out noisome vapours: but when the doctrine of the gospel comes in power, with the merits of Christ, and graces of the Spirit, it purges the head from infectious errors, the conscience from dead works, the heart from vile lusts, and the life from base practices, and begets life in the dead soul. The Corinthians were a polluted people, given to uncleanness, and all manner of wickedness, 1 Cor. vi.; having reckoned up a catalogue of sinners in ver. 9, 10, he saith in ver. 11, "Such were some of you; but ye are washed, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." How came they to be so? it was by Paul's preaching the gospel, Acts xviii. 1, 7—11; he brought sanctuary waters unto them, which cured and quickened these Corinthians. In the pool of Bethesda God put forth his power, and healed by those waters all manner of bodily diseases, John v.; and in these sanctuary or gospel waters, he puts forth his power, and heals all spiritual diseases, and quickens those that are spiritually dead, ver. 25. These waters are "living waters," Zech. xiv. 8, and they beget life, and increase life, John iv. 14; x. 10.

Obs. 5. The waters of the sanctuary are fruitful waters, they breed trees on each side, and abundance of fish. The doctrine of the gospel breeds christians and believers in abundance; Acts i. 15, the number of disciples was about a hundred and twenty; chap. ii. 41, three thousand souls were added unto them; chap. iv. 4, the number of believers was about five thousand; chap. v. 14, multitudes both of men and women were added to the Lord; chap. xxi. 20, "Thou seest how many thousands of Jews there are which believe," πόσοι μαρτυροῦντες, how many ten thousands; and Rev. vii. 9, "I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number;" the trees and fishes multiplied so much in a little time, that they exceeded man's arithmetic.

Obs. 6. The preachers of the gospel are fishers, Ver. 10, "The fishers shall stand upon it," that is, the river and fish there. Ye know Christ chose fishermen to be his apostles, and told them, that he would make them "fishers of men," Mark i. 17. Men are the fish, and the gospel is the net: the promises are the bait, and preachers are the fishers. Peter threw the net on the right side, when he caught three thousand fishes at once, Acts ii. 41; which was pre-figured in the great draught of fishes he took, Luke v. 5, 6. The preaching of the gospel is compared to a net, Matt. xiii. 47: it is good casting this net into the waters where there are store fish, and wise is that man who can catch them; Prov. xi. 30, "He that winneth souls is wise." Some fishers toil all night and catch nothing; but where there is wisdom to handle the net, and bait the hooks well, some fish will be caught.

Obs. 7. These spiritual fishers have large waters to fish in, and are to be frequent in fishing, "from En-gedi even to En-eglaim." "They shall be a place to spread forth nets" from east to west. They are to fish the whole sea; "Go, and teach all nations." The whole world is a sea of fish, and the nets must be spread, not lie still. The fishers may dry and mend their nets, but then they must throw them into the deep, and be fishing for their Lord and Master. Paul charges Timothy to preach the word, to be instant in season and out of season, to take all opportunities to catch fish with the net of the gospel, 2 Tim. iv. 2.

Obs. 8. These gospel fishers do catch some fish of all sorts, some great, some small, some old, some young. When they spread forth their nets, their fish shall be according to their kind; some of every kind shall be caught in their nets: Matt. xiii. 47, saith Christ, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto a net cast into the sea, and gathereth of every kind." The gospel preached gains upon all sorts of people; the priests, Acts vi. 7, and Sergius Paulus, Acts xiii. 12, were great fishes caught in this net; but Lydia and the damsel, Acts xvi. with Onesimus and many others, were little fishes. Nicodemus, John iii. the eunuch, Acts viii. and the elect lady, 2 John, were great fishes; and though "not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called," and caught with this net, yet some are; some Jews, some gentiles, some bond-men, &c.

Ver. 11. "But the miry places thereof, and the marshes thereof," &c. Near unto rivers and seas are miry places, and marshes, and they being at a distance from the channel wherein these waters of the sanctuary run, were not healed, made wholesome and useful for fish, but they are left to barrenness; which is the sense of these words, "They shall be given to salt;" for salt causeth barrenness, and is a sign thereof, Deut. xxix. 23; Judg. ix. 45. Psal. cvii. 34, "He turneth a fruitful land into barrenness;" the Hebrew is, saltiness. Those that are slothful, impenitent, that go on in filthy practices, trust to their own righteousness, refusing and neglecting these waters, shall never be healed, but be barren, fruitless, and accursed.

Ver. 12. "Upon the bank shall grow all trees for meat." It is a known thing to historians and travellers, that on the banks of the Dead sea, or Laeus Asphaltites, the place where Sodom and the other cities were destroyed, do grow trees which in show yield goodly fruit, yet not edible; for being touched, it proves ashes and smoke, deceiving the expectation of him that gathers the same; but these waters coming hither, beget better trees, and better fruit, even "trees for meat." Neither tree nor fruit should disappoint them, for the leaves of these trees should not fade, they should always be green and flourishing; neither should the fruit be consumed, they should always have fruit upon them; for as the sap and greenness of those trees continued, so the fruit would continue; nor rottenness would cause it to fall, no winds or storms should blow it down.

"It shall bring forth new fruit according to his months." Every month should these trees bring forth new fruit. The word יבבר is rendered by some, they shall yield their first-begotten; not only shall they yield fruit monthly, but excellent and choice fruit, ripe fruit, fit for meat. And because this seems strange and impossible, that trees every month should have ripe fruit, he shows in the next words whence it is.

"Because their waters they issued out of the sanctuary." These waters were no ordinary waters, but such as had a fructifying virtue in them, beyond all other waters, and made the trees about it to bear twelve times a year; representing that crystal river that proceeded out of the throne of God and of the Lamb, on either side of which grew "the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded fruit every month," Rev. xxii. 2.

"And the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine." He shows the excellency of these trees; they shall have nothing useless, their fruit is for meat, and their leaves for medicine. The good works and holy lives of believers are for meat and medicine unto others.

Obs. 1. Wicked men are miry and muddy creatures. Those that are ungodly, are no better than miry places and marshes, which are unsavoury, loathsome, and dangerous, breeding frogs, toads, and other vermin. Such are all wicked men; "their throat is an open sepulchre," Rom. iii. 13, their words are corrupt, deceitful, and poisonous; themselves are loathsome, Prov. xiii. 5: they trust in their own righteousness, which is as filthy rags, Isa. lxiv. 6; they have corrupt minds, as Jannes and Jambres had, 2 Tim. iii. 8; they are full of noisome lusts, subtilty, and all malice, as Elymas was, Acts xiii. 10; they have eyes full of adultery, 2 Pet. ii. 14; they are swine, and love to wallow in the mire, ver. 22; they breed nothing but vermin, base thoughts, vile affections, and produce only what is evil. Paul describes them fully unto us, Rom. i. 29—31, and in 2 Tim. iii. 2—5.

Obs. 2. Those places and persons to which the waters of the sanctuary do not come, or coming do not heal, are designed to barrenness, and so to destruction. Ver. 11, "But the miry places thereof and the marshes thereof shall not be healed." Either the waters came not to them; or if they did, they refused, they neglected them, and so were given to salt, made like Sodom, barren and accursed. Some places have not the waters of the sanctuary, the doctrine of the gospel, and they are barren, and perish for want of the same, as Tyre and Zidon. Some places have them, and because they are impenitent, unbelieving, and will not receive the truth with the love of it, because they will not drink these waters, therefore they are given to salt, they are barren, and must perish. So it was with Capernaum and Jerusalem, Matt. xi. 23, and xxiii. 37, 38; and so is it with many places in this nation, 1 Cor.

John iii. 19, "This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." They stick in the mud and filth of their own sins, and will not receive the soul saving truths of the gospel.

Obs. 3. That the saints, true christian believers, are not barren but fruitful trees. Every one of them is a fruitful tree, and yields good fruit. All the trees are for meat, their fruit is for meat. For whom? For Christ; Cant. iv. 16, "Let my beloved come into his garden, and eat his pleasant fruits;" chap. vi. 2, "He is gone to feed in the gardens;" that is, to feed upon the fruit of his churches. And for others, even all men. Gal. vi. 10: their fruit is good, Matt. v. 16, and vii. 17; they are acceptable to God and man, through their fruitfulness, Phil. iv. 18, and an honour to the place where they grow.

Obs. 4. True christians are always fruitful, and nothing can hinder their fruitfulness. They are trees that bring forth fruit according to their months and seasons; neither heat nor cold doth blast their leaves; no wind or weather doth consume their fruit; but they go on, and are fat and flourishing, and still bring forth fruit in old age, Psal. xcii. 14. They are daily adding to their faith virtue; to their virtue knowledge; to their knowledge temperance; to their temperance patience; to their patience godliness; to their godliness brotherly kindness, and to that charity: these things are in true saints, and abound in them, 2 Pet. i. 5—8. The Corinthians abounded in the work of the Lord, 1 Cor. xv. 58. Christians must always profess godliness, and always practise it; their leaf must always be green, and their fruit always ripe; there should not be a day, or an hour, wherein they should not be doing good, or ready to do good, and bear new fruit, Jer. xvii. 8.

Obs. 5. The true cause of fruitfulness, and such fruitfulness in christians, is the doctrine and grace of the gospel. Every tree brought forth fruit according to his month, because the waters issued out of the sanctuary; other waters had not such virtue, such efficacy in them. Those who sit under the heavenly dews and droppings of the gospel, they feel the influences of the Spirit, they are most fruitful.

Obs. 6. The holy profession and gracious language of true saints are medicinable, they heal the sores and bruises of sinners. Their examples, their savoury speeches, do good like a medicine: Prov. xii. 18, "The tongue of the wise is health;" and Prov. xv. 4, "A wholesome tongue is a tree of life," it yields good fruit. And women who are gracious, win their husbands to the faith, 1 Pet. iii. 1, 2, by their examples and good conversations, and so they are healed, and brought to Christ; their leaves are for medicine.

Ver. 13—23. Thus saith the Lord God; This shall be the border, whereby ye shall inherit the land according to the twelve tribes of Israel: Joseph shall have two portions. And ye shall inherit it, one as well as another: concerning the which I lifted up mine hand to give it unto your fathers: and this land shall fall unto you for inheritance. And this shall be the border of the land toward the north side, from the great sea, the way of Hethlon, as men go to Zedad; Hamath, Berothah, Sibraim, which is between the border of Damascus and the border of Hamath; Hazar-hatticon, which is by the coast of Hauran. And the border from the sea shall be Hazar-enan, the border of Damascus, and the north northward, and the border of Hamath. And this is the north side. And the east side ye shall measure from Hauran, and from Damascus, and from Gilead, and from the land of Israel by Jordan, from the border unto the east sea. And this is the east side. And the south side southward from Tamar even to the waters of strife in Kadesh, the river to the great sea. And this is the south side southward. The west side also shall be the great sea from the border, till a man come over against Hamath. This is the west side. So shall ye divide this land unto you according to the tribes of Israel. And it shall come to pass, that ye shall divide it by lot for an inheritance unto you, and to the strangers that sojourn among you, which shall beget children among you: and they shall be unto you as born in the country among the children of Israel; they shall have inheritance with you among the tribes of Israel. And it shall come to pass, that in what tribe the stranger sojourneth, there shall ye give him his inheritance, saith the Lord God.

These verses are the second part of the chapter, and contain,

I. The bordering of the land, ver. 13—20.

II. The dividing of it, ver. 21, to the end.

Something was said of the land, chap. xlv. and here that subject is proceeded in. Ver. 13 speaks in the general, and saith, the order whereby they were to inherit the land, must be "according to the twelve tribes of Israel," east, west, north, and south. It is true, that Levi had no border, no possession, Ezek. xlv. 28; yet twelve lots are spoken of, because the sons of Joseph, Ephraim and Manasseh, come in for portions. Josh. xiv. 4, "The children of Joseph were two tribes, Manasseh and Ephraim; therefore they gave no part unto the Levites in the land." See Josh. xvii. 17, 18; 1 Chron. v. 12. They had "two portions," the Hebrew is, lines, because the portions were measured out by lines.

Ver. 14, "And ye shall inherit it, one as well as another." The Hebrew for "one as well as another," is, a man as his brother, which is usual among the Hebrews; for when they speak of two or more in the masculine gender, they say, a man and his brother; and when they speak of two or more in the feminine gender, they say, a woman and her sister. The sense here is, that they should all with equal right possess the land, and each tribe have an equal portion, which differs much from the division made of old; for, Numb. xxxiii. 54, "Ye shall divide the land by lot for an inheritance among your families: and to the more ye shall give the more inheritance, and to the fewer ye shall give the less inheritance;" and if we grant with some, that it was so here, that a greater portion of land was given to the greater tribe, yet it is conceived from these words of Ezekiel, that every one in each tribe had an equal portion, which was not so of old.

"Concerning the which I lifted up mine hand to give it," &c. Of the Lord's lifting up his hand, mention was made, Ezek. xx. 56; xv. 28, 42; xxxvi. 7; and xlv. 12; and it notes God's swearing, that he would give the land of Canaan unto their fathers: as Exod. vi. 6, "I will bring you in unto the land, concerning which I did swear to give it to Abraham, to Isaac, and Jacob;" the Hebrew is, I did lift up my hand.

Ver. 15, "This shall be the border of the land toward the north side, from," &c. He describes first the borders of the whole land, and so makes way to the division of it more particularly. He begins with the north border, which was from that part of the great sea, viz. the Mediterranean sea, which lay northward, and so proceeded to mount Hor, and from thence to Hamath, and so to Zedad, Ziphron, and terminated in Hazar-enan, Numb. xxxiv. 7—9, which was in the north-east. In this description of the northern border, more towns are mentioned than in Numbers, as Hethlon, Berothah, Sibram, Hazar-batticon, Hauran, and Damascus, but the extension is the same, from the great sea to Hazar-enan, ver. 15—17.

The east border is laid down ver. 18, and that is, that space which lies between Hauran, Damascus, Gilead, and the land of Israel by Jordan, from the border to the east sea, that is, the lake of Sodom, or Dead sea, as some interpret it. But, Numb. xxxiv. 11, it is extended to "the sea of Chinnereth eastward," which is the sea of Tiberias, or lake of Gennesaret, John vi. 1; Luke v. 1.

The south border is set forth unto us in ver. 19; and it is from Tamar, which Maldonate makes Jericho, others a town near the Dead sea; and from hence to Meribah, or the waters of strife in Kadesh, in the wilderness of Zin, Numb. xx. 13, and xxvii. 14, and so to the river which led to the great sea. That river is called Sihor, Josh. xiii. 3; Jer. ii. 18; and the river of Egypt, Numb. xxxiv. 5; and distinguished the tribes of Simeon and Judah from Egypt, as Sanctius saith, and ran into the Mediterranean sea, which is the great sea; so called, in respect of the sea of Galilee, or Tiberias, and of the Dead sea, which were little ones to that. To this great sea came the south border.

The west border is in ver. 20, from the border of the great sea, that is, from the place where the river of Egypt exonerates itself into the Mediterranean sea, which by geographers is called Rhinocoura, and so to Hamath in the north-west towards mount Hor. This tract by the sea was the west border, Numb. xxxiv. 6.

The prophet being shown the borders of the land in the foregoing verses, is brought here to see the division of it in the three last verses. And the division was to be according to the tribes, ver. 21; and this division was to be by lot, the lot was to fall upon it; ver. 22, "Ye shall divide it by lot;" the Hebrew is, ye shall make it fall, that is, under lot. They might not pick and choose what part of the land they had a mind unto, but take their portion where the lot fell; and here it is ordered, that strangers and their children shall not be excluded from inheriting. Not all strangers were to have this privilege, but those that should come and dwell amongst them, and beget children. It was not so in the division of the land by Moses and Joshua, strangers might not inherit amongst them; which clearly intimates there was to be a change of the Mosaical state.

Strangers might come into any of the tribes, which Sanctius understands of proselytes, whose number was great, as he saith; and into what tribe soever they came, there they were to have inheritance; so that now the difference between strangers and natives, Jews and gentiles, was to cease, and they both had the same privilege.

Having given you the literal sense of the words, now let us see what may be the spiritual sense of them; for in the letter they were not fulfilled after the return from Babylon, but mystically under the gospel they were.

I. Then here is hold out unto us, the great extent and largeness of the church under Christ and the gospel. The land mentioned, signifies the church's state; and the bordering of it out, north, east, south, west, the extent of it into all parts. The christian church is larger than the Jewish; that was shut up in one nation, now it reaches to all nations, Matt. xxviii. 19, neither Asia, Africa, Europe, nor America are excluded: see Matt. xxiv. 14; Luke xxiv. 47; Rev. xv. 4. The church under the gospel is universal and invisible.

2. Those that are subjects or members of this church, are not hypocrites, but Israelites. Those that were not Israelites, and true Israelites, were not to be in this church. Hypocrites, scandalous, ignorant, and unregenerate persons, are often in, if not the major part of particular visible churches; but of the universal church of Christ they are not; that consists of true Israelites, such as Nathanael was, John i. 47; of Jews inwardly, such as are circumcised in heart and spirit, Rom. ii. 29; of such as are enrolled in heaven, Heb. xii. 23; of sealed ones, Rev. vii.; and these stood with the Lamb on mount Zion, Rev. xiv. i. These made up the church and body of Christ.

3. The privileges of this church do equally belong to all the members of it: ver. 14, "Ye shall inherit it, one as well as another." None hath pre-eminence above others in the things of Christ and God. As the Jews could not say, This land is more mine than yours, I have the privileges, you have not; so a saint, a christian, a true member of the universal church, cannot say, The church, or privileges of it, are more mine than others who are in the same; "for all are one in Christ Jesus," Gal. iii. 28; and there is but "one body, one Spirit, one hope, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all," Eph. iv. 4—6: it is one and the same grace of God, one and the same righteousness of Christ, one and the same eternal life, which they are interested in.

4. The state of christians in the church, and all the spiritual blessings they have therein, are of free grace, and mere mercy. "This land shall fall to you for inheritance," ver. 14; and, "ye shall divide it by lot for an inheritance," ver. 22. It was freely given them, and what good soever was there, in all the milk and honey thereof. In like manner, the bringing of men into Zion, to be members of Christ's body, and all the spiritual milk and honey they enjoy in that state, is of mere grace and good pleasure. Saith Christ himself, No man cometh unto me, except the Father draw him, John vi. 44. God hath given unto Christ some men, John xvii. 2; and those God hath given to Christ, he brings them to Christ, from whom they have milk, wine, and honey.

5. The church of God under the gospel, consisted of gentiles as well as of Jews. This appears from this, that strangers might sojourn amongst them. The gentiles were strangers, being neither of the seed of Abraham, nor of the commonwealth of Israel, Eph. ii. 12; but they were under Christ to be in Canaan, that is, in the church. John x. 16, of these Christ spake when he said, "Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring," that is, into the fold. It was prophesied in Isa. lxi. 22, that the gentiles should come in; "Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will lift up mine hand to the gentiles, and set up my standard to the people; and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried up on their shoulders," &c.; the gentiles and their children should believe, and come into the church of Christ. And Isa. lvi. 6, 7, "Also the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants," &c.; "even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer:" see Isa. lxxv. 1. Zech. ii. 11, "Many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people." These prophecies, and many other to the same purpose, are made good, and the gentiles are in and of the church of God. The gentiles had repentance granted to them unto life, Acts xi. 18.

6. The tenders of mercy, and invitations to Zion, were first to the Jews, and after to the gentiles. The land of Canaan was first for Israelites, and then for sojourners. Christ first tendered himself, and all gospel means, unto the Jews, John i. 11; Matt. xxiii. 37; he sent his disciples first to them, Matt. x. 5—7, afterwards to the gentiles, Matt. xxviii. 19. Hence said Paul and Barnabas, Acts xiii. 46, "It was necessary that the word of God should first be spoken unto you; but seeing ye put it from you, lo, we turn to the gentiles." The Jews were the seed of Abraham, the friend of God, Isa. xli. 8; they were his firstborn, Exod. iv. 22; they were the children of the prophets and of the covenant, and to them God first sent his Son to bless them, Acts iii. 25, 26.

7. That one and the same inheritance belongs to the believing Jew and gentile; the same land was both the Jews' and the strangers' to inherit, which prefigured their being in one and the same church, their having the same privileges, the same interest in Christ: there is one and the same inheritance to both. Col. i. 12, "Giving thanks unto the Father, who hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light." All the saints have but one inheritance, and that is reserved in heaven, 1 Pet. i. 4. This inheritance was typified by the Land of Canaan. So then the partition-wall is broken down between Jews and gentiles, all former differences are taken away, and they are no more two but one; they are both one, one new man, one body, Eph. ii. 14—16; Jew and gentile are so united as if there had been no distinction between them; Col. iii. 11, "There is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free; but Christ is all, and in all." The Lord Christ by his death and sufferings hath reconciled those who were at the greatest enmity.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

Ver. 1—7. Now these are the names of the tribes. From the north end to the coast of the way of Hethlon, as one goeth to Hamath, Hazarethan, the border of Damascus northward, to the coast of Hamath; for these are his sides east and west; a portion for Dan. And by the border of Dan, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Asher. And by the border of Asher, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for Naphtali. And by the border of Naphtali, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Manasseh. And by the border of Manasseh, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Ephraim. And by the border of Ephraim, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for Reuben. And by the border of Reuben, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for Judah.

Bring come, through the assistance of God, to open the last chapter of Ezekiel's prophecy, we have in it three parts:

1. An assignation or distribution of particular portions to each tribe, ver. 1—7, 23—29.

II. A description of the offering or holy portion of land, (as it is called, chap. xlv. 1,) with the bounds and parts allotted,

1. To the sanctuary, ver. 8, 9.
2. To the priests, ver. 10—12.
3. To the Levites, ver. 13, 14.
4. To the city and suburbs, ver. 15—19.
5. To the prince, ver. 21, 22.

III. A description of the city.

1. From the dimension of it on each side, ver. 30.
2. From the gates of it, ver. 31—34.
3. From the compass of it, ver. 35.
4. From the name of it, ibid.

Concerning the distributions of the land to particular tribes, they differ much from those which were made in Joshua's days. Then the tribe of Benjamin's lot was between Judah and Joseph, as it is Josh. xviii. 11; but in this chapter Benjamin's lot is between Judah and Simeon, ver. 22—24. Then the tribe of Sim-on had its lot within Judah, Josh. xix. 19; here, it is out of Judah and next to Benjamin, ver. 24. And so of other tribes; their lot is otherwise in this visional distribution of Ezekiel than it was formerly, and many things he had concerning the temple, sacrifices, the lot of the prince, priests, and Levites, which Solomon never had, and never were had under the second temple, and therefore pointed out the change of Mosaical and Levitical ways, and led to a new state of the church.

Ver. 1. "These are the names of the tribes. From the north end," &c. Of the twelve tribes, seven were in the north and five in the south, as they are set down in this chapter; and the portion of the sanctuary, priests, Levites, cities, and prince, lay between the tribes thus divided.

Dan is the first tribe mentioned in Ezekiel's division. It was not so in Joshua's; then, Dan was the last tribe which had his portion, as is evident, Josh. xix. 40, 49; and because it was too little for them, the men of Dan took Leshem, or Laish, named it Dan, and so enlarged their borders. This tribe first fell from God and embraced idols; for after they had gotten Laish, they set up a graven image, Judg. xviii. 29—31; and therefore this tribe is left out of the catalogue when the other tribes are mentioned, 1 Chron. vii. and Rev. vii. In the prophetic blessings of Jacob, Dan and Issachar were in the midst, Gen. xlix. 14, 16. Here Dan is in the front; which gives us to consider,

1. The truth of what our Lord Christ hath given out, Matt. xix. 30, "The last shall be first;" Dan was the last, and here he is the first; he hath the honour and pre-eminence above the rest. David was the youngest and last of Jesse's sons, and he was made the first, being anointed to be king by Samuel, 1 Sam. xvi. 11—14. Those workers in the vineyard, the Lord ordered that his steward should pay the last first, and the first last, Matt. xx. 8, 16; Mark x. 31. Luke xiii. 30, "There are last which shall be first;" the gentiles were last in the Jews' account, but God made them first: "and there are first which shall be last;" the Jews were first in their own eyes, but they were made last, and of no esteem, in the eyes of God. Luke xviii. 14, the publican, who was last in the account of the Pharisee, was first in the account of God.

2. Those that have deserted God and his ways, gone far and long from him, may find mercy, repent, and be received to favour. These Danites met with mercy from God, repented them of their idolatry, and returned to him again, else they had never been honoured so far as to be set in the first place. When great sinners come unto God, who were looked upon as the last and worst of men, God doth not only pardon them, but oftentimes honours them and makes them the first; as Paul, Acts ix. 15, "He is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel." He had been a great persecutor, blasphemous, injurious, but when he embraced the faith of Christ, he was made the chief of the apostles.

3. God, of his good pleasure and free grace, calls and recalls whom he will. These Danites had nothing in them to move God to own them for his people at first, nothing to move him to recall them, being degenerate and fallen into idolatrous passages, unless we make wickedness an argument thereunto; and if so, there is sufficient of that in the devils to move the Lord to show mercy; but wickedness provokes to destroy, not to show mercy. The best thing in man induceth not God to show mercy; that is from his will, Rom. ix. 15. It was God's free grace which took Abraham at first out of an idolatrous country and family, Josh. xxiv. 23; it was free grace that he took Isaac, not Ishmael; Jacob, not Esau; and so that he took Dan at first, and recalled him at last; and so the prodigal.

Dan and the rest of the tribes had their several portions (being all in captivity, both Judah and Benjamin at this time) allotted unto them, which may represent unto us what the condition of the Jews shall be under Christ; however now they be scattered, yet doubtless there is a time when they shall come to Zion, and have their several portions in the church of Christ. John's vision, Rev. vii. adds great weight to this tenet, he "saw twelve thousand sealed out of every tribe," which he distinguishes from those of other nations who are not said to be sealed, hereby strongly intimating they were Jews, whose conversion Paul had spoken of, Rom. xi. 26, "So all Israel shall be saved;" that is, all the twelve tribes shall come in and stand with the Lamb on mount Zion, Rev. xiv. 1.

These tribes had their portions from east to west, all of them, which was the length of this land of Canaan, and their breadth from north to south; which informs us of the large extent of the church of Christ: it reaches to the ends of the earth; for the Father gave him "the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession," Psal. ii. 8; his "dominion was to be from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth," Psal. lxxii. 8. He was to be "governor among the nations," Psal. xxii. 28; and not only of some few or many of them, but of all them that shall "inherit all nations," Psal. lxxxii. 8; and "be king over all the earth," Zech. xiv. 9. He was from eternity "appointed heir of all things," Heb. i. 2; and he must have possession of all, which John in his vision saw accomplished; Rev. xi. 15, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ;" so that Christ's church and kingdom is large, and extends to all quarters.

The portion here given to the seven tribes, Dan, Asher, Naphtali, Manasseh, Ephraim, Reuben, Judah, and to the other five tribes, Benjamin, Simeon, Issachar, Zebulun, Gad, in the 23d, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, and 29th verses of this chapter, besides the largeness and unlimitedness of the church, do here inform us,

1. That there is sufficiency of means and mercies for all that have part in the church and kingdom of Christ, Rev. vii. 15—17.

2. That what portion soever any one hath, is by divine appointment. The Lord allots every one his portion, of what kind soever, Rom. xii. 3; Luke xix. 19; xxii. 29.

3. That there ought to be communion between those who are of Christ's kingdom. The tribes lay near together, and their portions, and were to have communion one with another, Eph. ii. 19.

4. That as there are several portions here for the tribes, so there are several mansions for them in the heavens, John xiv. 2; and not only for believing Jews, but gentiles also, Rev. vii. 9.

Ver. 8—14. And by the border of Judah, from the east side unto the west side, shall be the offering which ye shall offer of five and twenty thousand reeds in breadth, and in length as one of the other parts, from the east side unto the west side: and the sanctuary shall be in the midst of it. The oblation that ye shall offer unto the Lord shall be of five and twenty thousand in length, and of ten thousand in breadth. And for them, even for the priests, shall be this holy oblation; toward the north five and twenty thousand in length, and toward the west ten thousand in breadth, and toward the east ten thousand in breadth, and toward the south five and twenty thousand in length: and the sanctuary of the Lord shall be in the midst thereof. It shall be for the priests that are sanctified of the sons of Zadok; which have kept my charge, which went not astray when the children of Israel went astray, as the Levites went astray. And this oblation of the land that is offered shall be unto them a thing most holy by the border of the Levites. And over against the border of the priests the Levites shall have five and twenty thousand in length, and ten thousand in breadth: all the length shall be five and twenty thousand, and the breadth ten thousand. And they shall not sell of it, neither exchange, nor alienate the firstfruits of the land: for it is holy unto the Lord.

The offering of five and twenty thousand reeds of land in length and breadth for the sanctuary, the priests, the Levites, the city, and the prince, we had in the 45th chapter, and therefore shall say little unto these things.

Ver. 8. "The sanctuary shall be in the midst of it." The sanctuary is the habitation of God, and it is in the midst, that all may equally have access unto it.

Ver. 9. The oblation to the Lord was five and twenty thousand reeds in length, and ten thousand in breadth, which was a great compass, and sets out the largeness of the church in the times of the gospel.

The priests had a large portion; ver. 10, five and twenty thousand reeds of land in length, both northward and southward, and ten thousand in breadth, both eastward and westward. This large provision was made for the priests who were holy, from Zadok, which had kept God's charge, and been faithful and constant in apostatizing times. Ver. 11, the Levites also had the same length and breadth of land assigned them, ver. 13. Now neither priests nor Levites might sell, exchange, or alienate the firstfruits of the land, because it was holy, ver. 12, 14: so that holy things, which are the Lord's, and not men's, are not to be bought and sold, and diverted to other uses. Those who sell holy things, sell what is the Lord's, not their own, and there is no justice in that.

By these portions of the priests and Levites, is prefigured the increase and maintenance of the preachers of the gospel: for as maintenance was due to the priests by the Levitical law, so now it is due by the light of nature; 1 Cor. ix. 9, "The mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn" must not be muzzled; and by the light of the gospel, ver. 14, "the Lord hath ordained that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel."

Ver. 11. "The priests that are sanctified." The priests were first to be separated, Numb. viii. 14; Deut. x. 8; Heb. v. 1; and their separation was from common persons, things, and ends. They were to be for a holy God, holy services, and for holy ends.

2. They were to be sanctified and consecrated unto God, Exod. xxx. 30; Lev. xxi. 10.

3. They were to approach and come near unto God, Lev. xxi. 17; Numb. iv. 19; Ezek. xlili. 19.

4. They were to offer the sacrifice which the people were to bring unto them, otherwise they were not accepted, Lev. v. 8, 10.

Ver. 15—20. And the five thousand, that are left in the breadth over against the five and twenty thousand, shall be a profane place for the city, for dwelling, and for suburbs: and the city shall be in the midst thereof. And these shall be the measures thereof; the north side four thousand and five hundred, and the south side four thousand and five hundred, and on the east side four thousand and five hundred, and the west side four thousand and five hundred. And the suburbs of the city shall be toward the north two hundred and fifty, and toward the south two hundred and fifty, and toward the east two hundred and fifty, and toward the west two hundred and fifty. And the residue in length over against the oblation of the holy portion shall be ten thousand eastward, and ten thousand westward: and it shall be over against the oblation of the holy portion; and the increase thereof shall be for food unto them that serve the city. And they that serve the city shall serve it out of all the tribes of Israel. All the oblation shall be five and twenty thousand by five and twenty thousand: ye shall offer the holy oblation foursquare, with the possession of the city.

The place where the city was to be is called a profane place; not simply and absolutely so, but respectively, as compared with the possessions of the priests and Levites; for in Scripture sense that is counted common, uncircumcised, or profane, which is compared with that which is more holy: see Lev. xix. 23. This place, then, though it were profane in respect of the portion of the priests and Levites, yet was it holy in part, for it was part of the holy portion, chap. xlv. 1; and a type of the heavenly Jerusalem. The city was to be in the midst of it, and was foursquare, having four thousand and five hundred cubits, say some, reeds, say others, and so was of vast extent. The suburbs also on each part of it were alike, of two hundred and fifty measures apiece.

It is said, ver. 18, that the increase of the ten thousand measures eastward and westward shall be for food to them that serve the city. God is careful of, and bountiful to, those who shall serve him; if any shall come to this city, the church of God, and serve him and his people, there they are provided for beforehand; God hath allotted out ten thousand reeds of land, east and west, which he will bless so as it shall increase, and that increase shall be for them. In the apostles' times, when the church was grown numerous, there was not any among them which lacked: God provided for them by stirring up the hearts of owners to sell lands and houses, Acts iv. 34, 35. And not only here are we to look at the temporary provision God makes for the faithful, but that eternal reward also which they shall have in heaven, the city which hath foundations, Heb. xi. 10; where they shall have an "exceeding and eternal weight of glory," 2 Cor. iv. 17.

The 19th verse dictates three things unto us:

1. That the citizens of this city are holy men, not common, profane men; they are Israelites, not Gibeonites; common men do not inhabit the holy city. Rev. xxi. 27, "There shall in no wise enter into it any thing that shall defile;" those that keep the commands of God shall enter into this city. Rev. xxii. 14, 15, dogs, sorcerers, whoremongers, murderers, idolaters, liars, shall be shut out.

2. That they are men chosen, not out of one or two tribes, but out of every tribe; they that serve this city must be out of all the tribes. God did not take some only out of Judah and Ephraim, the great and more honourable tribes, but some out of the other and lesser tribes. God is a free agent, and may take where, when, and whom he pleases; Rev. vii., "some were sealed out of every tribe."

3. Those that are of this city are to be serviceable; they are to improve their talents, whatever they be, for the good of the city: "they that serve the city shall serve it out of all the tribes of Israel." The apostles were servants to this city, and they went up and down into all the tribes of Israel to serve this city. Ministers and christians should now expend themselves for the church of God, and labour to bring some into it out of all parts. God gives gifts and graces to ministers and others for this end, that they should be serviceable to the city of God: 1 Pet. iv. 10, "As every one hath received the gift of God, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God."

Ver. 20. The whole of the holy oblation made a foursquare, every square being five and twenty thousand reeds. The city which John saw lay foursquare, Rev. xxi. 16; such a figure hath beauty and stability in it, and represented the beautifulness and stablesness of the church, Cant. vi. 16; Matt. xvi. 18.

Ver. 21, 22. And the residue shall be for the prince, on the one side and on the other of the holy oblation, and of the possession of the city, over against the five and twenty thousand of the oblation toward the east border, and westward over against the five and twenty thousand toward the west border, over against the portions for the prince; and it shall be the holy oblation; and the sanctuary of the house shall be in the midst thereof. Moreover from the possession of the Levites, and from the possession of the city, being in the midst of that which is the prince's, between the border of Judah and the border of Benjamin, shall be for the prince.

The prince here spoken of is the same with him, chap. xlv. 7, 8; interpreted to be neither any civil prince, nor the high priest, but the Lord Christ, who is King of Zion. Whatever of the holy oblation was not for the sanctuary, priests, Levites, and the city, was the prince's; and what was beyond the holy oblation was his. His territories extend far; and such is the dignity of his person, as that the Father hath given him the ends of the earth to possess, Psal. ii. 8. Not only Canaan, which typed out the church, was his dominion, but even the nations and whole earth, Psal. lxxxii. 8; Zech. xiv. 9.

The sanctuary, the city, the priests, and the Levites, were in the midst. The prince's portion was on both sides of them; he was their security and defence. Christ is the defence of his church and people; he is on both sides of them, round about them. He is a wall of fire round about Jerusalem, Zech. ii. 5; he is the watchman thereof, and keeps it night and day, Isa. xxvii. 3: that is his glory, and himself is the defence of his glory, Isa. iv. 5.

Ver. 28. By the border of Gad, at the south side southward, the border shall be, &c.

When Jacob did prophetically bless the tribes, Dan and Gad went together, Gen. xlix. 17, 19; but here they are placed opposite; Dan in the utmost part of the north, ver. 1; Gad in the utmost part of the south: for Tamar (which signifies, a palm tree, and after was called Palmyra) was the furthest town southward in Judea, near the lake Asphaltites, or the Dead sea. This portion of Gad reacheth unto Meribah-Kadesh, which was in the wilderness of Zin, Deut. xxxii. 51. There was another Meribah in Replidim, Exod. xvii. 7, where the Israelites did chide with Moses for want of water, after they came out of the wilderness of Zin, ver. 1, 2. The Lord may dispose of tribes and families, and seat them in north, or south, or wherever he please, in hot or cold countries, in fruitful or barren lands.

Ver. 29. This is the land which ye shall divide by lot unto the tribes of Israel for inheritance.

The Hebrew is thus, This is the land which ye shall make or cause to fall from, or for, the inheritance to the tribes of Israel. That is, by lot you shall make the inheritance fall unto every tribe; none were to choose what inheritance they would have, but to take that where the lot fell. This, as Ecclesiasticus saith, is the conclusion of the whole chapter; and that which follows is the situation and measures, the gates and ministers, of the city, their maintenance and use.

"These are their portions, saith the Lord God." The Hebrew is, Adonai Jehovah, the Lord Lord, the Lord who is Sovereign of all, the Lord who gives being to all things, and to his word.

Ver. 30—35. And these are the goings out of the city on the north side, four thousand and five hundred measures. And the gates of the city shall be after the names of the tribes of Israel: three gates northward; one gate of Reuben, one gate of Judah, one gate of Levi. And at the east side four thousand and five hundred; and three gates; and one gate of Joseph, one gate of Benjamin, one gate of Dan. And at the south side four thousand and five hundred measures; and three gates; one gate of Simeon, one gate of Issachar, one gate of Zebulun. At the west side four thousand and five hundred, with their three gates; one gate of Gad, one gate of Asher, one gate of Naphtali. It was round about eighteen thousand measures: and the name of the city from that day shall be, The Lord is there.

Ver. 30. "These are the goings out of the city." Some understand by the goings out the gates; but Jerom makes them to be the compass of the city, from its four sides; for not the gates, but the sides, had four thousand and five hundred measures; at these goings out was the utmost term and extent of the city.

Ver. 31. "The gates of the city shall be after the names of the tribes of Israel," &c. In the distribution of the portions of land Levi was left out, (he must not be troubled with the things of this world,) but in the assignment of the gates, there is one of Levi, or for Levi; he had right to the city, and all the privileges of it, as much as the other tribes.

In the 45th chapter, and several verses of this 48th, mention is made of the city; but in the sixteenth verse, and these last six verses, is the fullest description of the city: and it is described,

1. From the measures which were on each side; for as the goings out of the city northward were four thousand and five hundred measures, so were the goings out of the south, east, and west: and that we may not question it, the 16th verse asserts it; "These shall be the measures thereof: the north side four thousand and five hundred, and the south side four thousand and five hundred, and on the east side four thousand and five hundred, and the west side four thousand and five hundred;" they were all alike in their measures. What these measures were, is of moment to inquire. We have only two mentioned in this vision, reeds and cubits; by these, the temple, city, and things pertaining unto them, were measured. Chap. xl. 5, the measuring reed in the man's hand was six cubits long, and a hand breadth; and if we take measures here for reeds, viz. four thousand and five hundred reeds, in all they come to eighteen thousand reeds, which make one hundred and eight thousand cubits, and eighteen thousand hands' breadth: and after this account every side of the city is eight miles and one hundred paces; for eighteen thousand reeds make thirty two miles and four hundred paces, as A Lapide observes: so that this city was very large. Others lessen the city greatly, and make the measures to be only cubits, and so each side of the city comes to be a mile and almost a half long, which was no great length nor breadth, being both equal. Haftenrefferus makes the measures to be cubits, and insists upon it much; but others are of a different judgment from him. And seeing the city in the Revelation was measured by the reed, it seems also more than probable that this also was measured by the same measure: Rev. xxi. 15, 16, "He measured the city with a reed, twelve thousand furlongs." As Ezekiel's city exceeded the former city much, so John's city exceeded Ezekiel's far more; for, being square as the other was, it had three thousand furlongs on each side, which make three hundred seventy and five miles, reckoning eight furlongs to a mile. So that this city, being three hundred seventy and five miles in length, and as many in breadth, was the best city that ever was.

2. It is described from the gates of it. This city had twelve gates, three on every side; and these gates were according to the names of the tribes of Israel: Reuben, Judah, Levi, had the north gates; Joseph, Benjamin, Dan, had the east gates; Simeon, Issachar, Zebulun, had the south gates; Gad, Asher, Naphtali, had the west gates: the several names of the tribes were written upon the gates. Herein Ezekiel's and John's city, the new Jerusalem, do fully agree; for John's had twelve gates, three on each quarter, and the names of the twelve tribes written upon them, Rev. xxi. 12.

3. It is described from the compass of it: ver. 35, "It was round about eighteen thousand measures." Take measures for cubits, and then it was not above six miles in compass, but if we take them for reeds, as divers do, then the compass of this city is thirty-two miles and almost a half; but far short of the compass of the new Jerusalem, that great city, which was fifteen hundred miles about, for so many miles do twelve thousand furlongs amount unto. Both the city which John saw measured, and that Ezekiel saw measured, were foursquare, comely, firm, and endurable: the court was foursquare, Ezek. xl. 47; the holy oblation was so, chap. xlviii. 20; and so was the city.

4. It is described from the name: ver. 35, "The name of the city from that day shall be Jehovah-shammah, The Lord is there." From the day of its building and inhabitation it shall be called so. Many cities have had glorious and significant names; as Nicopolis, Tit. iii. 12, which signifies, The victorious city: Nazareth, Luke iv. 16, notes, sanctified or separated: Bethsaida, Matt. xi. 21, the house of fruits or meats: Bethlehem, Luke ii. 4, the house of bread: Jerusalem, the vision of peace: but they fall short of this name, "Jehovah-shammah."

Some make the meaning of these words, "the name of the city shall be, The Lord is there," to be this, that God would be in the city; not that the city was, or shall be ever, called so: as it is said of Christ, his name shall be called, "Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace:" he was so, but not called by those names; and so this city, it shall have God in it there present, yet not be so named. But I see nothing hinders but it may both be so called and have God in it, and because God is there, therefore to be so called.

The name "Jehovah" is a glorious and fearful name, Dent. xxviii. 58. Junius bath the words thus, That name most gloriously and highly to be revered. Bernard calls it a majestic name. Some observe that the Jews, after their return from Babylon, had such high and reverential thoughts of the name "Jehovah," that they thought it not fit to be pronounced; but used the name "Adonai" in the stead thereof, lest it should be profaned. This glorious, majestic, and most holy name, is given to this city.

What is meant by "the city," is of concernment to know. Some by it understand Jerusalem literally, as it was rebuilt by the Jews after their return, together with the civil state, in which the prince governed by civil laws, just weights and measures; but such a city as is here described was never built by the Jews after their captivity. To let that opinion pass, some do make this city Ezekiel saw to be a model and platform of that city the Jews (who should be called, converted, and brought to their own land again) should build and inhabit; but because the Jews' return to their own land is denied by some, questioned by many, and doubted by most, whether ever such a city as that which here is held out, viz. of thirty-two miles' compass, shall be built by them, it is safest to interpret this city typically: and in this sense interpreters are not all of a mind; for some make it to be a representative of heaven, and the amplitude or graces thereof; others make it to be a representation of the church under the gospel, in the former times thereof especially, yet short of that city, the heavenly Jerusalem, which John saw, Rev. xxi: for though this city and that agree in some things, yet they differ in many. I shall show you some difference between them.

1. The gates of Ezekiel's city had no angels to keep it in; but at the twelve gates of John's city there were twelve angels to keep them, Rev. xxi. 12.

2. In Ezekiel's city there was a temple; but in John's there is none, Rev. xxi. 22.

3. The materials of Ezekiel's city were inferior to those of John's, which were gold, pearl, and precious stones, Rev. xxi. 18-22.

4. The waters of this city came from under the threshold of the temple, and from the south side of the altar; but John's city had a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, which proceeded from the throne of God and of the Lamb, Rev. xxii. 1.

5. Ezekiel's city had all trees for meat and medicine on both sides of the banks of the river; John's had one by the tree of life, which bears twelve manner of fruits, Rev. xxii. 2.

6. The light and glory of Ezekiel's city fell short of that which John's had, Rev. xxi. 23; for it had no need of the sun nor of the moon to shine in it, for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.

7. Ezekiel's city was not half so great as John's, the one being only eighteen thousand measures in compass, and the other twelve thousand furlongs in length, breadth, and height, Rev. xxi. 16.

8. John's city had a wall of twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles; Ezekiel's city had a wall, chap. xl. 5, but no names in it of prophets or apostles.

Now, notwithstanding this city John saw, the new Jerusalem, exceeded that our prophet saw very much, yet they both represent the church of Christ here on earth, and it will not be denied but that they may in part represent it in heaven.

By this city of Ezekiel I conceive is pointed out unto us the glorious state of the christian church in the latter days; it hath been a long time said to war under antichrist and his instruments; the breaches and ruins of it at this day are great, and the face of such a city hardly visible; but when the times of antichrist's destruction, and the Jews' conversion, do come, then shall this city be built, then shall Zion be in her glory; the christian church shall be then in a greater glory than formerly. If the coming in of the gentiles at first began the foundation of this city, what will the fulness of the gentiles be when that is come, Rom. xi. 25, but a glorious addition to this city? And then when the fulness of the Jews shall be added to the christian church, to this city, what will that be but life from the dead? ver. 15; the perfecting of this city, wherein shall be a temple suitable? which John minds us of, Rev. xi. 1, where the temple, altar, and worshippers are measured; and it is observable where there is mention of measuring, and so building a temple, respect is had unto the Jews; and the one thousand two hundred and sixty days, put for years, are drawing to an end, and God is about some great things to be done in the world, and will ere long break forth.

That by this city is represented the church, some rabbins themselves do acknowledge; for though they deny our Christ to be the Messiah, because he never built them such a temple and city as Ezekiel describes, yet they acknowledge this city and temple to be understood, not corporally or literally, but mystically and spiritually. And the Talmudists affirm, that by Jerusalem we are to understand the gathering of the gentiles to Christ, or the whole body of christians.

There are several things observable concerning this city or church of Christ.

1. That it is well and strongly founded. Usually cities are built upon hills and mountains, which are the strongest parts of the earth; and so was this city. Chap. xl. 2, Ezekiel saw the frame of this city upon a very high mountain, and on such a mountain is the christian church built; on the mountain of God's decree and power, on the mountain of righteousness and truth; it is built upon Christ the Rock of ages, such a Rock as the gates of hell cannot shake or shatter. John tells us of this city, the new Jerusalem, that it had twelve foundations, three on every square, which were sure, firm, and would never fail. The Lord Christ, the holy Scriptures, and the doctrine of the holy prophets and apostles, must fall to the ground before the church shall be ruined, 2 Tim. ii. 19.

2. It is comely and beautiful. Cities which are built foursquare especially are so, and such was this city; it had four thousand and five hundred measures on each quarter; there was nothing insightly on any of the four quarters, they were all parallel, and had gates alike in them, which presented it very delightful to the eye. The church of Christ is comely and beautiful; it is built not of unhewn stones or timber, but such as are well hewn and orderly laid together. Hence the church of Corinth is called "God's building," 1 Cor. iii. 9; and the church in general the "city of the living God," Heb. xii. 22. The church is such a building, such a city, as is full of comeliness and beauty; it is a "congregation of saints," Psal. cxlix. 1; it is the garden of Christ, Cant. iv. 12; his kingdom, Matt. xiii. 41; his spouse, whom himself saith is fair, yea, the "fairest among women," Cant. i. 8; "pleasant," ver. 16; and "beautiful," chap. vii. 1. The church is Christ's body, Eph. i. 23; the Spirit's temple, 1 Cor. iii. 16; and therefore hath curious work in it, very glorious and beautiful. What David said of Zion, Psal. l. 2, that it was "the perfection of beauty," is most true of the church under Christ and in Christ, it is "the perfection of beauty;" Heb. x. 14, "By one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified."

3. The greatness and amplitude of this city. It had four thousand and five hundred measures eastward, west, north, and southward; it was eighteen thousand measures in compass; which sets out the greatness and vast extent of the church of Christ. Zech. x. 10, God saith he will bring the Jews from Egypt and Assyria, and so multiply them that place shall not be found for them. Isa. xlix. 20, "The children shall say in thine ears," that is, in the ears of the church, "The place is too strait for me: give place to me that I may dwell." The christian church is spoken of; which should multiply so, that their habitation must be enlarged, as it is, Isa. liv. 1—3. Now the tents and curtains of Zion's habitation are stretched to the ends of the earth, Psal. ii. 8; Mal. i. 11, "From the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof."

4. The city hath access unto it from all parts. Great cities have many gates, east gates, west gates, north gates, and south gates; so had this city twelve gates, in every quarter three, which signifies unto us the great access which should be unto the church of Christ from all parts. Not only Jews should come out of the twelve tribes to enter and dwell in this city, and be under the government of it, but multitudes of gentiles out of all nations and quarters of the world should do so. Rev. vii. John saw not only twelve thousand Jews enter in at each gate, but a great multitude also which no man could number, of all nations, kindreds, peoples, tongues. The Jews were numerable, forty-four thousand, but the gentiles were above so many millions; the number of them which entered by the gates was innumerable.

5. The happiness of this city, which is from the Lord's inhabiting there, and giving it its denomination. The name of it shall be, Jehovah-shammah, "The Lord is there." Alexandria was not so happy in Alexander, nor Constantinople so happy in Constantine, nor Jerusalem in Solomon, as this city shall be in Jehovah. We read in sacred Scripture of a golden city, Isa. xiv. 4; of a royal city, 1 Sam. xxvii. 5; of a renowned city, Ezek. xxvi. 17; but their glory and happiness was a shadow to the glory and happiness of this city; they were cities without God, Jehovah was not there; but here will the Lord himself be.

These words, Jehovah-shammah, import,

1. The presence of God in the church, and that is a happiness to have his presence. When God left the temple and city of Jerusalem, that was their great misery, Hos. ix. 12. His presence in heaven makes it heaven; and his presence in the church makes it happy: "Thus saith the Lord, I am returned unto Zion, and will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem: and Jerusalem shall be called a city of truth; and the mountain of the Lord of hosts the holy mountain." God's presence makes it a city of truth, and a holy mountain; and that city is happy which hath truth and holiness in it, Zech. viii. 3.

2. His continuance in it. He will not be as a guest in an inn, but as an heir in his inheritance; he will dwell there; he will not leave this city, nor depart from it, as he did from Jerusalem of old, and as he did from the Jews after their captivity: Jer. xxxii. 40, "I will not turn away from them, to do them good;" Ezek. xxxvii. 26, "I will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore;" Rev. vii. 15, "He that sitteth upon the throne shall dwell with them." It is the happiness of a saint to have the Comforter, and his great happiness to have the same abide with him, and that for ever, John xiv. 16; so it is the happiness of the christian to have Christ's presence, and exceeding happiness to have it for ever.

3. His upholding and preserving of it. The church is "God's building," 1 Cor. iii. 9. He said in Isaiah's days, "I will lay thy stones with fair colours, and lay thy foundations with sapphires. I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy border of pleasant stones," Isa. liv. 11, 12; and when the Lord shall do this, he will be Jehovah-shammah, he will uphold and preserve that building: Matt. xvi. 18, "Upon this rock will I build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail." He is the Keeper of Israel, Psal. cxxi. 4: I will keep this city from being besieged, stormed, or plundered.

4. His making himself and his mind known in an especial manner, as he did to Moses: Exod. vi. 3, "I appeared to Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of God Almighty, but by my name Jehovah was I not known unto them;" but unto Moses he was known by that name, and imparted his mind unto him above others. So shall it be in this city: Isa. xi. 9, "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of Jehovah:" chap. lii. 6, "My people shall know my name:" chap. lx. 16, "Thou shalt know" (that is, the church) "that the Lord." Jehovah, "am thy Saviour." They in Judah, Israel, Salem, and Zion, had other knowledge of God and his name than the nations had, and they of this city shall have peculiar knowledge of God: what others had in the ear, they shall have in the eye; what others had in the head, they shall have in the heart. Christ will make great and glorious discoveries of himself and of his mind unto the citizens of this city: Rev. xi. 19, "The temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament." Christ is the temple of God, and his temple was opened in heaven, that is, the church, frequently called heaven in this book of the Revelation. The ark in the Old Testament temple, which had the table of the law and the pot of manna in it, typed out Christ, the gospel, and mysteries thereof: which held out that Christ, the spiritual Ark, shall not be hid. Jehovah-shammah, God is present in Christ, and Christ will so open himself to this city, that himself, Father, and mysteries of the gospel, will be more plain and manifest than ever.

5. His ruling and governing of this city. And it is a happy city which hath Jehovah, Christ the King of righteousness, to govern it. Zech. xiv. 9, Jehovah "shall be king over all the earth: in that day there shall be one Lord;" not many lords, but one Lord, even the Lord Jesus Christ. Ezek. xxxvii. 22, "One king shall be king to them all," to all the converted Jews and gentiles, which make this city of God. Zech. vi. 13, it is said of Christ there, "That he shall build the temple of the Lord; and he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne." Christ shall bear the glory, not only for building the temple and the city, but also for ruling, because he will rule righteously and faithfully to the satisfaction of all: Isa. xi. 5, "Righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins." This girdle he never puts off, but is girt therewith always, showing his readiness to be faithful and righteous in his government.

6. The pouring out of his Spirit. Jehovah is there to pour that out more fully. What men had formerly was only the firstfruits of the Spirit, Rom. viii. 23, a few had it poured out upon them; but then will be a more plentiful effusion, all the citizens of this city shall be filled with the Spirit: Zech. xii. 8, "He that is feeble among them at that day shall be as David; and the house of David shall be as God, and the angel of the Lord before them;" then shall the weakest, by the Spirit of Christ, abound in gifts and graces, and be as David, who excelled all in his days; and his house shall be as God, that is, full of the Spirit; or as the angels, that is, having such grace, qualities, and estimation.

7. The making the city and citizens honourable and glorious. Then shall it be the renowned, royal, and golden city, gilded with the beams of Christ's glorious presence. From the head cometh glory to the body; a wife shineth with her husband's rays, Christ with the glory of the Father, and this city with the glory and beauty of Christ. His presence made the glory of the latter temple and city greater than the glory of the former; and his presence in this temple and city will make the glory of it greater than that of the latter temple and city, for then he was there in a state of humiliation, but he shall not be so in this, he will be in his reigning state, and his citizens will be honourable: Zech. ix. 16, "They shall be as the stones of a crown, lifted up;" not as common stones, but as the stones of a crown; and not as stones of a crown falling to the earth, but as stones of a crown lifted up to be put on the head of a king. How great is the honour of these citizens! They are brought in, Rev. v. 10, speaking of it themselves; Thou "hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth." And this is not all the honour, for besides this, they shall have every one three honourable names; for Christ, Rev. iii. 12, will write upon them the name of his God, and the name of the city of God, and his own new name.

8. The keeping them in unity and love. The citizens shall then be of one mind: Zech. xiv. 9, "In that day there shall be one Lord, and his name one;" the invocation and worship of his name shall be one. Then shall that be fulfilled, Zeph. iii. 9, "Then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent;" the Hebrew is, with one shoulder; a metaphor taken from oxen in the yoke, which draw together, as with one shoulder; so these citizens shall jointly and unanimously knit together and worship the Lord Christ. There shall be no schisms, names of distinction, as now there are; for if, when Christ left the world, the saints were all of one heart, Acts ii. 32, much more so shall it be in this city, when Christ shall be in the midst thereof, and guide them by his Spirit into all truth.

9. These words, Jehovah-shammah, import the great delight the Lord will take in this city, and the citizens thereof, in the church, and members thereof; Isa. lxii. 4. She shall be called Hephzibah, that is, My delight is in her. Then it will appear the church is his pleasant portion, Jer. xii. 10; and the dearly beloved of his soul, ver. 7; his glory, Isa. xlv. 13; the throne of his glory, Jer. xiv. 21; yea, the crown of his glory, Isa. lxii. 3. He will delight in them, to do them good, to communicate himself unto them: Rev. vii. 15—17, "He that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." Nothing shall disturb or harm them, they shall have no want, but enjoy all spiritual good, and abound in joy.

To God only be glory, through Jesus Christ.

A T A B L E

CONTAINING THE PRINCIPAL THINGS IN THE PRECEDENT EXPOSITIONS.

- ABIATHAR, why displaced, 799.
- Abominations, what sins are so called, 146, 452. People may be guilty of, and not know it, 334. Of the eyes, what, 489, 490.
- Abstract, oft rendered by the concrete, 516.
- Abundance, happiness lies not in it, 610. Dangerous, 623.
- Accepting, what it imports, 516.
- Accidentals to us are not so to God, 644.
- Account. Angels and others must give an account, 39. The faithful may boldly give up their account, 230. We must give an account of our talents, 439. God keeps exact account of his people's sufferings, 776.
- Actions, done according to God's will, have glory and efficacy in them, 36. Cannot be otherwise than they are, 53. Grace will break out into action, 282. Actions more observable than words, 288. Of men are overruled by the Lord, 529, 630.
- Adam had not the law written in his heart by the Spirit, as believers have, 727.
- Administrations, what men to be in gospel ones, 799.
- Admonitions, they are useful, 119, 120. God admonishes before he destroys, 129.
- Adonai, what it notes, 612.
- Adultery, how punished by Jews and heathens, 380. God punishes it severely, ib. The evil of it, 441, 442. Punishment appointed for it, 442, 443. The punishment thereof, 565.
- Advantage, God makes that so which threatens ruin, 766.
- Affections, conjugal, pleasing to God, 580. One sinful, sets others on work, 703. Evil affections must be answered for, ib. Other affections required when we come to God, than when we converse with men, 803.
- Afflictions, of themselves, subdue not corruption, 14, 78, 124. In greatest afflictions, oft come in the strongest comforts, 20. God can afflict from any quarter, 24. Time of affliction is seasonable for instructions, 101. Makes men mind God, 158. Before affliction men slight, under it regard the word of God, 161, 192, 193. By afflictions the Lord sanctifies, 259. Are the acts of God, 260. No arguments of divine hatred, 261. Have their period, 264. Of themselves do not sanctify, 285. A whetstone to prayer, 326. Resembled to fire in five things, 339. It is a time of God's manifesting love, 347. Minding our misery, useful against sin, 376. Afflictions discover, 404, 405. In them men look to the arm of flesh, 423. They are east winds, 478. God hath times to show mercy in them, 485. He reveals himself by one way, means, or other to the afflicted, 486. What brings sad afflictions, 541. May be long, yet are not endless, 635. In them persons do strange things, 566. They are emps, ib. Bitterness argue not hatred, 581. In affliction men observe how time passes, 649. God's people long afflicted, 674. Men under great affliction have vain confidences, 676. Adding affliction to the afflicted, 708. In great afflictions great weakness is manifested, 744. The Lord is sensible of his people's afflictions, ib. Though sharp and long, yet they shall have an end, 773.
- Agate, whence named, 608.
- Agents in temple work, whom they have need of, 793.
- Aha, what it notes, 586.
- Aholah, what, 561.
- Aholibah, what, ib.
- Alienate. What alienates God, 565.
